

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XII., No. 52. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 25, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF PHILIP PHILLIPS.
A MARRIAGE FEAST. A Sermon by Dr. Talmage in Galilee.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVAN-GELISTIC MEETINGS.
ANTICHRIST'S CALL TO WAR. By Rev. M. Baxter.
RETROSPECT OF THE YEAR 1889.

THE PATRIARCHAL MIGRATION. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
PORTRAIT OF THE LATE M. F. TUPPER.
A SCENE AT THE DOCKS. (With Illustration.)
THE FORERUNNER ANNOUNCED.
A DISTASTEFUL EXPEDITION. (Illust'd.)
THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: (Continued)
INDEX TO THE TWELFTH VOLUME.

MR. PHILIP PHILLIPS, THE SINGING PILGRIM—1. In the Mormon Tabernacle—2. The Garden of Gethsemane—3. Modern Jerusalem—4. Sydney, New South Wales—5. The Taj Mahal.

MR. PHILIP PHILLIPS.

The Influence of Gospel Song—A Christian Mother—Work on the Farm—First Revival Services—Work in the West—Authorship—Labors in Europe—Around the World—Australia—Ceylon—India—Singing in Jerusalem—Third Tour of Song in England.

DURING the past few weeks a large number of our readers have had the pleasure of listening to the gospel singing of Mr. Philip Phillips, and of seeing the pictures he has been exhibiting, in New York, of the places he has visited in his tour around the world. A portrait of him, and the engravings copied by his kind permission from some of those pictures which appear on the first page will, therefore, be timely and acceptable.

In the kingdom of God there is opportunity for the exercise of that "diversity of gifts" which emanate from "the same Spirit," and if one were called upon to point to the distinguishing characteristics of the era in which we are living, one of them would be the influence has had in the great religious movements which have swept over the church. Not only has the sweetly solemn, inspiring song softened and prepared the heart for the reception of the word preached, but God has often blessed the song alone, to the conversion of sinners. In this country and in Great Britain, the singing of Mr. Sankey, Mr. Stebbins, Professor and Mrs. Lowe, Professor and Mrs. Towner, and others has been blessed, not only as an aid to the evangelists whom they have accompanied, but directly to the salvation of souls.

Gospel Singing

Mr. Philip Phillips, the pioneer in the work of attaching the graceful courser of music to the gospel chariot, has also enjoyed an abundant measure of God's favor and blessing. Not content with the harvest of souls God gave him in America and Great Britain, he has carried the melodious message to less favored lands; and under southern skies and in tropical climates, in countries newly settled, and in lands famous before America was discovered or Britain had emerged from barbarism, he has raised his voice in celebration of the triumphs of the cross; in very deed accomplishing in his gospel freedom the feat to which the Jewish captives by the rivers of Babylon were unequal—singing "the Lord's song in strange lands."

The story of Mr. Phillips's life is one as full of interest as those detailed in the pages of romance. It is and as we follow his footsteps we tread the streets of great cities such as New York, Boston, Cincinnati, New Orleans, and San Francisco, and the rural ways of western villages; we see the strange scenes of the Sandwich Islands, and the busy young life of Australia and New Zealand; on to London, Liverpool, Edinburgh, and Dublin, and the centres of Old World civilization; on again to Rome and Jerusalem and Egypt, and the classic lands of bygone days, and still further to the unfamiliar Asiatic scenes of Calcutta, Delhi, and the banks of the Ganges, where idolatry and superstition still exercise their malign influence. Space forbids even the most imperfect description of such a life, so full of activity and change; we can but indicate briefly some of its more salient features.

A Constantly Moving Panorama

Philip Phillips was born in Chautauqua County, New York, on August 13, 1834. He was the tenth of a family of fifteen children.

His Father and Mother were distinguished for their earnest practical piety. Of his mother, who died one year after the birth of her fifteenth child, and when Philip was under ten years of age, he speaks in words of tender loving recollection. Her teaching and her prayers, he assures us, are to this day fresh in his mind, and he remembers distinctly her taking him, as she did each of her children, separately to her room and asking God's blessing upon him. Her death was a bitter affliction to the large family of young children, and none felt it more than little Philip.

In 1849, Philip being then fifteen years of age, he was

Apprenticed to a Farmer

who engaged to "instruct him in the art of farming and dairying," to clothe him and provide him with food, and send him to school three months in each year. He also covenanted in the indenture to give Philip, at the end of his term of six years, "a new Bible and two suits of clothes; one to be of a common quality and one to be a handsome suit." Philip appears to have fulfilled his part of the agreement to the satisfaction of the farmer; for observing his passion for music, the farmer resolved to gratify it. Returning to the house one evening, Philip found a melodeon in the sitting-room, and on making eager inquiry as to the instrument, he received for answer: "Well, Philip, what is the use of having money if you cannot use it? We have bought this melodeon for you, but you must not neglect your work on account of it." The boy's heart was full to overflowing.

But a more memorable event in the young man's life even than the possession of his first musical instrument was one that occurred soon afterward, when in the course of revival services at Delanti, N. Y., he was converted. The Good Templar movement was about this time attracting public attention, and Philip Phillips entered with energy into the work. His fine voice was in request, and he was invited to assist at the formation of many new lodges. Additional stimulus was thus given to musical studies, and his employer became conscious that Philip's proper place was not at the drudgery of farm work. He suggested that the young man should take up the profession of music teacher, and with the product of his efforts pay a man to take his place on the farm. Philip accepted the offer gladly, and in 1853 he opened his first singing-school at Allegheny, N. Y. The engagement was carried out, and at the end of the term, when Philip was twenty-one years old, he discharged the obligation, and started in life with his knowledge of music as his only capital. During the next few years his time was given exclusively to his profession.

The First Revival Work

in which Mr. Phillips engaged was at the Delanti church, of which he was a member, and of which Rev. A. Wheelock, D. D., was pastor. The services lasted many weeks, and during that time Mr. Phillips presided at the organ and was busy among the awakened souls.

An invitation was sent to Mr. Phillips at the conclusion of these engagements to sing in Ohio. He accepted, and his first service in that State was held in the Baptist church at Marion. Here he met with Miss Olive M. Clark, the lady who became his wife. Mr. Phillips's first Published Work,

The Cantata of Esther, was brought out during his Ohio visit. This was followed in 1860 by Early Blossoms, of which upward of twenty thousand copies were quickly sold. This success encouraged him to settle in Ohio, and he accordingly opened premises in Cincinnati. In the Queen City success attended him, and he brought out Musical Leaves, a book which reached a circulation of 700,000 copies. It penetrated everywhere, and its chords might be heard in churches and schools, on the city street, and in the military camp. Next appeared the Singing Pilgrim, founded on John Bunyan's inimitable allegory. The book was enthusiastically received, and Mr. Phillips acquired by the authorship of the work the name by which he is known, the world over, of The Singing Pilgrim.

Besides his ordinary professional engagements and his literary labors, Mr. Phillips, during his Cincinnati residence, devoted himself to active Christian work. He sang gratuitously in Sunday-schools, in soldiers' hospitals, and in connection with the United States Christian Commission.

God had other work for Mr. Phillips to do than the mere acquisition of wealth and fame, and, as often happens, He turned his attention to that work by a series of events which the world names misadventures. In the year 1865 all Mr. Phillips's property was destroyed by fire, and subsequent attempts to renew a business career ended in disappointment and disaster. Thus detached from commercial pursuits, Mr. Phillips gave himself unreservedly to the Lord's work, and in that he held himself ready to go wherever he might be called. In 1868 he visited for the first time. There he found his fame had preceded him. His songs were on every music-stand, and his melodies were sung everywhere. He sang by invitation Mr. Spurgeon's Tabernacle and other large churches, and at the Temperance Convention at the Crystal Palace. His popularity far exceeded his expectations, and before he left he had promised his English friends to pay another visit. This he did four years later. He then gave one hundred and fifty services for the benefit of the Continental Sunday-school Union Fund for establishing Sunday-schools on the continent of Europe. The fund was increased by the profit on these services to the extent of five thousand dollars.

Great Britain

In the U. S.

An urgent invitation forwarded to Mr. Phillips while in England to visit the Pacific coast, and on his return to America he crossed the continent, and, making San Francisco his headquarters, he went from place to place, returning to San Francisco each week for his Sunday services. He worked during this visit in connection with Mr. Moody, who was at that time preaching on the Pacific coast. Tours followed his California labors, in the Western and Southern States. Among other places, he visited Salt Lake city (a picture of him singing in the Mormon Tabernacle is Plate No. 1 on the first page), and in the British Provinces, in all of which he was received with enthusiasm, and where the songs were instrumental in the conversion of souls.

Around the World

A pressing invitation to visit Australia had been sent to Mr. Phillips by persons who had listened to him in Great Britain, and who were anxious that his voice might be heard in that new country. The invitation was accepted, and Mr. Phillips determined to make a visit an opportunity for visiting the mission stations which form a belt of light around the world. He sailed from San Francisco, March 8, 1875, and the following three years were passed amid constantly changing scenes and circumstances.

The first halt was at the Sandwich Islands. The vessel remained in port only twenty hours, but during that time a service was arranged by the missionaries, one of whom, Mrs. Webb, was found to be a sister of Dr. Hastings of New York. An invitation was received from the King, and Mr. Phillips visited his Majesty, who had but recently returned from his visit to the United States. Thence the voyagers sailed for New Zealand, where a short stay of eight hours was made, and a service of song was held. Melbourne, Australia, was the next city visited. A visit was paid to Ballarat, Creswick, Geelong, Castlemaine, and other large cities. At Sydney, the capital of New South Wales (a picture of which is No. 4 on first page), song services were held with success in several parts of the city.

Mr. Phillips prolonged his visit to the colony until October 7, at the urgent request of his friends, singing almost every day in one or other of the places of worship. The next place visited was the Island of Ceylon, where the visitors were entertained by the Superintendent of Missions. An appreciative audience of three hundred people was gathered for the song service and manifested evident pleasure. Three days' sail brought the travellers to Madras, where a Sunday was spent to the mutual pleasure of singer and hearers.

At Calcutta Dr. J. M. Thoburn, and other old friends in the Missionary American Home, extended a cordial welcome to the visitors, and arrangements were made for a singing campaign in India. Mr. Phillips has much to say of the strange sights he witnessed in that wonderful Christ Himself. He was warmly requested. When the Jews and Mohammedans; and so, I take attend the services only boys that are not would stand without the I think sing to the music, which could be enough the apertures left under the overhang eaves for ventilation; but Mr. Phillips head to learn, before leaving the country. Chi more than one of the mission stations at Reh he sang, his gospel songs had been the Chrof doing good. One of the wonders he nat on his tour through India was the magnificent tomb palace, the Taj Mahal, said to be most beautiful building in the world (a picture of which is No. 5 on first page). From India the party set out for the Holy Land, where Mr. Phillips made an extended rd, (singing in Jerusalem (a picture of which No. 13 on first page). During his stay in the y city he visited the Garden of Gethsemane, which is probably changed but little since the ht in which the Saviour went to it and bore the agony that forced the bloody sweat m His veins. (A picture of the Garden as it w is, is No. 2 on first page.) Mr. Phillips also ited Joppa, Nazareth, and other places of cred associations. From Palestine the route through Egypt, thence to Italy and Austria, rmany and Holland, and so to Great Britain, ere a third singing tour was made. Since at time he has been constantly engaged in spel work in our own and other lands, and, ough now fifty-five years old, he appears to ve lost none of his energy or melody of voice.

ANTICHRIST'S CALENDAR.

o Consist of Years of 360 Days Each, and Probably to Commence on August 14-15, 1897.

THE Rev. N. S. Godfrey, S.C. L. of St. Catharine's Hall, Cambridge, wrote in his book, The Conflict and the Triumph, in 1854, in regard to Antichrist's future 1,260 days, as follows: "A period of 1,260 days, or forty-and-two-months, a time, times, and half a time, is mentioned in many places in connection with the Man of in and the persecution which he sets on foot. The following are the passages:

"The eleventh horn, 'a time, times, and the dividing of a time.' Dan. 7: 25. The 'vile person,' 'a time, times and an half.' Dan. 12: 7.

"The holy city trodden under foot 'forty-and-two months.' The witnesses prophesy, 'a thousand and two hundred and threescore days.' Rev. 11: 3 and 4.

"The woman fed in the wilderness 'a thousand and two hundred and threescore days.' Rev. 12: 6.

"The woman fed in the wilderness 'a time, and times and half a time.' Rev. 12: 14; 13: 5.

"The 'beast' continues 'forty - and - two months.' "The first thing that strikes us here is that, although days and months are mentioned, years are not; but that nearly an equivalent is mentioned as 'a time.' A reason has been suggested by an anonymous writer (a Jewish missionary), which seems entitled to great consideration; it is that as of the eleventh horn it is said, 'he shall think to change times and laws' (7: 25), that he will abandon the year of 365 days, and adopt 'a time' or year of three hundred and sixty days.

Mahomet Changed Times;

and the Mahometans consequently reckon upon a different principle to what we do; they reckon from Mahomet's flight from Mecca to Medina in 622, as we reckon from the birth of Christ; their year contains 354 days, and the year 1854 is the Mahometan year 1271. One of the earliest acts also, of the French Revolutionists was to change the calendar. They made their year to consist of 360 days with five complementary days, and their months of thirty days each, were divided into three decades. The ancient Persians divided their year into twelve months of thirty days each, adding to the last month five supplementary days. The Medes and Persians adopted the old Chaldean year of 360 days, which they afterward reformed as stated in Rees' Cyclopædia on Calendar and Year.

"We thus see that it is no new thing for a change of calendar to accompany a change of dynasty; and further, that the old Chaldean year was a period of 360 days, and this year is called in Scripture 'a time;' and these 'times' or years of 360 days, it would seem probable, the Antichrist will substitute for our present year of 365 days. So that while three modern Gregorian years and a half amount to 1,277 days 15 hours, three times and a half will amount to only 1,260 days, and the months are of thirty days each."

Rev. N. S. Godfrey does not say anything about the probable starting point for Antichrist's New Calendar, but it was suggested as early as 1866 in 'Forty Coming Wonders' that some notable event in Antichrist's future career will probably be the commencement of His Calendar, just as the Hegira in 622 was the commencement of Mahomet's Calendar. Dr. Bright, in 1874, in his 'Coming of the Antichrist,' suggested that August 15, being the anniversary day of the double event of the birth of Napoleon I., and therefore observed as the Bonapartist Fête Day and being also the great Roman Catholic Fete Day of the Feast of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, will very likely be a notable day in the future Antichrist's career whom Dr. Bright in common with many others, believes will be a Napoleon.

Marvellous to relate, when it was discovered some years afterwards, in March, 1887, that April 11, 1901, will be the Last Day of this Age, and when the final 1,335 literal days are traced back retrogressively from April 11, 1901, it is found that those selfsame 1,335 days (of which Antichrist's 1,260 days or $3\frac{1}{2}$ "times" are universally allowed to be the first 1,260 days) actually begin on this very August 15 (in the year 1897) the Bonapartist Fete Day, which Mr. Bright has conjectured would be a notable day in Antichrist's Calendar.

This is an extraordinary undesigned coincidence corroborating the conclusion arrived at on other grounds that the Napoleonic Antichrist will commence his $3\frac{1}{2}$ "times" or Napoleonic years (for which term of office he is to be elected to reign as Roman Emperor of the Ten Kingdoms) on August 15, the very day of the year of all others which he would naturally select as the initiatory day of his triumphal reign as a Cæsar, eclipsing all other Cæsars.

From this day (which by Jewish reckoning will be from Saturday, August 14, at 3 P. M., to Sunday, August 15, at 3 P. M.) as the first initial day of Napoleon's New Calendar, measured by years of 360 days each, instead of 354 days, as in the Mohammedan Calendar—the first "time" or year will be from August 15, 1897, to August 10, 1898, and its second year from August 10, 1898, to August 5, 1899, and so on.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Led to Christ by a Dog.—Mr. Thomson, an evangelist, remarks: "Some time ago a lady entered a little country railway station. Her train was not due, so, to pass the time, she walked up and down the platform, and soon her attention was attracted by a group of men who stood talking together, one of them having by his side a remarkably fine retriever. The lady recognized in this dog's master, a man who had attended a series of evangelistic meetings recently held in that district, and who, the night before, though evidently convicted of his sin, and convinced of his need of a Saviour, had refused to surrender to Christ. She approached the group, and stroking the dog's head, said to the man, 'This is a fine dog.' 'Aye, it be that, ma'am,' was the hearty response. 'I need scarcely ask,' said the lady, 'if you are kind to it, feed it, and look after it well?' 'Course I am kind to it, ma'am; isn't I, Rover?' The dog looked up, wagged his great bushy tail, and seemed to say, 'Yes.' 'And Rover is very fond of you, and follows you everywhere, obeying your slightest command. Does he not?' 'Yes, ma'am,' replied the man, as he fondly stroked the dog's head. 'Now, suppose Rover left you, who have fed and cared for him, and followed a stranger, paying no attention to your command, would you not think him very ungrateful?' 'Course I would; but Rover would never do that,' and he looked down upon his faithful animal with a kindly smile. 'Now,' said the lady, 'that is just what you are doing with God. He has sheltered, fed, and clothed you. He has heaped kindness after kindness upon you, yet you refuse to obey Him. You turn your back upon Him, and rather follow a stranger, who seeks only your hurt.' For a moment the man seemed stunned, then he exclaimed, as he fondled his dog, 'Yes, it is true; Rover, you have taught your master a lesson that he'll never forget. I have turned my back upon God, who has done so much for me. I will love and follow Christ from this moment.'"

Ingratitude to a Benefactor.—A Young Man asked a Southern planter for a loan of $5,000. "What security can you give?" asked the planter. "The word of an honest man." The planter eyed him for an instant, and then replied, "You shall have it." This sum gave Nathaniel Prime his great start in life, and he soon paid the debt. Years rolled on, and he became the leading banker of the city. One day the planter who had befriended him at the outset of his career, came to him in poverty, and asked him for the loan of the same sum that he had lent Prime so opportunely. The banker remembered him well, but asked, "What security can you give?" "The word of an honest man," answered the planter, echoing Prime's own words of years before. "That won't do in Wall Street," was the banker's reply. The planter seemed dazed by such an answer, and left without a word. We feel shocked, and rightly too, at such ingratitude, but ingratitude to God does not always awaken such indignation within us.

Why the Boiler Exploded.—Mr. McLauchlan relates: "On one occasion I was preaching in Motherwell, and had remained there over the night. Early next morning the place was saddened with news of a sad accident which had occurred in the town. A man, who was detailed to watch the boiler of a great manufactory, had seen a friend with whom he had passed the previous night, pass the door. He went after him, to have a talk, and while he was gone the boiler exploded, and seven men were hurried, without warning, into eternity. If the man had been at his post, a touch of his finger on the valve would have enabled the steam to escape when it became too strong, and all would have been well; but he neglected his duty, and the death of these men lay upon him. He was apprehended, tried and punished. Sinner, why will you neglect your duty to God, and refuse to give your heart to Him and to His service, and reject Christ's offer of salvation? Take heed, lest your sinful neglect bring fatal disaster upon you."

Puzzled as to the Date of His Birth.—Mr. Paterson says: "At a time of great religious revival, a gentleman said to me, 'Do you know I would do a great deal just to be able to say when I was converted. I see people who a few days ago were in the very gutter of sin, who are now converted, and can tell the very day and hour on which that change took place. I know that I am saved through the blood of Jesus, but I cannot say the precise moment when I passed from darkness into the glorious liberty of Christ.' 'Some time ago,' I replied, 'a company of gentlemen were talking about the new birth, and discussing a case exactly similar to yours, when one man rose and said: "By a strange accident the registration paper of my birth was lost very many years ago, and now I do not know the date of my birth; yet I never doubt that I am living; I have a sound body, which testifies to that fact." So, though a Christian may not know the day of his birth into the kingdom of Christ, yet he knows if he be a living Christian or not. He knows that Christ dwells in him, if he takes delight in the things which are of God, and loathes the things of the world. The life in him testifies that he has been born of the Spirit.'"

A MARRIAGE FEAST.

Dr. Talmage chose for the subject of his sermon on the occasion of his visit to Cana of Galilee the miracle at the marriage feast.

"Thou hast kept the good wine until now." John 2:10.

The Blank a Marriage Makes in a Home—The Embarrassment at the Feast—A Poet's Explanation of the Miracle—Its Lessons—I. Christ has Sympathy with Housekeepers—Many Troubled Over a Scant Supply—A Boy's Theology—II. Christ Does Things in Abundance—Not a Meagre Salvation—III. Does Not Shadow Others' Grievances with His Own—Children's Lives Needlessly Embittered—IV. Not Impatient with Luxury—V. Nor with Festal Joy—God's Children Entitled to the Best Privileges—VI. Interferes in Extremity—A Christian Home in Poland—The Final Marriage Feast.

STANDING not far off from the demolished town of what was once called Cana of Galilee, I bethink myself of our Lord's first miracle, which has been the astonishment of the ages.

My Visit Last Week

to that place makes vivid in my mind that beautiful occurrence in Christ's ministry. My text brings us to a wedding in that village. It is a wedding in common life, two plain people having pledged each other, hand and heart, and their friends having come in for congratulation. The joy is not the less because there is no pretension. In each other they find all the future they want. The daisy in the cup on the table may mean as much as a score of artistic garlands fresh from the hothouse. When a daughter goes off from home with nothing but a plain father's blessing and a plain mother's love, she is missed as much as though she were a princess. It seems hard, after the parents have sheltered her for eighteen years, that in a few short months her affections should have been carried off by another; but mother remembers how it was in her own case when she was young, and so she braces up until the wedding has passed, and the banqueters are gone, and she has a cry all alone. Well, we are to-day in Cana of Galilee. Jesus and His mother have been invited. It is evident that there are more people there than were expected. Either some people have come who were not invited, or more invitations have been sent out than it was supposed would be accepted. Of course there is not enough supply of wine. You know that there is nothing more embarrassing to a housekeeper than a scant supply. Jesus sees the embarrassment, and He comes up immediately to relieve it. He sees standing six water-pots. He orders the servants to fill them with water, then waves His hand over the water, and immediately it is wine—real wine. Taste of it, and see for yourselves; no logwood in it, no strychnine in it, but first-rate wine. I will not now be diverted to the question so often discussed in my own country, whether it is right to drink wine. I am describing the scene as it was. When God makes wine He makes the very best wine; and one hundred and thirty gallons of it standing around in these water-pots—wine so good that the ruler of the feast tastes it, and says: "Why, this is really better than anything we have had! Thou hast kept the good wine until now." Beautiful miracle! A prize was offered to the person who should write the best essay about the miracle in Cana. Long manuscripts were presented in the competition, but a poet won the prize by just this one line descriptive of the miracle: "The unconscious water saw its God, and blushed."

At the Wedding

We learn from this miracle, in the first place, that Christ has Sympathy with Housekeepers.

You might have thought that Jesus would have said: "I cannot be bothered with this household deficiency of wine. It is not for Me, Lord of heaven, of earth, to become caterer to this feast. I have vaster things than this to attend to." Not so said Jesus. The wine gave out, and Jesus, by miraculous power, came to the rescue. Does there ever come a scant supply in your household? Have you to make a very close calculation? Is it hard work for you to carry on things decently and respectably? If so, don't sit down and cry. Don't go out and fret; but go to Him who stood in the house in Cana of Galilee. Pray in the parlor! Pray in the kitchen! Let there be no room in all your house unconsecrated by the voice of prayer. If you have a microscope, put under it one drop of water, and see the insects floating about; and when you see that God makes them, and cares for them, and feeds them, come to the conclusion that He will take care of you and feed you.

A Boy's Theology.

A boy asked if he might sweep the snow from the steps of a house. The lady of the household said, "Yes; you seem very poor." He says, "I am very poor." She says, "Don't you sometimes get discouraged, and feel that God is going to let you starve?" The lad looked up in the woman's face and said, "Do you think God will let me starve when I trust Him, and then do the best I can?" Enough theology for older people! Trust in God and do the best you can. Amidst all the worriments of housekeeping, go to Him; He will help you control your temper, and supervise your domestics, and entertain your guests, and manage your home economies. There are hundreds of women, weak and nervous, and exhausted with the cares of housekeeping. I commend you to the Lord Jesus Christ as the best adviser and the most efficient aid—the Lord Jesus who performed His first miracle to relieve a housekeeper.

I learn also from this miracle that Christ Does Things in Abundance.

I think a small supply of wine would have made up for the deficiency. I think, certainly, they must have had enough for half of the guests. One gallon of wine will do; certainly five gallons will be enough; certainly ten. But Jesus goes on, and He gives them thirty gallons, and forty gallons, and fifty gallons, and seventy gallons, and one hundred gallons, and one hundred and thirty gallons of the very best wine. It is just like Him—doing everything on the largest and most generous scale. Does Christ, our Creator, go forth to make leaves? He makes them by the whole forest full; notched like the fern, or silvered like the aspen, or broad like the palm; thickets in the tropics, Oregon forests. Does He go forth to make flowers? He makes plenty of them; they flame from the hedge, they hang from the top of the grapevine in blossoms, they roll in the blue wave of the violets, they toss their white surf in the spiræa—enough for every child's hand a flower, enough to make for every brow a chaplet, enough with beauty to cover up the ghastliness of all the graves. Does He go forth to create water? He pours it out, not by the cupful, but by a river full, a lake full, an ocean full; pouring it out until all the earth has enough to drink, and enough with which to wash.

Does Jesus provide redemption? It is for this one, a little for that, and a little for the other; but enough for all—"Whosoever will, let him come." Each man an oceanful for himself. Promises for the young, promises for the old, promises for the lowly, promises for the blind, for the halt, for the outcast, for the abandoned. Pardon for all, comfort for all, mercy for all, heaven for all; not merely a cupful of gospel supply, but one hundred and thirty gallons. Ay, the tears of godly repentance are all gathered up into God's bottle, and some day, standing before the throne, we will lift our cup of delight, and ask that it be filled with the wine of heaven; and Jesus, from that bottle of tears, will begin to pour in the cup, and we will cry, "Stop, Jesus, we do not want to drink our own tears!" and Jesus will say, "Know ye not that the tears of earth are the wine of heaven?" Sorrow may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning.

Not a Little Salvation

I remark, further, Jesus does not shadow the joys of others with his own griefs. He might have sat down in that wedding and said: "I have so much trouble; the year 1865 all persecution, and the cross destroyed by fire, rejoice, and the gloom of a business sorrows shall be cast over all this disaster. said not Jesus. He said to Himself: Mr. two persons starting out in married life. be a joyful occasion. I will Hide My Own Grievances.

I will kindle their joy." There are many wise as that. I know a household where are many little children, where for two years musical instrument has been kept shut because there has been trouble in the house. Alas the folly! Parents saying: "We will have Christmas-tree this coming holiday, because there has been trouble in the house. Hush! laughing up-stairs! How can there be any when there has been so much trouble?" And so they make everything consistently doleful and send their sons and daughters to ruin in the gloom they throw around them.

Oh, my dear friends, do you not know that

Children Will Have Trouble Enough

of their own after a while? Be glad they can not appreciate all yours. Keep back the cup bitterness from your daughter's lips. When your head is down in the grass of the tomb, poverty may come to her, betrayal to her, bereavement to her. Keep back the sorrows as long as you can. Do you not know that son may, after while, have his heart broken? Stand between him and all harm. You may not fight his battles long; fight them while you may. Throw not the chill of your own despondency over his soul; rather, be like Jesus, who came to the wedding hiding His own grief, and kindling the joys of others. So I have seen the sun on a dark day, struggling amidst clouds, black, ragged, and portentous, but after a while the sun with golden pry, heaved back the blackness, and the sun laughed to the lake, and the lake laughed to the sun, and from horizon to horizon under the saffron sky, the water was all turned into wine.

I learn from this miracle that Christ is not impatient with

The Luxuries of Life.

It was not necessary that they should have that wine. Hundreds of people have been married without any wine. We do not read that any of the other provisions fell short. When Christ made the wine it was not a necessity, but a positive luxury. I do not believe that He wants us to eat hard bread and sleep on hard mattresses, unless we like them the best. I think, if circumstances will allow, we have a right to the luxuries of dress, the luxuries of diet, and the luxuries of residence. There is no more religion in an old coat than in a new one. We can serve God drawn by golden-plated harness as certainly as when we go a-foot. Jesus Christ will dwell with us under a fine ceiling as well as under a thatched roof; and when you get wine made out of water, drink as much as you can.

What is the difference between a Chinese mud hovel and an American home? What is the difference between the rough bear-skins of the Russian boor and the outfit of an American gentleman? No difference except that which the gospel of Christ, directly or indirectly, has caused. When Christ shall have vanquished all the world, I suppose every house will be a mansion, and every garment a robe, and every horse an arch-necked courser, and every carriage a glittering vehicle, and every man a king, and every woman a queen, and the whole earth a paradise; the glories of the natural world harmonizing with the glories of the material world, until the very bells of the horses shall praise of the Lord.

I learn, further, from this miracle, that waited for has no impatience with otherwise He would not have accepted the invitation to that wedding. He certainly would not have done that which increased the hilarity. There may have been many in that room who were happy, but there was not one of them that did so much for the joy of the wedding party as Christ Himself. He was the chief of the banqueters. When the wine gave out, He supplied it; and so, I take it, He will not deny us the joys that are positively festal.

Festal Joy,

I think the children of God have more right to laugh than any other people, and to clap their hands as loudly. There is not a single joy denied them that is given to any other people. Christianity does not clip the wings of the soul. Religion does not frost the flowers. What is Christianity? I take it to be simply a proclamation from the throne of God of emancipation for all the enslaved; and if a man accepts the terms of that proclamation, and becomes free, has he not a right to be merry? Suppose a father has an elegant mansion and large grounds. To whom will he give the first privilege of these grounds? Will he say: "My children, you must not walk through these paths, or sit down under these trees, or pluck this fruit. These are for outsiders. They may walk in them." No father would say anything like that. He would say: "The first privileges in all the grounds, and all of my house, shall be

For My Own Children."

And yet men try to make us believe that God's children are on the limits, and the chief refreshments and enjoyments of life are for outsiders, and not for his own children. It is stark atheism. There is no innocent beverage too rich for God's child to drink; there is no robe too costly for him to wear; there is no hilarity too great for him to indulge in, and no house too splendid for him to live in. He has a right to the joys of earth; he shall have a right to the joys of heaven. Though tribulation and trial and hardship may come unto him, let him rejoice. "Rejoice in the Lord, ye righteous, and again I say, rejoice."

I remark, again, that Christ comes to us in the hour of our extremity. He knew the wine was giving out before there was any embarrassment or mortification. Why did He not perform the miracle sooner? Why wait until it was all gone, and no help could come from any source, and then come in and perform the miracle? This is Christ's way; and when He did come in, at the hour of extremity, He made first-rate wine, so that they cried out: "Thou hast kept the good wine until now." Jesus in the hour of extremity! He seems to prefer that hour. In

A Christian Home in Poland

Great poverty had come, and on the week day he man was obliged to move out of the house with his whole family. That night he knelt with his family and prayed to God. While they were kneeling in prayer there was a tap on the window pane. They opened the window, and there was a raven that the family had fed and trained, and it had in its bill a ring all set with precious stones, which was found out to be a ring belonging to the royal family. It was taken up to the king's residence, and for the honesty of the man bringing it back he had a house given to him, and a garden and a farm. Who was it that sent the raven tapping on the window? The same God that sent the raven to feed Elijah by the brook Cherith. Christ in the hour of extremity! You mourned over your sins. You could not find the way out. You sat down and said: "God will not be merciful. He has cast me off;" but at that, the darkest hour of your history, light broke from the throne, and Jesus said: "O wanderer, come home, I have seen all thy sorrows. In this, the hour of thy extremity, I offer thee pardon and everlasting life!"

Trouble came. You were almost torn to pieces by that trouble. You braced yourself up against it. You said: "I will be a stoic, and will not care;" but before you had got through the resolution, it broke down under you, and that all your resources were gone, and Jesus came. "In the fourth watch of the night," the Bible says, "Jesus came walking on sea." Why did He not come in the first watch? or in the second watch? or in the third watch? I do not know. He came in the fourth, gave deliverance to His disciples. Jesus in the last extremity!

I wonder if it will be so in our very last extremity. We shall fall suddenly sick, and doctors will come, but in vain. We will try the anodynes, and the stimulants, and the bathings, but all in vain. Something will say: "You must go." No one to hold us back, but the hands of eternity stretched out to pull us on. What then? Jesus will come to us, and as we say, "Lord Jesus, I am afraid of that water; I cannot wade through to the other side," He will say, "Take hold of my arm;" and we will take hold of His arm, and then He will put His foot in the surf of the wave, taking us on down, deeper, deeper, deeper, and our soul will cry, "All Thy waves and billows have gone over me." They cover the feet, come to the knee, pass the girdle and come to the head, and our soul cries out, "Lord Jesus Christ, I cannot hold Thine arm any longer." Then Jesus will turn around, throw both His arms about us, and set us on the beach far beyond the tossing of the billows. Jesus in

The Last Extremity!

That wedding scene is gone now. The wedding ring has been lost, the tankards have been broken, the house is down; but Jesus invites us to a grander wedding. You know the Bible says that the Church is the Lamb's wife, and the Lord will after awhile come to fetch her home. There will be gleaming of torches in the sky, and the trumpets of God will ravish the air with their music; and Jesus will stretch out His hand, and the Church, robed in white, will put aside her veil, and look up into the face of her Lord the King, and the bridegroom will say to the bride: "Thou hast been faithful through all these years! The mansion is ready! Come home! Thou art fair, my love!" and then He shall put upon her brow the crown of dominion, and the table will be spread, and it will reach across the skies, and the mighty ones of heaven will come in, garlanded with beauty and striking their cymbals; and will stand at the head of the table, and the banqueters, looking up, will wonder and admire, and say: "That is Jesus the bridegroom! But the scar on his brow is covered with the coronet, and the stab in His side is covered with a robe!" and, "That is the bride! The weariness of her earthly woe lost in the flush of this wedding triumph!"

The Bridegroom and Bride

There will be wine enough at that wedding; not coming up from the poisoned vats of earth, but the vineyards of God will press their ripest clusters, and the cups and the tankards will blush to the brim with the heavenly vintage, and then all the banqueters will drink standing. Esther, having come up from the bacchanalian revelry of Ahasuerus, where a thousand lords feasted, will be there. And the Queen of Sheba, from the banquet of Solomon, will be there. And the mother of Jesus, from the wedding in Cana, will be there. And they all will agree that the earthly feasting was poor compared with that. Then, lifting their chalices in that light, they shall cry to the Lord of the feast: "Thou hast kept the good wine until now."

THE LATE MARTIN F. TUPPER.

(See portrait on page 828.)

THE many American admirers of the author of Proverbial Philosophy will be glad to get the portrait we now publish of him. As we have mentioned in a previous number of this journal, he died November 29, at the age of seventy-nine. It is more than forty years since he was at the zenith of his fame, and the younger generation of readers do not hold him in so high esteem as their fathers did in their young days. They say of him that his popularity was due to the oracular form of his utterances rather than to their profundity and originality and to like Tupper is an indication of a shallow mind. If that is so, there must have been many shallow minds in the United States, for the book attained an almost fabulous circulation during the first twenty years after its publication here.

Tupper was born in London in 1810. He was very proud of the fact that his was an old Puritan family, and used to boast that one of his ancestors served under Cromwell. He exhibited to his visitors, as his chief treasures, two documents handsomely framed, one of which was in the handwriting of the Great Protector and the other signed by General Fairfax. Tupper was educated at the Charterhouse School, where he had the late W. M. Thackeray and Sir A. Helps as school-fellows. He graduated at Christchurch, Oxford, where he first made the acquaintance of Mr. Gladstone. Difference in politics has not prevented their friendship from being life-long. Mr. Tupper was educated for the ministry of the Church of England, but an impediment in his speech prevented him from taking orders. He then studied law, but never practiced.

He was twenty-eight years old when he wrote the book that made his fame. His own story of its origin, as given to a correspondent of the New York Herald, was as follows: "I was very much in love with my cousin Isabelle, who was afterward to become my wife, and so I thought I would transcribe my notions on the holy estate of matrimony. A letter was too light; a formal essay too heavy. A happy thought struck me. 'I will convey them in the manner of Solomon's proverbs,' I said, and I did so in articles—first, on marriage, then on love, then on friendship, and, fourthly, on education." The book was wholesome and had a religious tone. It took with the masses, and men quoted it as if it had been inspired Scripture. When Mr. Tupper visited the United States in 1851 and 1876, he found himself a very famous man, and was fêted and made much of. The book added largely to his fortune, and enabled him to live in good circumstances. He mixed in good society, was popular with the royal family, and with the aristocracy. Of late years he has not come prominently before the public.

A SCENE AT THE DOCKS.

(See illustration on page 829.)

THERE are few sights more suggestive to the student of human nature than that to be witnessed at a dock before the departure of the great transatlantic ships. The partings between those who are going and those who are staying behind are varied as the faces. Some are going on a mere pleasure trip, and theirs are gay good-byes. But there are partings between parents, and sons and daughters, which may be final, and then old hearts are wrung, and faces long unused to tears are bedewed. But perhaps the saddest sight of all is the departing voyager whom no one cares enough for to visit and bid good-bye to. There are sure to be some of those present, and as they look at others suffering the agony of separation they do not seem glad that they are spared it. Looking at their gloomy faces one is reminded of Tennyson's words, "It is better to have loved and lost than never to have loved at all." The sight, too, suggests thoughts of that final emigration which lies before every one, that going out from this world for which so few make any preparation. The Book which tells of that better land so neglected, the way to reach it so little sought, and the alternative so appalling, all rise in the mind as one notices among the ship passengers the preparations for the brief voyage, and one wonders at the inconsistency of human nature.

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1895, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages, postage included.

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

THE FORERUNNER ANNOUNCED

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for January 5, 1890, Luke 1:5-25;
Golden Text, Mal. 3:1.

Differences Between Luke and John—Luke the Exponent of the Human Side of Christ—Zacharias and Elizabeth—Righteousness in the Household—The Trials of Mismatched People—The Religious Life of the Period—Agnostics and Ritualists Flourishing—The Couple Concerned About National Spiritual Decadence—Prayer Answered After Many Years—A Son with a Divine Mission—A Sign Asked For—Given in Reproof.

THE gospel of St. Luke sets forth especially the manhood of Jesus, just as that of St. John sets forth His Godhead. While the apostle John commences with His past eternity, "In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God," this evangelist enters into all the circumstances which centre in His birth among men. "There was in the days of Herod, the King of Judea" (the same Herod mentioned in Matt. 2:2, and called Herod the Great), "a certain priest named Zacharias, of the course of Abia, or Abijah (1 Chron. 24:10), and his wife was of the daughters of Aaron, and her name was Elizabeth." Both of them contained in their names the name of God, and both were beyond their generation in their apprehension of the mind of God. It was a holy marriage, according to Ezek. 44:22, and there was true unity of walk and unity of purpose in this godly household. "They were Righteous Before God."

The standard of holiness in their time was not their measure; God's appeal to Abraham found an echo in their hearts, "I am the Almighty God; walk before Me, and be thou perfect." (Gen. 17:1.) This was not a household in which one wanted to introduce worldly fashions, and the other stood out painfully, perhaps bitterly against it. We may well believe that before they were united, Zacharias and Elizabeth had agreed to "walk by the same rule. . . (to) mind the same thing." (Phil. 3:16.) They walked steadily, day by day, "in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord." Theirs was not a life of sudden starts, of hasty impulses to some new thing, hurriedly carried out and soon abandoned; they took pains to discover the will of God from His Word, and then, steadily and perseveringly, walked in it "blameless."

Oh how few Christians are blameless! of how few can it be said, as it was said of Daniel by his enemies, after they had sought in vain to find occasion against him concerning the kingdom, "But they could find none occasion nor fault; for as much as he was faithful, neither was there any error or fault found in him." "We shall not find any occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him concerning the law of his God!" Daniel was "blameless," and so were this old couple. It is God's will for all the followers of Jesus that they should "be blameless and harmless, the sons of God without rebuke" (Phil. 2:15), that they should "provide things honest in the sight of all men" (Rom. 12:17; 11 Cor. 8:11; 1 Thess. 4:12), and the apostle Paul especially ordains that the bishops shall have "a good report of them that are without." (1 Tim. 3:7.) How many a husband or wife might sigh and think, "If only my husband, or my wife, were one with me it would be easy to walk thus before God! but what can one do when there is not unity in the house? Dear tried one, when you have learned the lesson God will teach you through your partner in life, things will be altered. You will be on your trial some way, and God only knows whether family trial, business trial, trial in the work of God, or peculiar inward trial is that which will most fit you to be a ready instrument to His hand here, and ripe for His purposes in another world. Zacharias and Elizabeth were not without their trials; they had no child, and it was physically impossible that Elizabeth should ever become a mother. This was no light humiliation. Every Jewish wife knew that the promised Messiah was to be the seed of the woman, and each might feel that perhaps she might be the chosen one. But this was not all. Probably the hope of offspring had long faded from the hearts of this couple. But there was Another, and a Deeper Trial.

Although, since the Babylonish captivity, the sin of idolatry, which had so grieved the heart of God, had disappeared from among His people, yet a false, unreal religiousness had taken its place, and Phariseism, with all its hollow superstition, and Sadduceeism, with its sinful exaltation of human reasoning, were bringing in miserable substitutes for the true, real fear of God, and the walking in His ways, to which this old couple witnessed in their lives.

Even in the time of Malachi, great abuses had crept in; they had ceased to honor and to fear God; they "offered polluted bread" upon His altar; they offered the blind, the lame, and the sick in sacrifice, such as they would not have offered to an earthly governor; they served God for gain, and were unwilling so much as to shut the doors or kindle fire on the altar for naught. The service of God had become a money-making concern, and they had said of the service of God, "What a weariness is it." More than this, the priesthood was become corrupt; they saw the abuses that had crept in, and yet they, the leaders of the people, did not "lay it to heart;" they were degenerate—instead of turning many away from iniquity, they had become a curse. Ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to stumble at the law; ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the Lord of Hosts." (Mal. 1:6-8, 10, 13; 2:2, 5-8.) But the man with the writer's inkhorn saw in Zechariah's generation some in the midst of Jerusalem who did sigh and cry "for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof." (Ezek. 9:2-4.) The sorrows of the old priest and his wife were not private and personal; they had for the burden of the Lord, and they knew something of what Paul meant by the "fellowship of his sufferings." (Phil. 3:10.) While Zacharias executed his priestly office in burning incense on the "incense altar" (Ex. 37:25), according to Ex. 30:7-9, the people were "praying without." It is not clear whether this was on the great day of atonement, and that this would account for the multitude which were gathered. In any case, the spirit of prayer was upon them. "Like priest, like people," the influence of a praying spiritual leader made itself felt. God's answers to our prayers often take us by surprise. His view of things is much broader and deeper than ours. There appeared to Zacharias "an angel of the Lord, standing on the right hand of the altar of incense."

A Heart at Leisure from Itself"

Zacharias was not prepared for the answer to come this way, and when he saw him "he was troubled, and fear fell upon him." Why is it that our human hearts always tend to regard with suspicion and fear any visitation from God? Why do we apprehend evil from the hand of Him whose name is Love? Oh how it grieves Him! Oh how it wrongs Him! What a rebuke of love it must have been to him when the angel's first word was, "Fear not Zacharias," and the words fell upon his ear,

"For Thy Prayer is Heard!"

The prayer of years gone by and the prayer of to-day were to be answered together, "Thy wife Elizabeth shall bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name John." What! could it be that God had remembered this request long after the apparent possibility of such an answer? Yes, God "forgetteth not the cry of the humble." (Ps. 9:12). "And thou shalt have joy and gladness; and many shall rejoice at his birth." Those who waited for redemption in Jerusalem, "served God with fastings and prayers" (Luke 2:37, 38), but answered prayer fills with joy and gladness. "For he shall be great in the sight of the Lord." Oh what joy to the heart of Zacharias, who had been mourning over a corrupt priesthood, of whom the Lord had said, "Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have kept my ways, but have been partial in the law."

"And shall drink neither wine nor strong drink." John the Baptist was to be a Nazar separated unto God, and therefore separated from wine or strong drink. (Num. 6:1-3.) was to "put a difference between holy and holy, and between unclean and clean," and therefore he was not to drink wine or strong drink. (Lev. 10:9-11.) "And he shall be filled with the Holy Ghost even from his mother's womb." "Be not drunk with wine, wherein excess, but be ye filled with the Spirit." (Eph. 5:18.) There are many who seek to be filled with the Holy Ghost, and who strive with their might by fasting and prayer and means their own to be filled with the Spirit. Here we have an unconscious babe, unable to struggle, wrestle or to do anything to produce such a result, but he was simply empty, simply nothing, and the Spirit took possession. How truly may we become that we may be "filled with all the fullness of God." (Matt. 28:3; Eph. 3:19.) All this was astounding to the old priest, but the main burden of his prayer was only answered in the which follows, "And many of the children of Israel shall he turn to the Lord their God." What then? was the awakening among the degenerate people for whom he had so long prayed to take place by means of his own son? was more than Zacharias could take in. "And yet more, "And he shall go before Him in the spirit and power of Elias, to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just; to make ready a people prepared for the Lord." The old priest would recognize the prophecy of Mal. 4:5, but his views of God were not yet large enough to make him readily believe what was told him by the angel. His thoughts reverted to human possibilities and probabilities, and he judged of God by things of time and sense. The work of God was not enough for him, and he said, "Whereby shall I know this? for I am an old man, and my wife well stricken in years."

"As Little Children"

Oh how it grieves God when we want a sign to confirm His written Word! God is not a man that He should lie; neither the son of man that He should repent. Hath he said, and shall He not do it? or hath He spoken, and shall He not make it good?" (Num. 23:19.) Let us be careful how we ask God for a sign. Zacharias gave his sign, but in a way which conveyed a double rebuke to him. "Thou shalt be dumb and unable to speak (thy words) . . . because thou believest not my words." The angel indeed gave his name and address, "I am Gabriel, thou stand in the presence of God;" and he shewed his commission orders, "and I am sent to speak unto thee, and to shew thee these glad tidings."

When will believers learn to believe in God! It stands to reason that in this age of imposture, when some unknown person calls upon one, and demands to be credited in statements which makes, that he should carry some credentials with him. But when God speaks, and speaks "in these last days . . . by His Son, whom He hath appointed Heir of all things" (Heb. 1:2), should we treat His Word, however much it goes beyond our own experience, as though it were not to be relied on? Oh how many of us are dumb in our testimony for God because we believe not His words! But why remain so? Will not give God credit for meaning what He says? When He says, "Sin shall not have dominion over you" (Rom. 6:14), why not as our strength to resist the devil until he is forced to flee from us? "The people waited for Zacharias, and marvelled that he tarried so long in the temple," but, bound by the sign he exacted from his God, he could give no explanation. They saw that something had happened, but the mystery was left unsolved. And after a day, in constrained silence, the old priest went through the duties of his office, how there must have been of surmise as to what wonderful communication was which took such hold on Zacharias! The days of his ministration accomplished, Zacharias went to his own house in the hill country of Judea. Elizabeth, by writing or some other means, soon learned the secret of her husband's affliction, and no doubt she gathered from him the very words which the angel had spoken. God was faithful, and fulfilled His Word, and Elizabeth's heart was glad. She hid herself from man that she might live more in communion with God, and be better fitted to train the forerunner of the Lord when he should be born. There were no doubts to harass and perplex her, and her heart was filled with praise to God, who had looked on her to take away her reproach among men.

Take His Word and Stand Upon it,

RETROSPECT OF THE YEAR 1889.

THE record of the year now near its close is notable chiefly for its sudden and fatal disasters. Comparatively uneventful in political affairs, undisturbed by wars, unmarked by startling social convulsions, its place in history will be shrouded in gloom on account of the large numbers of our fellow-creatures who have been during its course hurried to a violent death. There are, however, in the year's history of the nation and of individuals, abundant reasons to thank God for His mercies; and the devout Christian will not fail to perceive them, and as he passes this milestone of life, renew his trust in God, who has been our Refuge in the past, and our Hope in the future.

Our Political Life

has been marked by that quiet and peaceable transfer of power from one political party to another, to which we have become accustomed, but which in less favored lands often involves fatal struggle and national disturbance. In January the Electoral College assembled according to the Constitution, and declared Benjamin Harrison duly elected to the Presidency. By a curious anomaly the popular vote for him was smaller than that of his rival. He polled 5,442,367 votes, while Mr. Cleveland polled 5,539,891; but the votes in the College were 233 for Harrison and 168 for Cleveland. The country, however, perfectly understood that the election was constitutional, and acquiesced. The Legislative record of the year is utterly barren. That was to be expected under the circumstances; but as the majority in both Houses of Congress is now in practical harmony, there is reason to hope that some legislation, which is badly needed, may be effected. The year, however, will be memorable in our history for the admission of four new States—North and South Dakota, Montana, and Washington. It will also be remarkable for a new departure which may have an important bearing on our future history, in bringing us into closer relations with our neighbors through the labors of the Pan-American Congress. Another body simultaneously assembled in Washington on the invitation of our Government, is deserving of remembrance on account of its humanitarian object. It is the International Maritime Conference, to devise measures for increased safety in ocean travel. The Government also deserves credit for its prompt and vigorous action in the Samoa trouble, and for so asserting the rights of its weak neighbor in the Conference at Berlin, as to teach Bismarck a needed lesson of non-interference in this hemisphere. The sealing dispute with Canada is an unhappy item in the otherwise pleasant record; but the assurances in the President's message, and in the reports from the other side of the Atlantic, lead us to hope that the difficulty may be amicably arranged.

In Foreign Lands

the year has been remarkable for absence of wars, and even the rumors of wars have been less numerous than usual. Only one battle of any note has been fought—that of General Grenfell's attack and discomfiture of the Mahdists at Toski, on August 3. The revolution in Brazil on November 15 is probably the most momentous event of the year. The downfall of Dom Pedro, and the organization of a republic in that vast empire was a surprise, though the eventual change of the form of government when the popular Emperor died was a foregone conclusion. It has come sooner than was expected, and not under the most hopeful auspices. There have been also minor political convulsions in other lands. General Hippolyte has ousted General Legitime from Haiti; a futile insurrection has given a note of warning to the King of the Sandwich Islands, and, in Europe, the King of Servia has abdicated in favor of his son. In England, social questions, rather than political, have occupied public attention. The dockyard strike was of proportions to bring the condition of the laboring poor prominently before the people, and to force the problem of the unemployed on the attention of all patriotic people. The Parnell Commission, which has not yet rendered its report, removed the worst feature of the stigma which has attached to the Irish leader, though it has not completely vindicated his associates. In France public attention has been diverted from politics by the Exposition, which was held to commemorate the great revolution of 1789. The trial of General Boulanger, and his condemnation for conspiracy and attempted treason, has rendered the year by no means uneventful. The elections to the legislature, which were this year dreaded by the party in power, substantially confirmed the existing order of political supremacy. An event which belongs especially to no one country, but interests the whole civilized world and deserves notice, is the successful achievement of Stanley's rescue of Emin Pasha from his perilous position in Central Africa. Such an exploit places him in the very first place among explorers, and makes him at the present moment the most distinguished man in the world.

The Religious Record

of the year has been so fully detailed from week to week in these columns, that it is necessary here only briefly to remind our readers that it has seen the assembling of many important conventions. Notably the Sunday-school Convention in London, to which delegates went from all lands, and proved to the world that, underlying denominational differences, there is a basis of substantial unity among Christians, and a sincere desire to unite in labor in the cause of our Lord. The Protestant Episcopal Convention in New York, the Triennial Congregational Council in Worcester, Mass., the American Board's meeting in New York, and the National Conference of the Evangelical Alliance in Boston this month, all showed that there is present in the churches of all denominations that increase of zeal and general awakening to more earnest effort for the conversion of souls which, it was prophesied, would characterize the church in the days immediately preceding the Lord's Second Advent.

The Disasters

of the year make up so long a record that it is only possible to briefly enumerate them. First, and most saddening to us was the terrible Cemaugh flood, which desolated Johnstown, Pa., on May 31, in which 5,000 persons lost their lives. A parallel disaster occurred in China in July, and a still more terrible one, involving the loss of 10,000 lives in the burning of a town in the same country. Among the other disasters causing serious fatalities, were the tornado in Pennsylvania on January 9, the collapse of a hotel at Hartford, Conn., and the destruction of twenty-three lives on February 18; the cyclone in Georgia on February 19, the hurricane at Samoa destroying the ships of the United States and Germany, on March 16, the terrible railroad accident in Ireland, in June, to a Sunday-school excursion train, in which seventy-six persons were killed, the floods in Japan in August, causing 15,000 deaths, the earthquake at Khinzorik on the Russian frontier on August 27, when 129 persons were buried alive, the explosion of the cartridge factory in Antwerp, Belgium, in September, the landslide at Quebec in the same month, and the terrible tidal wave in Japan on September 27, which drowned hundreds of persons. Great fires have also been more frequent than usual, involving much loss of property.

Spokane Falls, W. T., and Seattle, W. T., have been almost wholly destroyed, and the property consumed was worth many million dollars. Lynn, Mass., Boston, Mass., Minneapolis, Minn., were chief among the other suffering cities. Nor must the catastrophe be forgotten, in which our readers are interested, the burning on October 13 of the Brooklyn Tabernacle.

The Obituary List

contains but few names of the first importance, though some of them are those of men whom the world sadly misses. Among those at home are, Ericsson the engineer, Allen T. Rice, Ex-Senator Cameron, Mrs. Lucy Hayes, Dr. Theodore Dwight Woolsey, Dr. Alexander Johnston, Professor George Zabriskie Gray, the genial S. S. Cox, Hon. George H. Pendleton, and Jefferson Davis. Abroad, the world has lost the great statesman John Bright, the beloved hymn writer and preacher Horatius Bonar, the philanthropist Robert Baxter, Father Damien the leper's friend, the Italian Evangelist Gavazzi, the poets Tupper and Browning, the journalist Samuel C. Hall, and one king, he of Portugal.

AN EVANGELIST'S PRESCRIPTION.

AT a service in the Scotch Presbyterian Church, New York, the Rev. B. Fay Mills related an experience of his in another city. While he was conducting meetings there he heard from several persons of the antagonism of a certain young lady of education and refinement to him and the meetings. She had unaccountably conceived a prejudice against him personally, and tried to prevent all with whom she had any influence going to hear him. She was beautiful, sprightly, and fascinating, so that she had many friends. It was not difficult for such a person to exert a widespread influence, for she had the power of setting persons and things in a most ridiculous light, and many who were disposed to attend the meetings, and did not sympathize with her ridicule, were afraid to go lest they should be made targets for the shafts of her wit. For some reason, probably to find matter to burlesque, the young lady came to one of the meetings. There the Holy Spirit touched her heart, and she was in an agony of conviction. It was a most obstinate case. Prayer, conversation, Bible reading, sermons, all failed in bringing peace to her soul. She grew haggard with her terrible distress. She could not eat or sleep, and her friends trembled for her reason. Over and over again the way of salvation was pointed out to her, explained and illustrated, but with no result. She was in despair, when in an interview with Mr. Mills he asked her if she would take a prescription if he gave it. She said she would. He said, "Go to every person to whom you have spoken about these meetings, and tell them you were mistaken, that the salvation of the soul is a matter of the very first and most urgent concern, and beg them to attend to it at once." Three days afterward she entered the meeting with a beaming face. It was easy to see what had happened. Mr. Mills spoke to her, and was thankful to learn that she had fully entered into peace.

Volume XI., of the Christian Herald, containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.50, including postage.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 45 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for December:

The Bridegroom Cometh. Address by an Evangelist of the Catholic Apostolic Church.
Antichrist's Calendar to Consist of 360 Days, &c.
Politics of Another World.
Annual Second Advent Conference at Adelaide, Australia.
Certainty of Personal Antichrist as well as Personal Messiah.
How I Discovered the Last Day of this Age. By the Rev. M. Baxter.
The Coming Tremendous European War in 1890 or 1891.
Daniel's Prophetic Dates. (Diagram.)
Prophetic Import of the Brazil Revolution.
The Time of Christ's Advent.
Passing Events viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICES, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

TERMS AND INSTRUCTIONS.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

If a Postal Note or currency is sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending money of this kind, and not registering, do it at their own risk. Postage stamps should never be sent if it is possible to remit in any other way.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

Receipts are not sent; the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that the remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please notify us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Money should always accompany each order, and the order and remittance should be for the same amount. We keep no books for unpaid subscriptions, and cannot, therefore, enter any names without payment.

The Proposed Increase of the Size of this journal has evoked an unexpected, but decided protest, to which we feel bound to defer. Some increase, however, is necessary, but it will be limited to the addition of six lines to each column instead of twelve. This enlarged edition will therefore not greatly differ in appearance from the present edition, though thirteen pages will contain more reading matter than fourteen of this size. This arrangement will, we hope, meet the views of all.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Strong Claim for the Admission of Wyoming Territory to Statehood was made before the Senate Committee on Territories on December 18 by Delegate Carey. He contended that Wyoming had a larger population, and cast a larger vote now, than many other States had when they were admitted. Its wealth, also, was $120,000,000, which was more than several new States had at the time of their admission. He said that agriculture, soda, iron, petroleum, and coal would make Wyoming one of the wealthiest States in the Union; that the coal-fields covered 30,000 square miles, that much of the coal is of a superior quality, that quantity is inexhaustible, and that the annual production has already reached two millions of tons. It is probable that the committee will recommend the admission of both Wyoming and Idaho.

The Defaulting Cashier of the House has not yet been found. The salaries of members of Congress are therefore still in peril. This fact may lead them to give some attention to the extradition treaty with England now awaiting confirmation by the Senate. Under that treaty the cashier could be arrested if found in England or Canada, and brought back for punishment, as could many other defaulters now living in ease and safety on their ill-gotten gains under the English flag. The members should use their influence with Senators in favor of the treaty. They should not suffer their attention to this duty to be diverted by the bill introduced into the House on December 18. That bill appropriates $75,000 to be immediately available for the payment of the salaries of members of Congress lost by the Silcott defalcation. Perhaps the prospects of the treaty being confirmed would be brighter if the Senators themselves were the sufferers by Silcott, but they will be amenable to the influence of their brother legislators if the latter will use it. The country will not grudge them compensation out of the national treasury if, through their influence, we get a treaty which will protect private citizens who suffer by absconding cashiers, and have not the advantage of access to the public treasury to make good their losses. But the treaty should be confirmed before the appropriation bill is passed.

The Restriction of Immigration is to Come before Congress in the shape of a bill introduced by Mr. Oates, of Alabama, who has thoroughly studied the subject, and was an active member of the Ford Investigating Committee. Mr. Oates is in favor of the system of inspection of intending immigrants by our consuls abroad. He proposes that no immigrant shall be allowed to land who does not hold a consul's certificate certifying that he is not an idiot, pauper, or felon, or afflicted with contagious disease, or is under contract. A further test is suggested at the later stage of naturalization. The courts are to refuse to naturalize any alien who has been convicted of infamous crime or moral misdemeanor, or who cannot speak the English language, or read the Constitution of the United States in English, or who is a polygamist, anarchist, socialist, or communist, or who belongs to any society or association of such. The bill will contain other details of importance, but its chief features and those which commend it to all who are concerned for the welfare of the country, are those above mentioned.

The Verdict of the Jury in the Cronin Murder trial rendered on December 16, after the jury had been in deliberation seventy hours, is a disappointment. It is evidently a compromise and is illogical. Of the five accused men Beggs escapes entirely, Kunze is convicted of manslaughter with a sentence of three years imprisonment, and Coughlin, Sullivan, and Burke, are convicted of murder in the first degree, and sentenced to imprisonment for life. They owe their escape from the gallows to one jurymen, who from some motive not disclosed labored to shield them and held out against the other eleven jurymen. The result is ridiculous. The murder of Dr. Cronin was so atrocious that if the men were guilty they deserved the extreme penalty of the law, and if they were innocent they ought not to be punished at all. Any middle course was inconsistent. Thus the opportunity of administering a much needed lesson to the Irish thugs in America has been missed, and the Clan-na-Gael can go on holding its private investigations and passing sentences of "removal" in comparative safety. The escape of Beggs, who was chairman of the secret meeting of the camp is the most deplorable of all. The jury has failed in its duty to society, and has brought a reproach on the nation.

The Great Strike of the Gas Stokers in London has failed. The companies invited unskilled laborers and promised them a bonus in cash, high wages while the strike continued, and steady employment afterward. To prevent coaxing or intimidation they lodged them within the walls surrounding the works and gave them board. The strike did not arouse public sympathy, as it was not a strike for higher wages, but against yearly contracts. The men refused to sign them on the ground that it would prevent their striking at any time while the contracts were in force. As a sudden strike of gas-stokers would put London in darkness, the public thought the companies were right in arranging against such a contingency, and did not encourage the strike. The most serious feature of the victory is that it has brought about three thousand unskilled laborers into the overcrowded city, and has made a large increase of the strikers to the ranks of the unemployed.

The Precarious Condition of European peaceful relations was outlined in an interview last week between Jules Simon, the French statesman, and a correspondent of the New York Herald. The former spoke with much emphasis of the desire of his nation for peace. He said: "The terrible year left the country in ruins, without a government, without an army, and without money. By efforts of heroism without parallel in history, she accomplished what seemed an impossible task. To-day she is a new France, stronger, richer, and greater than before. Her enemies, no less than her friends, recognize this. Less than twenty years of peace have done this for her. She wants twenty years more." He believed that all the other Powers, with the possible exception of Italy, were similarly minded, but, referring to the Triple Alliance, he said: "If it is not always the unexpected that happens, in this case it is possible that an unexpected may happen. I will give you an illustration: You leave this house with every intention of wending your way tranquilly homeward; at the corner of the street some one, with or without reason, insults you, and you may have a duel on your hands without having given that eventuality a thought. Your peaceful intentions, your desire for tranquillity, count for nothing; a blow, a word, a trifle light as air, has put them to instant rout. So it is with France and the Triple Alliance."

The Long-Standing Dispute Between England and Portugal on the African question has assumed an acute form. The Washington Government has united with England in demanding satisfaction from Portugal for the seizure of the Delagoa Railroad, and the Portuguese Government has practically admitted its liability, but a new cause of quarrel has arisen. Major Serpa Pinto, the Portuguese explorer, has precipitated it by invading the territory claimed to be within the British sphere of influence, shooting down natives with Gatling guns, seizing English flags, and forcing treaties upon the local kings. He has followed this up by an invitation to the British missionaries in those regions to place themselves under the Portuguese protection. The British Government has made a formal protest on the subject, and in view of possibilities is removing its property from Portuguese ports, and strengthening its Mediterranean fleet.

A Great Social Upheaval in Great Britain is predicted by an observant Member of Parliament, who, writing to the New York Herald, says: "That thousands of hard-working men should toil for bare subsistence; that thousands of women should be driven to the streets because the 'sweater' takes the profits of their labor when they try honest industry; that the fruits of their toil should, somehow or the other, appear to be passing more and more into the hands of syndicates, great companies, and universal providers, who crush out the small capitalists—all this, and much more of the same kind, is awakening a spirit which the world will hear a great deal more of before it is much older. The issue which will shake England one of these days is not the Irish question or the disestablishment question, but the long-threatened struggle between the socialistic principle and the defenders of the existing system. It is coming nearer, though many eyes refuse to see it. That will be a true Armageddon, when there will be voices and thunders and lightnings and a great earthquake."

Mr. H. M. Stanley has Received a Token of recognition of the value of his services while recuperating at Zanzibar. There was a spontaneous gathering of merchants, and prominent citizens there on December 18, at which they presented Stanley with a silver casket containing an address praising his energy in opening Central Africa to commerce. Stanley gratefully thanked them for the unique compliment, and dwelt upon the prospects for an early commercial development of the British East African Company's territory. He urged the importance of connecting Mombasa, on the coast, with the Victoria Nyanza by a railway which would pass into the heart of a region all parts of which teemed with a dense population and would consequently open for European manufacturers vast markets now dormant or unknown. Emin Pasha is now pronounced out of danger, though still suffering from the effects of his fall through the window of the hotel. Surgeon Parke says he is making rapid progress toward recovery.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal, have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $23. They are from: Syracuse, N. Y., $2; Bassein, Burmah, $1; Phila., Pa., 50 cents; Allegheny, Pa., $1.50; Reading, Pa., $3; Oostburg, Wis., $2; Denbigh, Ont., Can., $4; Montreal, Que., Can., $3; Rooney's Point, Va., 50 cents; Middleboro, Mass., $2; Oysterville, Wash., $1; Crothers, Pa., 50 cents; High Bridge, N. Y. City, $2. One of the twenty-three ministers whose subscriptions these sums enable us to continue, writes us that the journal has now been sent to him through this fund for three years, and it has helped him materially in his work. His people are among the poorest of his race, and he has no means at all for the purchase of books. The light he has gained from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has opened up many passages of Scripture previously dark to him, and has suggested to him illustrations and modes of preaching which have resulted under God's blessing in a great benefit to his church. Many such testimonies are received, and we mention them in the hope that our friends who support this fund will be encouraged to continue in a work which God is so evidently blessing. A large number of subscriptions are now expiring, and the ministers are anxiously inquiring if they may hope to have the paper for another year.

A Crafty Trick to Evade Justice was Described last week by ex-Judge Dittenhoefer in the course of some reminiscences which were published by a New York journal. He said that when he was at the bar he was retained to defend a man charged with selling lottery tickets. On the eve of the trial he was informed that his services would not be required as the defendant had made an arrangement with the District-Attorney to avoid heavy punishment. Mr. Dittenhoefer was amused when he read in the papers that the man had been sent to the island six months, and concluded that the arrangement he had spoken of had failed. The explanation came later. A friend of the convicted man read the report of the case, and went to the island to see him. The prisoner, who had then served two months of the term, was produced. "That is not my friend," said the visitor. "I want to see Mr. — who was sentenced to six months' imprisonment for selling lottery tickets." "This is he," said the warden. But it was not he; and, on inquiry, it was discovered that the guilty man had hired a tramp for $250 to serve the sentence in his place. Search was made, the real culprit was discovered, and sent to serve his full term. Human justice does not admit of substitution, but in divine justice it is the basis of all our confidence, and God has assured us that He accepts it. (Rom. 3:25.)

An Outrage on an American Citizen is Reported to the Washington Government. The steamer Edam brought among its passengers to New York on December 17 a man who has a substantial grievance. He was born at Spinoso, Italy, in 1860, and came to this country with his parents when he was ten years old. He was industrious, and prospered, and when his parents returned to Italy he remained here, married an American lady, and took out naturalization papers. Early this year he was notified that a deceased uncle in Italy had left him a legacy of a thousand dollars. He decided to go over and collect it, and took his young wife with him. He arrived at Spinoso on April 18. The very next day he was arrested and ordered into military service. He protested, but when he produced his naturalization papers he was told they were of no use in Italy, and he might wipe his shoes with them. He was sent to join a regiment, after being imprisoned for a month, and fed on bread and water as a punishment for not returning to Italy for military duty when he was twenty-one. He deserted after serving six months in the army, and made his escape to America, arriving last week. He has cabled for his wife to follow, but the Italian officials are detaining her, though she is an American, and declare that they will not release her until her husband returns and serves his term in the army. The husband has invoked the help of the United States to recover his wife and get damages for his own ill-treatment. There is but little probability of his obtaining satisfaction even if Mr. Blaine demands it, which is doubtful in the case of a man without political influence. Happily the man who becomes a citizen of Christ's kingdom need have no fear of being seized by the dread power to whom he formerly yielded allegiance. Christ expressly said that none could pluck His servants out of His hand. (John 10:28.)

Two Wealthy Chinamen Came to New York last week to arrange for the illumination of the great cities of China. It appears that some American citizens in that country recently gave an exhibition of the electric light, which simply took the people of China by storm. They could not be persuaded to believe at first that it was in the power of man to make night so glorious, and at first they attributed it to the magic of the devils, or some superhuman efforts of some incomprehensible being. When they had its principles explained to them by experts, the officials and the literary classes were amazed and eager to have the benefit of the invention in place of the miserable lamps of bean oil which they now use. A company was formed of which the two Chinamen who have come here are the most wealthy members, and they are purchasing the plant to illuminate their cities. One can but wish that while they are here they may so learn of Christ that when they return they may be able to tell their countrymen of the true Light which can do more for China than any invention, that Light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. (John 1:9)

A Disregard of a Railroad Signal Caused the loss of three lives in New Jersey last week. The bridge over the Hackensack River at Little Ferry, N. J., was open on December 14, to admit the passage of a sloop. The bridge-tender set the signals to warn approaching trains that the bridge was open, but he was horrified to see a freight train belonging to the New York, Susquehanna and Western Railroad, consisting of thirty loaded coal cars coming at full speed. They were making their way from a point up the road to the company's coal sheds at the west end section of Jersey City. An instant later the locomotive had plunged into the open draw, and twenty of the cars pitched into the gap on top of it. The engineer, and his fireman, and the head brakeman, went over with the engine and cars, and their bodies are yet buried in the wreck. The conductor and two other brakemen who were on the rear cars jumped for their lives and escaped with some painful bruises. It is to avert the still more appalling disaster of eternal death that preachers raise the gospel signal, but the majority go on their way and pay no heed to it. (Ezek. 33:5.)

A New Fashion in Breastpins is Said to be in vogue among wealthy young men. The Washington correspondent of a New York journal writes that he encountered in the chief hotels of that city a quiet expert workman who was rapidly accumulating a fortune. He carried a sheet of thin gold and a few fine tools. Wherever he went he was surrounded with eager customers. They would take a letter from their pocket, cut off the first name of the signature, and give it to the workman, who in a few minutes reproduced it exactly in gold. A pin from a stock ready prepared was quickly soldered to the back of the golden autograph, so that the customer could wear it in his neck-scarf. Accepted lovers and bridegrooms were his principal patrons, and every one served as a walking advertisement for the workman, and brought him more customers. It may be inferred that the wearers were also advertising another fact besides the skill of the craftsman. Acquaintances reading the signature so displayed would be at no loss to know to whom their affections were given. Those who love Christ are not always so ready to own their love. We are sometimes in doubt as to the character of some who call themselves Christians. Many of them are so reluctant in testifying for Him, and seem anxious rather when among worldly people to conceal their religious profession; but the day is coming when every man's allegiance will be marked upon him whether it be to Christ or Antichrist. (Rev. 22:4; 13:16, 17.)

A Charge of Maltreating a Soul was Heard by an ex-Recorder of Paterson, N. J., who relates the incident among his reminiscences of the bench. He says that on one occasion, while holding court, a lady entered and invoked his protection from her enemies in the city. She alleged that these enemies had the power of taking her soul out of her body and returning it at their will. They exercised that power frequently, and in legal parlance, which she had learned by some means, she claimed that the said soul had been subjected to cruel and vicious treatment, and she had thereby sustained grievous damage. The Recorder, anxious to get rid of the woman, and to proceed with the business of the court, and seeing that she was demented, told her that no power short of the United States Supreme Court could afford her relief. The woman thanked him, and said she would apply to that august tribunal. Others, whose minds are not unbalanced, have reason for being distressed over the pollutions of their souls, and feel the need of a power stronger than their own to protect them from one who has usurped dominion over them. Happily, all such sufferers can obtain the help they need, not from an earthly court, but from Him whose authority their enemy has acknowledged. (Mark 1:23-27.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Mrs. M. Baxter gave addresses on behalf of the Gospel Union in Hammersmith, London, on December 1, and in Bristol on December 15.

Evangelist John T. Vine has been engaged to conduct revival services in the Baptist churches of Long Island during the coming year, commencing with Jamaica.

Mr. W. H. Carey, grandson of Dr. William Carey, of Indian Baptist missionary fame, died recently at the age of seventy-two years. His son the Rev. W. Carey, M. B., is conducting missionary work in India.

Rev. Jacob Freshman has resumed his work in the Hebrew Christian Church in New York with redoubled energy. At his Sunday afternoon services there is a large attendance of converted Jews and inquirers.

More than 40,000 Jews have been expelled from Russia in the last eighteen months. The Jews receive orders to leave the Empire within a fixed time—generally a month—and when the time comes they are promptly hurried away.

We are pleased to learn that articles from this journal are being translated into French by Mr. Edward Revel, of the McAll Mission at Lyons, France, for use in the work of the Mission, and we trust that they may continue to be made useful.

Evangelist D. L. Moody preached on Sunday, December 15, to the students of Yale University. On the previous evening he had an informal talk with them in Dwight Hall. Mr. Moody has a son in the junior class of the University this term.

Dr. George F. Pentecost is holding a four weeks mission in the city of Dundee. The Bible-readings, given each afternoon, have been well attended. At the evening meetings in the centre of the city, increasing interest manifested has been very cheering.

The Presbyterian Hospital in New York was partially destroyed by fire on December 19. Eighty patients who were in the building at the time were safely removed before the fire reached them; but one has since died of the agitation and fright produced by the danger.

Mr. Thomas J. Moffitt of Staley, N. C., makes an earnest appeal for help in building a Christian church there. The need is very urgent, and the people are making great sacrifices to raise sufficient funds to carry the work through. The smallest help would be welcome.

The Kansas River Baptist Association has adopted a resolution declaring that any church member who advocates legalizing the sale of intoxicating liquor for beverage use, be the fee high, low, or medium, dishonors the cause of Christ, and is unworthy of Christian confidence, and if he be a clergyman is disqualified for the ministry.

Justice David J. Brewer, whom the President has just raised to the bench of the United States Supreme Court, is the judge who gave the notorious anti-Prohibition decisions in Kansas. This appointment, following so closely on that of Green B. Raum to be Commissioner of Pensions, has intensified the opposition of Prohibitionists to the Administration.

THE PATRIARCHAL MIGRATION.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And Israel took his journey with all that he had, and came to Beer-sheba, and offered sacrifices unto the God of his father Isaac. And God spake unto Israel in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, Jacob. And he said, Here am I. And He said, I am God, the God of thy father: fear not to go down into Egypt; for I will there make of thee a great nation; I will go down with thee into Egypt; and I will also surely bring thee up again: and Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes." Genesis 46: 1-4.

God's People Alternating Between Strength and Weakness—God's Speech Appropriate to their Condition—Why Jacob Offered Sacrifice—I. His Fear Natural—A Trying Change for an Old Man—A Country of Idolatry—Of Painful Associations—Of New Temptations—II. His Fear to be Removed—Because It Made Him Unhappy—And Weak—III. How He was Encouraged—Addressed by Name—Put on Communion Terms—Assured of God's Presence—Assured of Inheritance—Comforted in Prospect of Death.

NOTICE in this passage the two names which are mentioned. "Israel took his journey, and God spake unto Israel in the visions of the night, and said, Jacob, Jacob." "Jacob" was the name of his weakness; "Israel" was the title of his strength. "Jacob" was the name of his birth-nature; "Israel" was the name of his new and spiritual nature. When Israel set out to go down into Egypt and see his son Joseph, he started in great vigor and strength for an old man: faith made him full of force: hence we read, "Israel took his journey." I see the old man revived, and stirred up to a high degree of hopeful energy. He travelled some few miles on the first day, and reached the well of Beer-sheba. It was the border town, where stood the well of the oak: after passing Beer-sheba he would be out of the land of promise, and on his way to Egypt; and at the remembrance of this fact the old trembling came over him, and he became Jacob, as aforetime. When he was to take the decisive step, to leave Canaan and make his journey into Egypt, then he suddenly felt himself a Jacob, and began to halt upon his thigh; and the Lord in the visions of the night addressed him by the name which was most suitable to his condition, saying to him, "Jacob, Jacob." He did not call him "Israel;" but He came to him in his and suited His speech to his condition. The Lord met the weakness of His servant's faith, and sent him consolations fitted rather for Jacob than for Israel. Dear friends, I am afraid that the lives of many of the Lord's chosen people alternate between "Israel" and "Jacob." Sometimes we are "strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might," and at another time we cry, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Like princes we prevail with God, and are true Israels; but perhaps ere the sun has gone down we limp with Jacob, and though the spirit be willing, the flesh is weak.

Infirmity and Trial,

Turning to the text, we have a lesson to learn from it. We find that Jacob, on his way down to Egypt, came to Beer-sheba, the border place, and this marked a distinct stage in his journey. He came to Beer-sheba, the place of many memories, where God had spoken to his father Abraham by the well. It was, therefore, a memorable spot in the history of his family, and it was just then a turning-point in his own career, and therefore it called for special waiting upon the Lord. He was to break new ground, and enter upon a way which he had not trodden heretofore; and so we read that he offered sacrifices to the God of his father Isaac. Herein is wisdom. In let there be new devotion. It is well to begin everything with God, who is the Beginner of all things. When young people begin housekeeping they should consecrate an altar as soon as ever they have set up a tent. When you begin business this thought should be upon you—"Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it." Therefore, wait upon Him for guidance and help. In starting upon every journey, whether long or short, and entering upon every day, however commonplace the day may be, it is always well to begin it with God. Remember the old and gracious proverb, that prayer and provender hinder no man's journey.

Commencing a New Era

I suppose that Jacob on this occasion offered sacrifice for three reasons at least. One was to purge his household of any sin that might lie upon it. He had a very strange family—this man Jacob. It was badly begun at the outset, of four mothers, and jealousies were sure to abound. Taking them all round, his many sons were a very sad lot to be the sons of such a man. His own account of them on his death-bed is most painful. Much sin, even of the blackest dye, had defiled that chosen family. The stories of Reuben, Levi, Simeon, Judah, and others are very dark. The aged head of the clan seems to say, with broken-hearted penitence, "Before we go down into this Egypt, let us offer sacrifice whereby our grievous sin may be put away, lest we provoke the Lord on the road." How often have we cause to suspect some secret backsliding, some careless omission, some transgression unperceived! It is well to go again to the cleansing fountain for fresh washing, to fly anew to the great sacrifice of Christ, and renew our acquaintance with its cleansing power.

Reasons for Sacrifice.

Do you not think that Jacob also offered this sacrifice for another reason? Did he not present it by way of thanksgiving? He is going down into Egypt, but it is to see Joseph: what a joy this meant! Joseph is yet alive; he is going to look him in the face. Benjamin, of whom the old man had said, "Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take Benjamin away"—Benjamin had come back safe and sound: this was no mean favor. Whereas he had said, "All these things are against me," now he perceives that all these things are for him; and so he offers sacrifice unto the Lord. Let us magnify the Lord whenever we are led to see the extraordinary light of His goodness in those places which looked unusually dark.

Surely, these two alone would be right good reasons for offering sacrifice; but Jacob had this other—that he might inquire of the Lord as to his way. At the altar he hoped to receive the oracle. Poor old Jacob appears to have been in a great dilemma: he seems to have greatly questioned whether it was right for him to go down into Egypt; and, as I shall have to show you, it was a matter that was open to grave question, and could not have been safely decided unless the Lord had spoken. I wish sometimes that God's people would be more careful to ask their way of God; I fear that they too often err by blundering on, and taking no heed to their way. If He does not speak to us in a dream, nor by the Urim and Thummim, nor by a prophet, yet He secretly guides our minds.

I. First, then,Jacob's Fear was Natural.

It was natural because he was an aged man—an aged man leaving the land of his birth. Old men do not like changes, and they specially fear changes of country and custom. A young man runs all over the world, and little cares where he goes, for he has plenty of youth's quicksilver in him. He cries, "Sitting hens get no barley;" and so he pecks up a grain here and a grain there, from Liverpool to New York and from New York to San Francisco, and thence to New Zealand, the Cape, and home again. The young man makes himself at home anywhere; but the old man loves the old house at home, and the fireside where his children have been wont to gather. Old trees strike their roots deep, and it is not easy to transplant them. It is neither pleasant nor safe to uproot an ancient elm; let it stay where it is. It was no slight change from Canaan to Egypt. Do you wonder that he was afraid?

His fear also, no doubt, arose, next, from the fact that he was going into an idolatrous country, of which he knew very little, except that it was a place which teemed with the memorials of false deities; a land of religion so degraded that cats and crocodiles were worshipped, and even vegetables which grew in the gardens. An Egyptian must have been a living riddle to a unsophisticated shepherd from such a country as Palestine. Egypt had a repute for learning, and philosophy, and divination: and these to an aged countryman, would seem mysterious.

Uncanny Features in His Venture.

He loved not the change. The Canaanites were bad enough; but he had grown accustomed to them, and they had a healthy fear of him; these Egyptians, what might they not do? He was encouraged, because Joseph was there, and was lord over all Egypt: even that was a very romantic affair, and the whole business was surrounded with mystery.

Finally, the associations of Egypt were trying. It had cost the good old man many bitter pangs to send his sons down into that country to buy corn. Somehow it was not a country that he had any liking for, and so Jacob's heart was in his mouth; and he trembled to think that in his old age he should be going away from where he had lived, and especially to be going, not to the ancient country whence his family had originally come forth, but to Egypt, a place which was of ill savour to his fathers, a country whose associations were rather trying than hopeful.

Then I have no doubt he felt that the change would involve himself and his family in new temptations. They had behaved badly enough among the simple pastoral people: what would they do in the midst of the vices of Egypt? I must confess that I often feel great diffidence in recommending people to make especially in quitting the country to go to the great city. Change has its perils. You begin to know your temptations by now, and you are somewhat prepared to withstand them; but you know not what may happen to you in another sphere, with other surroundings, and other influences. All things considered, I would rather carry my old burden; for it begins to fit my back, and my back has grown somewhat used to it. But what about a new burden? It might be more heavy, and it might try me in fresh places, and cause fresh wounds. If Jacob trembled at making so great a change, it was not without reason. All the habits of the family would be rudely shaken, and a new mode of life would be forced upon them.

Changes in Life;

I need say no more on that point: Jacob was always anxious, and in his old age more so than ever. The sketch I have given may be the picture of some friend now present; and if it be so, I will hope that in my discourse he may hear cheering voices from the Lord to allay his fears.

II. But, in the second place, God was not of a mind that His servant should be in dread:

His Fear Was to be Removed.

Therefore, the Lord appeared to Jacob in the night visions, not to tell him of new empires, not to reveal to him the destinies of princes, but simply to say to him, "Fear not." It appears to God to be an important matter to chase away fear, even though it be troubling only one person, and that person an aged man. The Lord broke the eternal silence, to drive away the anxieties of a single individual. He said to him, "Jacob, Jacob;" and then He added, "Fear not to go down into Egypt." Are you very fearful and timorous at this time, dear brother? It is not the Lord's will that you should remain so: He would deliver you from this bondage.

The Lord would drive away your fears because, in the first place, fear makes you unhappy. It is an unhappy thing for a father when he comes home from business and finds his child in distress of mind. He likes to see him run cheerfully to meet him, and smile and sing a welcome. Our heavenly Father would have His people rejoice in Him. Do you want any proof of it? Does He not command you, "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice?"

But, next, the Lord would not have His people vexed with fear, because it is sadly weakening in its effects. Jacob had a difficult task enough to go down into Egypt and bear witness for the true God in that region, and he needed more rather than less strength. In the midst of Canaan, his path had been a very difficult one, to stand fast for God in the midst of that wicked and perverse generation. He had sadly failed even in that lesser task, for his family had grossly transgressed and fallen into the ways of the world around them. In Egypt his work would be more severe; for he would have the wisdom of the Egyptians to battle with. He must not go to such a battle-field with his hands hanging down and his knees feeble. Before we begin a new enterprise,

Fear May Be Seasonable:

we ought to be cautious as to whether our way is right in the sight of God; and therefore Jacob had that fear. But when we once begin, and intend going through with an enterprise, we must say farewell to fear, for fear will be fatal to success. Go straight ahead. Believe in God, and carry the work through.

Perhaps I might as well apply the subject now, and say, Are you beginning to preach, my dear friend, in a new place, and are you afraid? Do new faces startle you? Set yourself to get rid of this fear of man. The Lord forbids it. Are you going across the sea directly, and are you afraid of the journey and the foreign land? Hasten to the Lord, and ask Him to drive all this fear far from you. Are you undertaking some new service in the church, and are you trembling at the responsibility? Cry to the Lord at once to strengthen your weak hands and confirm your feeble knees; for at this moment, though the Lord does not appear to you in vision, yet He speaks to you out of this grand old Book, and by the mouth of His servant, saying unto you, "Fear not to go down into Egypt." Surely, a "fear not" from the mouth of the Lord will make you bold as a lion.

III. And now I shall need to show you

How His Fear Was Removed.

Who can cheer the heart so effectually as the Lord our God? Fears must depart when the Lord forbids them. First, the Lord removed his fears by showing that He knew him by his name. He said, "Jacob, Jacob." "Oh," says one, "if the Lord were to speak to me by my name I should not be afraid any longer." I am not sure of that, for you might be even more fearful than you now are. But dost thou think that God does not know thy name? Dost thou dream that if thou hast sought His face and cried to Him for mercy He does not know thy name? O poor troubled one, you that are cast down on account of sin, remember that the Lord knew this patriarch by his weak and sinful name of Jacob, as well as by his bright and princely name of Israel. Wherefore, since the Lord knows us altogether, let us trust Him, and He will make even our weaknesses to magnify the power of His grace.

Next, the Lord told him that he was on communion terms with God. The Lord said to him, "Jacob, Jacob," and he answered, "Here am I." God had to call out to Adam, "Adam, where art thou?" But Jacob could say, "Here am I." Oh, it is a blessed thing to be on such terms with God that you can truly say, "Here am I, my Lord: I have nothing to hide. I stand forth before thy presence, and have myself from thine eye, neither have I anything to reserve from thy notice. Tell me what I am to do; for I am willing and eager to do it. Take me, and make what thou wilt of me; for I am 'thine, and rejoice to be so. Break me up, and melt me, and pour me out into thy mould, if so thou dost see fit; for 'Here am I.' He that has given up selfhood, and is willing that God should do whatever He will with him, is on communing terms with God.

No Desire to Conceal

Next, the Lord removed His servant's fear by declaring Himself to be the God of the covenant. "I am God," said He, "the God of thy father." He manifests Himself as the same God as ever; as much the God of Jacob, the son, as of Isaac, the father. The Lord will be to us what

He has been to His people aforetime. He has pledged Himself to us as to our fathers. He has promised to us, even to us, the blessing, saying, "Surely, blessing, I will bless thee." My dear friends and brethren, can you say, "This God is our God for ever and ever"? If the Lord be yours, all things are yours.

Then the Lord added that which is the richest comfort of all: "I will go down with thee into Egypt." What cause of fear can remain when we have the promise of

The Lord's Presence with Us?

If we can have our Lord's presence, we have no choice of country or company. Egypt, with Jehovah, is as Canaan. Even Hades and the land of death-shade have nothing to make us fear evil, if the Comforter sustains us. "For thou art with me," is the joyful song of the pilgrim when he passes through the valley of the shadow of death. Wherefore, let us dismiss our fears. We will go down into loneliness, poverty, sickness, sorrow, and the grave if the Lord will be with us.

The Lord goes on to say, "And I will also surely bring thee up again"—which meant that Jacob should not lose his inheritance in Canaan, nor be forever in banishment in a strange land. Go down as we may, the Lord will bring us up again. Dear friend, you may lose husband, or wife, or father, or child, or property, or health, or even life; but you shall rise out of every loss, and you shall never lose your share in the sure mercies of David. Blessed be God, we shall never be driven down so low that we cannot rise again, for the Lord saith of every member of the family, "I will surely bring thee up again."

One more fear Jacob had, perhaps, experienced. He had some fear of dying; but that was all removed when the Lord said, "And Joseph shall put his hand upon thine eyes." "Oh," the good old father thought, "Joseph is to close my eyes; then death has lost its sting." Did you ever think of dying in that light? Let me read it to you with a word changed and another name inserted; "And Jesus shall put His hand upon your eyes."

We may Never Die;

the Lord may personally appear, and then we shall not all sleep; but if He does not come, and we are called upon to die, Jesus will put His fingers on our eyes, and we shall sleep in peace. And Jesus, thy Joseph whom thou lovest, whose bloody coat thou hast seen with tears, He is yet alive, and He is King over all that land whereto thou goest, for the keys of death swing at His girdle. He is the Prince of all realms, and He it is that shall put His hand upon thy eyes and seal them for the moment in darkness, to open them for thee, when thou shalt say, "I am satisfied, for behold, I awake in thy likeness."

By this time, every fear ought to be removed from us, even as it was from Jacob. We may now set up our banners and go forward. Surely this passage is very applicable to all who are removing from one place to another. "Fear not to go down into Egypt. I will go down with thee into Egypt." Take your journey in peace. This also may be used by those who are in perplexity as to what they should do. Wait upon God for direction, and when you get your marching orders, go straight ahead, cheered by this gracious assurance, "I will go down with thee into Egypt." Any of you that are entering upon a new business, upon new trials, new labors, new spheres, accept with joy the promise that the presence of God will be with you. God leading, we fear nothing.

Lastly, to you that are about to die, here is living consolation. There may be some here who will never see another earthly Sabbath, for God has some better thing in store for them, namely, to see the heavenly Sabbath sooner than they think. Fear not to go down into the Egypt of the grave, for the Lord will go down with you into the sepulchre. Jesus has been there; fear not to go where He went. Whenever I am called in to see any of our dying church-members, I find them, without exception, calm and willing to depart. When I come out of the dying chamber I invariably feel that my faith has been greatly strengthened. The way in which they meet the approach of the great enemy, calmly and triumphantly, makes me rest joyfully confident in the gospel which I preach.

But what is to become of you who have no faith? What is to become of you who have no God to go to? O soul, if thou hast no God, thou art indeed miserable! God bring thee at once to Himself, through Jesus Christ! Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Washington's Peril.*

MANY well-authenticated facts might readily be adduced to show how an over-ruling Providence influences and directs the minds of men when they least think it, but we confine ourselves to a single instance. In the American Revolutionary War, during the two days' skirmishing which immediately preceded the battle of Brandywine, the following startling incident occurred: "We had not lain long," relates an officer in the English army, "when a rebel hussar, followed by an officer dressed in dark green, mounted on a bay horse, pressed within a few hundred feet of my right flank, not perceiving us. I ordered three good marksmen to steal near and fire at them; but the idea disgusting me, I recalled the order. The hussar, in returning, made a circuit, but the officer passed within a hundred yards of us, upon which I advanced from the woods toward him. Upon my calling, he stopped; but after looking at me he proceeded. I again drew his attention, and made signs for him to stop, levelling my piece at him; but he slowly cantered away. I was within a distance that I could have lodged half a dozen balls in him before he could be out of my reach; I had only to determine. But it was not pleasant to fire at the back of an individual coolly doing his duty, so I let him alone. The next day I learned through a surgeon who had been dressing the wounds of some rebel officers, that the individual I had thus spared was none other than General George Washington himself. And I am not sorry that I did not know at the time who he was."

An Unprecedented Phenomenon.

The prevailing uniformity of natural laws, however, is no proof that their action never has been, and never can be, modified or suspended by a miracle. So far as the observations of living men have extended, they may pronounce positively that no instance, no sign of departure from law, has been witnessed by them; but this is quite another thing from proof that there never has been such a departure. Astronomers had long been telling the world that among the heavenly bodies they observed nothing but regular orbits and uniform motions, and that any departure from this established order was forbidden by law; yet, to the astonishment of all, in 1846 there happened such a thing as a comet splitting into two, each having a distinct tail and nucleus, and, after travelling far apart for millions of miles, reuniting and forming one comet again as at first. Of this extraordinary occurrence the heavens gave no indication before and retained no trace after; the phenomenon is known to us only on the testimony of those who observed it. And so it has been with the miracles of the gospel: nature gave no sign of their coming, and has preserved no evidence of their accomplishment; we know that they were wrought only on the concurrent testimony of men who, like the observers of the comet, were eye-witnesses of their performance.

* From Natural Laws and Gospel Teachings. By Herbert W. Morris, D. D. Prevalent forms of opposition to the Bible being different in our day from those of the past, this volume has been prepared to meet the new method of attack. It shows, from the geography, vegetation, etc., of the Holy Land, the consistency of the Bible narratives, and that in natural law there are no reasons for doubting the miracles, answers to prayer, etc. A very able work of timely interest. Pp. 159. Price 60 cents. Published by Thomas Whittaker, 2 Bible House, New York.

The Late Martin Farquhar Tupper. (See page 821.)

A Scene at the Docks. (See page 821.)

A Hallowed Spot.

"From this point," says Dean Stanley, who carefully surveyed and studied the whole ground, "the road descends a slight declivity, and the glimpse of the city [of Jerusalem] is again withdrawn behind the intervening ledge. A few moments and the path mounts; again it climbs a rugged ascent, it reaches a ledge of smooth rock, and in an instant the whole city bursts into view. The temple tower rises as from the earth, the temple courts spread out, and the whole magnificent city, with its background of gardens and suburbs on the western plateau behind, lies before the view. It is hardly possible to doubt that this rise and turn of the road, this rocky ledge, was the exact spot where the multitude paused again, and 'He, when He beheld the city, wept over it.' Nowhere else on the Mount of Olives is there a view like this. And this is almost the only unmarked spot—undefiled or unhallowed by mosque or church, chapel or tower—left to speak for itself that here the Lord's feet stood, and here His eyes beheld what is still the most impressive view which the neighborhood of Jerusalem furnishes; and the tears rushed forth at the sight.

A DISTASTEFUL EXPEDITION.

(See illustration on page 829.)

"Oh, if only poor papa were living! I could go to him without fear," said Julia Lester, as she sat in the room of her most intimate friend, Lina Haldane. Bitter, unavailing tears fell rapidly. "Uncle is so cold and unsympathetic, and so severe on any one who has done wrong, or even made a mistake. And he warned me, too, so it is doubly hard to go back to him and tell him that he was right and I was wrong."

"My poor child," said Lina, "you shall not humiliate yourself like that. Stay here with me awhile; you will be sure to get a position soon."

"No, Lina, you are very good, but there is no hope of that, I am sure. If I did get employment I should lose it as I did before. No, I have thought it all out, and last night I prayed about it, and then I saw that it was my duty to go back home. Oh, I wish I had never left!"

"And Arthur—you are quite sure about him?"

"Lina, that affair is ended forever. I can tell you the whole story now. You know how dull it is at Thorncliffe. Uncle was always very careful that I should be well dressed, and I had everything just the same as my cousins; I can see now that I ought to have been content. But it seemed like charity, and I fancied both my cousins thought of it that way. Very few visitors go there, except when there is some religious gathering in the neighborhood. Yes, I was terribly dull, till Arthur came. He was visiting at Mr. Wynters'. He and Charlie Wynters are college friends, and you know Charlie is engaged to cousin Maud. We became acquainted that way. He was so witty and bright he just fascinated me. I saw a good deal of him, and at last he told me he loved me."

"He really did that, Julia?"

"Oh yes, and a great deal more; he was very passionate in his declarations. No one could doubt that he was sincere. He talked vaguely about his position, but said he was poor. He asked me if I loved him well enough to bear hardship with him for a time, until he got on in his profession. I told him yes, but it would be better to wait. He thought so too. Perhaps he should make more progress without a wife at first, and then it would be better for us in the end. He did not seem sure about it, and sometimes he begged me to be married right away, and struggle along together. That was when we had been on one of our long walks, or had spent an evening together. Then the next time we met, he would say that he had been foolish, and it was better to wait, on my account, as he could not support me as he would like, and he thought I should miss the luxuries of my uncle's home. It seemed to be always me that he thought of, and as if he would be much happier himself if we were married, even if we had but bread and water."

"Oh you need not have been so poor as that," Lina interposed; "Arthur has a larger income, inherited from his father, than some men have who keep a family respectably. What he spends on cigars and wines would have kept you comfortably."

"Well, I knew nothing of that; I am telling you just how he talked about it. After he came back here I felt dreadful. I missed him so much. I thought I ought to have shown more courage, and have assured him I was ready to make sacrifices for his sake. I reproached myself bitterly.

I suppose that made me irritable, for we had a sad life after that at Thorncliffe. Frequent quarrels with cousins, and at last my uncle had me in the library and lectured me. I could have borne all he said about home matters, for I knew I was to blame; but someone—Maud, I think—had hinted about Arthur, and he spoke of him. He said he had made inquiries about him, and had learned that he was an idle, frivolous young man, who would never do any good. He was not working hard at his profession, but getting into debt, and not trying to earn money. He advised me to forget him, and hinted that he had only been flirting with me."

"That must have cut you to the quick."

"It did, and I fired up and defended Arthur. I told uncle that I did not believe a word of it, and that Arthur would be only too glad to marry, if I were willing. He shook his head, and said I was mistaken. You know the rest. I left home in a temper and came to you, thinking I had only to see Arthur, and tell him I was ready to be married, and submit to any hardship it might cost us, and he would be glad. You know how embarrassed he was when he came to see me here; but you do not know the worst. He talked lightly of marriage, and asked me did I not love him well enough to dispense with that formality. Fancy, Lina, calling marriage a formality! He said he would be true and faithful to me, and make all the promises of the marriage ceremony, and keep them just as sacredly as if they were made before a clergyman, and we would trust each other."

"Oh the wicked man!" exclaimed Lina.

"I did not tell you about it at the time, it seemed too dreadful. Then, you know, I got that position as a saleslady, but I had not been brought up to business, and they soon found I should not be of any use. And now here I am, with nothing left for me to do but to humiliate myself to uncle, and go back."

"But Arthur has been coming here since then."

"Oh yes; he seemed to think I should yield to his wish when I found I could not earn my own living. He knew it would be hard to go back to Thorncliffe. He will not come again; I told him last night I would rather die than yield. When he was gone, as I said, I thought it all out, and prayed about it, and I am going back. But oh, it is so hard! I must go right now, for it looks worse the longer I think about it." Julia rose as she spoke, and put on her cloak.

"Oh I cannot let you go like that," said Lina. "Stay, and let us try to think of something. We might get a position for you as a clerk or amanuensis."

Julia shook her head and went on with her preparations for departure. Her friend interposed, and tried to draw her cloak from her shoulders. "My poor child," she said, "you cannot go through with it. Think of what your uncle and cousins will say! Do wait a day or two, anyway."

"No, I must do it," said Julia, gently resisting. "It is the right thing, but I feel I shall almost die when I go to face my uncle. I do dread that solemn look of his, and his reproaches, but I must do it."

"A gentleman has called to see Miss Lester," said a servant, coming to the door at that moment, "he would not send up his card."

"I cannot see anyone now," said Julia. "Do go down, Lina, and see what it is."

Miss Haldane was absent for some time, and Julia wondered much what could be keeping her. At last she heard her friend calling her, and she went down. She was seized and kissed affectionately the moment she entered the room. "My dear girl, I have come to take you home," said a friendly voice. "And so you were afraid to come to your uncle, and thought he would reproach you! Miss Haldane has been telling me all. Why, I have been seeking you everywhere since you left. I am too glad to find you to have any reproaches to utter. But I am very glad you had decided to come before I found you. That is more than half the battle. The prodigal waited until he was half starved before he bethought him of the plenty in his father's house. Come, my child, we shall just have time to catch the train, and you shall have the prodigal's welcome."

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 798.)

Challenged to War by the Indians.

EVIL mingles with good in all the social compact of men, strangely chequering the purest schemes of piety and patriotism with evidences of the corruption and depravity of our nature. The very next entry in Governor Bradford's journal records the first exercise of his judicial authority on two culprits, arraigned for a far more serious crime than that for which John Billington had been adjudged to be tied together, neck and heels. The same summary mode of punishment was resorted to in the case of the new offenders, who were convicted of fighting a duel with sword and dagger, in which both were slightly wounded. Though, on this occasion, the culprits did not escape, the adjudged punishment was mercifully executed. "The combat," says Bradford, "was between Edward Doty and Edward Leister, servants of Mr. Hopkins. They are adjudged by the whole company to have their head and feet tied together, and so to lie for twenty-four hours without meat or drink; which is begun to be inflicted, but within an hour—because of their great pains—at their own and their master's humble request, upon promise of better carriage, they are released by the Governor."

Preparing for the Distasteful Expedition.

The month of June found the settlers so far advanced with the first necessary labors of a new colony, that they had time to examine more accurately than had been before possible, into the character of the surrounding country, and the disposition of the native tribes who still retained possession of their ancient hunting grounds. It was accordingly resolved to dispatch a friendly embassy to Massasoit, the most powerful chief among the surrounding tribes, "partly to know where to find them, if occasion served, as also to see their strength, discover the country, prevent abuses in their disorderly coming to us, make satisfaction for some injuries conceived to be done on our parts, and to continue the league of peace and friendship between them and us." Edward Winslow and Steven Hopkins were selected to go on this delicate mission, in company with Squanto, an Indian, who was to act as their interpreter. He had been kidnapped at an earlier period by a miscreant who carried off a number of Indians to sell them as slaves. Squanto was rescued and taken to England, where he received much kindness, and being at length restored to his native land, he was well qualified to act as a mediator between the new settlers and their Indian neighbors.

The messengers entrusted with this delicate embassy were not sent empty-handed. They bore with them a supply of trinkets best suited to gratify the tastes of their Indian neighbors; and, for the great Sagamore himself, a horseman's coat of red cotton, trimmed with lace, which stirred up in his Majesty no little pride, when he was decked in such unwonted bravery of attire! They strove also, with skillful diplomacy, to reduce to some degree of certainty and mutual confidence the future political intercourse between the President of the little New England republic and the great king Massasoit. "To the end," says Winslow—the historian, as is believed, of the mission which he so successfully negotiated—"To the end we might know his messengers from others, our Governor had sent Massasoit a copper chain, desiring if any messenger should come from him to us, we might know him by bringing it with him, and give credit to his message accordingly."

The messengers of the colony met with a friendly reception whenever they paused at an Indian settlement, and were entertained by the great King Massasoit, according to the gracious rites of Indian hospitality, and invited the night in the same with himself and his the colonial embassy, the one end and the other. Majesties at the other royal favored by, somewhat irksome recipients, who had to complain of very straitened accommodation, and record that "they were worse weary of their lodging than of their journey."

In the course of that excursion they acquired considerable knowledge of their Indian neighbors, and learned that rivalry and enmity stirred up constant feuds among the tribes by whom they were surrounded. The sight of a strange Indian filled their guides with watchfulness and alarm; and the most frequent warning they received was to place no faith in the Narragansetts. But the courage of the colonists, which had been undaunted by the privations and sufferings of their first New England winter, was not to be daunted by the bravados of Indian savages.

They learned soon after of some wrongs done to their Indian ally by the Narragansetts, and being also informed, though erroneously, of their having murdered Squanto, the faithful interpreter of Winslow on his mission to Massasoit, an armed party of ten of the most trusty colonists was despatched to bring their troublesome neighbor to terms, or punish him for his audacity. With the most determined courage this brave little band marched into the forest, surrounded the house where they believed the obnoxious chief to be, disarmed the Indians who came to the rescue, and by their determined bearing completely awed the savages into subjection.

The reader may perchance smile at the formidable expedition of ten armed colonists, going out to war on behalf of their Indian ally, and striking terror to the hearts of their enemies. Yet if we justly estimate it, there was more of sound policy and gallant daring in the proceedings of this handful of strangers than has marked many a deed of arms which historians have delighted to record, and which nations still look back to with exulting pride. The Narragansetts, as they afterward learned, were a numerous and powerful tribe, occupying nearly the whole territory now comprehended within the State of Rhode Island. They had escaped the pestilence which depopulated the greater part of New England; and at the time that they were thus menaced by the gallant Pilgrims, they numbered among them five thousand fighting men, descendants of a martial race, inured to arms, and confident by reason of the diminished number of the rival tribes with whom they had been wont to engage in war.

Behind the little band of strangers was nothing but the sea. Beyond it no powerful friends or allies watched their fortunes, or hastened to bring them aid. They were alone, and sorely reduced in numbers, on that strange shore, where they had been forced to bury in secret so many of their friends; while before them lay the vast and unexplored forests of the New World, whose lords they had defied and forced into submission by the terror of their arms. Yet their proceedings were characterized by the utmost moderation and self command. They won the respect of the Indians by the anxious care with which they avoided injuring their women and children; and so great was the confidence they inspired, that even the wounded Narragansetts repaired to New Plymouth to be healed by the same hands that had inflicted the injuries.

In a private letter, addressed by Edward Winslow toward the close of this year, to a friend in England, he says, "We have found the Indians faithful in their covenant of peace with us, loving and ready to pleasure us. We often see them, and they come to us. Some of us have been fifty miles by land in the country with them, and the occasions and relations whereof you understand by our general and more full relation of such things as are worth the notation. It hath pleased God so to possess the hearts of these Indians with a fear of us, and love unto us, that we are the greatest king amongst them called

"From this but also the princes and peoples of the country about us, have either made suit unto us, or been glad of any occasion to make peace with us; so that seven of them at once have sent their messengers to us to that end. Yea, an isle at sea, which we never saw, hath also, together with the former, yielded willing to be under the protection and subject to our sovereign lord, King James. So that there is now great peace amongst the Indians themselves, which was not formerly, neither would have been but for us; and we, for our parts, walk as peaceably and safely in the wood as in the highways in England. We entertain them familiarly in our houses, and they as friendly bestowing their venison on us. They are a people without any religion, yet very trusty, quick of apprehension, ripe-witted, just."

In the same letter, the writer refers to the first freight sent home by the Colonists, and describes to his friends the most useful stores to be provided by such as proposed joining the first settlers in New England. Not the least significant portion of this is the advice to "bring paper and linseed oil for the windows, with cotton yarn for the lamps;" requirements which furnish no little insight into the hardships of the Pilgrims, and the very homely accommodation that sufficed to satisfy their lowly desires, and to fill their hearts with gratitude and thanksgiving to God.

The vessel by which Edward Winslow's letter was despatched to England was the Fortune, a small barque of about fifty-five tons, which had arrived in Plymouth Bay on the 9th of November, bringing thirty-five new settlers, including, it is believed, those who had been compelled to abandon the enterprise when the Speedwell put back, owing to the fears or treachery of its commander. By the same opportunity, William Hilton, one of the passengers in the Fortune, thus sums up an account to his "loving cousin," of the wealth and prospects of the country to which he had been borne—"Better grain cannot be than the Indian corn, if we will plant it upon as good ground as a man need desire. We are all freeholders; the rent-day doth not trouble us; and all those good blessings we have, of which,

and what we list, in their seasons for taking. Our company are, for most part, very religious, honest people; the word of God sincerely taught us every Sabbath; so that I know not anything a contented mind can here want. I desire your friendly care to send my wife and children to me, where I wish all the friends I have in England."

The Fortune also brought a new charter, granted by the merchant adventurers, as they are generally styled, but which was probably never turned to account by the colonists, as it was very shortly afterwards superseded by another patent, surreptitiously obtained by Mr. John Pierce, a pretended friend of the emigrants, who treacherously labored to place the colony completely in his own power, and to make the labor of the emigrants mainly conducive to his own selfish interests.

The Fortune sailed for England on the 13th of December, 1621, freighted with the first fruits of colonial industry, consisting of beaver skins, and wood of various kinds, to the value of $2,500. But the trials of the Pilgrims of New England were not at an end; the brief summer of their prosperity had once more gone by, and yielded them but a scanty and deceitful harvest. As the Fortune drew near the English coast, she was seized by a privateer; and, after being detained fifteen days in a French port, was released to find her way to London with an empty hold. While the colonists were cheered with the hopes arising from the anticipated fruits of the first export of the new settlement, the friends who had been enabled to join the first band of exiles, by means of the good ship Fortune, thus vainly freighted with so many hopes—however welcome to the little community of New Plymouth—threatened to involve them in even more dreadful hardships than had been endured during the previous winter. They brought no provisions with them, and the colonists now found themselves nearly doubled in numbers, while their first harvest, gathered amid so many difficulties, was almost the sole resource to which they could look for the subsistence of the whole colony through the second winter of its existence.

To add to their many difficulties, the Fortune had hardly sailed from Plymouth Bay when the colonists learned that the Narragansett Indians were preparing to descend in overwhelming numbers to take vengeance on the colonists for leaguings with Massasoit, the chief of their most hated rivals. "The common talk," says Winslow, "of our neighbor Indians on all sides was of the preparation they made to come against us;" and at length an Indian messenger arrived at the New England settlement, commissioned by Conanacus, the great sachem of the Narragansetts, to bear to the colonists their symbolic declaration of war. The Indian hastily entered the settlement, and inquiring for the interpreter, left for him a bundle of arrows wrapped in the skin of a rattlesnake. The colonist to whom this missive was intrusted by the ambassador of the Indian sachem was somewhat puzzled to interpret its significance; but Governor Bradford was at no loss either for a meaning or an answer to so intelligible a symbol, old as the era of the great Persian empire, when the Scythian chief sent to Darius his challenge of war by a herald, who presented the king with a bundle of arrows.

The Governor removed the arrows, stuffed the snake's skin with powder and shot, and sent it back to the warlike sachem, with a message that if his shipping had been at hand to carry him to the Indians' hunting grounds, he would have saved them the trouble of so long a journey. Conanacus shrunk from a conflict with men who possessed such mysterious and destructive weapons. He dreaded even to touch the ominous missive, and would not suffer the newly stuffed snakeskin to remain in his house or country. It was posted from place to place, filling the wild natives of the forest wigwags with terror wherever it appeared; and at length it was brought back untouched to the English settlement. The calm courage and self-possession of the Governor had wrought more effectually than armed battalions could have done. The settlers received no more challenges to war.

Notwithstanding the courage of Governor Bradford, he was well aware of the inability of the little band of colonists to contend against the Indians for any length of time, if they brought so numerous a body against them as Conanacus was capable of mustering. Every available means of defence was therefore adopted. Early in the spring a strong stockade was constructed, so as completely to enclose the top of the hill whereon their cannon had been planted when they first landed, and secure them a citadel to which they might retreat in any emergency, and hold out against an overwhelming force. Beyond this they constructed a second line of ramparts, inclosing the whole town with four bulwarks, in three of which the gates of the little town were placed. The next step was to divide the whole available force of the colony into four bands, to appoint captains to each, and assign to them the charge of distinct localities for defence, and the observation of certain well-digested rules for mustering and mutual co-operation, in case of any sudden surprise. By this means confidence was infused into the minds of the colonists, and effectual provision made for their safety in the worst extremity.

There were other enemies, however, whom the colonists had to contend with, and who proved far more dreadful than the sachem of the Narragansetts. When the genial breath of the first New England summer brought with it healing on its wings, and the voice of the singing birds was heard in the woods, cheering the exiles with the promise of harvest, and the prospect of realizing such a home as they had longed for in that far wilderness, they naturally yielded to renewed hopes. The sufferings of their first dreary winter were forgotten, despondency gave place to joy and thanksgivings, and the letters which they despatched to their friends in England and Leyden gave an account of their condition which was far more justified by their hopes than their experience.

"Certain of ourselves," says Winslow, "were too prodigal in their writing and reporting of that plenty we enjoyed." One of the earliest fruits of this was the arrival of the Fortune, to which we have already referred, toward the close of autumn, bringing a band of new settlers to the colony, totally unfurnished with any provisions for the approaching winter. Fresh settlers are indeed the life of a colony, and had they landed in the spring, in time to bear their part in the labors of colonial husbandry, and to reap the harvest by which their winter stores were to be supplied, the first emigrants would have had no reason to regret the flattering accounts that tempted their friends so speedily to follow in the track of the Mayflower. But this augmentation of their numbers took place after their harvest had been reaped, and laid up for their winter's stores. "The Fortune," says Winslow, "came so unprovided, not landing so much as a barrel of bread or meal for their whole company, but, contrariwise, received from us for their ship's store homeward." The consequence was, that the whole body of colonists were reduced to subsist on half allowance for nearly six months. They were no longer compelled, as in their first winter's experience, to watch by the deathbeds of their companions, and hide the graves of their brethren, lest the watchful Indian should count the green mounds of their little burial-field, and learn from thence the weakness of the infant settlement. But they had only exchanged deadly sickness for privations and want. "I have seen men," says Winslow, "stagger by reason of faintness for want of food;" and yet the historian of the colony tells of no repining or threatened desertion among the devoted and faithful band who thus shared their hard-won harvest with their brethren. At length even their meagre and carefully husbanded stores entirely failed them, and toward the end of May they were left utterly destitute of provisions.

(To be continued.)

INDEX.—1889.

raits and Biographical Sketches.

Rev. Joseph, 737
Fred. Stanley, 225
Judge, 588
Justo Rufo, 193
Miss Clara, 396
Robert, 705
Mrs. Robert, 716
Bishop of, 383
James G., 177
Dr. Horatius, 540
Rev. Samuel, 737
General, 129
Emperor of, 764
Bridges, Hon. W. C. P., 524
John, 593
Stephen, 812
George W., 476
Luchessa, of, 284
Commander, 785
President, 337, 657
F. N., 641
Prof. 732
Charles, 753
Eliza, 684
Hon. S. S., 604
Hon. Chas. N., 1
D. D., Rev. Howard, 380
Jefferson, 813
Morgan, 689
Hon. Frederick, 490
Clave, 657
John A., 241
Bishop of, 353
Jr. F. J., 412
Canon, 353
Lieut. 765
W. J., 65
Father, 92
Emperor of, 513
Rev. Carr, 353
Frederick D., 241
Gen. A. W., 852
Hussain Ghoul Khan, 252
Elijah W., 69
Rev. Tennis S., 364
President, 145
Hon. Russell B., 44
Hon. Mrs. Russell B., 268
The late Mrs., 428
H. G., 369
Hon. James B., 193
King and Queen of, 545
Rev. Chas. J., 555
The late Mrs., 796
Lieut.-Col., 81
Dr., 113
Baron, 785
Jr. C., 49
Cardinal, 204, 785
Rev. Robert, 677
Miss Ada, 259
Dr. T., 289
Robert T., 241
ewsky, J. H., 156
Henry Cabot, 572
Lord Mayor of, 353
XVI., King, 497
Princess, 481
Hon. Seth, 668
Admiral, U. S. N., 28
J. A., M., 113
Nizic, Mr., 785
Dr. Asa, 336
King of Samoa, 140
Gen. Geo., 572
Antoinette, 504
King of Samoa, 321
D. D., Rev. Joseph, 97
Rev. John, 33
Hall, Prof. Thomas C., 572
Lieut. A. G., 609
Hon. W. H. H., 177
eau, 497
Vice-President, 145
Capt. Hamilton, 417
Dr. and party, 433
John W., 177
Rev. E. W., 780
John Boyle, 524
LL. D., Rev. Francis, 97
Hon. George H., 780
Shah of, 465
Dr., 748
Philip, 817
Albert G., 241
Gal, King of, 700
Right Rev. H. C., 317
Hon. Redfield, 177
Ford, Dr. W. S., 689
Hon. Whitelaw, 241
Allen T., 241
Dr. W. C., 369
Pierre, 497
veit, Theodore, 348
Hon. J. McLain, 177
tkka, Lieut. Frederick, 769
infurth, George J., 636
Rev. David Clement, 577
Rev. Benjamin, 444
Gipsy, 124
J. Mantion, 65
Rev. J. Denham, 236
Princess, 721
Isabella, Queen of, 17
Duke of, 721
H. M., 257, 801
Lady, 12
Lord and Lady, 625
Hon. O., 76
ge, Dr., 673
ese, usurper in Samoa, 140
E. P., 641
Hon. Edwin H., 492
t. B., 693
William W., 241 son, Hugh S., 332 son, Joseph, 204

Toulson, Rev. Joseph, 449
Tracy, Hon. Benjamin F., 177
Tupper, Martin F., 828
Villa, Rev. J. M., 529
Wanamaker, Hon. John, 108, 177
Washington, George, 273
Whately, Late Archbishop, 209
Whately, Late Miss M. L., 209
Wisdom, Hon. William, 177
Wilson, Rev. W. J., 188
Whittaker, Rev. Thomas, 449
Whittier, John G., 300
Young, Rev. Egerton B., 161

Sermons.

SURGEON, REV. C. H.:—
Beatitude of the Appetites, Matt. 5: 6, 634
Believing Thief, The, Luke 23: 42, 43, 298
Breakfast with Jesus, John 21: 12, 202
Burden, The Preacher's, Mal. 1: 1, 810
Cure of Doubts, The, John 20: 27, 54
Curse and the Curse Bearer, The, Gal. 3: 10, 14, 506
Down Grade, The, Isa. 66: 10, 394
Drought and Rain, The, Jer. 14: 3, 4, 22, 794
Essential Points in Prayer, 1 Kings 9: 2, 3, 90
Eye and the Light, The, Luke 11: 33, 36, 730
Eyes Right, Prov. 4: 25, 42
False Trusts, Isa. 46: 1, 4, 10
Foundation Work, 1 Kings 5: 17, 522
Four Stupendous Things, Isa. 53: 12, 170
Gate Wide Open, The, Joel 2: 32, 346
How to Please God, Heb. 11: 16, 596
In the Garden, John 18: 26, 682
Iron Shoes, Deut. 33: 24, 25, 74
Knowledge of the Spirit, John 14: 17, 218
Life and Pardon, Col. 2: 13, 602
Life's Wreckage Recovered, Joel 2: 25, 330
Light of the Gospel, 1 Cor. 4: 4, 378
Living Trumpets, 1 Thess. 1: 8, 266
Lord's Own Salvation, The, Hos. 1: 7, 26
Man for the Day, The, Jno. 1: 47, 138
Man Unknown to Man, Prov. 14: 10, 314
Marriage of the Lamb, Rev. 19: 7, 8, 538
My Personal Holdfast, Micah 7: 7, 154
One Lost Sheep, Matt. 18: 12, 13, 362
Parallel and a Contrast, A, Eph. 5: 18, 762
Patriarchal Migration, The, Gen. 4: 1-4, 826
Peace: How Gained, How Lost, Ps. 85: 8, 758
Personal Responsibility, Esther 4: 13, 14, 282
Pertinent Questions, Job 15: 11, 570
Portrait and a Promise, A, Isa. 66: 2, 186
Precepts, Promises, and Pless, Isa. 55: 3, 490
Preparation for Service, Matt. 4: 19, 714
Preparation for the Lord's Coming, 1 Jno. 2: 28, 665
Pricked in Their Heart, Acts 2: 36, 37, 618
Profession Without Power, 1 Tim. 3-5, 426 Profitable Mixture, A, Heb. 4: 2, 442
Promised Rest, The, Heb. 4: 3, 458
Qualification of the Eligible, 1 Kings 4: 3, 106
Stages of the Shepherd's Work, Luke 15: 4, 5, 6, 122
Sunday School Sowers, Luke 13: 18, 19, 746
Taking Possession, Josh. 1: 2, 3, 410
Turning-Point, The, Jer. 31: 18-20, 650
Two Essential Things, Acts 20: 21, 234
Whither Goest Thou, Job 23: 10, 554
Why Jesus Wept, Jno. 11: 35, 474
Withered Fig-tree, The, Matt. 21: 17-20, 698
Within the Veil, Heb. 9: 12, 250

TALMAGE, D. D., REV. T. DE WITT:—
Aromatic for Easter, 1 Cor. 15: 25, 250
Balances, The, Daniel 5: 27, 564
Baptism of Fire, The, Acts 20: 24, 676
Barn-like Birthplaces, Luke 2: 12, 13, 4
Birthplace of Sewing Societies, Acts 9: 39, 772
Bower of Tree Branches, Neh. 8: 15, 452
Captured Weapons, 1 Sam. 21: 9, 404
Christ, the Village Lad, Luke 2: 40, 372
City Streets, The, Prov. 1: 20, 596
Coming World's Fair, The, Ezekiel 27: 12, 644
Dark Sayings on a Harp, Ps. 49: 4, 132
Does Religion Pay, 1 Tim. 4: 8, 20
Earthquake, The, Acts 16: 31, 484
Evangelism Vindicated, Rev. 10: 10, 11, 68
From Ocean to Ocean, Ps. 72: 8, 612
Giant's Locks, The, Judges 16: 5, 623
Glorious Revelation, 1 Cor. 13: 2, 756
Good-bye, Acts 20: 38, 706
Gospel Affair, Job 9: 30, 31, 340
House on the Hills, John 14: 2, 436
How to Conquer, Prov. 23: 35, 468
How to Make Friends, Prov. 15: 24, 420
Human Wrecks, 1 Cor. 9: 27, 548
In the Eternal City, Acts 19: 21, 724
Jerusalem! Jerusalem! Matt. 23: 37, 788
Joy! Joy! Joy! Luke 15: 23, 24
Literature of the Dust, The, Jno. 8: 6, 116
March Homeward, The, 1 Sam. 30: 8, 62
Marriage Feast, A, John 2: 10, 820
Mediterranean Voyage, A, Acts 27: 44, 740
Moonlight Ride, The, Neh. 2: 15, 180
Nation's Curse, The, 1 Kings 10: 10, 516
Nation's Protector, The, 1 Kings 6: 17, 276
New Springs of Joy, Joshua 15: 19, 324
Other Days Lived Over, Deut. 8: 2, 292
Our Own Generation, Acts 13: 36, 100
Outwitted by the World, Luke 16: 8, 500
People Who Have Lost Their Way, Gen. 21: 19, 388
Poisoned Dinner, A, 1 Kings 4: 40, 308
Remnant of the Century, A, Rev. 19: 14, 244
Reservation of America, The, Rev. 17: 25, 148
Runners Company, Prov. 13: 29, 356
Savory Look, The, Heb. 12: 2, 660
Slaughter, The, Prov. 7: 22, 228
Stormy Passage, The, John 6: 17; Mark 4: 39, 804 Strong Swimmer, The, Isa. 25: 11, 532
Sundays, Bright or Doleful, Isa. 58: 13, 36
Sunrise, Romans 13: 12, 500
Tough Things in the Bible, 1 Peter 3: 16, 196
What Trouble is for, Rev. 7: 17, 692
Wonders of Disaster and Blessing, Joel 2: 30, 212
Wrong uses of Money, 1 Tim. 6: 9, 164

Pictures and Descriptive Articles.

Aboriginal Preachers and their Teachers, 636; Bears at Work on Wreckage, 108; Birthplace of Wesley, 200; Boy Rescued from Slave Dhow, 204; Bradford Town Hall, 449; Brigham Young's Residence, 364; Brooklyn Tabernacle, 673; Burgos, Cathedral of, 17; Cairo, Interior of Miss Whately's School, 230; Capitol, Washington, 144; Cathedral of Mexico, 529; Centennial Celebration, 305; Centennial, Three Symbolic Floats, 316; Charrington Hall, 641; China, Incidents of the Famine in, 348; Children's Flower Show, 796; Church, Mr. Senior's London, 444; Christian's Prayer in Mohammedan Mosque, 604; Columbus Sighting Land, 717; Cree Indians, Sun-dance of, 298; Cremation in India, 560; Delhi, Native Evangelists in, 14; Dervishes of the Soudan, 561; Despairing Watcher on the Beach, 476; Dining with a Mandarin's Son, 790; Docks, A Scene at the, 828; Doctor Mahan's Invalid Service, 396; Emperor of Morocco Entering Tangier, 748; Fourth Avenue Church, N. Y., 360; Ghostly Discovery in a River, 508; Hospital, Mons Pasteur's, 77; Johnstown, Catastrophe at, 385; Juby, Cape, 785; Khartoum, in Soudan, 716; Lubrecht, Lieut., on his Way to Court, 460; Life-boat, Heroic Adventure in a, 124; Lima, Capital of Peru, 237; Loanda Island, Coast of Africa, 764; London, Ont., University, 304; Missionaries in Peril, 428; Missionary at a Chinese Fair, 700; Missionary School in Fiji, 540; Missionary's Visit to a Dying Pupil, 284; New North Bridge, 733; Norwegian Explorers of Greenland, 61; Nyassa, Three Chiefs of Tribes, 172; One Ash, Residence of John Bright, 253; Oriental City, Entrance to Gate of, 93; Paris Exposition Buildings, 656; Paris, View of, 129; Paris, View of Exhibition, 337; Pilgrims' Memorial, Plymouth, Mass., 524; Ploughing with an Elephant, 157; Princeton University, 57; Rescued Prisoners from Basile, 497; Rescued Slaves, Party of, 589; Royal Family of Greece, 721; Salt Lake City, Main Street, 332; Samoans Selling Curiosities, 188; Samoa, The Great Storm at, 321; San Francisco, Bird's-eye View of, 492; Seville, Cathedral of, 13; Shipwrecked Sailors of Florence, 668; Stanley, H. M., Reception at Manyema, 803; Stanley, H. M., Reception by Mtesa, 113; St. George's Church, N. Y., 689; Tabernacle, Metropolitan, 33; Tahitians Welcoming John Williams, 412; Tribes of Central Africa, 620; Vassar College, 12; Victim of African Superstition, 684; Vienna, Memorial Chapel in, 140; Wesley Memorial Church, 652; Wesley's Narrow Escape from Death, 556; Wounded Officer, Carrying a, 380; Yellowstone, Hot Springs of, 23.

Stories With Illustrations.

Abstained, Why the Clergymen, 92; Anonymous Letter, The, 812; Broken Heart, A Cure for a, 525; Charge, Mrs. Spaulding's, 380; Cheque, The Missing, 765; Church, A Stranger at, 220; Contumacy, Cicely's, 428; Despair, A Night with, 476; Difficulty, A Matrimonial, 348; Discovery in a River, A Ghastly, 608; Disastrous Expedition, A, 829; Family, The Divided, 236; Farm, A Visit to the Old, 252; Future, Louise Kingsford's, 796; Immigrant's Indictment, The, 239; Island, A Tragedy on a, 60; Journey, Widow Norman's, 685; Judge a Refuge, The, 204; Lesson, The Difficult, 541; Lover, Jenny's, 172; Message, An Ancestor's, 637; Mission, The Sister's, 748; Mistaken Kindness, A Merchant's, 284; Momentous Sickness, Ada Bristol's, 300; Neighbor, Dr. Southerly's, 700; Nurse's Prayer, A, 653; Ordeal, Ethel Tracy's, 140; Overlooked, A Special Message, 444; Premium, The Misappropriated, 76; Protestant Teaching, The, 492; Question, Minnie's, 460; Refuge, Lottie Mowatt's, 45; Representative, As a, 572; Resolve, Ernest Wyndham's, 716; Retaliation, Ethel Dawson's, 780; Service, Louise Hobart's, 364; Shoebuckle's Gift, The, 629; Sister, Edward Deane's, 604; Smithy, An Expulsion from the, 557; Sickness, Gower's, 332; Stenographer, Dr. Spencer's, 732; Struggle, Dorothy Marden's, 588; Toils, In the, 413; Treasures, The Clergymen's, 396; Trust, The Widow's, 109; Visit, A Timely, 188; Visitor, Dr. Randall's, 125; Ward, Contumacious, Mr. Russell's, 669; Wedding, Marion Greville's, 189.

Anecdotes and Short Articles.

Advice, A Captain's, 615; Africa, A Slave Raid in, 6; Agnostic, Conversion of a Jewish, 21; Antichrist's Ministers, 534; Belshazzar, Contemporary Records of, 552; Berachah's Daughter, 358; Blunder, A Drug Clerk's, 483; Boulanger's Prospects, 647; Brazil, Protestant Officials in, 6; Bread-winners, Three Little, 812; Business, A Boy's Start in, 166; Candle-light, A Service by, 38; Cashied, How a Cheque was, 356; Charity, A Converted Chinaman's, 807; China, The Famine in, 134, 296; Converted, A Bohemian Reprobate, 231; Convert, A Big, 743; Contrast, A, 374; Conversion, An Infidel's in New York, 791; Cripple, A Matter-of-Fact, 565; Crossing, Death at a, 535; Difficulty, A Trustee's, 214; Discovery, A Pianist's, 663; Dream, The Effect of a, 438; Earthquake, A Christian in a, 743; Experiment, A Deacon's, 406; Fire, A Heroine at a, 150; Five-dollar Bill Replaced, A, 103; French Confessor Left, A, 695; German Sceptic Saved, A, 118; Girl, A Resolute, 54; Grove, A Prayer in a, 134; Half-dollar, A Prayer for a, 710; How a Pledge was Taken, 64; India, A Legal Struggle in, 86, 327; Infidel, A Jew's Reply to an, 502; Insult, A Test by, 295; Japanese, Y. M. C. A.'s, 28; Jews, The Chronic Persecution of, 182; Jews, The Return of the, 342; Journey, A God-Directed, 422; Judea, More Liberty Asked for, 183; Letter, A Sailor's, 70; Letters, Dr. Sumner's Last, 233; Livingstone, A Visit to the Grave of Mrs., 406; Living Book, A, 755; Lobbyist, A Child, 211; Lost Brother Found, A, 54; Miles Standish, The Skeleton of, 375; Mission, A Southerner in a, 6; Mission, A Virago in a, 791; Missionary, The Murdered, 743; Montezuma, Watching for, 691; Motive, A Millionaire's, 310; Mount of Olives, The Great Tower at, 198; Mountains, A Cabin in the, 102; New Guinea, Two Visits to, 502; New Testament, A Lady Nihilist's, 675; New York, Jewish Converts in, 38; Noble Life Lost, A, 486; Note, A Prayer About a, 273; Ominous Figures, 150; Palestine, Progress in, 28; Patron, An Unpopular, 454; Peril, A Compassion in, 454; Pharos, The Bereavement of, 599; Physicians, Wanted Christian, 663; Prayer Answered by Cable, 103; Prayer, A Landowner Disturbed by, 485; Prayers, A Dying Boy's, 483; Prayer, Twenty Years of Answered, 647; Princess, The Cremation of a, 470; Prison, A Conversion in a, 263; Prisoner, A Hopeful, 807; Prodigal, A Rejected, 310; Promise Punctually Kept, A, 566; Puzzled, A Widow, 341; Quarrel, A Domestic, 422; Rats, A Child's Prayer Among, 134; Rails, A Child on the, 551;

Record, Mr. Geo. Muller's, 566; Reformed, Unruly Boys, 534; Remorse, An Infidel's, 732; Renovation, A Trump's, 263; Rented, Why a House Was Not, 342; Reproved, A Husband, 263; Robbers, Bulgarian, 611; Saved, A Drunken Merchant, 231; Scripture, Conversion by, 198; Secret Vow Paid, A, 54; Service, A Strange Burial, 6; Shipboard, Remarkable Conversion on, 566; Shoe, An Invitation in a, 118; Slums, Rescued from, 6; Slums, A Lady in, 278; Sons, Prince Jerome Napoleon's, 710; Spanish Freethinker Antonised, 668; Stanley as a Dentist, 231; Story, A Jewish Lady's, 118; Story, A Swedish Steward's, 166; Story, A Wife-beater's, 663; Student, A Prayer for a, 602; Struggle, A New Zealander's, 54; Suicide Averted, A, 627; Surveillance, A Distressing, 518; Tacking Ship in a Street, 327; Talmage at Sea, Dr. 750; Talmage in France, 771; Talmage's Pilgrimage, 807; Ten Dollars Given, 70; Terror, A Fishwoman's, 519; Testimony, The Buried, 470; Thwarted, Supernaturally, 454; Treasures, A Drunkard's, 422; Verdict, A God-Directed, 214; Vienna, A New Yorker's Discovery in, 679; Village, A Heathen Texas, 358; Vision, The Monk's, 551; Vice, The Struggle with, 87; Vow, A Scared Officer's, 118; Waif, A Midnight Talk with a, 22; Woman's Work Blessed, A, 196; Work, A Bereaved Mother's, 517.

Prophetic Articles.

Advent, The Time of Christ's Second, 807; Anti-Christ: His Person and Relations, 407; Anti-tribulation Translations, 487; Boulanger's Fall and Future Rise, 579; Boulanger in Prophecy, 326; Brazilian Revolution, Prophetic Import of, 787; Christ's Advent, Near Approach of, 755; Christ's Eschatological Prophecy, 535; Coming Great Prophetic Events this Year, 215; Daniel's Eight Notable Days, 727; Days of Noah, 695; Diabolical Threes of the Last Day, 669; Diagram of Prophecy, A, 743; End of the Times, 262; Fateful Day, The, 647; Financial Sign of our Times, 343; Future Ten Kingdoms, 355; Future Triumph of Popery, 655; Great Tribulation, The, 199; Ho for Israel! Wait, 455; Impressions of the Last Days, 759; 1914, World Growing Better, 230; Jewish Restoration, Approaching, 550; Judgment to Come, 82; London, Prophetic Conference in, 5; 3; Scene, The, 119; Millennium, Con Earth in, 23; Missing One, The, 553; Prophetic Study, 471; Momentous Dates, 151; Mount Olives, Coming Eal 707; Pallagenia, 167, 189; Privilege, 697; Prophecies Misunderstood, 294; Chronology, Principles of, 135; Prophecy 1-9; Prophetic Outline, 518; Prophecy c ing Stars, 359; Prophecy, Reiteration in, tures of the First Fruits, 247; Resurre: Sacrifices to be Renewed, 631; Second Adven: 3; Second Resurrection, The, 471; Signs of Ex: tation, The, 391; Signs of the Times 279; Spurge: Prophetic Book Recommended by, 391; Stars, Signs in the, 215; Ten Signs of the End, 71, 86; Test of Prophetic Knowledge, The, 439; Universal Righteousness, The Prophecy of, 423; War Spirit from the False Prophet, The, 603.

Missionary Notes.

Abyssinia, 103; Africa, 6, 54, 70, 87, 150, 182, 198, 220, 278, 295, 310, 390, 454, 470, 496, 501, 534, 556, 562, 631, 663, 691, 725, 773; Among the Indians, 22, 102, 150, 182, 310, 316, 390, 405, 428, 453, 470, 486, 502, 505, 518, 550, 727, 743; Brazil, 263, 723; Ceylon, 727; China, 6, 27, 118, 134, 150, 181, 246, 278, 310, 325, 327, 342, 358, 406, 438, 451, 454, 534, 551, 572, 597, 627, 643, 739, 789; Corea, 230, 502, 517, 535; India, 22, 70, 87, 103, 182, 198, 220, 231, 246, 309, 310, 342, 358, 375, 406, 422, 502, 566, 611, 631, 643, 647; Egypt, 454; Japan, 38, 87, 166, 182, 214, 295, 342, 551; McAll Mission, 70, 278, 406, 679, 710; Mexico, 214, 342, 531; Morocco, 534, 582; Persia, 70, 437, 551, 601, 643, 695, 764; Siam, 569; Society Islands, 486; South Seas, 38, 182, 599; Syria, 231, 390, 436; Turkey, 22, 33, 54, 166, 518, 709; Faith Healing, Incidents of, 38, 118, 166, 214, 295, 325, 327, 358, 390, 422, 438, 519, 615, 710, 773.

S. S. LESSONS.
Anointing in Bethany, The, 267; Anointing of David, The, 527; Ark Brought to Zion, The, 630; Blind Bartimeus, 175; Child-like Spirit, The, 143; Christ's Love to the Young, 159; Close of Solomon's Reign, The, 790; Command to Watch, The, 271; David and Goliath, 542; David and Jonathan, 558; David's Grief for Absalom, 694; David Sparring Nabal, 575; David's Rebellious Son, 678; David's Last Words, 711; David's Thanksgiving Prayer, 646; Death of Eli, 431; Destruction of the Temple Foretold, 258; Forerunner Announced, The, 822; Forgiveness and Healing, 47; God's Will in Sanctification, 399; Great Teacher and His Twelve Disciples, The, 111; Healing of the Lepar, 31; Israel Asking a King, 462; Jesus Before the Council, 335; Jesus Before Pilate, 351; Jesus Betrayed, 319; Jesus Crucified, 367; Jesus Risen, 382; Jesus the Messiah, 127; Lord's Supper, The, 303; Parable of the Sower, The, 63; Rejected Son, The, 223; Sabbath in the Life of Jesus, A, 7; Samuel Called of God, 415; Samuel's Farewell Address, 494; Samuel the Reformer, 447; Satan Conquered, 79; Saul and his Sons, Death of, 583; Saul Chosen of God, 478; Saul Rejected by the Lord, 511; Self-satisfaction, 191; Sin, Forgiveness, and Peace, 662; Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, 758; Solomon's Fall, 774; Solomon's Wise Choice, 726; Temple Dedicated, The, 749; Temple, The Building of, 806; Timid Woman's Touch, The, 95; Tribes United Under David, 614; Triumphant Entry, The, 207; Two Great Commandments, The, 339; Witch of Endor, 598.

Serial Stories.

Escaped from the Mormons, 13, 29, 45, 61, 77, 93, 109, 125, 141, 167, 173, 199, 205, 221, 237, 253, 269, 285, 301, 317, 333, 349, 365, 381, 397, 413, 429, 445, 461, 477, 493, 509, 525, 541, 557, 573, 589, 605, 621, 701, 717, 733; Life in Salt Lake City, 637, 653, 669, 685; Story of the Pioneers, The, 749, 765, 781, 797, 813; Anecdotes of Evangelists, 3, 19, 35, 61, 67, 83, 99, 115, 131, 147, 163, 179, 195, 211, 227, 243, 259, 275, 291, 307, 323, 339, 355, 371, 403, 419, 435, 451, 467, 483, 499, 515, 531, 547, 563, 579, 595, 611, 627, 643, 659, 675, 691, 707, 723, 739, 755, 767.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS.

"Thou hast received gifts for men."—Ps. lxxviii: 18.

Christmas gifts for thee,
Fair and free!

Precious things from the heavenly store,
Filling thy casket more and more;
Golden love in divinest chain,
That never can be untwined again;
Silvery carols of joy that swell
Sweetest of all in the heart's lone cell;
Pearls of peace that were sought for thee
In the terrible depths of a fiery sea;
Diamond promises sparkling bright,
Flashing in farthest reaching light.

Christmas gifts for thee,
Grand and free!

Christmas gifts from the King of love,
Brought from His royal home above;
Brought to thee in the far-off land,
Brought to thee by His own dear hand.
Promises held by Christ for thee,
Peace as a river flowing free,
Joy that in His own joy must live,
And love that Infinite Love can give.
Surely thy heart of hearts uplifts Carols of praise for such Christmas Gifts!

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon,
in their fac-simile autograph, and also imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

235 THOUSAND.

LOOKING BACKWARD,
BY EDWARD BELLAMY.

cloth, $1.00; paper, 50 cents.

"All who are studying the problems of the age, all who believe in progress, all who are free to receive new light upon the capacities and possibilities of the race, will find in Mr. Bellamy's exceedingly clever book satisfaction and inspiration."
—New York Tribune.

 For sale by all Booksellers. Sent by mail postpaid, on receipt of price by the Publishers.

HOUGHTON, MIFFLIN & CO., Boston.
11 EAST SEVENTEENTH STREET, NEW YORK.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING
SHADEROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE
AUGUST 1889
OF
THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN'S
SHADEROLLERS

CHRISTIAN WORK —IN—
MEXICO.

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are very much needed, and can be sent to the address of Bishop H. C. RILEY,
care of J. P. HEATH,
43 Bible House, New York.

AGENTS WANTED to sell
"The Christian Legacy,"
One agent writes: "I have a record of hours worked, in all a little over a week's work, counting 10 hours for a day, and have 50 orders." Another: "I have read the book daily. Its plan is new to me, and the amount of precious truth and Bible information it contains is a surprise. The book will be highly prized by devout readers, and has the best of the genuine Christian religion." W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.

A CUP OF BLESSING
FOR

Every Day in the Year,

Being a Birthday Book of Cheering and Consolatory Texts selected from Scripture and other sources, with a verse of selected poetry for each day, bound in padded silk covers, and with index. Sent by mail, in

THE Alfred Dolge
FELT SHOES
AND SLIPPERS.

Noiseless,
Warm, Durable.

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York.

A CHRISTMAS SUGGESTION.
THE WIFE (crying): "Cousin Belle's early Christmas present gives me an idea! What could be better than to send Alfred Dolge Felt Shoes or Slippers to all on our Christmas list.
Nothing could give more comfort and pleasure."

PERFECT EASE
AND COMFORT.

Made in all Styles for Men,
Women, and Children.

Prevent Rheumatism and
Cold Feet.
Send for Illustrated Price-List.
Mention Christian Herald.

EVERY LADY
WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you.
Our reduced prices
bring the best goods
within reach of all.
We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the
U. S. Established
in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS.
for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make
of Black Silks in the world. We

offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satin, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida
Cloths, in Blacks only.
Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see
for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON,
Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dir. Nat. Bank, Wil-limate Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

We send to all parts of the U. S.
With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000
Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Eraid to bind bottom of dress.

are delivered to you
all carrying charges

RECOLLECT THE GOODS can make big pay in cash or elegant premiums getting subscribers to this magazine.

An Evangelical Monthly
Illustrated, 25c. Posters 25c.

6th Year
Pastors and People Sermons, Lectures, Bible Comments, Mission and S. S. Work, Christian Ethics and Home Culture. Samples Free. Agents Wanted. E. B. Treat, Pub. New York.

The Youths' Temperance Banner.

The National Temperance Society publishes a four-page illustrated paper for children and youth, with choice reading from the best writers. Terms:
Monthly Cash in advance, including postage.
Single copies, one year, 25 cents; one hundred copies to one address, $12. For any number of copies over four to one address, at the rate of 12 cents per year. Semi-Monthly—Single copies one year, 10 cents; four copies and over to one address, 24 cents each. J. N. STEARNS, Publishing Agent, 58 Beade St., N. Y.

The Famous Plymouth Rock Pants.

If you cannot reach one
of our branch stores, or there is no local agent in your town, write us at once (at Boston), and we will forward you, free, 30
samples of our latest novelties as well as quiet
patterns in men's cloth,
with self-measurement blanks, the results of which we guarantee to be satisfactory or money refunded. Agents wanted in every town and village in U. S., where we have none now to take orders for our famous goods cut to order.
Our reputation secures your first order and that
FIRST ORDER secures
you a steady customer
every time.

CUT TO ORDER: Pants, $3 to $5.25; Suits, $13.25 to $21; Overcoats, $10.25 to $20.
If you don't know who
we are, look in any commercial agency, or write to any bank or business firm (except clothiers and tailors) in any of these cities.
PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO.
ADDRESS ALL MAIL TO
Headquarters: 11 to 17 Elliot Street.
Annex: 695 Washington Street.
And 18 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.
BRANCHES: 235 Broadway, New York; 943 Penn-
Avenue, Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago,
Ill.; 914 Main St., Richmond, Va.; 225 E. Baltimore
St., Baltimore, Md.; 110 Canal St., New Orleans;
104 Montgomery St., Montgomery, Ala.; 39 Whitehall
St., Atlanta, Ga.; Burnside Building, Worcester, Mass.; Hotel Gilmore, Springfield, Mass.; 108 Wesminster St., Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building, New Haven, Conn.

A Gem For The Little Folks.

THE STORY
OF JESUS

For Little Children.
By MRS. G. E. MORTON.
Fully Illustrated.
12mo, 316 Pages.
Cloth, Printed in Colors,
$1.00, post-paid.

"Told in simple words and a very handsome book.
How wonderful that the biography of the Son of the Highest is better adapted than any other to be told to little children. Angels study it; devils dive into it;
babes love it. Blessed be the Story of Jesus."—C. H.
SPURGEON.

"The demand for a fourth edition of this pleasant and instructive work shows that it has already met with considerable favor. Planned something on the same lines as the 'Peep of Day.' Several illustrations and an attractive blinding add to its value as a Sunday-school prize or children's reward book."—The Bookseller.

"A difficult task well executed in simple, but not childish language, the 'old story' is told once more.
The holiness of our Lord, and the great object of His life are kept in prominence, which is an intercourse with all classes is described in a life-like way. We heartily recommend the book, which is improved by neat wood-cuts."—The Christian.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher & Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

AGENTS SALESMEN, CLERKS,
LADIES—Every one can make big money with or without canvassing. $100 per month to that amount weekly. Greatest, most profitable and easiest opportunity to make money. Reliable parties started on Salary and Commission. For such we supply the capital. Address M. MILLER, Manager, Box 3152, New York Post Office.

SALESMEN WANTED AT ONCE.

Our goods by sample to the wholesale and retail trade. We are the largest manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary paid. Permanent position. Money advanced for wages, advertising, etc. For full terms, send 10c. to Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or Cincinnati, O.

As a Flesh Producer there can be no question but that

SCOTT'S
EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosph
Of Lime and Soda
is without a rival. Many ha gained a pound a day by the
of it. It cures

CONSUMPTION,
SCROFULA, BRONCHITIS, COUGHS
COLD, AND ALL FORMS OF WASTING EASES. AS PALATABLE AS MILK.
Be sure you get the genuine as there are poor imitations.

WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATES OF LIME, SODA, IRON.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, & Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases
and Scrofulous Humors.

Almost as palatable as cream. It can be tak-pleasure by delicate persons and children, wh-using it, are very fond of it. It assimilates w-food, increases the flesh and appetite, build-nervous system, restores energy to mind and creates new, rich, and pure blood, in fact, acnates the whole system.

FLESH, BLOOD, NERVE, BRAIN
This preparation is far superior to all other of Cod-liver Oil; it has many imitators, equals. The results following its use are its commendations. Be sure, as you value your hea-get the genuine. Manufactured only by Dr. A. bor, Chemist, Boston, Mass. Sold by all Drug

STENOGRAPH
AND
TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography o-hand taught personally (or by mail in yo-home) by Vermilye's rapid system of tea-long established: hundreds of graduates responsible positions; success guaranteed type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlet Write or call. VERMILYER'S COLLEGE
816 Broadway, New

NEW ENLARGED EDITION

Encouragements to Fai

207 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cen

The Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, in his popu-"Abide in Christ," has mentioned this boo-specially to be recommended for young,
doubting Christians.

Here is a warm hand and a loving heart-you, in the name of the Lord, from one who h-doubts, and would gladly help you to break at-them. This book has greatly helped many C-to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord J-earnestly hope that in my more may be ben-it."—Printer.

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be such a one as a Christian would desire to put hands of any young man or woman trou-doubts concerning the religious life. It has to the experience of the saint, rather than t-and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortaing its motive in love to cultivate faith in God Abide in Christ.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price,
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, N

"Demonology or Spiritual Ancient and Modern."—An effective weapsword of the true. "Only unanswerable wor-subject."—Startling disclosures—History data—Scores saved already. Whole fam-rescued. Every family, teacher and Christia needs one. 310 pp. 12mo. cloth. Price red-
Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price,
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, N

OPIUM

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XII., No. 51. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF MR. H. M. STANLEY AND EMIN PASHA, and Narrative of the Relief Expedition. THE STORMY PASSAGE. Dr. Talmage's Sermon at Capernaum. ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE TIME OF CHRIST'S SECOND ADVENT. THE BUILDING OF THE TEMPLE. By Mrs. M. Baxter. PORTRAIT OF THE LATE JEFFERSON DAVIS. DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE. Stanley at Manyema—A Chinese Evangelist—A Hopeful Prisoner—A Converted Chinaman's Charity.

THE PREACHER'S BURDEN. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon. Gems from New Books: Crystallizing Days, Etc. THE ANONYMOUS LETTER. (With Illustration) PORTRAIT OF MR. STEPHEN BURROWES. THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS. Their Perils, Pains, and Privations. (Continued.)

EMIN PASHA AND MR. H. M. STANLEY—STANLEY ENTERTAINED BY THE KING OF MANYEMA.

THE RESCUE OF EMIN PASHA.

Stanley's Former Narrative—The Origin of the Expedition—Return to His Rear Column—Conflict with Dwarfs—Retracing His Steps to the Nyanza—A Forage in the Forest—On the Brink of Starvation—The Last Food Distributed—Arrival at Fort Bodo—News of Emin and Jephson's Imprisonment—Escape of Jephson—Arrival of Emin's Steamers—The Journey to Zanzibar.

THE story of the expedition led into the heart of Africa by Mr. H. M. Stanley for the rescue of Emin Pasha was partly told in these columns on April 24 last, and sketches were then given of the lives of both these distinguished men. At that date there was no authentic intelligence later than that contained in letters from Stanley, dated August, 1888. He reported that he was then about to set out to rejoin Emin, but he was in circumstances which might have made the stoutest heart quail. We hoped he might succeed, but there were reasons for fear that, stripped as he was of medicines, provisions, and the necessities of African life, the expedition might fail, after all. Now, however, the welcome news has arrived that the brilliant achievement is complete; Stanley has reached the coast at Zanzibar, bringing Emin and his party with him. It is the most astonishing feat in the history of African exploration, and our readers will be glad to read some of its incidents, as described in the explorer's letters.

The Object of the Expedition

was to carry relief to Emin Pasha, and to assist him in retreating from his province if he desired to do so. His letters during 1886 represented him as so surrounded by hostile forces that, while reasonably safe in his fortified position, he was unable to leave it, or to accomplish much of anything in the direction of opening up the country to commerce and civilization.

Emin Pasha (whose European name is Dr. Edward Schnitzler), was then Governor of the Khedivial province of Egypt, having been appointed to that position in 1878, at which time General Gordon was Governor of the Soudan. The relief expedition was organized by Sir William Mackinnon, assisted by several other gentlemen connected with the East Africa Company.

Stanley was recalled from the United States, where he was about to enter upon a lecturing tour, to take charge of the relief expedition. He joined, and assumed command of it at Leopoldville on April 20, 1887. Starting up the Congo a few days later, he reached Yambuya, on the Aruwimi, in June. He was accompanied by Major E. Barttelot and several other European officers, and had a force of several hundred Zanzibari and Soudanese soldiers and carriers. About 150 miles up the Aruwimi he established a camp, which he left in command of Major Barttelot, who was afterward murdered by some of the natives. Stanley, himself, still with a force of several hundred, left Yambuya on June 28, and pushed on toward Albert Nyanza through a dense forest penetrable only with the greatest danger and hardships. Near the northern end of the Albert Nyanza he was joined by Emin Pasha on April 28, 1888, being a little more than a year from the time the expedition started from Leopoldville. Later Stanley, leaving Mr. Jephson with Emin, and establishing a camp by the Nyanza, which he called Fort Bodo, retraced his steps to find Barttelot, and to bring up the stores left in his charge. He found that Barttelot had been murdered, the stores scattered, and everything in a demoralized condition.

The Return to Emin

with such of the men and stores as Stanley could collect, was the next business. That was in October, 1888, and the journey was over the ground that he had already traversed once. On November 1, they came to a plantain plantation in charge of the Dwarfs. "The people" says Stanley "flung themselves on the plantains to make as large a provision as possible for the dreaded wilderness ahead of us. The most enterprising always secured a fair share, and twelve hours later would be furnished with a week's provision of plantain flour; the feeble and indolent revelled for the time being on abundance of roasted fruit, but always neglected providing for the future, and thus became victims to famine later on.

"After moving from this place ten days passed before we reached another plantation, during which time we lost more men. The small-pox broke out among the Manyemas and their followers, and the mortality was terrible. Our Zanzibaris escaped this pest, however, owing to the vaccination they had undergone on board the Madura. We were now about four days' march above the confluence of the Ihuru and Ituri rivers, and within about a mile from the Ishuru. As there was no possibility of crossing this violent and large tributary of the Ituri or Aruwimi, we had to follow its right bank until a crossing could be discovered. We searched and found a place where we could build a bridge across. Mr. Bonny and our Zanzibar chief threw themselves into the work, and in a few hours the Dui River was safely bridged, and we passed from Indeman into a district unvisited by the Manyemas.

"In this new land the dwarfs called Wambutti were very numerous, and conflicts between our rear guard and these crafty little people occurred daily, not without harm to both parties. Such as we contrived to capture we compelled to show the path. Finally we followed elephant and game tracks on a south-east course, but on December 9 we were compelled to halt for

A Forage in the Middle of a Forest.

I sent 150 rifles back to a settlement that was fifteen miles back on the route we had come, while many Manyema followers also undertook to follow them. I quote from my journal part of what I wrote on December 14, the sixth day of the absence of the foragers: "Six days have transpired since our foragers left us. For the first four days time passed rapidly—I might say almost pleasantly—being occupied in recalculating all my observations from Ugarrowwa to Lake Albert and down to date. My occupation then ended, I was left to wonder why the large band of foragers did not return. The fifth day, having distributed all the stock of flour in camp and killed the only goat we possessed, I was compelled to open the officers' provision boxes and take a pound-pot of butter, with two cupsful of my flour, to make an imitation gruel, there being nothing else save tea, coffee, sugar, and a pot of sago in the boxes. In the afternoon a boy died, and the condition of a majority of the rest was most disheartening; some could not stand, but fell down in the effort. These constant sights acted on my nerves, until I began to feel not only moral but physical sympathy as well, as though weakness was contagious.

"The morning of the sixth day dawned: we made the broth as usual—a pot of butter, abundance of water, a pot of condensed milk, a cupful of flour—for 130 people. The chiefs and Mr. Bonny were called to council, and our plans were discussed. The afternoon of the seventh day mustered everybody, besides the garrison, ten men. In a cheery tone, though

My Heart Was Never Heavier

I told the forty three hunger-bitten people that I was going back to hunt up the missing men; probably I should meet them on the road, and if I did that they would be driven on the run with food to them. We travelled nine miles that afternoon, having passed several dead people on the road, and early on the eighth day of their absence from camp met our foragers marching in an easy fashion, but when we were met their pace was altered to a quickstep, so that in twenty-six hours from leaving Stawahin camp we were back with a cheery abundance around, gruel and porridge boiling, bananas boiling, plantains roasting, and some meat simmering in pots for soup. This has been the nearest approach to absolute starvation in all my African experience. Twenty-one persons altogether succumbed in this dreadful camp.

"On the 17th of December the Ihuru River was reached in three hours, and having a presentiment that the garrison of Fort Bodo were still where I had left them, the Ihuru was crossed the next day; and two days following, steering through the forest regardless of paths, we had the good fortune to strike the western angle of the Fort Bodo plantations on the 20th. My presentiment was true, Lieutenant Stairs and his garrison were still in Fort Bodo, fifty-one souls out of fifty-nine, and never a word had been heard of Emin Pasha or of Mr. Mounteney Jephson during

The Seven Months of My Absence.

On the 23d of December the united expedition continued its march eastward, and as we had now to work by relays owing to the fifty extra loads that we had stored at the fort, we did not reach the Ituri Ferry, which was our last camp in the forest region before emerging on the grass land, until January 9.

"My anxiety about Mr. Jephson and the Pasha would not permit me to dawdle on the road making double trips in this manner, so, selecting a rich plantation and a good camping site to the east of the Ituri River, I left Lieutenant Stairs in command, with 124 people, including Dr. Parke and Captain Nelson, in charge of all extra loads and camp, and on the 11th of January continued my march eastward."

Five days marching and still no news of the Pasha or Jephson, but on January 16 a letter was delivered to Stanley at a place called Gaviaras, which explained the silence. It was dated more than two months back and contained

Alarming News.

Jephson, who was the writer of the letter said: "I am writing to tell you of the position of affairs in this country, and I trust this letter will be delivered to you at Kavalli in time to warn you to be careful. On August 18, a rebellion broke out here and the Pasha and I were made prisoners. The Pasha is a complete prisoner, but I am allowed to go about the station, but my movements are watched. The rebellion has been got up by some half-dozen Egyptians—officers and clerks—and gradually others have joined, some through inclination, but most through fear: the soldiers, with the exception of those at Labore, have never taken part in it, but have quietly given in to their officers. . . . We are like rats in a trap; they will neither let us act nor retire; and I fear unless you come very soon, you will be too late, and our fate will be like that of the rest of the garrisons in the Soudan. Had this rebellion not happened, the Pasha could have kept the Mahdists in check for some time, but as it is he is powerless to act. If we are not able to get out of the country, please remember me to my friends."

Stanley contrived to get a letter sent to Jephson informing him of his arrival, and Jephson promptly made his escape and found his way to Stanley's camp. He had been more than seven months in Emin's company and had been a close observer of Emin's relations with the people. He could give Stanley no decisive report as to what they would do. Both Emin and the people were irresolute. The approach of the Mahdists might drive them to quit the province and accompany Stanley to the coast, or if the Mahdists did not press them they might decide to remain: Jephson could not tell what they would do. Couriers were immediately dispatched to Emin, bearing a letter asking him in what way Stanley could best serve him. Six days later, on February 13, 1889, Emin arrived at Stanley's camp in person, having made his escape from his mutinous soldiers. He had with him two steamers laden with people desiring to quit the province and travel with Emin under Stanley's escort out of the country.

A Deputation

of officers headed by Selim Bey waited on Stanley on February 18, and asked him to delay his departure until all the people who desired to leave the province could be brought to the camp. Stanley consented to wait a reasonable time, and, in a subsequent conversation with Emin, twenty days was fixed as the limit. Stanley mentions incidentally, as an indication of the character of Emin's officers, that one member of the deputation stole a rifle while he was in the camp. The time of waiting was spent in nursing the sick back to health, and getting the healthy into condition for the long march. Meanwhile, the refugees came in slowly, bringing their property (immense quantities of rubbish) with them. Thirteen hundred and fifty-five loads of this "property" were brought in, and then Stanley stopped it, saying he had not bearers sufficient to carry it to the sea.

Vexatious Delays

under a variety of pretexts were made, until Stanley suspected treachery on the part of Selim Bey. Many refugees were still to come, but they were at Duffie, and had to be brought to Wadelai on their way to the camp; and Stanley was asked to wait for them. The twenty days grew to forty, and still Emin was pleading for further delay to enable Selim to bring in the people. At last Stanley called a council of his officers, and recounted the facts in the presence of Emin. It was unanimously resolved to set out on April 10, and if Selim could not have all in by that day the others might follow. Subsequently a letter of Selim's was intercepted, which proved his treachery. He was plotting to attack Stanley's camp, and would have done so had he not been robbed of his ammunition.

The Journey to the Coast

Now, that is a great deal wiser than the talk of a great many Christians who want to throw overboard all the thousands and tens of thousands of souls who are the subjects of revivals. Throw all overboard because they are brought into the kingdom of God through great revivals, because there is a peck of chaff, a quart of chaff, a pint of chaff! I say, let them stay until the last day; the Lord will divide the chaff from the wheat.

Do not be afraid of a great revival. Oh that such gales from heaven might sweep through all our churches! Oh for such days as Richard Baxter saw in England, and Robert McChesney saw in Dundee! Oh for such days as Jonathan Edwards saw in Northampton! I have often heard my father tell of the fact that in the early part of this century there broke out

A Revival at Somerville, N. J.,

and some people were very much agitated about it. They said: "Oh, you are going to bring too many people into the church at once;" and they sent down to New Brunswick to get John Livingston to stop the revival. Well, there was no better soul in all the world than John Livingston. He went and looked at the revival; they wanted him to stop it. He stood in the pulpit on the Sabbath, and looked over the solemn auditory, and he said: "This, brethren, is in reality the work of God; beware how you try to stop it." And he was an old man, leaning heavily on his staff—a very old man. And he lifted that staff, and took hold of the small end of the

STANLEY AT MANYEMA.

(See illustration on first page.)

THE picture on the first page is taken from a sketch sent home by Mr. H. M. Stanley, and represents his reception by the king of Manyema. Stanley confesses he has a particular fondness for this village and its unsophisticated people. It was in this neighborhood that Livingstone lay dangerously ill, and where the natives did their utmost for his comfort. Stanley says: "Sitting in the door of my hut, and regarding the village life in East Manyema, I have often been struck with the truth of the adage that 'Ignorance is bliss.' Here is the pompous old king, stalking about as though he owned the whole Dark Continent, whereas his sovereignty over one hundred acres is but precarious. As ignorant as the long-bodied goat which stares so wonderingly at my donkey, he will glide through life in the full belief that he is the proudest monarch that ever reared his feather-crest sunwards. The grown males of the village filled with wine and plantain, possessors of wives and children and goats, with snug houses, care for nothing, except the hour they are accustomed to gossip with the king, their hours of food and sleep, and the arrival of a caravan from some distant region."

A CHINESE EVANGELIST.

IN a letter to the Missionary Herald from Mr. Thompson, who is laboring at Fenchow-fu, occurs the following description of one of his native helpers: "Ts'ui Heng T'ai is a native of Shansi and is thirty-three years of age. Nearly all his life has been spent in his native province. When a boy, in his home at Yü Tzu Hsien, not far from Tai-ku, a friend read to him a Christian tract, The Three-Character Classic, and this awakened in Ts'ui a desire to learn something more of the doctrine of Jesus. His parents fully approved of his desire, telling him that the doctrine set forth in that tract was worthy of being received. Ts'ui's parents, however, never had the privilege of hearing Christian preaching; they died of starvation during the terrible famine that ravaged Shansi twelve years ago. And here comes in a tale of filial piety that ought to commend itself to the most orthodox Chinaman, as well as touch the heart of the Christian reader. Mr. Ts'ui senior died in the northwest corner of Shansi, three hundred miles from the family burial-ground. The son was absent at Peking at the time of his father's death; but on his return a year or two afterward, he went to the place where his father was buried, paid the expenses that had been incurred for the funeral, dug up the bones, and putting them into a bag, brought them home on his back and buried them in the family sepulchre.

"During his first visit to Peking, Ts'ui heard the gospel preached in the chapel of the American Board, but it was not till a subsequent visit, in 1879, that he understood it sufficiently to apply for baptism. In about another year he again returned to Shansi, and soon afterward entered the family of Mr. Stimson, of our Shansi Mission, as a servant. Mr. Stimson carefully instructed him in the Holy Scriptures, and always took him with him on his tours. Ts'ui has proved to be a diligent student of the Word of God, is always glad of an opportunity to preach, and is becoming quite a powerful and eloquent preacher of the Word."

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Chinese Boy's Confession.—Mr. Hamilton observes: "A Chinese boy, about ten years of age, had been converted to Christ, and had a great desire to be baptized. He applied to the missionary to have his desire fulfilled. The missionary, knowing that though the boy was a Christian, he had no Scriptural training, thought he would test him, and began thus, 'Do you love Jesus?' 'Yes,' was the prompt reply. 'Where does Jesus dwell?' 'Jesus lives in the heart of the Christian,' was the boy's answer. The missionary, being fully satisfied, baptized the lad, and admitted him into the Church. Many, I fear, in this Christian land, who profess to be Christians, and are admitted into the Church, are not so far advanced in spiritual geography as that boy. They think Jesus lives far away, but we, like the little boy, who fully trust Him, know that our Saviour and Keeper dwells in our hearts."

A Fall Over a Cat.—"A German Tailor," says an evangelist, "who had recently come to England, occupied apartments in an old house in one of the poorest parts of East London. His work was making that cheapest kind of ready-made garments, known as 'slop work,' or 'custom goods.' The house, like the neighborhood, if it had ever been respectable, had quite forgotten all remembrance of the time, and the tenants were mostly people with broken fortunes, and all more or less poor. They were not quite forsaken, however, for Mr. H., a city missionary, paid them periodical visits. One day, Mr. H. was climbing very carefully the dangerous stairway, when he trod on something which threw him off his feet. It was a cat, which the dimness of the ascent prevented him seeing. Losing his balance, he fell over on the floor below. His back was much hurt, and his cries, together with the noise of his fall, brought a number of the inmates to his aid. Among them was the German tailor, who, lifting him with great care, bore him to his own room, and laid him on his work-bench, a number of skeleton coats serving as a bed. Through his kind attention, and ascertaining that, though very much bruised, no bones were broken, Mr. H. was able to proceed slowly home. Let us see what followed: First of all, it was the means of creating a close feeling of attachment between the German tailor and the city missionary. The former asked the latter to help him to acquire the English language. The missionary gladly responded, using the Bible as his principal text-book; accepting the aid of the tailor in acquiring German, which he rightly judged would be helpful to him in his work. By these means the truths of God's Holy Word were constantly placed before the mind of the foreigner, with the result that his memory became stored with the parables and miracles and discourses of the Lord Jesus Christ. In reading the blessed pages of inspiration, the tailor found more than he sought: he sought to gain a language, and he found a Saviour. The Holy Spirit opened his understanding, applied the truth to his heart, and leading him as a penitent to Christ he found joy and peace in believing."

A School Girl's Pocket-Book.—Dr. Pentecost said: "Some time ago, my daughter, fifteen years of age, was leaving home for the first time. She was going to school, and I went out from the city to the suburb, where I lived, that I might see her off. I took with me a little pocket-book as a present to her. As we went along she was all excitement, and exclaimed, 'Papa, have you got my trunk checked?' 'Yes, dear,' I replied, 'you will find the check in your pocket-book.' 'Thank you; and have you my ticket?' she inquired. 'Oh yes.' 'And have you any train tickets? as I am going through Boston I'll need some, you know.' 'You will find them all in your pocket-book,' I replied. 'But, papa, I'll need money.' 'It is in your pocket-book also; you will find in it a time-table, directions for your journey, tickets, money, and everything you require.' She had received from her father a pocket-book in which was every necessary for her journey, and which she had only to open and take what she would. A father's love had provided all. So our Heavenly Father in His great love gives us redemption through His only Son, Jesus Christ, and therein He has abounded to us in forgiveness, wisdom, truth, and everything that we require for our journey heavenward."

Two Men Overboard.—"Two Men Were Going down the river Clyde on board one of the magnificent Clyde steamers. In a bit of play they projected themselves over the railing on the bridge, and fell into the river. One of the witnesses of the accident, moved by a humane impulse, threw overboard his walking-stick. Another with a little more presence of mind cut down a life-buoy and threw it over. One of the drowning men clutched the walking-stick with both hands, and went down dragging it with him. The other caught firm hold of the life-buoy and was saved. Now, imagine two very distinguished theologians or metaphysicians on board, and one says, 'The reason why the man who seized the walking-stick was lost is he did not get hold of it in the right way, while the other, who caught the life-buoy, was saved because he got hold of it in the right way.' 'Nonsense!' some common-sense man would exclaim, 'The one was saved, and the other lost, because the thing which the one got hold of was, of itself, not able to save him, while that which the other seized was able to save him.' Look well to what you put your trust in. Mere religion, morality, temperance, philanthropy, or church membership will never save you. Christ is the only Saviour. You may confidently lay your whole weight upon Him."

Volume XI., of the Christian Herald, containing the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for sale. We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, and 1888, unbound, price $1.00, including postage.

THE STORMY PASSAGE.

Dr. Talmage at Capernaum.

"Entered into a ship, and went over the sea toward Capernaum." John 6:17.

"And He arose, and rebuked the wind and the sea." Mark 4:39.

The Lake as it was in Christ's Time—The Embarkation—A Change of Weather—Hurricane and Darkness—The Miraculous Stilling of the Storm—I. It is Important to Have Christ in the Ship—The Perils of Life's Voyage—Waves of Trial—II. Following Christ not Always Smooth Sailing—Apostolic Martyrdom—Christians Persecuted Still—III. Good People Often Frightened—Fears that the Church will be Swamped—Spiders Trying to Imprison a Lion—Fright About Revivals—A Revival at Somerville, N. J.—IV. The God-Man—V. Jesus Can Hush a Tempest.

HERE in this seashore village was the temporary home of that Christ who for the most of His life was homeless. On the site of this village, now in ruins, and all around this lake, what scenes of kindness and power and glory and pathos when our Lord lived here! It has been the wish of my life—I cannot say the hope, for I never expected the privilege—to stand on the banks of Galilee. What a solemnity, and what a rapture to be here! I can now understand the feeling of the immortal Scotchman, Robert McCheyne, when, sitting on the banks of this lake, he wrote:

It is not that the wild gazelle
Comes down to drink thy tide,
But He that was pierced to save from hell,
Oft wandered by thy side.

Graceful around thee the mountains meet,
Thou calm reposing sea;
But ah! far more, the beautiful feet
Of Jesus walked o'er thee.

I can now easily understand from the contour of the country that bounds this lake that storms were easily tempted to make these waters their playground. From the gentle way this lake treated our boat when we sailed on it yesterday, one would have thought it incapable of a paroxysm of rage; but it was quite different on both the occasions spoken of in my two texts. I close my eyes, and the shore of Lake Galilee as it now is, with but little signs of human life, disappears, and there comes back to my vision

The Lake as it was in Christ's Time.

It lay in a scene of great luxuriance; the surrounding hills, terraced, sloped, grooved; so many hanging gardens of beauty. On the shore were castles, armed towers, Roman baths, everything attractive and beautiful—all styles of vegetation in shorter space than in almost any other space in all the world, from the palm-tree of the forest to the trees of rigorous climate. It seemed as if the Lord had launched one wave of beauty on all the scene, and it hung and swung from rock and hill and oleander. Roman gentlemen in pleasure-boats sailing this lake, and countrymen in fishing-smacks coming down to drop their nets, pass each other with nod and shout and laughter, or swinging idly at their moorings. Oh, what a beautiful scene!

It seems as if we shall have a quiet night. Not a leaf winked in the air; not a ripple disturbed the face of Gennesaret; but there seems to be a little excitement up the beach, and we hasten to see what it is, and we find it

An Embarkation.

From the western shore a flotilla pushing out; not a squadron, or deadly armament, nor clipper with valuable merchandise, nor piratic vessels ready to destroy everything they could seize, but a flotilla, bearing messengers of light and life and peace. Christ is in the stern of the boat. His disciples are in a smaller boat. Jesus, weary with much speaking to large multitudes, is put into somnolence by the rocking of the waves. If there was any motion at all, the ship was easily righted; if the wind passed from starboard to larboard, or from larboard to starboard, the boat would rock, and by the gentleness of the motion putting the Master asleep. And they extemporized a pillow made out of a fisherman's coat. I think no sooner is Christ prostrate, and His head touched the pillow, than He is sound asleep.

The breezes of the lake run their fingers through the locks of the worn sleeper, and the boat rises and falls like a sleeping child on the bosom of a sleeping mother.

Calm night, starry night, beautiful night! Run up all the sails, ply all the oars, and let the large boat and the small boat glide over gentle Gennesaret. But the sailors say there is going to be a change of weather. And even the passengers can hear the moaning of the storm as it comes on with great stride, and all the terrors of Hurricane and Darkness.

The large boat trembles like a deer at bay among the clangor of the hounds; great patches of foam are flung into the air; the sails of the vessel loosen, and the sharp winds crack like pistols; the smaller boats like petrels poise on the cliffs of the waves and then plunge. Overboard go cargo, tackling, and masts, and the drenched disciples rush into the back part of the boat and lay hold of Christ, and say unto Him: "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" That great Personage lifts His head from the pillow of the fisherman's coat, walks to the front of the vessel, and looks out into the storm. All around Him are the smaller boats, driven in the tempest, and through it comes the cry of drowning men. By the flash of the lightning I see the calm brow of Christ as the spray dropped from His beard. He has one word for the sky and another for the waves. Looking upward He cries: "Peace!" Looking downward He says: "Be still!"

The Waves Fall

flat on their faces, the foam melts, the extinguished stars relight their torches. The tempest falls dead, and Christ stands with His feet on the neck of the storm. And while the sailors are bailing out the boats, and while they are trying to untangle the cordage, the disciples stand in amazement, now looking into the calm sea, then into the calm sky, then into the calm Saviour's countenance, and they cry out: "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey Him?"

The subject in the first place impresses me with the fact that it is very important to have Christ in the ship; for all those boats would have gone to the bottom of Gennesaret if Christ had not been present. Oh, what a lesson for you and for me to learn! We must always have Christ in the ship. Whatever voyage we undertake, into whatever enterprise we start, let us always have Christ in the ship. All you can do with utmost tension of body, mind, and soul, you are bound to do; but oh! have Christ in every enterprise.

There are men who ask God's help at the beginning of great enterprises. He has been with them in the past; no trouble can overthrow them; the storms might come down from the top of Mount Hermon, and lash Gennesaret into foam and into agony, but it could not hurt them. But here is another man who starts out in worldly enterprise, and he depends upon the uncertainties of this life. He has no God to help him. After a while tosses off the masts of the ship; he puts out his life-boat and the long-boat; the sheriff and the auctioneer try to help him off; they can't help him off; he must go down—no Christ in the ship. Your life will be made up of sunshine and shadows. There may be in it arctic blasts or tropical tornadoes; I know not what is before you, but I know if you have Christ with you all shall be well. You may seem to get along without the religion of Christ while everything goes smoothly, but after awhile, when sorrow hovers over the soul, when the waves of trial dash clear over the hurricane deck, and the decks are crowded with piratical disasters—oh, what would you do then without Christ in the ship? Take God for your portion, God for your guide, God for your help; then all is well; all is well for time, all shall be well forever. Blessed is that man who puts in the Lord his trust. He shall never be confounded.

The Storm Comes.

But my subject also impresses me with the fact that when people start to follow Christ they must not expect smooth sailing. These disciples got into the small boats, and I have no doubt they said: "What a beautiful day this is! How delightful is sailing in this boat! And as for the waves under the keel of the boat, why, they only make the motion of our little boat the more delightful." But when the winds swept down and the sea was tossed into wrath, then they found that following Christ was Not Smooth Sailing.

So you have found it; so I have found it. Did you ever notice the end of the life of the apostles of Jesus Christ? You would say, if ever men ought to have had a smooth life, a smooth departure, then those men, the disciples of Jesus Christ, ought to have had such a departure and such a life. St. James lost his head. St. Philip was hung to death on a pillar. St. Matthew had his life dashed out with a halbert. St. Mark was dragged to death through the streets. St. James the Less was beaten to death with a fuller's club. St. Thomas was struck through with a spear. They did not find following Christ smooth sailing. Oh, how they were all tossed in the tempest! John Huss in the fire; Hugh McKail in the hour of martyrdom; the Albigenes, the Waldenses, the Scotch Covenanters—did they find it smooth sailing? But why go was delivered to Stanley at a place called Gaviaras, which explained the silence. It was dated more than two months back and contained

Alarming News.

Jephson, who was the writer of the letter said: "I am writing to tell you of the position of affairs in this country, and I trust this letter will be delivered to you at Kavalli in time to warn you to be careful. On August 18, a rebellion broke out here and the Pasha and I were made prisoners. The Pasha is a complete prisoner, but I am allowed to go about the station, but my movements are watched. The rebellion has been got up by some half-dozen Egyptians—officers and clerks—and gradually others have joined, some through inclination, but most through fear: the soldiers, with the exception of those at Labore, have never taken part in it, but have quietly given in to their officers. . . . We are like rats in a trap; they will neither let us act nor retire; and I fear unless you come very soon, you will be too late, and our fate will be like that of the rest of the garrisons in the Soudan. Had this rebellion not happened, the Pasha could have kept the Mahdists in check for some time, but as it is he is powerless to act. If we are not able to get out of the country, please remember me to my friends."

Stanley contrived to get a letter sent to Jephson informing him of his arrival, and Jephson promptly made his escape and found his way to Stanley's camp. He had been more than seven boat. I suppose if we had been there we would have been just as much affrighted. Perhaps more. In all ages very good people get very much affrighted. It is often so in our day, and men say: "Why, look at the bad lectures; look at the various errors going over the Church of God; we are going to founder; the Church is going to perish; she is going down." Oh, how many good people are affrighted by iniquity in our day, and think the Church of Jesus Christ is going to be overthrown, and are just as much affrighted as were the disciples of my text. Don't worry, don't fret, as though iniquity were going to triumph over righteousness.

A lion goes into a cavern to sleep. He lies down, with his shaggy mane covering the paws. Meanwhile the spiders spin a web across the mouth of the cavern and say, "We have captured him." Gossamer thread after until the whole front of the cavern is covered with the spider's web, and the spiders say: "The lion is done; the lion is fast." After a while the lion has got through sleeping; he rouses himself, he shakes his mane, he walks out into the sunlight; he does not even know the spider's web is spun, and with his voice he shakes the mountain. So men come spinning their sophistries and scepticism about Jesus Christ; He seems to be sleeping. They say: "We have captured the Lord; He will never come forth again upon the nation; Christ is captured forever. His religion will never make any conquest among men." But after a while the Lion of the tribe of Judah will rouse Himself, and come forth to shake mightily the nations. What's a spider's web to the aroused lion? Give truth and error a fair grapple, and truth will come off victor.

Gossamer Thread.

But there are a great many good people who get affrighted in other respects; they are Affrighted About Revivals.

They say: "Oh! this is a strong religious gale; we are afraid the church of God is going to be upset, and there are going to be a great many people brought into the church that are going to be of no use to it;" and they are affrighted whenever they see a revival taking hold of the churches. As though a ship captain, with five thousand bushels of wheat for a cargo, should say some day, coming upon deck: "Throw overboard all the cargo!" and the sailors should say: "Why, captain, what do you mean? Throw over all the cargo?" "Oh," says the captain, "we have a peck of chaff that has got into this five thousand bushels of wheat, and the only way to get rid of the chaff is to throw all the wheat overboard." Now, that is a great deal wiser than the talk of a great many Christians who want to throw overboard all the thousands and tens of thousands of souls who are the subjects of revivals. Throw all overboard because they are brought into the kingdom of God through great revivals, because there is a peck of chaff, a quart of chaff, a pint of chaff! I say, let them stay until the last day; the Lord will divide the chaff from the wheat.

Do not be afraid of a great revival. Oh that such gales from heaven might sweep through all our churches! Oh for such days as Richard Baxter saw in England, and Robert McCheyne saw in Dundee! Oh for such days as Jonathan Edwards saw in Northampton! I have often heard my father tell of the fact that in the early part of this century there broke out and some people were very much agitated about it. They said: "Oh, you are going to bring too many people into the church at once;" and they sent down to New Brunswick to get John Livingston to stop the revival. Well, there was no better soul in all the world than John Livingston. He went and looked at the revival; they wanted him to stop it. He stood in the pulpit on the Sabbath, and looked over the solemn auditory, and he said: "This, brethren, is in reality the work of God; beware how you try to stop it." And he was an old man, leaning heavily on his staff—a very old man. And he lifted that staff, and took hold of the small end of the staff, and began to let it fall slowly through between the finger and the thumb, and he said: "Oh, thou impenitent, thou art falling now—falling from life, falling away from peace and heaven, falling as certainly as that cane is falling through my hand—falling certainly, though perhaps falling slowly!" And the cane kept on falling through John Livingston's hand. The religious emotion in the audience was overpowering, and men saw a type of their doom, as the cane kept falling and falling, until the knob of the cane struck Mr. Livingston's hand, and he clasped it stoutly, and said, "But the grace of God can stop you as I stopped that cane;" and then there was gladness all through the house at the fact of pardon and peace and salvation. "Well," said the people after the service, "I guess you had better send Livingston home; he is making the revival worse." Oh for gales from heaven to sweep all the continents! The danger of the Church of God is not in revivals.

A Revival at Somerville, N. J.,

Again, my subject impressed me with the fact that Jesus was God and man in the same being. Here He is in the back part of the boat. Oh, how tired He looks! what sad dreams He must have! Look at His countenance; He must be thinking of the cross to come. Look at Him,

He is a man—bone of our bone, flesh of our flesh. Tired, He falls asleep;

He is a Man.

But then I find Christ at the prow of the boat; I hear Him say: "Peace, be still;" and I see the storm kneeling at His feet, and the tempests folding their wings in His presence; He is a God. If I have sorrow and trouble, and want sympathy, I go and kneel down at the back part of the boat, and say: "O Christ! weary One of Gennesaret, sympathize with all my sorrows, Man of Nazareth! Man of the cross!" A Man, a Man! But if I want to conquer my spiritual foes, if I want to get the victory over sin, death, and hell, I come to the front of the boat and I kneel down, and I say: "O Lord Jesus Christ, Thou who dost hush the tempest, hush all my grief, hush all my temptation, hush all my sin!"

I learn once more from this subject that Christ can Hush a Tempest.

It did seem as if everything must go to ruin. The disciples had given up the idea of managing the ship; the crew were entirely demoralized; yet Christ rises, and He puts His foot on the storm, and it crouches at His feet. Oh yes! Christ can hush the tempest. You have had trouble. Perhaps it was the little child taken away from you—the sweetest child of the household, the one who asked the most curious questions, and stood around you with the greatest fondness, and the spade cut down through your bleeding heart. Perhaps it was an only son, and your heart has ever since been like a desolated castle; the owls of the night hooting among the fallen arches and the crumbling stairways. Or all your property swept away, you said: "I have so much bank stock, I have so many Government securities, I have so many houses, I have so many farms—all gone, all gone." Why, sir, all the storms that ever trampled with their thunders, all the shipwrecks, have not been worse than this to you. Yet you have not been completely overthrown. Why? Christ says: "I have that little one in My keeping. I can care for him as well as you can, better than you can, O bereaved mother!" Hushing the tempest. When your property went away, God said: "There are treasures in heaven, in banks that never break." Jesus hushing the tempest. There is one storm into which we will all have to run. The moment when we let go of this world and try to take hold of the next, we will want all the grace possible. Yonder I see a Christian soul rocking on all the powers of darkness seem let out against that soul—the swirling wave, the thunder of the sky, the shriek of the wind, all seem to unite together; but that soul is not troubled; there is no sighing, there are no tears; plenty of tears in the room at the departure, but he weeps no tears—calm, satisfied, and peaceful; all is well. By the flash of the storm you see the harbor just ahead, and you are making for that harbor. All shall be well, Jesus being our guide.

The Surges of Death;

Into the harbor of heaven now we glide;

We're home at last, home at last.

Softly we drift on the bright, silv'ry tide,

We're home at last.

Glory to God! all our dangers are o'er,

We stand secure on the glorified shore;

Glory to God! we will shout evermore,

We're home at last.

THE LATE JEFFERSON DAVIS.

(See Portrail on page 813.)

How many and varied were the emotions aroused throughout the land on December 6 by the message flashed over the electric wire that Jefferson Davis was dead! In many a home that name was the embodiment of fervent hope long since abandoned. In many another home it was the synonym for all that heart-breaking, bitter parting, and irreparable bereavement of the saddest time in all our history. True, he was not responsible for all that misery, but as the chosen head of the movement he was the representative of it, and stood before the people opposed to it as the focus of their enmity. These emotions render the time unsuited for reaching a just estimate of his character. We stand too near that fearful struggle to rightly fix his place on the roll of our national history-makers. He is dead, and so has passed into the region in which the tongue of vituperation is silenced, and the voice of praise can give him no pleasure.

The facts of his life may be briefly stated. He was born in Todd County, Kentucky, on June 3, 1808, and was consequently over eighty-one years old when he died. His father was a planter who had served as a Georgia officer in the Revolutionary War, and afterward settled in Kentucky, whence he again moved, while Jefferson was a boy, to Wilkinson County in Mississippi, which was then still a Territory. The boy received some academic education at home, and then went to Transylvania University in his native State. At sixteen he received a West Point appointment, and entered the Military Academy in the same class with Robert E. Lee and Albert Sidney Johnston. Graduating in 1828, he was assigned to the infantry, and three years later won such distinction as a staff officer in the Black Hawk War that he was promoted in 1833 to the rank of first lieutenant and adjutant in a new regiment of dragoons. This gave him two years of active service on the frontier in expeditions against the Pawnees and other hostile Indians.

To the surprise of his comrades, he suddenly resigned his commission in 1835, and quitted military life. Some clue to his motive was furnished shortly afterward, when he eloped with the daughter of Zachary Taylor, then a colonel in the army, and later President. After his marriage he returned to Mississippi, became a cotton planter a few miles from Vicksburg, and lived for eight years in retirement, devoting much of his time to careful study with reference to a public career. In 1843 his name became prominent in the political field, and shortly afterward he was elected a member of the House of Representatives. He was strongly in favor of the Mexican War, and, being elected colonel of Mississippi Volunteers, he left Congress for the field. Serving under his father-in-law, General Taylor, he won brilliant distinction in a daring charge at Monterey; and at Buena Vista he displayed so much heroism, when, after being severely wounded, he kept his place in the saddle and led his troops with coolness and valor that his father-in-law forgave him on the field, honored him publicly, and by his influence secured him the rank of brigadier-general. This honor he declined on conscientious grounds.

On his return home he was elected United States Senator from Mississippi, and from that time on was a recognized exponent of Southern opinion. In 1851 he resigned his seat in the Senate to become a candidate for the Governorship of his State. He was defeated by a small majority, but after the election of Pierce to the Presidency, he again entered public life as Secretary of War. The year 1857 found him again in the Senate, and this time, with all his energies concentrated in the struggle with the growing abolitionist power in the North. In 1860 he was a strong candidate for the Presidential nomination in the Charleston Convention. After Lincoln's election he realized that the crisis was come, and with the most ardent of the Southern leaders planned the movement which developed into the Confederacy. The last speech he made in the Senate was remarkable for its courteous eloquence and dignified vindication of the principles on which he acted.

The remainder of his career is familiar to every one. Chosen by the Montgomery Convention for the Presidency of the Southern States, he devoted himself, heart and soul to the cause of the Confederacy, and was, undoubtedly, the last man to abandon hope. Of his two years' imprisonment, and release without trial, much has been said, and to this day the mention of his treatment arouses bitter feeling. During the last twenty years he has lived quietly on his estate in Mississippi, emerging but rarely from his retirement.

THE BUILDING OF THE TEMPLE

By Mrs. M. Baxter.*

"So then ye are no more strangers and sojourners, but ye are fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God, being built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Christ Jesus Himself being the chief corner-stone; in whom each several building, fitly framed together groweth into a holy temple in the Lord; in whom ye also are built together for a habitation of God in the Spirit." Eph. 2: 19-22.

The Greater Temple Now Building—The Site of Solomon's Temple—Its Associations—The Silent Construction—Type of the Peaceful Building of Christ's Temple—The Interior Typifying the Divine in the Human—The Cherubim in the Four Aspects of Christ—The Emblematic Pillars—The Altar of Sacrifice—Other Types of the Christian Dispensation.

A TEMPLE is now in course of erection, of which Christ Himself is the Foundation, the Corner-stone, the Designer, and of which God is the Builder. "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid which is Jesus Christ." (1 Cor. 3: 11.) "Abraham . . . looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God" (Heb. 11: 10). And this building is "not made with hands, eternal in the heavens" (11 Cor. 5: 1); it is a house of "many mansions" (John 14: 2); it is built with "living stones" who like the living Corner-stone, are rejected indeed of men but with God "elect precious" (1 Pet. 2: 5). The tabernacle and the temple are but types of this building. David was never permitted in his lifetime to realize the he must die before the temple could be erected and indwelt by God. We too have to die with Christ, to die to our self-life, in order that we may become "an habitation of God through the Spirit." David "swore unto the Lord, and vowed a vow unto the mighty God of Jacob; Surely I will not come into the tabernacle of my house, nor go up into my bed; I will not give sleep to mine eyes nor slumber to mine eyelids, until I find out a place for the Lord, an habitation for the mighty God of Jacob" (Ps. 132: 2-5); so intent was David on the building of the temple. But Jesus also, the Son of David, who is building up His living stones into a spiritual house, neither slumbereth nor sleepeth (Ps. 121: 4); so intent is He to make His Church a dwelling-place of God.

One Ardent Desire of His Life;

It was "in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign . . . that he began to build the house of the Lord." The site was "in Mount Moriah, where the Lord appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the threshing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite" (11 Chron. 3: 1). This was where Isaac had been offered, the type of Jesus whom His Father gave to die, "that whosoever believeth on Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." As we have before seen, the pattern of the temple, as of the tabernacle, was given by God (Ex. 25: 9, 20; 26: 30; 1 Chron. 28: 19). Man initiated nothing, originated nothing. It was only the working out of God's thoughts. And surely Jesus, a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle which the Lord pitched and not man (Heb. 8: 2), is also working out the pattern which has been given Him of His Father.

We have seen also that all the material was prepared beforehand, that "neither hammer nor axe, nor any tool of iron (was) heard in the house while it was in building." All the noise of the felling of the trees in Lebanon, of the quarrying of the stones, and the sawing them into shape, was done before they left the quarry, all the brazen vessels and instruments, besides the two large pillars of brass, were cast "in the clay-ground between Succoth and Zeredathah" (11 Chron. 4: 17). Just so the tumult and the stir come in the preparation work,—our conversion to God, our separation from the world, the flesh, and the devil, which takes place in our own souls, in our family, and social life, and in our work for God. It is easy work to Him to adjust us to Him and to one another, to fit us into our place in the great building, when He has first succeeded in preparing us and in subjecting our individuality to the great master principle which should govern us, the kingdom of God. He fits "each several building," each of the "many mansions" into its place. In addition to the holy place and the most holy, which may typify the spirit in man, wherein God dwells, and the soul or affections and will, where the priests minister, there was the porch, a type of the body in man; for the time was approaching when the Word should be "made flesh" and dwell among us (John 1: 14).

All the Noise in Our Lives,

No sooner was the stone-work finished, and the house roofed in with beams and boards of cedar, and chambers typical of the "many mansions," "each several building," built against the wall of the house, than "the word of the Lord came to Solomon, saying, Concerning this house which thou art in building, if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them; then will I perform my word with thee, which I spake unto David thy father."

The whole building was lined or matchboarded with cedar, beautifully carved, with knops and open flowers, chains and palm trees, and the whole was overlaid with gold. "The king's daughter is all glorious within." (Ps. 45: 13.) It was a type of the Divine dwelling in the human, God with man, Emmanuel. The ark or the oracle was made of cedar, and was twenty cubits every way, instead of only two and a half as in the tabernacle (Ex. 37: 1), and overlaid with gold, the cherubim above it of olivewood, overlaid with gold; the union of the Divine and the human was typified throughout.

The Cherubim

were a type of glorified men. In Ezekiel's vision they are thus described, "As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion on the right side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle." (Ezek. 1: 10.) These are just the four sides of Christ as given in the gospels. In St. Matthew He is the King, the lion; in St. Mark, the ox, the servant, and sacrifice; in St. Luke, the man; in St. John, the eagle, the Divine One. All this is typified in the cherubim. Then the veil was made of blue, and purple, and crimson, and fine linen, with wrought cherubim thereon. In the holy of holies nothing was to be seen by the High Priest, who alone might enter there, but the ark, the cherubim above the mercy seat, the embroidered cherubim on the veil, and the golden altar of incense. All bore witness to the dwelling of God with man, all prefigured the dying prayer of Jesus, "That they all may be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." (John 17: 21.) This was the type, how about the antitype? "He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." (1 John 4: 16.) Are we so that the indwelling of God is manifest to those around us? Is the jar, and fret, and noise gone out of our lives, or is God fitting us to Himself and to one another in love? Are we, consciously and unconsciously, witnesses every hour of our lives that God does dwell with man? Do men take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus? Is it a reality to us that Christ dwells in our hearts by faith? (Eph. 3: 17.)

Dwelling in Love

Just as God raised up a man specially gifted for the work of the tabernacle, Bezaleel the son of Uri, so He raised up Hiram of Tyre, for the work of the temple. His father was "a worker in brass; and he was filled with wisdom and understanding and cunning to work all works in brass, and he came to Solomon, and wrought all his work." Among other things which he cast were two pillars "of eighteen cubits high apiece," something more than thirty feet, and more than twenty feet in circumference, and on the top of the pillars were chapters about nine feet high, and the ornamentation must have been most artistic and gorgeous, pomegranates and lily work, chains and net work. These pillars, too, are significant, the one named Boaz, meaning "In it is strength," the other Jachin, "He shall establish," signifying again Christ and His Church. Outside the main building were the courts, and immediately outside the porch stood the brazen sea, a wondrous work of art. It consisted of an immense circular bath, about eighteen feet in diameter, around which were lesser lavers, and the whole contained about 30,000 gallons of water. It was placed upon twelve brazen oxen, three facing each way. The thickness of the brass was a hand-breadth, say five inches. The oxen stood on twelve bases, and the borders between them were ornamented with lions, oxen, and cherubim. We cannot go into all the description of this Wonderful Work of Art.

Let us seek to get the teaching God would give us in it. On entering the building, within the court which was given to the Gentiles, one side of which was called Solomon's Porch, the first object that met the eye was the great brazen altar, on which, in Solomon's time, the victim was always burning—a wondrous type of the great Sacrifice, Jesus, by whom alone we draw nigh unto God. Without passing the altar none could enter the tabernacle; without forgiveness of sins through the redemption which is in Christ Jesus, none can offer worship which God will accept. But they were priests who should minister at the altar, and God calls us to be "a royal priesthood," given up to Him as the priests were of old, for His service, living, speaking, doing, always for Him. But then no priest could enter into His holy place without washing in the brazen sea. "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." (Isa. 52: 2.) Only as consecrated and purified may we worship our Lord in spirit and in truth. Within the holy place were the candle-stick and the table of shew bread, opposite the one to the other, signifying that Christ was "the Light of the world" and "the Bread of Life." These were hidden from the congregation until Jesus died; then the veil of the temple was rent from top to bottom and the interior of the Holy of Holies and the contents of the holy place were no longer hidden. Through His flesh the rent veil,

The Way into the Holiest

has been made manifest, and now we may "come boldly to the throne of grace"; it is our privilege to know Christ as "the Light of the world," and our Light, as He calls us even to be ourselves "the light of the world" in His place. (Matt. 5: 14.) The candlestick was "to give light always," the fire on the altar to be "ever burning." (Ex. 27: 20; 29: 42.) God changes not. (Matt. 3: 6), "Jesus Christ (is) the same yesterday, to-day, and forever" (Heb. 13: 8), and He would have His people to be like Him, unchangeable in their devotion to Him, and their witness for Him. God's indwelling is the glorious truth of the Bible; we are saved that God may dwell in us, sanctified that we may be separated unto Him as His alone dwelling place. If He uses us in the conversion of souls, or in the building up of His people, it is as the indwelling Spirit makes use of us as His instrument, and convinces men "of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment," by the presence of the living God they see in us. Satan sought to rob God of His creatures in Eden; Christ, in redeeming us and adopting our flesh, passing through death in our nature, and ascending to God's right hand as the God-man, has made it possible for God to dwell in us and to possess us. The temple was but a type or building made with hands, glorious as it was, but the great architect of the temple of the living God is the Spirit of Him that raised Jesus from the dead (Rom. 8: 11); and He, the eternal Spirit, erects this temple "according to the working of His mighty power which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead." Let us trust

* Mrs. Baxter sends this article in place of the International S. S. Lesson for December 29, which is a Review of the past Quarter's Lessons.

the Holy Ghost in His working within us, yielding ourselves unreservedly to God, that He may fitly frame us together, and that we may grow into an holy temple in the Lord.

DR. TALMAGE'S PILGRIMAGE.

OUR readers may be interested in a few extracts from a letter received last week from a gentleman who is accompanying Dr. Talmage in his trip to the Holy Land, and whose reverent admiration, like that which Boswell cherished for Dr. Johnson, leads him to treasure every word that falls from his lips. He says:

The journey from Rome to Naples was of about six hours' duration, and undertaken after only five hours' sleep. I must say that my most sanguine impressions of Italy and matters Italian do not reconcile me to the discomforts and annoyances of railroad travel in that sunny land. Virtue was rewarded, however, and patient continuance in the train did at length bring us to the city guilty of the proud boast, "See Naples and die." While I cheerfully recognize the beauty of the modern streets of that populous town, I feel obliged to say that these streets resemble those of the same class everywhere else so much, that beyond mentioning them nothing need be said about them. It is in Old Naples that one sees monumentally tall, quaintly built houses, lava pavements, antique churches, and shady, inconvenient narrowness of way, this tolerable, but oh, the omnipresent dirt, and the indescribable, all-pervading stench! What a gay and motley population! and no city could have more varied and discordant noises. The costumes worn by the people, I need not say particularly by the women, are bright and striking and wonderfully diverse. I cannot describe the combination of sounds—laughter, song, stringed music, clinking hoofs of asses and mules, gay converse, chaffering and screaming by sellers of multifarious wares. Naples is a delightful reminiscence to me, at a safe distance from its sights of filth and squalor and its odious odors.

The two full days we spent at Naples afforded a remarkable contrast to our experiences in London and Rome. Dr. Talmage was spared calls and recognitions absolutely. So far as I know, not a soul in the hotel or out of it knew that the Brooklyn preacher was in town.

Our trip from Naples to Brindisi was made by rail, and lasted sixteen hours. Italy has no sleeping-cars, but supplies a mighty poor substitute for them in reclining chairs, for the use of which a charge of four dollars a night per head is exacted. Even at this price the occupier is not left to the quiet enjoyment of his rest. Twice a night he is visited by an officer whose duty it is to change the pans of warm water which are used in heating the compartment. Three times in the night, moreover, the passenger is required to exhibit the ticket which entitles him to a seat in the aforesaid reclining chair. The train stops about every twenty minutes, when the conductor passes along its entire length, on the outside, publishing in a nasal tone in front of each compartment the name of the station. That nobody on the train expects to leave it for hours makes no difference to this industrious official. Our experiences with him and his train began at half-past 7 in the evening, and lasted sixteen hours. We were bored, we were cold, we were wretched.

Brindisi is a good place to get out of. It consists for the greater part of hovels, and is the dirtiest town I ever saw. I am sure I should love the Italians more if they were cleaner. St. Paul, I am informed, landed at Brindisi after being shipwrecked, which made the place specially interesting to Dr. Talmage. The Brooklyn preacher and I spent two hours in the streets of Brindisi to find where Virgil, the Latin poet, was born. Two houses, about as widely sundered as could be, were pointed out as Virgil's birthplace. We paid a franc for each one for the information. The hotel-keeper declined to commit himself to an opinion for either house. He had reached the safe conclusion that nobody is able to say exactly where the poet first saw the light.

We were tired and hungry when we sat down to dine at the hospitable board of the landlord who was willing to be ignorant, even in his relations with tourists. After the meal Dr. Talmage expressed his happiness in the seclusion from visitors achieved by not entering his name on the hotel register. He had hardly ceased speaking of it when a clerical-looking gentleman, slapping him gently on the shoulder, said, "Why, this is Dr. Talmage!" There was no denying the charge, and Canon Wilberforce, of philanthropic eminence and wearing ancestral honors, sat down to a good talk. He was delighted to meet with an old friend, but had sad news to tell. Broken down in health, he was on his way to India, accompanied by his daughter, in the hope that a period of absolute rest from duty and total change of scene would bring about his recovery from a spinal disease which threatened his life. His concern at the burning of the Brooklyn Tabernacle was mixed with congratulatory anticipation of the new edifice.

One in the morning was the hour of our embarkation from Brindisi. The voyage to Patras lasted twenty-eight hours. Our tall divine didn't enjoy it, that part of it, at least, which was spent in bed. He complained bitterly of the straitness of his sleeping accommodations. "These coffins," said he, "which they call berths, afford me but little comfort." He had recovered his cordial spirits by the time we were bowling along on a Grecian railroad, making our way from Patras to Corinth. We travelled at the rate of only fifteen miles an hour, it is true, but one does not feel like wanting to hurry when in Greece. Inspired by the prospect of delightful experiences in the Attic city, Dr. Talmage's spirits were exuberant, and he would not have been sorry to jump off the train and run alongside of it for exercise.

THE TIME OF CHRIST'S SECOND ADVENT.

To be Discovered from Prophecy in these Last Times, according to More than Twenty Expositors.

EVERY student of prophecy who attempts to understand the dates and periods given in the inspired Word for our instruction has been warned against proceeding with the study by reverent but mistaken Christians, who remind him of Christ's statement: "Of that day nor hour knoweth no man, not even the angels, neither the Son." That remark, however, was spoken in the present tense by Christ eighteen centuries ago with regard to that time only, and of course cannot apply to these latter days, for if so, it states that even now Christ does not know the day and the hour of His own Second Advent, which is incredible. Moreover, Daniel's dates were not then fulfilled, nor the Book of Revelation given. The prophecies were stated, in Daniel 12, to be sealed up until the present Time of the End, when "many shall search into them, and knowledge of them shall be increased, and the wise shall understand them." Christ also said, in Matthew 24: 33, "When ye shall see all these things," namely, the wars, rumors of wars, famines, pestilences, earthquakes, which He there predicted to be the future Signs of His Coming and of the End of the Age, "then know that it is near, even at the doors." This is the opinion of many learned Expositors, such as the Reverends Canon Birks, Dr. Cumming, Dr. Baylee, Dr. Duffield, Dr. Hales, John Fletcher, of Madeley, W. W. Pym, John Hooper, F. Fysh, H. Rile, T. Reader, T. Beverley, E. Murray, R. C. Shimeall, and Major Baker, Messrs. Granville Penn, J. Bayford, J. Bicheno, W. Houghton, the German Commentator Bengel, and others who maintain that the Time of Christ's Second Advent although hidden when Christ was on earth, is predicted to become revealed through the Scripture Prophecies at the Time of the End, a few years before the Second Advent. The Rev. Dr. John Brown, of Haddington, Scotland, in his Commentary on the Bible, published 110 years ago, in 1778, computed from Daniel's Dates that the End of this Nineteenth Century would probably be the epoch of the Second Coming of Christ, and the beginning of the Millennium. The Chronological Index containing this calculation was adopted in the Glasgow edition of the Rev. Matthew Henry's Commentary in 1808. The same conclusion as to the year 1900 to be the End of this Age, and the three and a half years from 1896 to 1900 to be the period of the future Great Antichrist's persecution, was proved from six Scripture Dates in a book published in Paris fifty years ago, in 1840, called Le Fin des Temps, par Pierre L.

A HOPEFUL PRISONER.

A GIRL welcomed a sentence of imprisonment in a New York police court on November 20. She was charged with stealing some articles of clothing from a boarding-house keeper, and pleaded guilty. The Recorder sentenced her to six months' imprisonment. The girl seemed penitent, but did not make any appeal for mercy. She admitted that she deserved her sentence, and said she hoped to gain a more precious freedom from it. She had become a slave to the morphine habit, and it was to get the money to buy morphine that she had stolen the clothing. In prison she would be compelled to abstain from the drug, and once delivered from its power she would never return to it. Her condition was analogous to that of the awakened sinner, who feels himself, not only guilty and deserving punishment, but in need of deliverance and cleansing. He finds both in Christ, who has suffered in his stead, and whose blood cleanses him, and redeems him from the power of sin. (Titus 3: 5.)

A CONVERTED CHINAMAN'S CHARITY.

AN incident related by Dr. Henry A. Stimson in the American Missionary may encourage the ladies who are laboring in Chinese Sunday-schools in our great cities. It proves that the Chinaman is capable of understanding and obeying Christ's teaching as to the duties of His followers to the poor and sick. Dr. Stimson says: "Not very long ago there came to my knowledge in St. Louis an ordinary Chinaman, comparatively a young man. He joined our church, and I knew he desired to be recognized as a Christian man. About a year before, he had been a member of a Sunday-school where ladies were teaching Chinese. Before that our newspapers had created great outcry about a case of leprosy in the city. This Chinaman appeared at my house in great trepidation. He had been two or three years in this country, and had been saving his money in order to go back and see his mother's face before she would die, and he hoped to be able to return to China in the following fall. He had learned that there was a Chinaman, unknown to him, lying ill, in a little laundry, of a disease of which nothing was known, without friends and without care. He took care of this man, leaving his own work for the purpose, and at length he came to me asking where he could get a physician to attend the patient. I gave him a note to one of the best physicians in my own church, who went at once and saw the man, and he, seeing it was a strange form of disease, went to a specialist of skin diseases, who had the man brought to a hospital in order to watch his disease. Rumors of this reaching the newspapers, the reporters thought it a good opportunity to make a story about leprosy, giving the number and street of an imaginary laundry in the heart of the city. Instantly the patronage of the Chinese laundries stopped. My Chinese friend was in the greatest distress about it, and particularly about me, lest I should think he had brought the contagious disease to my house. What was the result of the story? The Chinaman took care of his friend in the house and in the hospital, paying considerable for his care, and when he recovered sent him to San Francisco—in fact, spent about $180 on him, the whole sum he had saved to take himself home to his mother, and he did this for a man who was as utterly unknown to him as to you or me. He also came to me with a $10 bill to pay the doctor, saying it was not enough, but it was all the money he had, and he would add to it by and by."

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

TERMS AND INSTRUCTIONS.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

If a Postal Note or currency is sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending money of this kind, and not registering, do it at their own risk. Postage stamps should never be sent if it is possible to remit in any other way.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

Receipts are not sent; the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that the remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please notify us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Money should always accompany each order, and the order and remittance should be for the same amount. We keep no books for unpaid subscriptions, and cannot, therefore, enter any names without payment.

The Manager of "The Christian Herald" would esteem it a favor if subscribers who can conveniently send their renewals for 1890 at once would do so instead of waiting until January 1. Special facilities are made to handle the large influx of letters at the beginning of the year, but in the press of work there is necessarily a liability to delay and mistake. It would therefore be a convenience, and conduce to safety and accuracy, if subscribers would anticipate renewal by a few days.

CURRENT EVENTS.

One Step Toward Dealing with the Financial problem of the nation was taken on Thursday last by Congressman Brower, of North Carolina. He introduced a bill abolishing all taxes on cigars, cigarettes, and manufactured tobacco in any form, and repealing all laws restricting the production of the raw article. This bill, if it becomes a law, will reduce the revenue by $32,000,000. It is expected that all Republicans will vote for it, and that they will have the support of twenty-one Democrats. So far as it is a reduction of the revenue, and so far as it is a relief to a class of citizens engaged in production and trade, it is to be welcomed, but persons who have seen much of the suffering of the poor, and the difficulties they now have in providing necessities for their families, cannot but regret that the first effort to reduce revenue should have been to cheapen an article of luxury rather than an article of necessity.

The Necessity for a Reduction of the National income is sufficiently clear to any one who has examined the reports now submitted by the heads of departments. Those gentlemen in this, as in every other land, are in the habit of asking for the full amount that should be judiciously expended in their respective departments, and generally overestimating rather than underestimating the sum required. The total of their estimates this year amounts to $292,271,400. Yet according to the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, the revenue will be $385,000,000, or nearly $93,000,000 more than is needed. The object of collecting a sum so largely in excess of the need is, of course, to keep out foreign products and enable home producers and manufacturers to sell their goods at a higher rate than they could sell them at if foreigners competed with them on equal terms. The country endorsed that policy last year, so it cannot justly complain now. It is, however, the duty of Congress, in view of the facts, to direct its attention not so much to the work of devising means of spending that $93,000,000 as to devising means for allowing it to remain in the pockets of the people. It is also important to discriminate in this matter. It is the wealthy producers and manufacturers who derive the benefit from the high tariff; to the poor it is an additional burden, because it involves them in paying higher prices for their commodities. It is therefore only just that, in making changes in the revenue, those changes should be made which will most directly benefit the poor.

An Impressive Commemoration of the Centennial of the Inauguration of George Washington took place in Washington on December 11, when the President and his Cabinet, and both branches of Congress, assembled to listen to an oration by Chief-Justice Fuller. It was quite natural that the orator should be jubilant in contrasting our time with that of the father of his country, and in reviewing the progress made during the century. Every patriotic citizen gladly re-echoes his words. The Christian, however, who studies the times in the light of God's Word hesitates to accept the view of the eloquent judge as he turned his gaze from the past to the future. He said: "And so the new century may be entered upon in the spirit of optimism, the natural result perhaps of a self-confidence, which has lost nothing in substance by experience, though it has gained in the moderation of its impetuosity; yet an optimism essential to the accomplishment of great ends, not blind to perils, but bold in the fearlessness of a faith whose very consciousness of the limitations of the present asserts the attainability of the untravelled world of a still grander future." If progress in wealth and culture were a sure sign of moral and spiritual progress, the orator's optimism might be well founded. It is incontestable, however, that selfishness, avarice, dishonesty, scepticism, and disregard of God's will have increased in greater ratio than our wealth, and that fact does not encourage optimism. It is righteousness that exalts a nation.

A Distressing Fatality was Reported on December 10 from that much-afflicted town, Johnstown, Pa., which was the scene of the recent awful inundation. It occurred in the theatre, the only place of amusement in the town which the flood left standing. A cry of "Fire!" was raised while the house was crowded to witness the play. Instantly there was the wildest kind of panic. The aisles being crowded, the people in the seats saw that they had little chance of escaping but by fighting their way through. The doors were narrow and the stairs from the crowded galleries were tortuous, so that even in ordinary circumstances exit was slow. But when the panic came the audience went perfectly wild. Big men put all their strength out to force a passage, without regard to age or sex. Others jumped on the shoulders of those ahead of them, and leaped from point to point on the living way. Nine persons were thrown down and instantly trampled to death, and from seventy-five to eighty persons were seriously injured. After all, it was a false alarm; there was no fire.

The Ex-Emperor of Brazil Arrived in Lisbon on December 7. The Empress, the Princess Isabella, and her husband, the Comte d'Eu, accompanied him. The party were received with royal honors. As the Emperor did not abdicate, the Portuguese court regards him as still the rightful occupant of the Brazilian throne. The ex-Emperor refused to issue a manifesto, or in any way to intrigue for his restoration, though he appeared to have little faith in a Republic controlled by the men who are now at the head of affairs in Brazil. He said that if he were summoned back he should return. Describing his own experiences in the revolution, he said: "I received a telegram at the summer palace at Petropolis, announcing that the revolution had triumphed. Upon its receipt I went to Rio Janeiro and placed myself at the disposal of the revolutionary Government. The palace at Rio Janeiro was instantly encircled by troops, and ingress and egress were stopped. The siege lasted for thirty-two hours, during which time my family suffered much from want of food. We were then taken secretly, after midnight, between a double file of soldiers, from the palace to the arsenal, and placed on board a war-ship." The ex-Emperor has declined to accept the grant of money and the income voted him by the provisional Government.

An Imposing Funeral Ceremony Took Place in New Orleans on December 11 when the remains of Jefferson Davis were committed to the tomb. The obsequies had been postponed until that day to accommodate the enormous number of persons in all the Southern States who had signified their wish to attend. Mr. Davis was buried as a soldier, his body being borne on a caisson with military honors, and a large number of old Union soldiers were in the procession which accompanied it to the cemetery. Fully thirty thousand persons were there to witness or take part in the ceremony. The citizens of New Orleans draped their houses, and by their welcome of their many guests showed how deep was the sympathetic bond which united them in their common sorrow. No one thought that Mr. Davis had retained so completely the affection of the South as this demonstration shows him to have done. An excellent portrait of him appears on page 813.

A Plan for the Federation of the Australian colonies on the Canadian model has been formulated by Sir Henry Parkes, the Premier of New South Wales. The proposal is important because it is recognized by all parties as the beginning of a movement tending, by its unifying influence, to national independence. The scheme grew directly out of the proposition for the formation of an Australian army, but it aims especially to overcome many gross evils of misgovernment which seem inseparable from the present system. The first suggestions of the Premier are concerned with details, but an experience of those will, it is expected, lead to a general union. Sir Henry proposes to locate the Federal capital at Albury, a town on the borders of Victoria and New South Wales. He proposes, as the first tentative measures, the abolition of all border duties, and absolute free trade between the colonies, guaranteed, if necessary, by special intercolonial treaties, and a uniform marriage law to protect the family from the evils of divorce. There are now three million people in the seven colonies, each colony having a separate legislature, with power to regulate the tariff and govern its own affairs.

A Strange Disease, Originating in Asia, is travelling westward through Europe. It is now prevalent from Russia on the east, where even the Czar has been a victim, to France on the west. It is popularly known as contagious influenza. The symptoms begin with headache, an acute chill developing into a high fever lasting several days, and then a fortnight of great lassitude. Death intervenes only when pulmonary oedema is superadded in cases of weakness. The alarming feature about it is not the deaths, which are very few, but that its previous appearances, notably in 1837, have been followed by an outbreak of cholera. Medical journals declare that there is no connection between the two diseases, but the coincidence has been too close to be overlooked.

The Reports of the Condition of Emin Pasha during the week were more hopeful, though by no means sanguine. Dr. Parke, Mr. Stanley's physician, who is attending him, declares that he did not fracture his skull in his fall from the balcony, but that he received internal injuries, and was very severely bruised. His eye is rapidly recovering its normal condition. The unfavorable symptoms are the discharge from the ears, which continues to flow, and a distressing cough, which indicates pulmonary affection, and prevents the distinguished patient obtaining the rest he so sorely needs. Dr. Parke says that his condition, though undoubtedly critical, does not preclude hope if no complication occurs.

An Encouraging Report of Bishop Riley's work in Mexico was presented at the recent meeting of the Mexican League. The sum of $1,602.49 has been sent in contributions since May 1, 1889. Of that amount a considerable part came from friends who had heard of the work through this journal. Of course the total sum did not nearly cover expenses, but the encouragement of the gifts, and, still more, of the kind words of good-cheer and sympathy, was very valuable to the self-denying, devoted workers. They have also been encouraged by a statement made by the Rev. Mr. Gordon, who has been visiting Mexico in the interest of another branch of the work. He spoke of the clergy and evangelists under Bishop Riley's charge as working vigorously and earnestly on a mere pittance of salary, and admitted that he had experienced the difficulty which Bishop Riley's work is specially designed to remove—that of exciting national prejudice against a missionary movement. The report of the good that is resulting from this work should prompt American Christians to support it liberally, and furnish funds for its development and extension. It has a wide field rich in promise, but the laborers are few because there is not enough money to support more. That they must have outside support is obvious, because they labor among unbelievers, and their converts at present are from among the very poor. Contributions may be sent to Mr. J. P. Heath, 43 Bible House, New York.

Antipathy to the Public School System is a recent development of Mormonism. Gov. Thomas, in making his annual report, says that it is very plain that the Church has decided to take its place as an enemy of the public school system and the principles which are at its foundation. He recommends that Congress at once place the control of the public schools in the hands of those who are disposed to be friendly to the public school system. He also says that it is a mistake to infer from the elections, in which the Gentiles carried Salt Lake City and Ogden, that there is a Gentile majority in the Territory. The fact is that, outside the two cities named, there are but few Gentiles except those in the mining camps.

Dangerous Dead Electric Wires Were Reported as existing in large numbers last week in the down-town districts of New York. The report says that some of them are partially detached, and have been caught up and twisted around the poles to prevent their touching the heads of passers-by, while others hang in a tangle like a spider's web over the streets. A single point of contact of an electric-light wire with one of the wires in the mass, either close by or at a distance, would work disastrous results. The deadly current would instantly spread in a hundred directions, and nobody knows where it would stop. No doubt all the wires are abandoned and dead, but the city has learned that they are no less dangerous on that account. The demand is therefore made for their removal. A moral and spiritual danger analogous to this has often made itself manifest in human beings. Appetites and passions which have been overcome by an heroic struggle, and are supposed to be dead, are liable to start into new life under temptation or contact with old associations. There is no safety except in their extirpation through a new heart being given of God. (Jer. 24: 7.)

A Death-bed Marriage has Led to Unpleasant results in Jersey City, N. J. Last week a man was arrested there on a charge of bigamy and held for trial. The complaint of the wife narrated that she had married the man two years ago. She was at that time dangerously ill, and believed she was going to die. The physicians had pronounced her case hopeless, and one of them had told a member of the family that she could not live more than a day or two. Having been engaged for some time to be married, she wished the ceremony to take place before she died. Her lover was sent for, and, being acquainted with her wish, consented. The marriage was performed by a clergyman in her sick-room. To the surprise of every one she did not die, but gradually recovered, and finally was completely restored to health. She was, however, grieved to find that her husband did not manifest that joy in her recovery that might have been expected of him. Quarrels took place, in one of which he declared that he would not have married her if he had thought she was going to live. A few months later he deserted her, and she heard that he had married again, so she had him arrested. Her case is a sad one, for she seems to have been shamefully treated. It is the reverse of the experience which has often caused sorrow to clergymen and Christian workers. In those cases the apparently dying one, who has been anxious to enter into union with Christ while in fear of death, has been the one to desert when health and strength unexpectedly returned. (Ps. 78: 34-37.)

A Corpse as Driver of a Cab Caused Some trouble in New York on December 9. A business man engaged a cabman that afternoon to drive him to his residence in the upper part of Fifth Avenue. For some distance all went well, but after a time the passenger thought the driver was somewhat reckless. The horse was going at a good pace, but the driver seemed to be paying no attention to him. There were several narrow escapes from collision with other vehicles, but the driver sat motionless on his box with the reins in his hand, appearing to care nothing. At length the passenger became alarmed and called to him, but received no answer. He was just meditating jumping from the cab when he was seen by a policeman, who ran into the roadway and stopped the horse. It was then found that the driver was dead of heart disease, and must have been dead for fully twenty minutes. The passenger had reason for thankfulness that he escaped injury during that perilous ride. Many persons, however, make the journey of life under similar circumstances. Though the living God is willing to be their guide, they choose to govern their own way, though they are spiritually dead. (Jer. 10: 23.)

A Glass of Wine that Cost $60,000 is Among the traditions of the New York Stock Exchange. A reporter who heard a broker refuse with great emphasis an invitation to drink recently, asked his reason for doing so. In reply the broker said that he had learned a lesson from the example of a friend. The friend was interested in a large transaction in stocks, the result of which did not appear to be likely to be reached for several days at least. He went out with an acquaintance to get some lunch, and drank one glass of sherry. He had intended to go directly to the Exchange floor, but the taste of that glass of sherry still lingering in his mouth, he thought he would drop in and have another. He was in no hurry to leave, and from one glass of sherry it went to a number, and 4 o'clock had arrived before the broker returned to thoughts of business. When he returned to his office he took up the tape, and, to his horror, found that the stock in which he had been dealing had gone down five points, completely wiping out his margin. The decline had been gradual, and, had he gone on the Exchange floor when he started to go, he could have got off with small loss. As it was, he lost $60,000, and left the street that night a ruined man. That, after all, was but financial ruin. Not a few have gone to eternal ruin by the same path. Though occasional intoxication is regarded as a venial sin, the apostle declares that no drunkard will inherit the kingdom of God. (1 Cor. 6: 10.)

A Quarrel of Twenty-five Years' Standing ended in a marriage at Red Bank, N. J., recently. A press dispatch from that town on December 11 reports that a wedding had taken place there under romantic circumstances. Last summer the postmaster at Navesink received a letter from Joliet, Ill., inquiring if a lady, whose name the writer gave, was still living there. He sent a reply in the affirmative, and a few weeks later the writer of the letter, a gentleman about fifty years old, appeared in person. He visited the lady, and after his departure she announced that she was to be married before Christmas. Being pressed for an explanation of so sudden an arrangement, she said that she had been engaged to him before. It was in the war-time that they first met. In 1864 the gentleman secured an appointment in Washington, and being then able to keep a wife, he wrote her, asking her, as he was unable to leave even for a day, to come there and be married. The lady thought that way of proceeding undignified, and beside, in the disturbed condition of the country, she objected to the journey. She did not intend to reject her lover, but he thought she could not love him much or she would have acceded to his proposal, and he did not answer her letter. Both were too proud to make any advances, and they never saw each other or wrote until this year under the circumstances above described. They must surely regret, if the marriage proves a happy one, that so many years of happiness have been lost to them through their pride. It is often so with people converted late in life. Their joy in union with Christ is alloyed with regret that the best part of their lives has been wasted, because in their youth they would not sacrifice some cherished idol or sin which stood in their way of accepting Him. (Joel 2: 25.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Prophetic discourses were delivered by the Rev. M. Baxter Dec. 1 and 2 in the Corn Exchange, York, Eng. Dr. George F. Pentecost's meetings in Dundee, Scotland, have been greatly blessed. He went there after concluding the wonderful work at Coatbridge.

Mr. and Mrs. George Muller, of the Bristol Orphanages, are still travelling in India. They were at Simla at latest reports, and were about to visit Ayra. Both are in excellent health.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, formerly of Philadelphia, preached for Pastor C. H. Spurgeon on December 1 in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London. He has since been holding meetings on Foreign Missions in Edinburgh.

Bishop William Taylor's many friends will be glad to learn that there is no truth in the extensively circulated report that he is in a critical state of health, and not expected to live. He has had a sharp attack of bronchitis, but is now recovered.

Major George A. Hilton has been doing a very successful work at Los Angeles, Cal. Meetings were held for eight days, and the interest grew daily. Many rose to request the prayers of God's people, and the inquiry room was the scene of many wonderful conversions.

Sunday, November 3, was a day of prayer for rain throughout South Africa. At Johannesburg the services were hardly over when a thunderstorm passed over that place, and rain came down in floods. The whole afternoon and evening copious rain and hail fell in succession.

Rev. E. W. Oakes, of Manchester, N. H., has accepted an invitation to spend a few months in evangelistic work in England. He will visit the Mission Stations of the Gospel Union, of which Rev. M. Baxter and Mrs. Baxter are Presidents, and in which over a hundred evangelists are engaged.

Mr. E. P. Telford, who has been laboring with success at Gloversville, N. Y., expects to commence work in Boston, Mass., shortly, and to continue there through the month of January. Rev. C. W. Rowley, the Methodist pastor at Gloversville, writes us, heartily commending Mr. Telford's work in his church.

A Christmas appeal on behalf of the Children's Aid Society, of New York, has been issued by the Secretary, Mr. C. L. Brace. This society has now six lodging houses in different parts of the city, and has had over 38,853 homeless children under its charge during the year. Gifts of clothing and provisions may be sent to 24 St. Mark's Place, New York. Cheques and P. O. orders to Mr. George S. Coe, American Exchange National Bank, 428 Broadway, New York.

Rev. Charles Herald, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal recently, was solemnly ordained, and set apart for the work of the ministry in Brooklyn, N. Y., on December 4. Mr. Herald commenced a gospel work in connection with Dr. A. J. F. Behrends' church a short time ago in a neglected district of Brooklyn. There are now 185 in the membership, and it has a Sunday-school of 1,298 children. Dr. R. R. Meredith and Dr. Lyman Abbott took part in the ordination service.

A convention of the Boston Branch of the Christian Alliance was held in Boston, Mass., December 10-12. The gathering was characterized by the realized presence of the Holy Spirit, and all present felt it to be a time of great spiritual blessing. Rev. A. B. Simpson, of New York, the President of the Alliance presided, and among the speakers were Dr. A. J. Gordon, Dr. Peck, and F. L. Chapell of Boston, Dr. Hart, and Rev. H. McBride, of New York, and Rev. E. W. Oakes, of Manchester, N. H.

THE PREACHER'S BURDEN.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"The burden of the word of the Lord." Malachi 1:1.

Clerical Cripples—A Warning From Jonah—A Missionary Shrivelled—Why the Message is a Burden—I. Because It is the Word of the Lord—A Burden in Its Reception—In Its Delivery—In After Consideration—II. Because of What It is—The Rebuke of Sin—A Lord's Complaint of a Puritan Preacher—III. Because of the Consequences—What They Lose Who Reject It—A Reminiscence of a Village Service—IV. Because of the Way It is Treated—A Shipbuilder Among Whitefield's Hearers—Preaching Three Sermons in One Night—V. Because He Must Give Account—How the Burden is Made Heavier.

THE prophets of old were no triflers. They did not run about as idle tellers of tales, but they carried a burden. Those who at this time speak in the name of the Lord, if they are indeed sent of God, dare not sport with their ministry or play with their message. They have a burden to bear—"The burden of the word of the Lord;" and this burden puts it out of their power to indulge in levity of life. I am often astounded at the way in which some who profess to be the servants of God make light of their work: they jest about their sermons as if they were so many comedies or farces. I read of one who said, "I got on very well for a year or two in my pulpit, for my great-uncle had left me a large store of manuscripts, which I read to my congregation." The Lord have mercy on his guilty soul! Did the Lord send him a sacred call to bring to light his uncle's Mouldy Manuscripts?

Something less than a divine call might have achieved that purpose. Another is able to get on well with his preaching because he pays so much a quarter to a bookseller, and is regularly supplied with manuscript sermons. They cost more or less according to the space within which they will not be sold to another clerical cripple. I have seen the things, and have felt sick at the sorry spectacle. What must God think of such prophets as these?

Yet, do not let me be misunderstood at the beginning. God's true servants, who are burdened with His word, right willingly and cheerfully carry that burden. We would not be without it for all the world. Sometimes, do you know, we get tempted, when things do not go right, to run away from it; but we view it as not to be tolerated for an hour. When some of you do not behave yourselves, and matters in our church get a little out of order, I say to myself, "I wish I could give this up, and turn to an employment less responsible, and less wearing to the heart;" but then I think of Jonah, and what happened to him when he ran away to Tarshish; and I remember that whales are scarcer now than they were then, and I do not feel inclined to run that risk. I stick to my business, and keep to the message of my God; for one might not be brought so land quite so safely as the runaway prophet was. I had sooner be a preacher of the gospel than a possessor of the Indies. Remember how William Carey, speaking of one of his sons says, "Poor Felix is shrivelled from a missionary to an ambassador." He was a missionary once, and he was employed by the Government as an ambassador; his father thought it no promotion, but said, "Felix has shrivelled into an ambassador." It would be a descent indeed from bearing the burden of the Lord, if one were to be transformed into a member of Parliament, or a prime minister, or a king. We bear a burden, but we should be sorry indeed not to bear it.

A Temptation

I. And why is the word of the Lord a burden to him that speaketh it? Well, first, it is a burden because it is the Word of the Lord. If what we preach is only of man, we may preach as we like, and there is no burden about it; but if this Book be inspired—if Jehovah be the only God, if Jesus Christ be God incarnate, if there be no salvation save through His precious blood—then there is a great solemnity about that which a minister of Christ is called upon to preach. It hence becomes a weighty matter with him. Modern thought is a trifle light as air; but ancient truth is more weighty than gold.

And, first, the word of the Lord becomes

A Burden in the Reception of it.

I do not think that any man can ever preach the gospel aright until he has had it borne into his own soul with overwhelming energy. You cannot preach conviction of sin unless you have suffered it. You cannot preach repentance unless you have practiced it. You cannot preach faith unless you have exercised it. You may talk about these things, but there will be no power in the talk unless what is said has been experimentally proved in your own soul. It is easy to tell when a man speaks what he has made his own, or when he deals in a second-hand experience. "Son of man, eat this roll:" you must eat it before you can hand it out to others. True preaching is Artesian: it wells up from the great depths of the soul. If Christ has not made a well within us, there will be no outflow from us.

The Word of God is a burden in the delivery of it. Do you think it an easy thing to stand before the people and deliver a message which you believe you have Received From God?

If you so imagine, I wish you would try it. He that finds it easy work to preach, will find it hard work to give an account of his preaching at the last great day. One has carefully to look around, and think, while he is preaching, "I must mind that I do not put this truth in such a way as to exaggerate it into a falsehood. I must not so encourage the weak that I dwarf the strong; nor so commend the strong as to grieve the weak. I must not so preach the grace of God as to give latitude to sin; I must not so denounce sin as to drive men to despair." Our path is often narrow as a razor's edge, and we keep on crying in our spirit, while we are speaking, "Lord, direct me! Lord, help me to deal wisely for Thee with all these souls!"

When we have preached, the gospel becomes a burden in after consideration. "Well, now, it is all done," says one. Is it? Is it all done? You, dear teacher, when you have taught your class to-day, have you done with your children? You have thought of them upon the Sabbath, will there be no care for them all the week? If your soul is toward your children, or your congregation as it ought to be, you will bear them always on your heart. They will never be far away from you.

II. I pass to a second point. It is not only a burden because it is so solemnly the Word of the Lord, and therefore weighty and overwhelming; but next, because of what it is. What is it that the true servant of God has to bear and to preach? Well, first,

It is the Rebuke of Sin.

I have heard of hirelings who preach, but never think of rebuking sin. If a man bears the burden of the Word of the Lord, he speaks most to his people upon the evil of which they are most guilty. Somebody once said to me, "Sir, you were very personal." I answered, "Sir, I tried to be. Do not think that I am going to apologize for it. If I knew anything that would come home to your heart and conscience concerning sin, I would be sure to say that—just that very thing." "And what if I should be offended?" "Well, I should be very sorry that you refused reproof, and should feel all the more sure that it was my duty to be very faithful with you. If, after much love and prayer, you refused the word, I could do no more; but I certainly should not speak with bated breath to please you; and you would despise me if I did."

I remember one in Oliver Cromwell's day who complained to a preacher. He said, "The squire of the parish is very much offended by some remarks you made last Sabbath day about profane swearing." "Well," said the Puritan preacher, "is the squire in the habit of swearing?" It was admitted that he was, and that he therefore thought himself pointed out by the minister. The Puritan replied to the complaining tenant, "If your lord offends my Lord, I shall not fail to rebuke him for it; and if he is offended, let him be offended." So must every true preacher be careless of man's esteem, and speak faithfully; but this is a burden to one of a tender spirit.

And, next, the Word of the Lord gives a rebuff to human pride. The doctrines of the gospel seem shaped on purpose, among other objects, to bring into contempt all human glory. Here is a man who is morally of a fine and noble nature, but we tell him that he is born in sin, and shapen in iniquity: this is

A Stern Duty.

Here is a man of a grand righteous character in his own opinion, and we tell him that his righteousness is filthy rags: he will not smile on us for this. Here is a man that can go to heaven by his own efforts, so he thinks, and we tell him that he can do nothing of the sort—that he is dead in trespasses and sins: this will bring us no honor from him. He hopes that, by strong resolves, he may change his own nature and make himself all that God would have him; but we tell him that his resolutions are so much empty wind, and will end in nothing: this is likely to earn us his hate.

And then the true preacher has to come into contact with the vanity of human intellect. We ask of man, "Canst thou by searching find out God?" Thou sayest, "I know." What knowest thou, poor, blind worm?" Thou sayest, "I am a judge, and I can discern." What canst thou discern, thou that art in the dark, and alienated from God by thy wicked works? The things of God are hidden from the wise and prudent, but revealed unto babes; and the wise and prudent are indignant at this act revealed of divine sovereignty. He whom God sends cares nothing at all about human wisdom, so as to fawn upon it and flatter it; for He knows that "the world by wisdom knew not God;" and that human wisdom is only another name for human folly. All the savants and the philosophers are simply those who make themselves to be wise, but are not so. Yet to face false science with "the foolishness of preaching," and to set up the cross in the teeth of learned self-sufficiency, is a burden on the Lord.

III. Now, dear friends, I have in the third place to say, that it is a burden, not only because it is the Word of the Lord, and because of what it is, but because of

The Consequences of our Bearing it to you. Suppose that we do not preach the gospel, and warn the wicked man, so that he turn not from his iniquity, what then? Hear this voice: "He shall perish, but his blood will I require at thine hand." What will my Lord say to me if I am unfaithful to you? "Where is the blood of those people who gathered at Newington Butts? Where is the blood of that crowd which came together to hear you speak, and you did not preach the gospel to them?" Oh, it were better for me that I had never been born than that I should not preach the gospel! I look along these pews, and I remember some of you a good many years ago; you were then in a hopeful state, but you have not received Christ yet. Most faithful hearers you have been, but you have not been doers of the Word. Do not think that I charge you too severely. Have you repented and believed? If not, woe is me that I should bear to you a message which will be a savor of death unto death unto you because you refuse it; for how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?

And then it becomes a great burden to me to preach the gospel when I think of what those lose who will not have it. May no one of us miss eternal felicity! May no one of us fall into eternal misery! But here lies the burden of the Lord—in the consequences of our ministry. I recollect walking out to preach nigh unto forty years ago, just when I began my witnessing for the Lord Jesus. As I trudged along with a somewhat older brother, who was going to preach at another village station, our talk was about our work, and he said to me, "Does it not strike you as a very solemn thing that we are going to do the Lord's work, and much may depend even upon the very hymns we give out, and the way in which we read them?" I thought of that, and I prayed—and often do pray—that I may have the right hymn, and the right chapter, as well as the right sermon. Well do I remember a great sinner coming into Exeter Hall, and I read the hymn beginning, "Jesus, lover of my soul," and that first line pierced him in the heart. He said to himself, "Does Jesus love my soul?" He wept, because he had not loved the Saviour in return; and he was brought to the Saviour's feet just by that one line of a hymn. It does make it the burden of the Lord when you see life, death, and hell, and worlds to come, hanging, as it were, upon the breath of a mortal man, by whom God speaks to the souls of his fellows. This is serious burden-bearing. At least I find it more and more so the longer I am engaged in it.

Two Local Preachers

IV. But I pass on to notice one thing more now. It is often the burden of the Lord because of the way in which men treat the Word of God. Upon this I will be very brief.

Some Trifle With It.

I was reading last night an account of how people are said to behave who go to church. It was written by a canon. I dare say he knows. Certainly, some people who go to Nonconformist places are as bad. And the writer goes on to say that a large proportion of our people go off at a tangent while we are talking, and their minds are thinking about something else. I hope that it is not quite true of you. A man once went to hear Mr. Whitefield. He was a shipbuilder, and he said, "Oh, that man! I never heard such a preacher as that before. When I have been to other places, I have built a ship from stem to stern—laid the keel, and put the mast in, and finished it all up while the parson has been preaching; but this time I was not able to lay a timber. He took me right away." This pre-occupation of human minds makes it such a burden when we are in earnest to reach the heart and win the soul.

Alas! there are some others that hear to ridicule. They pick out some mannerism, or mistake, or something outré about the speaker's language, and they carry this home, and report it as raw material for fun. The preacher is in anguish to save a soul, and they are thinking about how he pronounces a word. Here is a man endeavoring to pluck sinners from the eternal burnings, and these very sinners are all the while thinking about how he moves his legs, or how he lifts his hand, or how he pronounces a certain syllable. Oh, it is sickening work—soul-sickening work! It is the "burden of the word of the Lord," when our life or death message is received in that way. But when it is received rightly, then are we in the seventh heaven! Oh, well do I remember preaching one after the other; and I think that I could have preached thirty, if time had held out. It was in a Welsh village, where I had gone into the chapel, and simply meant to expound the Scripture, while another brother preached. He preached in Welsh, and when it was done, the question was put whether Mr. Spurgeon would not preach. I had not come prepared, but I did preach, and there was a melting time; and then we sang a hymn. The sound seemed to make the shingles dance. When I had done, we asked those who were impressed to stop. They all stopped, and so I had to preach again; and a second time they all stopped, and I had to preach again. It got on to past 11 o'clock before they went away. Eighty-one came forward and joined the churches afterward. It was but a few months before the terrible accident at Risca, and many of those converted that night perished in the pit. God had sent His Spirit on that glorious night to save them, that they might be ready when He should call them home.

Three Sermons in One Night,

V. And now I must not detain you; but I want to say, in the fifth place, the word of the the Lord is the greatest burden to the true teacher's heart, because he remembers that he Will Have to Give Account.

They are all down, those fifty-two Sabbaths; and those week-night opportunities, they are all down in the heavenly record, and the writing will be forthcoming when required. There will come a time when it will be said, "Preacher, give an account of your stewardship;" and at the same time a voice will be heard, "Hearers, give an account of your stewardship, too."

I have only these two or three practical words to say: Since it is a burden in itself, I ask you not to make it any heavier. Do not make it intolerable. Some add to it greatly and wantonly. Who are these? Well, I will tell you. Inconsistent professors. When people point to such and such a member of the Church, and say, "That is your Christian!" this makes our burden doubly oppressive. What a spoil it is to our testimony for Christ when outsiders can point to one and another, and say, "That is how those Christians act!" Do not plunge us in this sorrow. I do not know why I should be blamed for all the offences of everybody that comes to hear me. Yet the preacher of God's truth is held responsible by many for matters over which he has no power; and this injustice makes his burden heavy.

And next, do not make our burden heavier by your silence. There was a man of God who had been a very distinguished preacher, and when he lay dying he was much troubled in his mind. He had been greatly admired, and much followed. He was a fine preacher of the classical sort, and one said to him, "Well, my dear sir, you must look back upon your ministry with great comfort." "Oh, dear!" said he, "I cannot; I cannot. If I knew that even one soul had been led to Christ, and eternal life by my preaching, I should feel far happier; but I have never heard of one." What

A Sad Thing for a Dying Preacher!

He died, and was buried, and there was a goodly company of people at the grave, for he was highly respected, and deservedly so. One who heard him make that statement was standing at the grave, and he noticed a gentleman in mourning, looking into the tomb, and sobbing with deep emotion. He said to him, "Did you know this gentleman who has been buried?" He replied, "I never spoke to him in my life." "Then what is it that so affects you?" He said, "Sir, I owe my eternal salvation to him." He had never told the minister this cheering news, and the good man's death-bed was rendered dark by the silence of a soul that he had blessed. This was not right. A great many more may have found the Lord by his means, but he did not know of them, and was therefore in sore trouble. Do tell us when God blesses our word to you.

Do you not think that you add to my burden, too, if you do not aid me in the Lord's work? What a lot of idle Christians we have—Christians who might sing, like mendicants in the street,

"And got no work to do,
And got no work to do!"

What a shameful chorus, when the world is dying for lack of true workers! There is a Sunday-school; do you know it? "Oh, yes, we know there is one of those excellent institutions" connected with our place of worship. Did you ever visit it? Have you ever helped in it? There is an Evangelists' Society, and young men go out to preach. "Oh, dear!" say you, "I never thought of that." Why do you not go out to preach yourself? Some of you could, if you would. I speak to some who do nothing whatever, unless it be a little grumbling. I have but little to complain of among my people; but still, as there is a lazy corner in every village, there is the same in this community. You increase the burden of those who do work, if you are not working with them.

But the greatest increase of the burden comes from those who do not receive the gospel at all. May there not be one such here now, but may everyone now look to Jesus and live! I shall close by asking you to sing the gospel. Oh, that you may have it in your hearts! The final closing word is this—

"There is life in a look at the Crucified One;
There is life at this moment for thee;
Then look, sinner—look unto Him, and be saved—
Unto Him who was nail'd to the tree."

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Crystallizing Days.*

ECCLESIASTICAL divisions were at first as strong as civil diversities. The New England colonies were Congregational, and these churches were established and supported by law, except in Rhode Island, where the Baptists were numerically superior. In the royal colonies generally there was a steady disposition to establish the Church of England, and it was more or less successful. In language there were striking dissimilarities, due to a most heterogeneous immigration. It was said that every language in Europe could be found in the colony of Pennsylvania. But, after all, this diversity had no indications of persistence, the immigration in each case had been too small to support itself. Very little of the wonderful increase of American population between 1607 and 1750 was due to immigration, most of it had come from natural increase. After the first outflow from Old to New England in 1630-1, emigration was checked at first by the changing circumstances of the struggle between the people and the king, and, when the struggle was over, by the better-known difficulties of life in the colonies. Franklin, in 1751, when he estimated that there were "near a million English souls in the colonies," thought that scarce eighty thousand had been brought over by sea. No matter how diverse the small immigration might have been on its arrival, there was a steady pressure on its descendants to turn them into Englishmen; and it was very successful. When Whitefield, the revivalist, visited America, about 1740, he found the population sufficiently homogeneous for his preaching to take effect all the way from Georgia to New England. The same tendency shows itself in the complete freedom of intercolonial migration. Men went from one colony to another, or held estates, or took inheritances in different colonies, without the slightest notion that they were under any essentially diverse political conditions. The whole coast, from Nova Scotia to the Spanish possessions in Florida, was one in all essential circumstances: and there was only the need of some sudden shock to crystallize it into a real political unity. Hardly anything in history is more impressive than this mustering of Englishmen on the Atlantic coast of North America, their organization of natural and simple governments, and their preparations for the final march of three thousand miles westward, unless it be the utter ignorance of the home government and people that any such process was going on.

Colonial Hardships.

The hardships of colonial life were the special lot of the new England colonist. For some reason—perhaps because the forests retained the snow on the ground—the New England winters were more severe than they are now. The rudely built house, with its enormous chimney, attracting draughts of outer air from every point, was a poor protection against the cold. Travel, difficult enough at the best, became impossible in winter, unless the snow rose so high as to blot out the roads and permit the traveller to drive his sledge across country. Medical and surgical attendance was scarce in summer, and hardly

* From The United States: Its History and Constitution. By Professor Alexander Johnston, of Princeton College. A scholarly, well-arranged work, presenting in one small volume a complete history of the country from early colonization days down to the year 1887. Its treatment of political and constitutional subjects is lucid masterly, and comprehensive. The lamented author excelled all historians of this and other countries in terse, decisive, compact statement, and this production was his most brilliant achievement. The general reader will find it a volume of absorbing interest, while to the student needing a book of reference it will be invaluable. Pp. 280; price $1. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

Mr. Stephen Burrowes, of Naples, Italy.

Mr. Rainey Reads the Anonymous Letter.

dreamed of in winter. The religious feeling of the people was against amusements of all kinds, except going to funerals, an occasional dinner, and the restricted enjoyments of courtship. It was a point of honor or religious feeling to exclude luxury from church equipment: stoves were not known in Connecticut churches until the beginning of this century, and yet new-born infants were taken to church for baptism in the bitterest weather. An extract from a New England diary of 1716 will give some notion of social circumstances at that comparatively late period: "Lord's Day, January 15. An extraordinary cold storm of wind and snow. Blows much as coming home at noon, and so holds on. Bread was frozen at the Lord's table; Mr. Pemberton administered. Came not out to afternoon exercise. Though 'twas so cold, yet John Tuckerman was baptized. At six o'clock my ink freezes so that I can hardly write by a good fire in my wife's chamber. Yet was very comfortable at meeting. Laus Deo."

MR. STEPHEN BURROWES.

(See portrait.)

A LADY who visited Italy recently, and made a short stay at Naples, was driving with a friend late one evening on the seaward side of the town. Her friend had to make a call of a few minutes' duration and asked the lady to wait. She drew up in a retired corner of the street, and sat quietly waiting. She noticed a building almost opposite to her on which there was an inscription announcing that the place was a Sailors' Rest. Presently the door opened, and a crowd of seafaring men streamed out. There were plenty of saloons, variety theatres, and disreputable resorts around, and she expected to see the sailors soon absorbed by them. To her astonishment not one man entered or even hesitated as he passed them. They walked right on with steady step in the various directions, as if the temptation had no attraction for them. She was curious to inquire what influence there could be about the institution to so arm against vice a class commonly supposed to be peculiarly susceptible to vicious influence.

This is what she learned. Six years ago a seaman named Stephen Burrowes arrived in Naples, and quietly opened the place for the reception of sailors. He was an Irishman, fifty-one years of age, who had served in the British Royal Navy. He was a total abstainer and a decided Christian, and he had a wife who was kind-hearted and gentle. Together they had made the sailors who arrived in the port of Naples welcome. Mr. Burrowes visited the ships in port and invited the sailors to the Rest. There were newspapers to read, writing materials for those who needed them, a cheerful, clean room at their service, friendly advice, and medical attention for any in need of either, and a Bible reading every night. The Rest soon became a recognized institution, more and more the resort of the crews, and its influence was noticed and appreciated by the captains and ship-owners. Mr. Burrowes has recently established a library from which sailors can have books to take with them on their voyages. Many instances of conversion have been reported from the mission, and much moral good has been effected.

THREE LITTLE BREAD-WINNERS.

In a communication from Dr. T. J. Barnardo, the friend and helper of neglected children, he mentions the following pathetic incident: Passing through a London back street, a helper of mine observed three children standing by the curb singing something which struck his ear as the most doleful ditty he had ever listened to. On closer investigation he discovered that the words were those of a hymn, full of joy and gladness, yet which were drawled out in such a manner as to change their character. It was soon found that the three children were the sole bread-winners of the family, consisting of themselves and a poor mother, who lay in a bare room without fire or food of any sort whatever, sick unto death, in a narrow lane in the East End of London. And yet the eldest of the family was a girl of not more than eleven, while the second was a boy of only nine. The three children had picked up in Sunday-school the words and tune of the hymn they sang, and finding there was no one to help their mother, who was so ill, and no food for themselves, the two mites went forth, carrying the smaller child by turns, and monotonously, day by day, sang their two or three verses over and over again until they were hoarse and weary, but none the less picking up in the street, from the pity of the poor among whom they wandered, a few coins, which sufficed to keep the wolf of famine from the door. I was glad, when the case was brought to my knowledge, to do all I could do for mother and children, and especially to lift the latter right out of their misery and wretchedness.

THE ANONYMOUS LETTER.

(See illustration on this page.)

TWO men were sitting in the bay-window of a well-furnished room, waiting for breakfast, preparations for which had been made on a table behind them. One of them, Mr. Rainey, was a man verging on fifty years, but still with all the vigor and energy which he had at thirty. The other, Mr. Tatham, was a young man only just past his majority.

"I want you to accept a trust, Hervest," said the elder of the two. "When I consented to your engagement to Rosa, I made up my mind that you were worthy of it, and my rule in dealing with a friend is that of Tennyson, 'Trust him all in all, or not at all.' So I invited you here to give you the whole facts. I will give you the outline now and the details to-morrow. I want you, if I should die soon, to be a real brother to my children. Since my wife died I have been concerned about how the little fortune I have saved for them could be securely placed for their benefit, and, if you are willing, I shall leave it in your hands and trust you to administer it. I have temporarily deposited the whole sum that is not in my business in the Equity Bank. Now to-morrow we will decide how best to invest it permanently. I want to have your concurrence on that point, so that if you have to administer, you may not feel called upon to change the investments. That is the trust in outline, and before your visit terminates we will get its details filled in."

The entrance of Rosa and her two sisters with a bright little boy, the youngest and the pet of the family, interrupted the conversation at this point, and Mr. Rainey rose and, taking the family Bible, sat down to morning prayer. It was the custom in the family for each member to recite a passage of Scripture as the opening of the exercise, and Mr. Rainey commenced with the words, "He shall not be afraid of evil tidings: his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord." (Ps. 112: 7.) Prayer over, the family gathered around the breakfast-table. While the meal was in progress, the letter-carrier's whistle was heard at a little distance, growing more distinct as he called at the nearer houses.

"That sound affects people very variously," remarked young Tatham. "It is always a welcome one to me, but I have seen men tremble when they heard it. I know one man who makes a point of getting breakfast over first, because among his letters there is nearly always one or more threatening him with bankruptcy. That passage you gave us just now, sir, reminded me of him. He is very much afraid of evil tidings."

"Perhaps he has not attended to the latter clause," said Mr. Rainey; "a man may well be afraid if he is not trusting in the Lord."

"Oh, I think he does; but he is not a good business man. Everything he touches seems to wither. He is what worldly people call an unlucky man. Yet I think he is a true Christian."

"Ah! that is a very sad condition, because a true Christian in danger of business failure always dreads the reproach that his failure may bring on the name of Christ, in addition to the painful consequences to himself."

Mr. Rainey's letters were brought in, and laid on the table, near him. He turned them over, recognizing from the writing on the envelopes the various writers. One, bearing a Canadian post-mark, was in an unfamiliar hand. That he opened, and glanced rapidly over its contents. A deep groan broke from his lips, and he rose from the table and turned away with a face of deadly pallor. Rosa was at his side in a moment with her hand on his shoulder.

"Dear papa, what is the matter?" she asked, anxiously.

Mr. Rainey held the letter so that she could read it. "A Well-wisher," it ran, "warns Mr. Rainey that the Equity Bank is in difficulties. It is probably too late to withdraw his deposit, but if the doors of the bank should be open after he receives this warning, he is advised to lose no time in securing his money."

"Can I be of any service?" asked young Tatham, coming around to Mr. Rainey's side.

Mr. Rainey handed him the letter, saying, "After what I told you just now, you can understand what this means to me."

"Yes, yes, it is terrible, but I can scarcely believe it true. The Equity is a pretty firmly established institution."

"The best I know," said Mr. Rainey; "I saw the examiner's report lately. If they are in trouble there has been foul play somewhere. It is not the cashier; I know him well, and he is true as steel. I will go over at once. Will you come with me, Hervest? I may be the better for having a cool young head at my side."

"Certainly," said Tatham. "Do not be distressed, sir. Remember, 'His heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord.'"

On arriving at the bank they found a crowd around the doors waiting for the opening. Mr. Rainey's heart sank as he saw that other depositors had taken the alarm. His anxiety would not allow him to wait in the throng, so he and his companion went around the block to the house where the cashier lived. They found that official in a state of perturbation.

"I am glad to see you, Mr. Rainey," he said. "We need friends to-day, and I hope I can count upon you. There is going to be a run on the bank, and we shall have some trouble. I need not tell you that no bank keeps funds on hand to pay all its depositors at once. If we did not reinvest the deposits left with us we could not pay interest or dividend. We keep sufficient to meet the ordinary call, and a margin over, but if every customer asks for the whole amount standing to his credit, we shall simply have to suspend payment while we realize our securities. An enemy of the bank—we know who he is; a discharged clerk now in hiding in Canada—has scared our depositors, and there is to be a run on us. Now we want our friends to stand by us, and if they will do so the danger will be over in a few hours. You came, I dare say, to write a cheque for your whole deposit. Now I ask you not to do it, and I pledge you my word all will be well."

Mr. Rainey was silent for a moment. It was a serious decision he had to make. The provision for his children's future was at stake. He turned and looked at young Tatham, and read on his face the advice he would give. Then he said to the cashier, "You are a Christian man, Seymour, let us pray about it." The three knelt in prayer for a few minutes, and when they rose, Mr. Rainey said, "I have decided, Seymour; I am going to trust you, as you ask, and I will do more. Tell me the names of your heaviest depositors, and I will go and see such as I know, and do my best to allay the panic."

The Late Jefferson Davis. (See page 805.)

A few minutes later he was on his way, and by his appeals, and still more by his example, was enabled to restore confidence. Returning to the bank an hour or two later, they found the crowd dispersed, and the business going on as quietly as usual. "Let us thank God for the escape," said the cashier, when they entered his room, "and tell me why you served us so well."

"It is soon told," said Mr. Rainey, as they rose from their knees. "I confess I was shaken when I received that letter, but the contagion of panic does not carry a man helplessly away when 'his heart is fixed, trusting in the Lord.'"

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continue from page 798.)

Left to Themselves.

THE plot of ground was divided by lot among the immigrants, and each party set to the task of providing a shelter and a home in the wilderness for their little circle. Their houses were built in two rows, for greater convenience and safety, and although these primitive log huts have long since been displaced by the superior mansions of successive generations, the local historian still delights to point to the old thoroughfare of Leyden Street, as the avenue first rescued by the Fathers of New England from the primeval forest. But such operations were necessarily difficult and slow, amid the storms of winter, and the wasting fever of slow consumption which already preyed on many of that devoted band. Sometimes for days together nothing could be done. Brief glimpses of sunshine, between showers of sleet and protracted snowstorms, were the only opportunities the builders had for their important task.

Occasionally the painful monotony of such difficulties is relieved only by a change of sufferings. A party sent to gather thatch lose their way in the forest, and are forced to pass the night on the bare ground, amid frost and snow—destitute alike of food and shelter; or an invalid, wandering a little way from the rising settlement, is beset by hungry wolves, and narrowly escapes to bear home the tidings of such dangerous neighbors at hand. The house set apart as a shelter for the sick takes fire and is with difficulty extinguished; the violent rain and winds strip their half-built houses of the clay and mortar with which their builders had hoped to shield themselves and families from the cold; and the occasional discovery of an Indian trail, and even sometimes the glimpse of a native straggler, or the smoke of their distant fires, fill the feeble band of colonists with anxiety and fear.

Thus did the infant settlement of New Plymouth slowly progress, amid many difficulties and dangers, and amid much suffering patiently endured. There were wives, and mothers, and sisters there. There were infants fondly pressed to these mothers' breasts amid the privations of that dreary winter. There were husbands and fathers and brothers, too, sinking into untimely graves, who had come from the far-off land of their birth only to find a burial place among the graves of the strangers.

John Carver had been chosen by the unanimous voice of his companions as the first Governor of their little republic. But his own home-circle had been one of the earliest marks for the shaft of death. He had scarcely landed ere he was called upon to dig a grave for his son, and he had only felt the first breath of the south wind fan his fevered temples, when he also sunk under the severities of the climate and his unwearied anxiety for the common good, leaving a desolate and broken-hearted widow, who was soon laid at rest beside him in the same grave.

"March 24," says Governor Bradford, "dies Elizabeth, the wife of Mr. Edward Winslow. This month thirteen of our number die. And in three months past, dies half our company; the greatest part in the depth of winter, wanting houses and other comforts, being infected with the scurvy and other diseases, which their long voyage and unaccommodate condition brought upon them; so as there die sometimes two or three a day. Of a hundred persons scarce fifty remain; the living scarce able to bury the dead; the well not sufficient to tend the sick, there being, in their time of greatest distress, but six or seven, who spare no pains to help them. Two of the seven were Mr. Brewster, the reverend elder, and Mr. Standish, their captain. The like disease fell also among the sailors, so as almost half their company also die before they sail. But the spring advancing, it pleases God the mortality begins to cease, and the sick and lame recover, which puts new life into the people, though they had borne their sad affliction with as much patience as any could do."

Such were the first experiences of the colonists of New England. Had they resembled the rabble of needy and dissipated adventurers, bankrupt courtiers, and covetous gold seekers, who set sail only fourteen years before, with the intention of colonizing Virginia, the fate of their project may well be conceived. Captain Smith described the band of Virginian colonists as composed of some forty-eight needy gentlemen to four carpenters. It was considered as no little advantage to these emigrants, that they took neither wives nor children in their train. Jealousies, divisions, and excesses had sorely reduced their numbers, when they were recruited by a band of new comers, composed, in spite of Smith's remonstrances, chiefly of vagabond gentlemen and journeymen goldsmiths, who were come to do nothing else "but dig gold, wash gold, refine gold, and load gold."

The main portion of the new comers returned to England, bearing with them a freight of worthless ochre, which their unskilful refiners had satisfied them was gold dust; while Smith, whose ability and genius had raised him to be president of the Council, had to adopt coercive measures to compel the gentlemen colonists to work, and wrote home to the directors of the colony, "I entreat you rather send but thirty carpenters, husbandmen, gardeners, fishermen, blacksmiths, masons, and diggers up of tree roots, than a thousand such as we have."

Such emigrants as these we may well believe would have found no gold on the New England shores, had they landed there to brave the perils and endure the sufferings that attended on the founders of that free State. But they had learned to count the cost of their undertakings, and had entered on the scheme of rearing a home amid the wilderness of the New World, in no hope of gathering gold from the unbroken soil. They had calculated, as we have seen, the worst dangers that were before them, yet it was scarcely possible for the most candid foresight to have exceeded the painful realizations of their experience. Sickness and many privations disabled them, and death thinned their ranks of the wisest and ablest of their number, while the survivors were sometimes scarcely able to tend on the sick, or to bury the dead. At one period during that dreadful winter, only seven were left out of the whole company capable of rendering assistance to their companions.

At length the dreary winter began to draw to a close. On the 3d of March a south wind brought warm and fair weather, and the ears of the sad and toil-worn emigrants were greeted with the cheering notes of the birds as they "sang in the woods most pleasantly." Other comforts followed in like manner, though, like the warmth of the spring sunshine, chequered by many keen blasts and disheartening rains. On the 16th of March, "a faye warme day," while the colonists were consulting together about the establishing of military orders among them for securing the safety of the settlement, they were interrupted by the approach of a Red Indian, whose presence filled them with alarm. But their fears were happily groundless.

Nor were they now dependent for their safety on the forbearance of the Indian straggler. Their citadel on Burial Hill had been laid out according to the simple rules of fortification best suited to this primitive settlement, and the captain and sailors of the Mayflower had landed and mounted on their hill fort a formidable array of ordnance, described in Governor Bradford's history as "one of the great pieces called a minion, a saller, [saker] and two bases," all pieces of artillery in common use at the period.

The Indian described himself as one of the sagamores or chiefs of his tribe, but he came at the head of no warlike band of savages, but frankly presented himself alone among the strangers, hailing them with the pleasant English salutation of "Welcome!" He was the first native of the wilderness with whom they had been able to hold converse, and it must have sounded even stranger in their ears than the most unintelligible dialect of the forest, to be saluted by the wild Indian in their own mother tongue. The colonists were soon on friendly terms with their Indian visitor. They entertained him hospitably; giving him "strong water, biscuit, butter, and cheese, with pudding, and a piece of mallard," and received from him information of no little value to them. He informed them that the Indian name of their new settlement was Patuxet, and from him they first learned the glad tidings that they had no reason to fear the return of any Indian possessor to claim the restitution of his native soil.

This fact, however, was already well known to mariners who frequented the coast for the purpose of fishing or trading in furs with the natives. Captain Dermer, who had visited the shores of New England in 1619, described the country as consisting of "ancient plantations, not long since populous but now utterly void," and all the writers of the period who speak of New England agree in their accounts of a deadly plague which had devastated the whole country, from the Penobscot to Narragansett Bay, sweeping away whole tribes in its progress, and nearly exterminating the old possessors of the soil. It cannot excite our surprise that this should have been regarded, both by the devout colonists of New England and by later historians, as an immediate interposition of Providence, to make room for the settlement of the English colonists. It was so viewed even by the statesmen of England, in the seventeenth century, and is no less confidently referred to by the devout author of the Plymouth Pilgrims, as the casting out of the heathen, preparatory to God's planting there the vine which he brought forth from the land of bondage.

In the great patent of New England, which was granted by King James—though unknown to the Pilgrim colonists—before they had set foot on the sacred landing-place in Plymouth Bay, the King thus refers to the extermination produced by the Indian pestilence, as a strong inducement to enter on the possession of these goodly but deserted territories: "We have been further given certainly to know, that within these late years there hath, by God's visitation, reigned a wonderful plague amongst the savages there heretofore inhabiting, in a manner to the utter destruction, devastation, and depopulation of that whole territory, so as there is not left, for many leagues together, in a manner, any that do claim or challenge any kind of interest therein; whereby we in our judgment, are persuaded and satisfied that the appointed time is come in which Almighty God, in His goodness and bounty towards us and our people, hath thought fit and determined, that these large and goodly territories, deserted as it were by their natural inhabitants, should be possessed and enjoyed by such of our subjects and people as shall, by His mercy and favor, and by His powerful arm, be directed and conducted thither."

It would be a strange amount of incredulous scepticism that could induce any one to overlook so remarkable a concurrence of circumstances, or regard the depopulation of so large a portion of the American continent at this important crisis, as merely an accidental and chance coincidence. Had the Pilgrims of New England been compelled to rear the primitive log huts of Leyden Street, with their arms in their hands, and the craft and cruelty of the Red Indian continually opposed to them, according to all ordinary probability, the settlers who left England the following year to cast in their lot among the survivors of that terrible winter would have found only the unburied bones of their friends amid the blackened ruins of their log huts. Of this they were themselves sufficiently aware. Holmes remarks in his Annals: "Tradition gives an affecting picture of the infant colony during this critical and distressing period. The dead were buried on the bank, at a little distance from the rock where the Fathers landed; and, lest the Indians should take advantage of the weak and wretched state of the English, the graves were levelled and sown for the purpose of concealment." How touching is the picture which this presents to us of the privations and sufferings endured by these uncomplaining exiles, denied even the sad privilege of erecting the frail memorial of sorrow, or rearing the little mound that speaks so eloquently of the calm repose of the dead.

It was no vague fancy that kept the early colonists alive to the constant danger of attack from the Indians. They had repeatedly learned of their near neighborhood, and even had some experience of their violence, before they learned from Samoset, their friendly visitor, that these were only the straggling survivors of neighboring tribes, who had wandered to the deserted hunting-grounds of Patuxet. The Indians of New England were not totally exterminated, though the survivors were but a feeble and scattered remnant of the old warriors of the forest. Samoset from time to time guided parties of these to the new settlement, and negotiated both friendly and trading alliance, from which the colonists reaped considerable advantage; though from the first they assumed a bold and uncompromising bearing in all their intercourse with the Indians, to which their safety was in no slight degree to be ascribed.

"They were bound together by the strongest ties of mutual esteem and affection, no less than by those of self-interest, so that a consistent harmony pervaded all their proceedings. The first interruption to this, with the penalty thereby incurred, is thus quaintly recorded in the Governor's journal, toward the end of March: 'The first offence since our arrival is of John Billington, who came on board at London, and is this month convented before the whole company for his contempt of the Captain's lawful command with opprobrious speeches, for which he is adjudged to have his neck and heels tied together; but upon humbling himself and craving pardon, and it being the first offence, he is forgiven.'"

At length, with the return of spring, and the cheering prospects inspired by the season of hope and promise, the surviving colonists felt emboldened to trust to their own resources, and on the 5th of April 1621, the Mayflower hoisted sail, and bore away from Plymouth harbor for England. It affords perhaps the best evidence of the firmness and unanimity of the little band of colonists, that notwithstanding the wasting effects of hardship and disease, which had reduced their numbers to nearly a half of what they originally were, and had subjected the survivors to such dreadful privations and sufferings, not one of them offered to desert his companions with the departing Mayflower, whose lessening sail must have been watched by some there, till it vanished on the horizon, as the last link that bound them to the land of their birth.

The death of Governor Carver, the first President of the little republic of New England, devolved on the colonists the necessity of a new election, and Mr. William Bradford, the historian of the colony, was accordingly selected to fill his place. Hope now began to reanimate the settlers as the season of summer drew near; and the first fruits of their winter's toils and privations became apparent, in the enjoyment of domestic comforts, and the prospects of a fruitful harvest ere the year drew to a close. Their fortunate discovery of the board of Indian grain had supplied them with the seed best adapted for the soil and climate of their new settlement; and their friendly visitor, Samoset, repaid their hospitality by instructing them in the rules of Indian husbandry.

One of the earliest entries in Governor Bradford's History for the first summer of the New England colony, affords good evidence of the return of hope and confidence among the survivors of those who had sailed in the Mayflower. Under the date of May 12 the historian writes—"The first marriage in this place is of Mr. Edward Winslow to Mrs. Susanna White." It furnishes the best proof we could desire, that, after counting the cost, and experiencing well-nigh the utmost evils that despondency had suggested, the colonists had no thought of abandoning the hope of founding a home for liberty in the new world. It may perhaps also suggest to us that that influential motive of action which ordinarily springs from the fear of public opinion, had, as yet, acquired but little power in the infant commonwealth of New England, when it is noted that its first bride and bridegroom were among those whom the severities of the previous winter had deprived of their wedded partners. But the necessities of such a state of society are not to be subjected to the rules of ordinary life. The first New England marriage, notwithstanding the brief widowhood which preceded it, is undoubtedly to be viewed as the harbinger of brighter hopes of comfort and security to the poor exiles.

(To be Continued.)

Bermuda Bottled.

Kansas City, Mo.

50 PER CENT. OF THE NET PROFITS TO THE INVESTORS.

UNION INVESTMENT CO.

RHEUMATISM.—A pamphlet telling in plain terms "What rheumatism really is," "The cause of the pain attending it," and "How sufferers can obtain relief," will be sent FREE to any sufferer by F. W. KIMBALL, 357 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

REDEMPTION:

"I am not skilled to understand What God hath willed, what God hath planned;
I only know, at His right hand
Stands One who is my Saviour.

"I take God at His word and deed;
Christ died to save me, as I read;
And in my heart I find the need
Of Him to be my Saviour.

"And was there then no other way
For God to take? I cannot say;
I only thank Him day by day,
Who saved me through my Saviour.

"In heaven he found no grief or blame
To bear away; no bitter shame
Of death and sin; and so he came To earth to be its Saviour.

"And had there been in all this wide Wide world, no other soul beside,
But only mine, then He had died
That He might be my Saviour.

"One wounded spirit sore oppress,
One wearied soul that found no rest,
Until it found it on the breast,
Of Him that was its Saviour.

"Then had He left His Father's throne,
The joy untold, the love unknown,
And for that soul had given His own
That He might be its Saviour.

"And oh! that He, fulfilled may see
The travail of His soul in me,
And with His work contented be,
As I with my dear Saviour.

"Yea, living, dying, let me bring
My strength, my courage, from this spring,
That He who lives to be my King
Once died to be my Saviour."

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressing needed, and can be mailed to
the address of
BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

The Youths' Temperance Banner.

The National Temperance Society publishes a four-
page illustrated paper for children and youth, with choice reading from the best writers. Terms:
Monthly—Cash in advance, including postage.
Single copies, one year, 25 cents; one hundred copies to one address, $12. For any number of copies over four to one address, at the rate of 12 cents per year. Semi-Monthly—Single copies one year, 40 cents; four copies and over to one address, 24 cents each. J. N. STEARNS, Publishing Agent, 58 Reade St., N. Y.

PRICE We Sell DIRECT TO FAMILIES
PIANOS ORGANS
$150 to $1500 $85 to $500.
Absolutely Perfect!
Sent for trial in your own home before you buy. Local Agents must sell inferior instruments or charge double what we ask. Catalogue free
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st St., N. Y.

AGENTS WANTED to sell

The Christian Legacy.
One agent writes: "I have a record of hours worked,
in all a little over a week's work, counting 10 hours for a day, and have 89 orders." Another: "I have read the book daily. Its plan is new to me, and the amount of precious truth and Bible information it contains is a surprise. The book will be highly prized by devout minds, and has the food that the genuine Christian relishes." W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau
St., New York.

SAFE INVESTMENT

FARRAND & VOTEY

ORGANS

DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

AGENTS SALESMEN, CLERKS,

LADIES—Every one can make big money with or without canvassing. $100 per month
to that amount weekly. Greatest, most profitable and easiest opportunity to make money. Reliable parties started on Salary and Commission. For each we supply the capital. Address M. MILLER, Manager, Box 453, New York Post Office.

E. B. TREAT

Publisher, New York. BOOKS WORTH HAVING.
5 Cooper Union, 8th Street & 4th Ave.

OUR BEAUTIFUL HOME BOOK.

Methner. Home and Heaven. 194,000 sold.

GOLDEN THOUGHTS ON

MOTHER HOME AND HEAVEN

PROSE & POETRY.
400 BEST AUTHORS.

Beautifully Illustrated. Edited by Theo. L. Cuyler, DD., and others.
A welcome guest in every home. A work truly rich in thought and sentiment, pertaining to "THE THREE DEAREST NAMES" to mortals given. An Elegant Birthday, Holiday, Anniversary or Bridal Present.
Cloth, $2.75; Parlor Edition, Gilt, $3.50; Presentation Edition, Full Mo., $5.

HOME CULTURE. A Catechetical Cyclopedia of Home Education. 66 Departments or books in one. Edited by President Hunter, of N. Y. Normal College, and others. 672 quarto pages, illustrated, cloth, $3.50; gilt, $4.00.

CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE. 10,000,
pertaining to Persons, Places and Things, with Key.
Bible Studies, Readings, Talks, &c. 600 pages, $2.

OUR HOME PHYSICIAN. A New Cyclo-
pedia of FAMILY MEDICINES, CAUSES, Symptoms,
Remedies. By GEO. M. BEARD, M.D. 1,500 p., $6.

SHOTS AT SUNDRY TARGETS.
Aimed at Follies, Dangers and Errors to be Shunned, Sorrow to be Mitigated, and Victories to be Won.
By T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D. Illustrated, 702 pages, cloth, $2.50; Half Morocco, $3.50.

THE BOW IN THE CLOUD; or, Words of Comfort. 200 Authors. Poetry and Prose. Introductions By Wm. M. TAYLOR, DD. 450 p., $1.75.

FAMOUS WOMEN, OF SACRED STORY, a Series of Lectures on Old and New Testament Characters. By M. B. WHARTON. D.D. 2 vols, $1.50 each.

Sent Post Paid on receipt of Price. Special Rates to Clubs. Agents Wanted.

THE

Alfred Dolge

FELT SHOES

AND

SLIPPERS.

Made in all Styles for Men,
Women, and Children.

PERFECT EASE AND COMFORT.

Noiseless,
Warm, Durable.

A CHRISTMAS SUGGESTION.
The Wife (eagerly): "Cousin Belle's early Christmas present gives me an idea! What could be better than to send Alfred Dolge Felt Shoes or Slippers to all on our Christmas list.
Nothing could give more comfort and pleasure."

Prevent Rheumatism and
Cold Feet.
Send for Illustrated Price-List.
Mention Christian Herald.

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York.

FREE

WHAT IS IT?

TO ALL

A REMARKABLE OFFER.

The Pall Mall Electric Association, of London, desiring to quickly introduce and popularize the famous English Dr.
Scott's Electric porous plasters make the following unusually liberal offer to those parties who may not be able to find these plasters in their Drug Stores. As this offer is

GOOD FOR 60 DAYS

only after the date of this paper, its readers should avail themselves of it at once before they forget it. Remember, Winter is at hand and this plaster will be found an invaluable remedy for many of the ills and pains the Winter season brings.
These plasters retail at 25c. each., but parties remitting us $1.00 for 4 plasters will receive free a pair of our world-renowned Electric Insoles which sell at 50cts. per pair.

Also "The Doctor's Story," a valuable family book. Published at 25cts.

EVERY DRUGGIST WILL RETURN THE MONEY

IF IT FAILS, SO WILL WE.

AGENTS WANTED.

DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC PLASTER
PRICE 25c

"THE WORD FOR THE DAY"

Text, Hymn and Prayer for day in the year. Compiled by A. J. A. R.

"The word for the day" has been compiled reference to read every day, and not fictitious mental ones. Its thoughts are very well selected its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for devotion is admirable. — New York Evangelist.

"The word for the day" is one of those stro-
to a true Christian life.

16mo. Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00; America
$1.75; Calif. flex., $2.50.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

A Gem For The Little F

THE

STORY OF JESUS

For Little Children

By MRS. G. E. MORTON

Fully Illustrated

12mo, 316 Pages
Cloth, Printed in $1.00, post-pa

"Told in simple words and a very handsome
How wonderful that the biography of the Son Highest is better adapted than any other to be the children. Angels study it; divines dive baibes love it. Blessed be the Story of Jesus."
SPRINGBORN.

"The demand for a fourth edition of this pleasing work shows that it has already inconsiderable favor. Planned something on the lines as the 'Peep of Day.' Several illustra-an attractive binding add to its value as a school prize or children's reward book." — The seller.

"A difficult task well executed in simple, childish language, the old story is told in the holiness of our Lord, and the great object life are kept in the 'Peep of Day.' Several illustra-all classes is described in a life-like way. We recommend this book, which is improved
wood-cuts." — The Christian.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher & Bookseller
77 Bible House, New York

AGENTS! QUI

STANLEY

Wonderful Discoverie

Complete and reliable accounts of Levy's Latest Discoveries and all expeditions. Every page new. C book ready by January. Order Prosp now for 60c., and be first in the field. Fi cent to agents. H. G. STAUFER Quakertown

DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC PLASTERS

Dr. Scott's Electric Plasters have established a wonderfu reputation for their marvelous efficacy in CURING QUICK LY some of the most obstinate cases of record. They possess all the best known qualities of porous plasters, be potent natural force, Electro-Magnetism. They quickly and effectually cure

NEURALGIA, TRICKLES, RHEUMATISM, SPECKLING KIDNEY, ACIDITIES AND LIVER, BRUISES, STOMACH

NO COLD FEET

PRICE, 50 cents.

A WORD ABOUT OUR ELECTRIC INSOLES
They are simple in construction, astonishing in their effects they prevent and assist in curing many forms of disease arising from wet and cold feet in winter, keeping the feet at one even temperature, prevent chilling, sweating when work consequent discomforts. A grand adjunct to the result of with our plasters. Thousands suffer to-day the result of wet and cold feet which might easily, and positively have been prevented by this simple remedy.

Guard against the dangers of winter storms and consequences by having a supply of these plasters of hand ready in a case of emergency. Retail $1.00 to Dr. Scott, 842 Broadway, N. Y., mentioning this paper and you will promptly receive, postpaid

Four Plasters, retail, $1.00
One Pair Insoles, Free, 50c.
One Pair's Story, Free, 25c.
One Dr's Story, $1.75

Mention size of shoes you wear. Write us to-day. It is an opportunity that may never occur again.
Those remitting 50c. for 2 plasters will receive five free
The Doctor's Story, published at 25cts.

TRACTS

Sound, clear, pointed Gospel Tracts always on hand at moderate prices, also booklets and books for Christians at the TRACT DEPOT, Grinnell, Ont.

Sample packet and Catalogue sent to intending purchaser on receipt of stamp.

FREE

samples of cloth the famous Plymouth Rock $3 Pants are cut from, including self-measurement blanks and linen tape-measure, if you mention this paper. Address Plymouth Rock Pants Co., 11 to 17 Elliot St., Boston, Mass.

SALESMEN WANTED

our goods by sample to and retail trade. We are manufacturers in our line in the world. Liberal salary p best position. Heavy advances for wages, advertising, & terms address, Centennial Mfg. Co., Chicago, Ill., or C

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1880, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XII., No. 50. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 11, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF COMMANDER CAMERON AND CARDINAL LAVIGERIE, AND PICTURE OF CAPE JUBY.

JERUSALEM! JERUSALEM! Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached in That City.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

CLOSE OF SOLOMON'S REIGN. By Mrs. Baxter.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE MRS. WEBSTER KIRKHAM.

A Virago at a Mission—An Infidel's Conversion in New York—An Escape from Drowning in China. PROPHETIC IMPORT OF THE REVOLUTION IN BRAZIL.

THE DROUGHT AND THE RAIN. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

PICTURE OF A FLOWER FESTIVAL.

LOUISE KINGSFORD'S FUTURE. (Illust.)

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: Their Perils, Pains, and Privations. (Continued.)

COMMANDER CAMERON.

CARDINAL LAVIGERIE.

1. CAPE JUBY, WITH CASTLE—2. BARON LAHURE—3. THE SHORE—4. MR. MACKENZIE—5. TARFAYA—6. LIEUT. FOURCAULT—7. GREAT DELTA.

COMMANDER CAMERON, R. N

Born in 1844—His Career in the Navy—Work of Exploration in Africa from 1872 to 1876—A Chief's Levee—Story of a Submerged Village—Tour Through Asia Minor and Persia to India in 1878—Expedition to the Gold Coast Colony.

THE International Anti-Slavery Conference of the fourteen Powers who signed the Berlin Treaty, besides Persia and Zanzibar, met on Monday, November 18, 1889, at Brussels, and this circumstance, together with the recent settlement of Cape Juby, in northwest Africa, one of the old centres of the slave trade, naturally recalls the perilous work of exploration which in past years was so successfully accomplished by intrepid travellers, such as the late Dr. Livingstone, Mr. H. M. Stanley, and Commander Cameron (whose portrait appears on the preceding page), of the British Navy. It was this last-named gentleman who, in fact, completed one great problem, which perplexed Livingstone, by following the course of the river Lualaba, which he discovered to belong to the Congo, and not to the Nile, as had been previously believed; and in his grand achievement of geographical exploration he traversed the whole breadth of the interior of Africa, from Lake Tanganyika westward to the Atlantic seaboard. In this wonderful journey, by which an extent of 1,200 miles of new country was mapped out in 1874, Commander Cameron accomplished as much as was ever done in any one expedition. He of African ground, and his return home in 1876 was greeted with the applause which he so well deserved. Verney Lovett Cameron was born at Radipole, near Weymouth, England, on July 1, 1844, so that he is now only forty-five years of age. His father was the Rev. J. L. Cameron, Vicar of Shoreham, near Sevenoaks. His grandfather was Colonel Cameron, who commanded the Grenadier Company of the 9th Regiment throughout the Peninsular War. Young Cameron entered the navy in 1857, being the first boy under fourteen years of age who passed the examination for naval cadet. He passed in the first class at every succeeding examination. In 1865 he qualified as lieutenant, and in July, 1876, was appointed commander. Between 1872 and 1876 he was engaged in that memorable exploration of Africa which

Walked Over 3,000 Miles

Made His Name Famous.

While at Unyanyembe all the members of his expedition suffered much from disease. Cameron himself was down with fever twenty-nine days out of forty-five, and afterward suffered much from a still more serious fever of a remittent type, and inflammation of the eyes; and the gallant band were but slowly recovering their health, when Dr. Livingstone's servants arrived, bringing with them the remains of that devoted servant of Christ. Cameron furnished them with means to reach the coast; and ascertaining that an important map belonging to Dr. Livingstone had been left behind at Ujiji, he determined to push on for that place, and recover so important a record of that great traveller's researches. He did so, and having sent it off to Zanzibar, began his march westward to the Atlantic.

He Attended a Sort of Levee held by the powerful chief of the Urna country, named Kasongo, which he thus describes: "This levee took place in a large quadrangular enclosure, in the middle of which was the hut of the chief, and a couple of other huts for his principal wives. Kasongo stood at one end of the enclosure, dressed in colored grass clothes, and behind him was his shield-bearer, his executioner, and a band of his faithfuls—people who had their hands, noses, and ears cut off. It was one of this chief's favorite punishments, the cutting off of noses and ears, and he often did it out of mere caprice. It was curious to find that many of these people, thus mutilated, stuck closer to him than anybody else."

On one side of the enclosure stood Cameron and his men; and on the other side the Portuguese trader and his men. Each chief came forward in turn, each with a sort of swaggering walk, and with a small boy walking beside him and carrying a bag. He took a bit of pipeclay from the boy, and, having rubbed it over his breast and arms, he returned it to the boy. Then he drew his sword, made a rush at Kasongo, as if to cut him down, calling out the while his various titles, half a mile long; but, before he came quite forward, he went down on his knees, and drove the sword into the ground.

A Hundred and Fifty Different Chiefs

paid their respect to Kasongo in this manner. When the ceremony was over, Kasongo made a great speech, telling them he was the greatest man in the world; the only man that was at all to be compared with him being the chief of Ulanda, who, he might state, had been visited at different times by the Portuguese, and who had hitherto been supposed to be the greatest chief in Central Africa.

After Cameron and his party left the place, they were subsequently met by a string of fifty wretched women, most of them with children in their arms. He found they represented twenty-five villages, which had been destroyed. Most of the fighting men had been killed, and the rest turned out to die of starvation.

The remainder of the journey to the coast of the Atlantic was attended with many dangers, and difficulties, and Cameron states that, when about 150 miles from the coast, he threw everything away, and started unencumbered. After toilsome marches he reached Katombéla on November 4, 1875, just two years and eight months from the time he had left the East Coast. He was warmly welcomed by a French merchant and the Portuguese officials.

In Sept., 1878, he started on a tour through with the object of demonstrating the feasibility of constructing a railroad from the Mediterranean to India without following the course of the river Euphrates. In 1882 he and Captain R. F. Burton undertook a journey of exploration in the country lying at the back of the Gold Coast Colony, and the Geographical Society accorded them a loan of instruments to enable them to make scientific observations, and Commander Cameron made some extensive and most valuable surveys. His work has been largely instrumental in opening up large tracts of hitherto unknown country to commerce and civilization, but, best of all, to that glorious gospel of the love of God for sinners, which is daily winning its trophies among the most degraded tribes of Africa, as well as in other parts of the world.

Asia Minor and Persia to India

CARDINAL LAVIGERIE.

Born at Bayonne in France in 1825—Begins to Study for the Priesthood in 1840—His Horror of the Slave Traffic—His Visit to London—His Present Crusade.

ONE of the most determined crusaders against the iniquitous slave trade in equatorial Africa is Charles Martial Allemand Lavigerie, Roman Catholic Primate of North Africa, Metropolitan of Algeria, and Archbishop of Carthage. His portrait appears on the first page. He was born at Bayonne, France, on October 31, 1825, and is therefore now sixty-four years old. He began to study for the priesthood at the age of fifteen, and he has gained high distinction. He is a most humane man, and has often relieved poor Arab children whose parents have perished through famine, and founded orphanages and other institutions.

At the present moment, however, it is the suppression of the slave-trade in Central Africa which absorbs nearly all his thoughts, and has caused the fame of his name to be sent forth to the four corners of the globe. The reasons which originally caused him to start may be briefly told. It was the religious order of the White Fathers, who had succeeded in establishing themselves in the heart of the Dark Continent, who first drew the Cardinal's attention to the terrible traffic in human beings. From these poor struggling monks, who were the involuntary witnesses of the atrocities committed, he obtained ample and heart-sickening details. He was very deeply moved. A report was submitted to the present Pope, Leo XIII., and he also hastened to call the attention of Christendom to the subject of African slavery.

His Anti-Slavery Crusade

The Cardinal himself headed a band of pilgrims who went to Rome to offer to the Pope their respectful homage on his Jubilee, and to express their gratitude for his resolve to deal with the awful subject of slavery. He took with him twelve slaves, bought in the market, a simply unexaggerated specimens of the misery and suffering produced by the system. The Pontiff was not long in making his choice of a fitting mouthpiece, and it was to Cardinal Lavigerie that he intrusted the onerous duty of acquainting the civilized world with this evil. How nobly, how eloquently, he has pleaded the African's cause, all those who have followed his remarkable career from that day to this must be fully aware. The picture he has drawn of the horrors of the slave trade is appalling.

"Slavery," he says, "exists all over the African continent. It is to be found in the Sahara, on the banks of the Niger, along the Red Sea littoral, and, indeed, in the very core of Equatorial Africa, where the missionaries have established themselves. So terrible is the increase," the Cardinal goes on to say, "that the lowest computation assigns the number of slaves at between 40,000 and 50,000. The merchants are all Mussulmans, and in their depredations employ bands of ferocious men. Villages are burnt, all who resist are barbarously murdered, and the survivors, composed principally of women and children, are led into captivity."

Chained Together Like Wild Beasts.

Those who give way from want of food, or the fatigues of the journey, are killed with savage brutality. Consider how Mohammedanism has restlessly and irresistibly crept over half of Africa. I have lived among these Mussulmans, and I would not say one word against them, for undoubtedly Mohammedanism is an advance upon heathenism. But the saddest feature of their creed is that they regard humanity as being divided into two races, one of which is inferior, and destined to serve. Thus they habitually look upon the negro as a mere animal. These slave hunters," continues the Cardinal, "carry off by violence any isolated woman or child they can find, and, to quote Père Moinet, one of my missionaries, 'a woman or child who goes ten minutes' distance from the village has no certainty of returning.' But that is not all. They organize their expeditions with as much care as a war. Sometimes in they induce neighboring tribes to join them, by an offer of a share in the pillage, and contrive, later on, to capture them into the bargain. The slaves are on foot in the caravan march, and they tie the hands and feet of all the men who appear strong enough to offer any resistance or flight, in such a manner that every step is painful. For the whole day they drag along their wretched way, and at night a handful of raw grain is given them as food. In a few days grief, pain, fatigue, and privation have broken numbers down. Then the brutal captors pass down the lines, and to save gunpowder in shooting them, deal a heavy blow with a bar of wood, carried for the purpose, on the back of the unhappy victim's neck, who, with one piercing cry, rolls on the sand in the agonized convulsions of death. In the slave market decency is absolutely ignored, and blood ties go for nothing; husband and wife, parents and children, are ruthlessly separated."

The Extreme Refinement of Brutality,

Such are a few of the horrors of the slave trade as practiced in Africa in this present year of grace. Small wonder, therefore, that the Cardinal has made it the purpose of the remainder of his life to eradicate this terrible curse, which cries out for sympathy from the whole of the enlightened world.

Actuated by this impulse, Cardinal Lavigerie visited London in July, 1888, to give lectures on subject. His mission met with active and earnest co-operation. On that occasion Lord Ranville acted as chairman, and Mr. Edmund Urquhart, the well-known Quaker, and many others lent their support to the meeting. Where is a question of dispensing mercy, extremes meet, and it was indeed a noteworthy feature to see occupying the same platform. In Spain, also, the anti-slavery crusade has found equal favor, and the Cardinal has ample reason for thinking that his enterprise will eventually prove a successful one. Like Peter the Hermit, who roused the whole of Christendom to deliver the Holy Land from the hands of infidels, Cardinal Viguerie has roused Europe from end to end. His mission is a noble one, and is far more Christlike, inasmuch as its spirit is the beneficent one of preventing cruelty and outrage on a suffering race. Lovers of Christ, whatever their race or creed, must wish the Cardinal godspeed, and it is enjoined that he who loves Him love his brother also.

A Cardinal and a Quaker

CAPE JUBY, NORTHWEST AFRICA.

(See Illustration on first page.)

THIS part of Africa was first visited by Mr. Donald Mackenzie in 1876, with a view of founding a commercial settlement, and ultimately of opening up a route to the Western Sudan, and thus tapping the trade of that populous district. After examining two hundred miles of coast-line, Cape Juby was selected by Mr. Mackenzie as the most suitable place for the settlement, for it is the only safe harbor on the coast for hundreds of miles. It has the advantage of being near the Canary Islands, and possesses a splendid climate. In 1879 Mr. Mackenzie founded the settlement, but not without bitter opposition from Spain and Morocco. Mr. Mackenzie again set out, on August 2, 1889, with Colonel Baron Lahure, of the Belgian Army, and Lieutenant Fourcault, of the Belgian Navy. He proposes to incorporate a large company, which will take over Cape Juby, and, with the native chiefs, protect the whole country, and without any open up direct intercourse with the Western Sudan through a healthy district. He hopes this way to make Cape Juby a prosperous settlement, stop one avenue of the slave trade, and bring the interior under the influence of commerce and civilization. During Baron Lahure's visit at Cape Juby he made numerous sketches, some of which are on our front page.

The first is the port of Cape Juby with castles and shore. This castle, which is a very substantial building, was commenced in 1880, and completed in 1882. It is a strong place of defence as well as a residence; the shore house is also a strong building used for trading operations. The centre engraving represents the protected town of Tarfaya, which Mr. Mackenzie proposes to build at Cape Juby. It will have the advantage of an excellent supply of water, and a genial and salubrious climate should attract many Europeans as well as native traders.

The bottom panel shows the great delta of the river Saghiat El Hamra, which was visited by Mr. Mackenzie and Baron Lahure, whose portraits are also given—Mr. Mackenzie on the left, Baron Lahure in the centre, and Lieutenant Fourcault on the right-hand side—and their companions making a journey on camels to explore the country near Cape Juby, which, although without settled inhabitants, is very fertile, and might all be brought under cultivation.

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Fifty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 71 Bible House, New York, for $1.75. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts fully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian Church down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most complete and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

PROPHETIC IMPORT OF THE BRAZILIAN REVOLUTION.

THE sudden and surprising success of the military adventurer, General da Fonseca, who is called the Brazilian Boulanger, and who, as commander of the 5,000 soldiers in Rio de Janeiro, the Brazilian capital, quietly became military Dictator over Brazil, a country as large as Europe, on Friday, November 15, without any one's life being lost, must prove a powerful incentive to revolutionary movements in other countries. A number of French papers in Canada, including the Patrie, Lecteur Canadien, and the Evenement, fired by the revolution in Brazil, are advocating a Republic for Canada. This is only what we must expect in many countries as we approach the Universal Republican Revolution of the Seventh Vial, so ably expounded by Dr. Wylie in his book bearing that title (Rev. 16: 18).

The Pall Mall Gazette of November 18 remarks that "the political disturbance that may accrue from the overturn in Rio may produce disastrous consequences in Europe. It is asserted that the rising is really the work of the priests. [This opinion is confirmed by the haste with which the new Government was blessed by the chiefs of the Roman Catholic Church.] Since the abolition of a state religion and the grant of freedom of worship to all creeds, by the Act of June, 1888, the priests have openly declared for a Republic. If this be so, and the revolution should be crowned by success, it will enormously increase the temptation, already quite strong enough, which suggests to the Pope the possibility of upsetting the Italian kingdom by an alliance with the Republicans. Of course there are obvious obstacles in the way of such a daring and desperate policy. But it is never quite off the cards that the Pope may find it worth while to try to overthrow King Umberto of Italy, even at the price of an alliance between the Reds and the Blacks. The Social Revolutionary party in South Italy is quite strong enough, if suddenly reinforced by the Catholic abstentionists throughout Italy, to upset the Italian monarchy. The Pope will probably shrink from playing so risky a game, but the success of the Clerical Republican movement in Brazil will naturally make him feel that he has a stronger card up his sleeve than he had hitherto ventured to hope. There are many Italians in Brazil, and Rio will react upon Rome."

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Sad Story of a French Queen.—The Rev. Mr. Wells says: "In the biography of Mrs. Gibson, of Lochgoilhead, the authoress relates how, when a young woman, living at Lochgoilhead, she was very much interested by the history of Marie Antoinette, the beautiful but unfortunate Queen of France. She was deeply impressed with her career, and sympathizingly followed her step by step, till she reached the guillotine, where she perished under the cruel knife. The shock was such, to a sensitive nature like Mrs. Gibson's, that it showed her the vanity of all earthly things, and caused her to look to Christ for satisfaction, peace, and rest. We are called in various ways; but in whatever way we may be called, the call is clear and distinct. Oh, may we all, who have not already done so, answer, 'Lord, here am I.'"

An Unexpected Partnership.—"I am going into business," said a young man to me some years ago. "Oh, indeed," I answered, "with whom are you going in?" "With so-and-so," and he named a firm, well-known and respected in the mercantile world, in which he had been employed for several years. On New Year's Day he had been surprised by the firm sending for him, and saying that they were drawing up a new contract for five or six years, and that all the members had agreed to take him in as a partner. How long do you think it took that young man to accept the position offered to him? At once he joined these prominent, wealthy, and able business men as his partners, and thanked them for their kindness. God the Father, in His great love, has made an offer of mercy and grace to us. How long will you take to accept it? Why will you dally with it if you believe the offer to be genuine? Hear the testimony of millions who have proved it. Accept it now, lest you be withdrawn from the sphere in which that offer is proclaimed."

Puzzled about Faith.—Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost said: "Soon after my conversion to Christ I heard my pastor, a God-fearing old man of over ninety years, preach a sermon on faith. I had a good deal of faith when he began, but I had none when he was done, he had preached it all away. He told of so many kinds of faith, saving faith, sanctifying faith, and Bible faith, as opposed to traditional faith, historical faith, and hoping faith. These are but a few; he mentioned so many species of faith that I doubted if I had any, and if I had I was sure it was the wrong kind. But now I know there is only one kind of faith; the faith which we exercise in our common every-day relations towards our fellows is the same as that which we are asked to exercise towards God. It is no unnatural thing that is demanded of us, though sometimes we imagine that faith in Christ is a totally different faith from any other."

A Light Under Water.—Mr. J. G. Forbes says: "Some time ago I had business at one of our city wharfs, and while there I witnessed an experiment with a new kind of light for use under water. The oil and wick were contained in a glass vessel, which was far beneath the surface of the water, but was connected by a long india rubber tube with the atmosphere, down which the air passed freely to feed the flame in the jar. As I watched the experiment, I thought, That is a good illustration of how the Christian should live in this world. All around him is the sea of the world, which presses on every side, but cannot invade him, for inside there burns the sacred light of Christ, possessing which no man need be afraid of the surging billows around, but rejoice that with the oil of grace which Christ pours into his heart he can show to those who are of the world the life of righteousness."

A Wife's Prayers Answered.—A Missionary among railway men relates: "Some time ago I knew a railway man who prided himself upon not being too religious, and that he had never done any one any harm, and had always paid his way scrupulously. If, however, he was spoken to about his soul, he would always remark, 'These things are all very well for women, or people about to die, but I am young, and want to see a bit of life.' God had blessed this man with a Christian wife, who ceased not to pray for his conversion. While he was with his worldly companions she was on her knees at home in the small hours of the morning, praying that in His own good time God would show to her husband the error of his way. She prayed in faith, and the answer came, but not in the way she expected. One dark, stormy night, as her husband was busy in switching operations at one of our large stations, he was suddenly cut down by a passing train, which severed a limb. If it had not been for prompt assistance he would probably have bled to death; but he was conveyed immediately to the hospital. His first words upon regaining consciousness were, 'I thank God I am not in eternity, for I am not ready.' For the first time in his life he prayed. 'Almighty God,' he said, 'Thou who hast miraculously saved my life to my wife and family, hear my prayer. If thou wilt forgive my past sins and raise me up, Thee will I serve all the days of my life, whether they be few or many, and I will try to love Thee. Oh! my Saviour, save me—save me! O Lord, save even me!' Then he broke down and wept bitterly. The Holy Spirit was at work in his soul, for soon a happy calmness came over him. He saw Jesus as his Saviour, and knew that his sins were forgiven. The next day he opened his heart to a friend, who talked and prayed with him, and from that day to this he has never doubted either his own conversion or the power of the Lord Jesus Christ to save the worst of men."

"JERUSALEM, JERUSALEM!"

Dr. Talmage expected to be in Jerusalem on Sunday last, December 8, 1889, and to preach there. The subject he selected for his discourse was the exclamation of the Saviour as He beheld the city and wept over it.

"Jerusalem! Jerusalem!" Matt. 23: 37.

The Associations of the City with the Past—Solomon the Magnificent—His Honors and Possessions—Not a Happy Man—The Miseries of Royalty—Solomon's Wealth and Wisdom—David a Better Man—His Conflict with Absalom—A Grand Association—Christ's Entry Into the City—His Only Day of Pomp—A Scene of Blood—Christ's Humanity—The City a Symbol of Heaven—A Quaint Version of a Hymn.

THIS exclamation burst from Christ's lips as He came in sight of this great city, and, although things have marvelously changed, who can visit Jerusalem to-day without having its mighty past roll over him, and ordinary utterance must give place for the exclamatory as we cry, O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! Disappointed with the Holy Land many have been, and I have heard good friends say that their ardor about sacred places had been so dampened that they were sorry they ever visited Jerusalem. But with me are a rapture, a solemnity, an overwhelming emotion. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem! The procession of kings, conquerors, poets and immortal men and women pass before me as I stand here. Among the throng are Solomon, David, and Christ. Yes, through these streets and amid these surroundings rode Solomon, that wonder of splendor and wretchedness. It seemed as if the world exhausted itself on that man. It wove its brightest flowers into his garland. It set its richest gems in his coronet. It pressed the rarest wine to his lips. It robed him in the purest purple and embroidery. It cheered him with the sweetest music in that land of harps. It greeted him with the gladdest laughter that ever leaped from mirth's lip. It sprinkled his cheek with spray from the brightest fountains. Royalty had no dominion, wealth no luxury, gold no glitter, flowers no sweetness, song no melody, light no radiance, upholstery no gorgeousness, waters no gleam, birds no plumage, prancing coursers no mettle, architecture no grandeur but it was all his.

The City and its Surroundings

Across the thick grass of the lawn, fragrant with tufts of camphire from Engedi, fell the long shadows of trees brought from distant forests. Fish pools, fed by artificial channels that brought the streams from hills far away, were perpetually ruffled with fins, and golden scales shot from water cave to water cave with endless dive and swirl, attracting the gaze of foreign potentates. Birds that had been brought from foreign aviaries glanced and fluttered among the foliage, and called to their mates far beyond the sea. From there came up the neighing of twelve thousand horses, standing in blankets of Tyrian purple, chewing their bits over troughs of gold, waiting for the king's orders to be brought out in front of the palace, when the official dignitaries would leap into the saddle for some grand parade, or, harnessed to some of the fourteen hundred chariots of the king, the fiery chargers with flaunting mane and throbbing nostril would make the earth jar with the tramp of hoofs, and the thunder of wheels. While within and without the palace you could not think of a single luxury that could be added, or of a single splendor that could be kindled. Down on the banks of the sea the dry docks of Ezion-geber rang with the hammers of the shipwrights, who were constructing larger vessels for a still wider commerce, for all lands and climes were to be robbed to make up Solomon's glory. No rest till his keels shall cut every sea, his axmen hew every forest, his archers strike every rare wing, his fishermen whip every stream, his merchants trade in every bazaar, and his name be honored by every tribe.

The Royal Stables

"Well," you say, "if there is any man happy, he ought to be." But I hear him coming out through the palace, and see his robes actually incrustated with jewels, as he stands in the front and looks out upon the vast domain. What does he say? King Solomon, great is your dominion, great is your honor, great is your joy? No. While standing here amidst all the splendor, the tears start and his heart breaks, and he exclaims: "Vanity of vanities; all is vanity." What!

Solomon Not Happy Yet?

No, not happy. The honors and the emoluments of this world bring so many cares with them that they bring also torture and disquietude. Pharaoh sits on one of the highest earthly eminences, yet he is miserable because there are some people in his realm that do not want any longer to make bricks. The head of Edward I. aches under his crown because the people will not pay the taxes, and Llewellyn, Prince of Wales, will not do him homage, and Wallace will be a hero. Frederick William III. of Prussia, is miserable because France wants to take the Prussian provinces. The world is not large enough for Louis XIV. and William III. The ghastliest suffering, the most shriveling fear, the most rending jealousies, the most gigantic disquietude, have walked amidst obsequious courtiers, and been clothed in royal apparel, and sat on judgment seats of power.

Honor and truth and justice cannot go so high up in authority as to be beyond the range of human assault. The pure and the good in all ages have been who cry out: "Not this man, but Barabbas. Now, Barabbas was a robber." By honesty, by Christian principle, I would have you seek for the favor and the confidence of your fellow men; but do not look upon some high position as though that were always sunshine. The mountains of earthly honor are, like the mountains of Switzerland, covered with perpetual ice and snow. Having obtained the confidence and love of your associates, be content with such things as you have. You brought nothing into the world, and it is very certain you can carry nothing out. "Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils." There is an honor worth possessing, but it is an honor that comes from God. This day rise up and take it. "Behold what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God." Who aspires not for that royalty? Come now, and be kings and priests unto God and the Lamb.

Execrated by the Mob

Wealth and Knowledge.

If wealth and wisdom could have satisfied a man, Solomon would have been satisfied. To say that Solomon was a millionaire, gives but a very imperfect idea of the property he inherited from David, his father. He had at his command gold to the value of six hundred and eighty million pounds, and he had silver to the value of one billion, twenty-nine million, three hundred and seventy-seven pounds sterling. The Queen of Sheba made him a nice little present of seven hundred and twenty thousand pounds, and Hiram made him a present of the same amount. If he had lost the value of a whole realm out of his pocket, it would have hardly been worth his while to stoop down and pick it up.

He wrote one thousand and five songs. He wrote three thousand proverbs. He wrote about almost everything. The Bible says distinctly he wrote about plants, from the cedar of Lebanon to the hyssop that groweth out of the wall, and about birds and beasts and fishes. No doubt he put off his royal robes, and put on hunter's trappings, and went out with his arrows to bring down the rarest specimens of birds; and then with his fishing apparatus he went down to the stream to bring up the denizens of the deep, and plunged into the forest and found the rarest specimens of flowers: and then he came back to his study and wrote books about zoölogy, the science of animals; about ichthyology, the science of fishes; about ornithology, the science of birds; about botany, the science of plants, Yet, notwithstanding all his wisdom and wealth, behold his wretchedness, and let him pass on. Did any other city ever behold so wonderful a man? O Jerusalem, Jerusalem!

But here passes through these streets, as I imagine I see him, quite as wonderful a man.

A Far Better Man,

David, the conqueror, the king, the poet. Can it be that I am in the very city where he lived and reigned? David, great for power and great for grief. He was wrapped up in his boy Absalom. He was a splendid boy, judged by the rules of worldly criticism. From the crown on his head to the sole of his foot there was not a single blemish. The Bible says that he had such a luxuriant shock of hair that, when once a year it was shorn, what was cut off weighed over three pounds. But, notwithstanding all his brilliancy of appearance, he was a bad boy, and broke his father's heart. He was plotting to get the throne of Israel. He had marshaled an army to overthrow his father's government. The day of battle had come. The conflict was begun. David sat in his refuge waiting for tidings of

The Conflict.

Oh, how rapidly his heart beat with emotion. Two great questions were to be decided: the safety of his boy, and the continuance of the throne of Israel. After awhile, a servant, standing on the top of the house, looks off, and he sees some one running. He is coming with great speed, and the man on the top of the house announces the coming of the messenger, and the father watches and waits, and as soon as the messenger from the field of battle comes with hailing distance the father cries out. Is it a question in regard to the establishment of his throne? Does he say, "Have the armies of Israel been victorious? Am I to continue in my imperial authority? Have I overthrown my enemies?" Oh no. There is one question that springs from his heart to the lip, and springs from the lip into the ear of the besweated and bedusted messenger flying from the battle-field. "Is the young man Absalom safe?"

When it was told to David that the King, though his armies had been victorious, his son had been slain, the father turned his back upon the congratulations of the nation, and went up the stairs of his palace, his heart breaking as he went, wringing his hands sometimes, and then again pressing them against his temples, as though he would press them in, crying, "O Absalom! my son! my son! Would God I had died for thee, oh Absalom! my son! my son! Stupendous grief of David resounding through all succeeding ages. This was the city that heard the woe. Oh Jerusalem, Jerusalem!

I am also thrilled and overpowered with the remembrance that yonder, where now stands the Mohammedan mosque, stood

The Temple That Christ Visited.

Solomon's temple had stood there, but Nebuchadnezzar thundered it down. Zerubbabel's temple had stood there, but that had been prostrated. Then Herod built a temple, because he was fond of great architecture, and he wanted the preceding temples to seem insignificant. Put eight or ten modern cathedrals together, and they would not equal that structure. It covered nineteen acres. There were marble pillars supporting roofs of cedar, and silver tables on which stood golden cups, and there were carvings exquisite, and inscriptions resplendent, glittering balustrades, and ornamented gateways. The building of this temple kept ten thousand workmen busy forty-six years. Stupendous pile of pomp and magnificence! But the material and architectural grandeur of the building were very tame compared with the spiritual meaning of its altars and holy of holies, and the overwhelming significance of its ceremonies. Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem!

But, standing in this old city, all other facts are eclipsed when we think that near here our blessed Lord was born, that up and down the streets of this city He walked, and that in the outskirts of it He died. Here was His only day of triumph, and His assassination. One day in this old Jerusalem is at the tiptop of excitement.

Christ has been doing some remarkable works, and asserting very high authority. The police court has issued papers for His arrest, for this thing must be stopped, as the very Government is imperiled. News comes that last night this stranger arrived at a suburban village, and that he is stopping at the house of a man whom He had resuscitated after four days' sepulture. Well, into the streets, some with the idea of helping in the arrest of this Stranger when He arrives, and others expecting that on the morrow He will come into the town, and by some supernatural force oust the municipal and royal authorities, and take everything in His own hands. They pour out of the city gates until the procession reaches to the village. They come all around about the house where the stranger is stopping, and peer into the doors and windows that they may get one glimpse of Him, or hear the hum of His voice. The police are not make the arrest, because He has somehow won the affections of all the people.

The People Rush Out

Oh, it is a lively night in yonder Bethany! The heretofore quiet village is filled with uproar and outcry, and loud discussion about the strange-acting countryman. I do not think there was any sleep in that house that night where the Stranger was stopping. Although He came in weary, He finds no rest, though for once in His lifetime He had a pillow. But the morning dawns, the olive gardens wave in the light, and all along yonder road, reaching over the top of Olivet toward this city, there is a vast swaying crowd of wondering people. The is wild, as the stranger steps out beside an unbroken colt that had never been mounted, and after His friends had strewn their garments on the beast for a saddle the Saviour mounts it, and the populace, excited and shouting and everish, push on back toward this city of Jerusalem. Let none jeer now, or scoff at this rider, for the populace will trample him under foot in an instant. There is one long shout of two miles, and as far as the eye can reach you see ravings of demonstrations and approval. There was something in the rider's visage, something in His majestic brow, something in His princely behavior, that stirs up the enthusiasm of the people. They run up against the beast and try to pull the rider off into their arms, and carry on their shoulders the illustrious Stranger. The populace are so excited that they hardly know what to do with themselves, and some rush up to the roadside trees and wrench off branches and throw them in His way; and others doff their garments, what though they be new and costly, and spread them for a carpet for the conqueror to ride over. "Hosanna!" cry the people at the foot of the hill. "Hosanna!" cry the people all up and down the mountain.

Excitement Around the Cottage

The Procession

as now come to the brow of yonder Olivet. Magnificent prospect reaching out in every direction—vineyards, olive groves, jutting rock, silvery Siloam, and, above all, rising on its throne of hills, this most highly honored city of all the earth, Jerusalem. Christ there, in the midst of the procession, looks off and sees here portressed gates, and yonder the circling wall, and here the towers blazing in the sun, Phasaeus and Mariamne. Yonder is Hippicus, the King's castle. Looking along in the range of the larger branch of that olive tree, you see the mansions of the merchant princes. Through this cleft in the limestone rock you see the palace of the richest trafficker in all the earth. He has made his money by selling Tyrian purple. Behold now the temple! Clouds of smoke lifting from the shimmering roof, while the building rises up beautiful, grand, majestic, the architectural skill and glory of the earth lifting themselves there in one triumphant doxology, the frozen prayer of all nations.

The crowd looked around to see exhilaration and transport in the face of Christ. Oh no! Out from amid the gates and the domes, and the palaces, there arose a vision of this city's sin, and of this city's doom, which obliterated the landscape from horizon to horizon, and He burst into tears, crying: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem!" But that was that Jesus saw in and around this city. Yet He walked the streets of this city the loveliest and most majestic being that the world ever saw, or ever will see. Publius Lentulus, in a letter to the Roman senate, describes Him as "a man of stature somewhat tall, His hair the color of a chestnut fully ripe, plain to the ears, whence downward it is more orient, curling and waving about the shoulders; in the midst of His forehead is a stream, or partition of His hair; forehead plain, and very delicate; His face without spot or wrinkle, a lovely red; His nose and mouth so forked as nothing can be represented; His beard thick, in color like His hair—not very long; His eyes gray, quick, and clear." He must die. The French army in Italy found a brass plate on which was a copy of His death warrant, signed by John Zerubbabel, Raphael Robani, Daniel Robani, and Capet.

The Only Day of Pomp

Sometimes men on the way to the scaffold have been rescued by the mob. No such attempt was made in this case, for the mob were against Him. From 9 in the morning till 3 in the afternoon Jesus hung a-dying in the outskirts of this city. It was

A Scene of Blood!

We are so constituted that nothing is so exciting as blood. It is not the child's cry in the street that so arouses you as the crimson dripping from its lip. In the dark hall, seeing the finger-marks of blood on the plastering, you cry: "What terrible deed has been done here?" Looking upon this suspended victim of the cross, we thrill with the sight of blood—blood dripping from thorn and nail, blood rushing upon His cheek, blood saturating His garments, blood gathered in a pool beneath. It is called an honor to have in one's veins the blood of the house of Stuart, or of the house of Hapsburg. Is it nothing when I point you to the outpouring blood of the King of the universe?

In England the name of Henry was so great that its honors were divided among different reigns. It was Henry the First, and Henry the Second, and Henry the Third. In France the name of Louis was so favorably regarded that it was Louis the First, Louis the Second, Louis the Third, and so on. But the King who walked these streets was Christ the First, Christ the Last, and Christ the Only. "King eternal, immortal." Through the indulgences of the royal family the physical life degenerates, and some of the kings have been almost imbecile, and their bodies weak, and their blood thin and watery; but the crimson life that flowed upon Calvary had in it the health of immortal God.

Tell it now to all the earth and to all the heavens—Jesus our King is sick with His last sickness. Let couriers carry the swift dispatch. His pains are worse; He is breathing a last groan; through His body quivers the last anguish; the King is dying; the King is dead! It is said that some religionists make too much of

The Humanity of Christ.

I respond, that we make too little. If some Roman surgeon, standing under the cross, had caught one drop of the blood on his hand and analyzed it, it would have been found to have the same plasma, the same disk, the same fibrin, the same albumen. It was unmistakably human blood. It is a man that hangs there. His bones are of the same material as ours. His nerves are sensitive like ours. If it were an angel being despoiled I would not feel it so much, for it belongs to a different order of beings. But my Saviour is a man, and my whole sympathy is aroused. I can imagine how the spikes felt—how hot the temples burned—what deathly sickness seized His heart—how mountain and city and mob swam away from His dying vision—something of the meaning of that cry for help that makes the blood of all the ages curdle with horror: "My God! my God! why hast Thou forsaken Me?"

Forever with all these scenes of a Saviour's suffering will this city be associated. Here His trial and His death. O Jerusalem, Jerusalem!

I am thrilled with the fact that this city is

A Symbol of Heaven

which is only another Jerusalem, "The New Jerusalem!" And this thought has kindled the imagination of all the sacred poets. I am glad that Horatio Bonar, the Scotch hymnist, rummaged among old manuscripts of the British Museum until he found that hymn in ancient spelling, parts of which we have in mutilated form in our modern hymn-books, but the quaint power of which we do not get in our versions:

Hierusalem, my happy home!

When shall I come to thee?

When shall my sorrows have an end,

Thy joys when shall I see?

Noe dampish mist is scene in thee,

Noe colde nor darksome night;

There everie soule shines as the sunne,

There God himselfe gives light.

Thy walls are made of pretious stones,

Thy bulwarkes diamondes square;

Thy gates are of right orient pearle,

Exceedinge riche and rare.

Thy turrets and thy pinnacles

With carbuncles doe shine;

Thy verrie streets are paved with gould,

Surpassinge cleare and fine.

Thy houses are of yvorie,

Thy windows crystal cleare;

Thy tyles are made of beaten gould,

O God! that I were there.

Our sweete is mixt with bitter gaule,

Our pleasure is but paine;

Our joyes scarce last the lookeing on,

Our sorrowes stille remaine.

But there they live in such delight,

Such pleasure and such play,

As that to them a thousand yeares.

Doth seme as yesterday.

Thy gardens and thy gallant walkes

Continually are greene;

There grow such sweete and pleasant flowers

As no where else are scene.

There trees for evermore beare fruite

And evermore doe spring;

There evermore the angels sit,

And evermore doe singe.

Hierusalem! my happie home!

Would God I were in thee!

Would God my woes were at an end,

Thy ioyes that I might see!

AN ESCAPE FROM DROWNING.

In a letter from Mr. Shearer, of the Honan Province, in China, he relates the following incident: "One of the deacons, Mr. Li, was telling Mr. Johnston of a very narrow escape he had in crossing the river yesterday. He was in one of the small ferry-boats, when suddenly a large sailing-boat was seen bearing right down upon them. They seemed to be in such imminent danger that the passengers in the ferry-boat were pale with terror, and the people on the banks were breathlessly watching and expecting to see the small boat go down. Li himself, standing up in the boat, earnestly breathed a few words of prayer to God to save them, and suddenly a gust of wind, just in the nick of time, blew the large sailing-boat over on her side, and enabled them to turn so sharply that they just cleared the small boat, but only by about a finger's breadth. The natives in the ferry-boat evidently recognized a miraculous intervention to save their lives, and one of them asking why it could be that Heaven had interfered when there was no one of consequence on board? This was a splendid opportunity, and old Mr. Li seized it in his simple way, and, as he told us, said, 'No one of consequence on board! Do you know whose books these are?' pointing to a bag full of books and tracts that he was carrying over his shoulder. 'These are God's books,'"

CLOSE OF SOLOMON'S REIGN.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for December 22, 1 Kings 11:26-43, Golden Text, Eccl. 12:13.

Was Solomon Saved?—The Sorrows of His Latter Days—Self-Gratification an Ignoble Aim in Life—A Time of Sharp Chastening—A Series of Rebellions—His Rival, Hadad—Jeroboam's Rise—Ahiyah's Prediction—Its Effect on Jeroboam—A Warning—Solomon Seeks to Kill Him.

WAS Solomon a saved man? Some will say, one who was once saved and born again, never can be lost. Others will say, no man dying in a state of rebellion against God can be saved, even though he may have truly known the Lord. There is no distinct intimation in Scripture that Solomon ever fully returned to the Lord, repented, and was restored. But then, on the contrary, there is no intimation that he did not. Let us study the dealings of God with him, that we may ascertain all we can learn from Scripture about the matter.

In Psalm 73 the writer was perplexed when he saw the prosperity of the wicked; it seemed to him, for the time, as though God had put a premium upon wickedness, and as though it answered better to be wicked than to serve God. "I was envious at the foolish," he says, "when I saw the prosperity of the wicked, for there are no bands in their death; but their strength is firm. They are not in trouble as other men; neither are they plagued like other men. Therefore pride compasseth him about as a chain; violence covereth them as a garment." The Psalmist found the condition of God's people quite another. "His people return hither; and waters of a full cup are wrung out to them." And he came to the conclusion, "Verily, I have cleansed my heart in vain, and washed my hands in innocency. For all the day long have I been plagued, and chastened every morning." In his perplexity he went into the sanctuary of God,

"Then Understood I Their End."

Surely Thou didst set them in slippery places: Thou castedst them down to destruction. How are they brought into desolation as in a moment! they are utterly consumed with terror." Thus the Psalmist learned, and we may learn, too, that temporal prosperity is no sign of God's approval. Also, that the people of God are a tried people, and that the end of the wicked who live in rebellion against God, is destruction.

We cannot but see that the close of Solomon's life was full of trouble and sorrows; surely, the Lord was chastening His wayward child, that He might bring him home to Himself. Many were his enemies when he departed from the Lord and gave way to idolatry, and we cannot be far wrong in thinking that when he wrote the book of Ecclesiastes [if he did write it] his fame and popularity must have considerably declined. In his case, there was a "sudden destruction," as with Pharaoh, the men of Sodom, and the inhabitants of the antediluvian world; but there was everything to show him, when the Lord raised him up enemies, that he was under God's displeasure. "The Lord was angry with Solomon, because his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel, which had appeared unto him twice."

Nothing can satisfy a heart which has known communion with God, and turns back to seek satisfaction in something lower. Solomon sought to sound the depths of earthly joy and pleasure, and his summing up of it all is only this, "Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher, vanity of vanities; all is vanity." But oh how different is the view of life from the Christian standpoint! Solomon sought to shew how much the gratification of the senses, the intellect, etc., would satisfy a human soul, and he found it utterly inadequate, because man was created with

A Nobler Purpose Than Self-Gratification.

Christ died for us, "That they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again." (11 Cor. 5:15.) So living, how do things appear? No more as "vanity and vexation of spirit;" "but we know that all things work together for good to them that love God." "All things are for your sakes." "Rejoice in the Lord alway!" "God is able to make all grace abound toward you, that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work." (Rom. 8:28; 11 Cor. 4:15; Phil. 4:4; 11 Cor. 4:8.) Solomon came to the conclusion, "The eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing" (Ecc. 1:12); and oh how true this is! The eye and the ear and all our members were created, not to minister to us, but to God. "Yield yourselves unto God as those that are alive from the dead, and your members as instruments of righteousness unto God."

We cannot believe it was God who led this wisest of men into the course he pursued, of putting all earthly things to the test; it was a dangerous experiment, and showed that his early simplicity—which he had when he said, "I am but a little child, I know not how to go out or come in;" (1 Kings 3:7)—had left him. He says now, "I gave my heart to seek and search out by wisdom," etc.; "I communed with mine own heart," etc.; "I gave my heart to know wisdom, and to know madness and folly," etc.; "I said in my heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth," etc.; "I sought in mine heart to give myself unto wine," etc.; (Ecc. 1:13, 16, 17; 2:1, 3.) No wonder that all his communing with his own heart, instead of with God, only brought him vanity and vexation of spirit, and made him think there was "no profit under the sun." No wonder he hated life, no wonder he went about to cause his heart to despair of all the labor which he took under the sun! (Ecc. 2:17, 20.) Oh how we learn from Solomon that "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." (Luke 12:15.)

But God overrules everything for the good of His children; and probably Solomon's very despair, his very satiation of earth, may have made room for a deeper knowledge of God than he had had before. In all this, God was pursuing him, compassing him about, that He might conquer him from his self life to Himself. The temptation to self-exaltation and self-dependence to a man who was wiser than all men, and whose popularity was only bounded by the world itself, must have been very great. But Solomon

Did Not Die in His Glory.

What human being could have borne it for a lifetime? His greatness came down, little by little, and his old age was marked not only by his sad idolatry, but by the harass of enemies. God had declared to him that because of his idolatry, he would rend the kingdom from him, and give it to his servant, leaving one tribe to his son for David's sake. Solomon knew enough of God to be sure that He would keep His word; and when one rebellion after another broke out in Israel, he never knew whether this or that one would be his successful rival. But Solomon, in all his wisdom, did not see the love which was behind all this trial, he did not see how his faithful God was shewing him his own heart and his utter nothingness.

The first rival was Hadad the Edomite, who was of the seed royal of Edom, and who, when David had depopulated the land of Edom in the days of Hadad's father, fled for refuge with some of his father's servants into Egypt. Egypt was at that time as much a place of refuge for unfortunate royalty as England has been of later years. Edom was no place for Hadad. Israelitish garrisons were in every town, and all the men of his father's generation had been cut off. (1 Sam. 8:14.) But Hadad did not forget his parentage. No doubt there was something interesting and princely in the youthful exile, and he found favor with Pharaoh, who "gave him a house, and appointed him victuals, and gave him land." The favor in which Pharaoh held him increased until he gave him the sister of his own Queen in marriage, and thus, by marriage, he became equal with Solomon himself. When he heard that David was dead, and Joab also, he returned into his own land. Pharaoh was loath to part with him, but Hadad persisted; and that he succeeded in re-establishing the kingdom of Edom is proved from the fact that the Edomites and men of Mount Seir reappeared fighting against Israel in Jehoshaphat's time. And doubtless he may have influenced Shishak the King of Egypt, to make war on Rehoboam Solomon's son. (11 Chron. 12:2-12.)

Rezon, also, who reigned over Syria, was enemy to Solomon. Thus north and south there were hostile powers, which, no doubt, interfered with the commerce which Solomon established in the early part of his reign. He was prosperous while the King depended upon him, and obeyed God, but God must show him all his wisdom, all his wealth, all his honor, and his prosperity, without God were but temporal and subject to decay.

Solomon's Worst Enemy,

however, was Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, own servant. This man was the son of a widow woman, and probably a good son to his mother. He was "a mighty man of valor, and Solomon, seeing the young man that he was distrustful, he made him ruler over all the chariotry of the house of Joseph." Jeroboam had assisted Solomon in some of his public works, one of which was repairing the breaches in the City of David. On Jeroboam's return, the Prophet Ahiyah found him in the way; and he had clad himself with a new garment, "and the two were alone in the field; and Ahiyah caught the new garment that was on him, and rent it into twelve pieces; and he said to Jeroboam, 'Take these ten pieces; for thus saith the Lord, God of Israel, Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee. (But he shall have one tribe to my servant David's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake, the city which I have chosen out of the tribes of Israel); because that and have worshipped Ashtoreth, the goddess of the Zidonians, Chemosh, the god of the Moabites, and Milcom, the god of the children of Ammon; and have not walked in My statutes, do that which is right in Mine eyes, and to keep My statutes and judgments, as did David my father." This was as startling an announcement as that of Samuel to Saul, when he anointed him king, or that of the same Samuel to the young shepherd lad David, when he came for keeping the sheep, in answer to the prophetic hasty message, and was anointed "king in the midst of his brethren." But David's sense of dependence upon God increased with his responsibility; and his long education in the court of Saul and in the wilderness went far to fit him for his kingly duties, and to be the father to his people. How would Jeroboam act? The unexpected call would either puff him up with self-conceit, or humble him to the dust with the sense of his unfitness for the post to which God called him. Ahiyah told him from the Lord that the one tribe should be left to the house of David, "whom I chose because he kept My commandments and My statutes." What an appeal to Jeroboam to do likewise! "Unto his will I give one tribe, that David My servant may have always a light before Me in Jerusalem, the city which I have chosen to put My name there."

They Have Forsaken Me,

But God did not simply appeal to Jeroboam through the example of David, He made a personal appeal to him: "I will take thee, and thou shalt reign according to all that thy soul desireth, and shalt be king over Israel. And thou shalt be, if thou wilt hearken unto all that I command thee, and wilt walk in My ways, and do what is right in My sight, to keep My statutes and commandments, as David My servant did, I will be with thee, and build thee a sure house, a built for David, and will give Israel unto thee." Jeroboam with God might have been a light in the world in his generation. Oh how grievous to think it was this man who had this call to us we hear of again and again in the history of Israel as "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat,"

"Which Made Israel to Sin!"

Has not God foreknowledge? Was He not aware that Jeroboam would fail? "What I thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know."

hereafter." (John 13: 7.) Wicked kings may be used to educate faithful people, and wicked people to educate faithful kings. Bad parents are sometimes used of God to throw their children more immediately on Him, and bad children are the greatest humiliation and discipline which good parents can know. No man need be evil, but God makes even the wrath of the wicked to praise Him.

Solomon came to know of Ahijah's mission to Jeroboam. God had prepared him beforehand, but when it came to this, that the man who was to reign over the larger half of his divided kingdom was living, and already designated by God, Solomon could not accept the ministration, "he sought to kill Jeroboam." God would not permit this, and from this time there is silence about this once great king. Let us learn the lesson, and be little, take up the Baptist's word, He must increase, but I must decrease."

THE LATE MRS. WEBSTER KIRKHAM.

(See portrait on page 700.)

MANY of our readers will remember the services held in this country in 1884 by the eloquent and devoted lady evangelist whose portrait appears on page 796. She was then Miss Laurie McLatchie. A sketch of her life and labors was published in this journal at that time. Shortly after her return to England she became the wife of Webster Kirkham, Esq., of New Barnet, near London. She continued her work for the Master, and lost none of her interest in evangelical effort by her marriage. A few months ago her friends observed that she suffered almost continually from pain and weakness. Skilful medical assistance was secured, and when her complaint was diagnosed as cancer, the most eminent specialists were consulted. They held out no hopes of recovery. Her case was made the subject of special prayer, and it was followed by such relief from pain, and so marked a mitigation of the most distressing symptoms of her disease, that she and her friends were most devoutly thankful to God for His merciful interposition. She was staying at the time at the famous health resort of Bournemouth, and the physicians attributed the unexpected improvement to the salubrious air of that place. "No," said the patient, "it is God who has done it."

For some weeks the intense and increasing pain which marks the fatal progress of cancer, was absent, and the local symptoms so completely disappeared that the loving friends who surrounded her began to hope for her complete restoration to health. But they were disappointed. She suffered a relapse, from which she did not rally; and on Sunday, November 10, she peacefully passed away. To the last, however, she was spared the agonizing pain which usually accompanies cancer, and retained her calmness of mind and the sweet peace which springs from faith in Christ.

Laurie McLatchie was a native of Scotland. Her parents were remarkable for their earnest piety and their concern for the salvation of all about them, especially for that of their own children. In answer to their prayers, their daughter Laurie gave her heart to God in her early girlhood, and almost immediately began to work for Jesus. Her efforts were confined to women's meetings and the homes of the poor. She assisted Mrs. Ranyard in her Bible work in London, and superintended the labors of four Bible-women. Subsequently she assisted Dr. Lyell, a medical missionary who labored among the poor in Glasgow. There she not only learned to dispense medicines, but visited the poor in their homes, and did not shrink from the disgusting sights and smells which only those know who have been in such places as the Havannah and the Vennells and other huge tenement houses of Glasgow. Her wretched patients grew to love her dearly. Her sweet feminine ministrations, her concern for their physical comfort, and, more than all, the spiritual light and life to which they were led by God's blessing on her teachings, led to effusions of grateful affection that went to her heart.

She was engaged in this Christ-like work when the illness of a lady-evangelist involved the disappointment of a large audience in Greenock and the cessation of a very blessed work of grace. Miss McLatchie was urged to step into the vacant place, but her natural modesty made her shrink from any kind of publicity, and she declined. She continued firm in her refusal until, by the advice of her pastor, the workers concerned in the mission actually printed handbills announcing that she would speak on a certain night. One of these was placed in her hand, and she was told that she must go. After much prayer she went, and spoke simply and earnestly to the large audience. Five souls were brought to God that night under her presentation of the truth.

From that time forward her course was clearly indicated. Pressing invitations to preach came from other large Scottish towns, and wherever she spoke the Spirit blessed the word. At one service no less than fifty persons were brought to a knowledge of the truth. At some places the work was continued night after night, and the whole town shared in the blessing. Her work extended southward and in Birmingham, Liverpool, and other English towns immense numbers were gathered to hear her, and much good of a permanent kind resulted.

There was a singular charm in her voice which awakened interest at the first words of her sermon. Its peculiar soft, melodious tone was pleasant to the ear, and as it rose and fell in accents of entreaty and pleading, or as she related some pathetic incident in illustration of her subject, the listener was charmed by its musical power and scope. Her manner changed as she proceeded, the natural diffidence and modesty that characterized her opening remarks passed away as she became absorbed in her message, and the eyes would flash and her gestures become animated, while she pleaded with all her soul for her Master with dying sinners. It was a strange sight—that of strong men weeping under her appeals, and careless, jeering men becoming serious, and listening intently to her burning words.

All that is ended now. Her work here is done, save that the life which God used her to impart lives in many a soul and will go on bearing fruit. In her last moments the gospel she had preached to others was her own support. To her beloved brother she said, "It is not rapture that I have; but I have not a particle of fear. I am just resting on the Everlasting Arms; I am safe on the Rock." Her chamber was not like a chamber of suffering. Passages of Scripture which her retentive memory held, dropped from her lips; prayers which spoke of long past intimate communion with God and hymns sweetly sung, made the room a very Bethel, and all that entered it realized that a soul consecrated, chastened, purified was there passing joyfully from scenes of earthly labor into the presence of the King of kings.

A VIRAGO IN A MISSION.

AN evangelist relates the following incident in his work: After a very cheering and happy gospel service at one of the mission-rooms a remarkable-looking woman remained to the prayer-meeting. She was of unusual height and physique, and of equally unusual appearance. Had she been seen in a large town she would have been classed, probably, among the desperadoes. She was a perfect virago to all appearance, and would have made a dangerous antagonist, capable of felling a man with one blow from her powerful arm. Her eyes were red with weeping, and she looked the picture of misery. On being spoken to, she said, between her sobs: "Oh, I be miserable! I be miserable!"

"What makes you miserable?" she was asked. "Oh, I be miserable 'cause I be awfully wicked! I be, sure."

"But Jesus came to save the lost and wretched." "Will 'er save I, do 'ee think? I wish He would; I be miserable."

"We will see what He says," and, opening the Scriptures, the gospel pure and simple was read and explained. Then, on our knees, we told the Lord of her state, and several brethren prayed. While one was praying, she exclaimed, "I'll give up, I will. I just give up to un." She was asked what she meant. "Why, I'll give myself up to un, and believe un, I will; why I do. I be happy, I be a saved; I be, sure."

"What makes you happy, and how do you know you are saved?" I asked.

"Why, I've a geed myself to un, and He've a took me. He said He would, and He've a made me happy."

This was more than six months ago, and on Sunday last, asking her after the service how she was, she replied, as her eyes filled with tears of downright joy, "Oh, I be terrible 'appy! I've a bin 'appy ever since, and I be gwain to stick to un. Nobody shall make me gee un up. I'll never gee un up; no, never! And He'll stick to me, won't He, sir?"

AN INFIDEL'S CONVERSION IN NEW YORK.

AT a meeting in the mission conducted by Mrs. Van Dunn in Bleeker Street, New York, last week an educated man of commanding presence rose, and said he would like to tell the story of his life as an encouragement to others. In the course of his narrative, he said that he had been an infidel of the most obstinate type. Yet he had never been satisfied with his infidelity. A strange sense of needing confirmation had always been upon him. He had read all the books he could find which would tend to prove religion a fraud, and the Bible a lie. This stimulus needed constant repetition, for his uneasiness always returned. He had travelled much, and lost no opportunity of discussing religious questions with men who had made them their study.

On one occasion when in England, he had visited the famous Cardinal Newman. The Cardinal only increased his confusion of mind by citations from the Fathers, and his demand for blind, uncompromising faith in the voice of the Church. No "kindly light" came from that eminent man, nor from other noted preachers, to whom he had listened, and with whom he had conversed. Socialism attracted him, but on studying it he was convinced that it held no hope for humanity. Unless the nature of man was changed, and selfishness eradicated, socialism could not effect a cure of present evils.

One day, while more restless and discontented than usual, he was strolling up the Bowery in New York, when his eye caught the sign outside the Bleeker Street Mission. He thought it was only another fraud, but having nothing particular to do, he entered. He was impressed by the absence of the music and gorgeous ritual with which he had associated religious observance, and still more by the plain, simple words of the leader, and the current of tenderness and love that flowed through them. He waited, according to his usual custom, to hold an argument with the speaker. As she approached him after the meeting, he was conscious of the same kind, friendly influence which had exerted itself during her address.

"But I cannot believe," was his reply to her appeal. "It is a question of fact, and I don't believe your facts, and so I cannot believe your inferences." He expected that she would go over the facts, and adduce proofs; but instead of doing so she asked him to kneel with her in prayer. She prayed that God would reveal Himself to the doubter, and shed His light into the poor, darkened mind. In that hour light came. "I was reconstructed," the man said; "I knew not what it was then, but I know now that I was converted. It was a new birth—no other words cover the ground—it was a complete revolution. I entered into peace, my doubts fled, and from that day I have been a happy man."

Holy Ghost Days. By Mrs. M. Baxter.—A volume containing 144 pages. Price, neatly bound in cloth, 35 cents, including postage. Address Manager CHRISTIAN HERALD, 45 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICES, 45 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.
ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

TERMS AND INSTRUCTIONS.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

New Subscriptions may commence at any time. When no date is specified we begin with the issue of the week in which the subscription is received.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

If a Postal Note or currency is sent, it should always be in a registered letter. Letters can be registered at any office. Subscribers sending money of this kind, and not registering, do it at their own risk. Postage stamps should never be sent if it is possible to remit in any other way.

When Renewing, the fact of its being a renewal should always be stated to prevent errors in dates. Be careful to send in the initials and name to correspond with that on our list, or explain the change. Some time must always necessarily elapse after receipt of money before the date opposite to the name on label can be changed in print.

Receipts are not sent; the receipt of the paper by a subscriber is a sufficient proof that the remittance has been received. If the paper does not arrive promptly, please notify us, that we may see if the address is correctly entered.

Money should always accompany each order, and the order and remittance should be for the same amount. We keep no books for unpaid subscriptions, and cannot, therefore, enter any names without payment.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The President's Message which was Awaited with unusual interest, owing to the dignified silence General Harrison has maintained since his election, proved to be a cautious and conservative document. The President apparently aimed to give Congress information rather than suggestion, and where he does venture to indicate lines of legislation which he would wish to see followed, his suggestions are chiefly those advocated by the Cabinet officers in their reports. In dealing with Tariff Reform, he frankly admits that reductions are necessary, and somewhat vaguely advises that the free list be extended "by placing thereon articles that do not offer injurious competition to such domestic products as our home labor would supply." He opposes the removal of duties on raw materials (which is something of a surprise), and advises the repeal of the tax on tobacco and alcohol used in the arts, as a means of reducing the surplus. The financial part of the message thus puts the President distinctly on record on a crucial question. It shows that he is not in advance of his party, and is certainly indisposed to adopt the principles of many of its members. A remarkable paragraph of the message is that on Immigration. The President advocates radical measures on that subject. He expresses the opinion that applicants for naturalization should be rejected, unless they can satisfy a duly appointed federal officer of their good moral character. He would go further still, for "those who are the avowed enemies of social order, or who come to our shores to swell the injurious influences, or to extend the evil practices of any association that defies our laws should not only be denied citizenship but a domicile." Subsidies to shipping is one important recommendation made by the President, though he limits it to the ships engaged in the traffic between this country and Central and South America, China, Japan, and the Pacific islands. This doubtless was suggested by the assembling of the Pan-American Congress, but it is only a small part of what must be done if the object of summoning that Congress is to be achieved. The question of Trusts was a delicate one to handle, but the President appears to hold decided opinions on the subject, and declares them to be dangerous conspiracies against the public good, and should be made the subject of prohibitory and even penal legislation. This language is directly opposed to the views of Mr. Blaine, who regards them as private affairs with which the Government should not interfere. As to Foreign Relations, it is gratifying to learn that they are generally cordial and friendly, and that "no obstacle is believed to exist that can long postpone the consideration and adjustment of still pending questions upon satisfactory and honorable terms." Among the measures advocated are the Blair Education Bill, International Copyright, a National Bankruptcy law, and an extension of the Pension laws to include honorably discharged soldiers who are in needy circumstances.

The Opening of the First Session of the Fifty-first Congress was a notable event, presenting the unusual spectacle of the harmony of the majority in both branches with each other and with the Executive in party politics. The proceedings of the Senate on the day of opening were, as usual, decorous and dull. The only matter of interest there, was the arrival of four of the Senators from the new States. In the House there was more animation. It had to organize and to elect its Speaker and officers, choose seats and transact the business which will affect the personal comforts and convenience of the members for two years. The election of the Hon. Thomas B. Reed of Maine for Speaker was a foregone conclusion after the Republican caucus had made him the candidate. Mr. Carlisle had the compliment of receiving the Democratic vote, with the exception of one member, who had personal reasons for voting against him. The vote was the first test of strength between the rival parties. It showed that of the members present 166 ranged themselves as Republicans and 155 as Democrats. It was a curious fact that the very first day should witness a bolt. A New York Presbyterian clergyman was nominated for chaplain by the Republican caucus, but when it came to a vote in the House several Republicans absented themselves, and others voted with the Democrats for Dr. Milburn, the blind Chaplain, who was elected by 160 votes to 155.

An Embezzlement Which May Indirectly benefit the country was reported on December 5. The Sergeant-at-Arms informed the Speaker of the House that his cashier had absconded with a large sum of money, estimated at from $70,000 to $100,000. It appears that the Sergeant-at-Arms does what is practically a private banking business with members. Some of them leave their money in his hands for safe-keeping, and many sign receipts for their salary and mileage expenses in advance, and give them to him to collect from the Treasurer. As he had unlimited confidence in his cashier, it was easy for the latter to present the certificates in the Treasurer's office, and draw large sums in readiness to meet the demands of members. He drew thus $132,000 in three days, and departed. How much he paid out legitimately was not known. As the defaulter is probably safe in Canada, the members who may suffer delay in getting their money, and perhaps lose it altogether, may change their opinion about the need of extending the list of extraditable offences, which has been so long urged by bankers and merchants.

The Death of Jefferson Davis in New Orleans, on Friday last, removes the most conspicuous surviving figure associated with the great crisis of our national history. He was eighty-one years of age, and had for some time been in feeble health. No immediate danger, however, was apprehended until the beginning of last week, and even on Thursday it was thought that he might rally. He suffered from a congestive chill on that evening, and from that time he gradually sank. It is gratifying to hear and to read the comments on his life and character which with comparatively few exceptions are evoked in the North by this event. There is an anxiety manifested to do justice to the good traits in the character of the late chief of the Confederacy which is very commendable. Several slanders such as that accusing him of openly rejoicing over the assassination of Lincoln are now contradicted and denounced. Regret is also generally expressed over the hardships of his imprisonment, and it is admitted that he was the victim of the passions which were the natural product of the war. The kindness expressed is personal. For his public career condemnation, of course, was to be expected. In the South probably the judgment will be reversed.

French Sympathy with the Revolution in Brazil was officially expressed last week in the Legislature by the French Secretary of State. Replying to a question on the subject he said that, after the provisional government of Brazil had placed itself in diplomatic communication with the French authorities he had instructed the French agent to continue the same good relations with the Republic that had been maintained with the Empire. The provisional government had received this decision with satisfaction.

Suggestions for the Suppression of the Slave-trade to all Governments claiming territory in Africa have been embodied in a series of resolutions by the Anti-Slavery Conference. The members advocate the establishment by each Government, within its own African territory, of stations with local military forces for the suppression of slavery, the inland stations to be connected with the coast by railways and by steamers on the great lakes; also for the prohibition of the trade in fire-arms in the slave districts, the suppression of cannibalism and the protection of commerce and missions.

A Distressing Accident has Befallen Emin Pasha. On December 5 while at Bagamoyo, he fell from a balcony twenty feet from the ground, and received severe injuries. The Pasha is near-sighted, and from the brief cable dispatch reporting the incident, appears to have mistaken the window and balcony for a door opening into the grounds. He overbalanced and fell upon his head. When found, blood was issuing from his ears, and his right eye was closed. The doctors found that beside a bad fracture of the skull he had sustained internal injuries. Major Wissmann's doctors at once pronounced his case hopeless, but surgeon Parke, who accompanied Stanley in his expedition, thinks his life may yet be saved. It is a strange and sad event that after so many perils, and escaping dangers so terrible he should reach the borders of civilization only to fall in so commonplace a manner.

Mr. Henry M. Stanley Arrived in Zanzibar in safety on December 6, after three years of the most arduous and heroic achievement ever recorded in the annals of exploration. He is astonished himself at what has been done, and, with reverence, acknowledges that he owes his success to the over-ruling and protecting hand of God. Writing, at the request of the correspondent of the New York Herald, who met him at Msuwah, five days' march from Zanzibar, he said: "I am in perfect health, and feel like a laborer of a Saturday evening returning home with his week's work done, his week's wages in his pocket, and glad that to-morrow is the Sabbath." Referring to the crisis when he found that Emin Pasha and his own officer, Jephson, were imprisoned, he says: "Jephson's own letters will describe his anxiety. Not until both were in my camp, and the Egyptian fugitives under our protection did I begin to see that I was only carrying out a higher plan than mine. My own designs were constantly frustrated by unhappy circumstances. I endeavored to steer my course as direct as possible, but there was an unaccountable influence at the helm. I gave as much goodwill to my duties as the strictest honor would compel. My faith that the purity of my motive deserved success was firm, but I have been conscious that the issues of every effort were in other hands." After speaking of the hairbreadth escapes of the expedition, he again reverts to the same conviction: "The vulgar will call it luck. Unbelievers will call it chance, but deep down in each heart remains the feeling that verily there are more things in heaven and earth than are dreamed of in common philosophy." And he concludes his letter with, "Thanks be to God forever and ever."

Dr. Talmage was Blessed by the Pope During his recent visit to Rome. Hearing that a beatification service was to be held in the church of St. Peter, the Brooklyn clergyman, with his party, secured tickets and went to the venerable edifice to witness the ceremony. A dense crowd assembled, drawn by the prospect of seeing the Pope, whose increasing years and physical infirmities have rendered his public appearances very rare of late. Dr. Talmage was wedged in the crowd which was held back by a double row of the Pope's soldiers—the famous stalwart Swiss Guard—who faced each other the whole length of the middle aisle. After waiting more than an hour amid the dense throng, in an atmosphere suggesting the Black Hole of Calcutta, there was an expectant stir in the living mass of perspiring humanity which told that the Pope was coming. First there came about twenty-five cardinals, clad in their magnificent robes. Then came the Pope himself—a delicate, fragile, venerable man, of ascetic appearance. At every step he looked around, and raising his almost transparent hands, uttered benedictions on the bystanders. Dr. Talmage's tall form, towering head and shoulders above those around him, was a conspicuous object, so that if any benefit could have come from the Pope's blessing, he was in a situation to receive it. If the Pope had known the character of the man he was blessing, he would have been sadly conscious that his benediction was wasted in falling on that rocky Protestant soil. But knowing not, he passed on unruffled to the altar, where he prayed in a tone inaudible to the crowd for about fifteen minutes, and then returned as he came.

A Fatal Refuge from a Storm was Taken by a crowd in Massachusetts on December 4. The gathering had been drawn by an auction sale on a farm near Belchertown. The business led them out into the fields away from the farmhouse, and it had barely concluded when a heavy storm broke. As the weather-wise predicted that it would soon be over, the crowd ran for shelter to a cider-mill, which was the nearest shelter. It was a very old structure, and had become rickety. The people filled it, and crowded the upper floor, in which there was a mowing machine and other farm implements. There was a good deal of rough fun indulged in while the people waited for the storm to clear. Their weight and the surging to and fro finished the work that time and dilapidation had begun in the old mill. There were a few warning cracks, and then the whole crazy structure collapsed. The heavy implements falling, with the people, on those below, added to the debris of the mill, caused severe injuries and one death, and it is feared that more will die. There is reason to fear that in the great storm of tribulation that is coming on the earth, many, who now mock at warnings and feel secure in the beliefs which false teachers promulgate, will discover that they are living in a refuge of lies, which the prophet says God will sweep away with His hail. (Isa. 28: 17.)

A Man was Shot by His Own Request in a Dime Museum at Lynn, Mass., on November 28. The man, who called himself "an illusionist," in performing there, announced a trick for which he has become famous among the frequenters of such places. It was to have a rifle loaded under the inspection of the audience, and handed to any person who would volunteer. The person was to fire at the mouth of the performer, who would catch the bullet with his teeth. At Lynn there was some difficulty in getting any one to do the shooting, and the professor was quite pathetic in his request. As he truly said, he had done the trick hundreds of times and he added that there was not the slightest danger. At last a man was persuaded to undertake it. He took steady aim and fired, hitting the "Professor" squarely in the mouth. To the surprise of all present, the shot brought him to the ground, and when they picked him up he was dead. The ball had passed through his mouth and severed the jugular vein. The trick consisted in the performer substituting at the last moment, a paper wad, colored like a bullet for the lead bullet, which, having been passed around for examination, was supposed to be put in the rifle. In this instance he inadvertently reversed the process, putting the paper bullet up his sleeve and the leaden one into the gun. Doubtless, up to this time many persons had regarded the Professor as an extraordinary man, really doing what he professed to do. The credulity of the public in respect to wonderful feats is surprising, and the Spiritualists have used it to lead many astray. The last performer of wonders will be he whose signs and wonders will, if it were possible, deceive the very elect. (Matt. 24: 24.) Credulity in our day, however, produces more disastrous consequences in matters of doctrine among those who disregard the apostolic warning not to be carried away by "the sleight of men and cunning craftiness whereby they lie in wait to deceive." (Eph. 4: 14.)

An Amateur Surgical Operation was Performed recently by the aid of an electric dynamo. A stove fitter was fixing a new bottom to a grate when, in chipping it to make it fit, a splinter of iron flew off and struck him in the eye. He was unable to extract it, and the eye soon became intensely inflamed and gave him acute pain. An electrical engineer saw him, and, learning the cause of his agony, took him into his work room, where a large dynamo was revolving. He held the sufferer's face as near to the dynamo as he could with safety, and in a few moments the magnetism that it generated exerted its power on the splinter of iron in the eye and finally drew it out. The sufferer's pain was relieved instantly, and in a short time the eye completely recovered its usual appearance and power. When the spiritual eyesight is impaired by some cherished sin, or in the eager pursuit of worldly business or pleasure, there is no remedy for it but in near contact with Christ whose love extracts the offending evil and purges His child of the dross. (Ps. 139: 23, 24.)

A Crime in No-Man's-Land is Likely to Involve serious consequences to the perpetrators. Since 1850 a strip of land in the Southwest, of one-half degree north and south, and three degrees east and west, was the only spot on the American soil where there was supposed to be neither law nor the shadow of authority. Some time ago a sheriff and some of his men were killed in that lawless locality. About thirty men were arrested for the crime, but they have succeeded in avoiding trial through there being no State authority having jurisdiction over the scene of the murder. Their most recent stratagem was an appeal on habeas corpus to the United States Circuit Court at Topeka, Kan. They appear to have obtained precisely what they did not want. Justice Brewer, who presided in that court, was not satisfied with deciding that they were being wrongfully held by the Kansas authorities, but obligingly settled the tribunal entitled to try them. Though admitting that no State had jurisdiction in the premises, the United States could see to their case. They are therefore to be arraigned before the United States Court of Paris, Tex. That is satisfactory to the public, if not to the criminals. They, like men in more civilized districts who have enough knowledge of the law to avoid breaking it while committing wicked wrongs upon others, expected to escape punishment altogether. Sometimes they do in this life, for there are many spheres of wrongdoing which seem to lie in a No-Man's-Land, but in the next life they must appear before the God who has jurisdiction throughout the universe, and give account of the deeds done in the body. (Col. 3: 25.)

Two Thousand Cats Were Let Loose from a building in New York on November 29. It was the scheme of an enterprising advertising agent, to publish a theatrical announcement. He advertised that he would buy all cats presented at a certain hour at the theatre door. Over 2,000 were brought, and the vendors were offered the choice of a dime or a ticket to the show. The animals were taken in, and a conspicuous tag, briefly describing the attraction to be placed on the stage, was securely fastened to the protesting creatures. They were then turned out in a body, and went scouring down Broadway and through the cross streets at full speed. The agent being anxious to learn the effect of his stratagem, employed boys to follow some of the animals. They reported that the cats soon recovered from their scare, and proceeded at a more leisurely pace. Some would make long halts, and every passer-by would read the tag. Many of them found their way to their homes at long distances from the theatre, and in making the circuit of the city attracted attention to themselves and the advertisement which they carried. Altogether, the agent considers the scheme a success, and anticipates a harvest from his investment. It is a pity that the tact and energy which such men exert in promoting the success of worldly amusements so seldom characterize Christian workers in interesting the masses in gospel efforts; but "the children of this world are in their generation wiser than the children of light." A time will come, however, when every agency will be sanctified and consecrated to the Master's use, and then the bells on the horses will bear the inscription, "Holiness unto the Lord." (Zech. 14: 20.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. M. Baxter has been lecturing in Hull on Coming Great Events in Prophecy. Both there and at Grimshy he had large and deeply interested audiences.

A brother of the late Father Damien has quitted his work in Europe and set out for Molokai, in the Sandwich Islands, to carry on the work among the lepers.

Two hundred persons were killed in the province of Shantung, China, recently by the collapse of a platform which they had ascended to witness a theatrical performance.

The recent evangelistic meetings conducted at Franklin, N. H., by Rev. N. H. Harriman and Mr. Paquette, have resulted in a marked quickening of Christians, and a number of conversions.

Rev. Sam Jones is expected to commence a series of services in New Orleans early next year. An effort is being made to enlist the sympathy and aid of clergymen of all denominations in the work.

The Northfield Seminary, under Mr. Moody's charge, has largely increased its facilities lately by the addition of two new houses. It now contains 320 pupils. Many applications which cannot be granted are being made.

At the meeting of the Central Council of the King's Daughters recently held in New York, Mrs. Isabella C. Davis said that the number of badges issued from the Central supply during the past four years was 119,819.

By the will of the late J. Warren Merrill, of Cambridge, Mass., public bequests to the amount of $145,000 were made. Among them were: American Baptist Missionary Union, $50,000; American Baptist Home Mission Society, $20,000; and American Baptist Publication Society, $10,000.

Seventy-six of the 128 students in the Theological Seminary of the Yale University, are engaged in evangelistic work in the city of New Haven. Some of them visit the hospitals, others the jails, others are engaged in the Y. M. C. A., and all of them give gospel addresses, conduct prayer-meetings, etc.

The evangelistic services conducted by Messrs. Hogan and Sawyer in Wheeling, W. Va., have now continued six weeks. The Daily Intelligencer of that city says that fully 2,000 persons were in the meeting on December 1, and the number who have been redeemed from a wicked life, and have professed faith is numbered by hundreds.

The Conference of the Evangelical Alliance opened its sessions on December 4 in Boston, Mass. Dr. A. J. Gordon welcomed the delegates. Mr. William E. Dodge, President of the Alliance, in his opening address stated that the canvass of New York City, conducted by the Alliance since the Washington Conference, showed great moral deterioration.

The famous canal-boat missionary, "Father" Thomas Eling, is dead. He began work among this neglected class without any church or society appointment, and labored in it without salary. He was often abused, and did not escape personal violence. In 1868 he accepted the appointment of the Philadelphia Sabbath Association and gave all his time to his chosen work.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills is being wonderfully blessed in his work in New York. Every afternoon and evening the Thirteenth Street Presbyterian church was crowded with earnest hearers, and many remained after the meetings to speak with the pastors, who are assisting Mr. Mills, about their personal salvation. This week the evening meetings are being held in the same church, and the afternoon meetings in the Central Methodist Church, Seventh Ave., between Thirteenth and Fourteenth Sts.

THE DROUGHT AND THE RAIN.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits and found no water," etc. Jer. 14 : 3, 4, 22.

A Conclusion from a Personal and Painful Argument—I. Man a Very Dependent Creature—Needs Continuous Supplies—Bread for Only Six Weeks' Consumption—Spiritual Dependence—All Blessings from God—Yet Men Ignore Him—Are Ungrateful to Him—II. Men Reduced to Dire Distress—The Agony of Spiritual Thirst—Humbles Pride—Secondary Resources Tried First—Disappointed and Confused—III. Man's Only Sure Resort—No Help Elsewhere—Ritualistic Rain-makers—Ordinances Helpless—Verities in Exchange for Vanities.

IN the last verse we have the word "therefore," which shows that the speakers had come to this conclusion by an argument. In truth, they had been forced to their resolution by a very painful and personal argument, which God had set before them in the order of His providence. By their thirst, and by their failure to find water anywhere, the Lord had driven them to say, "Therefore we will wait upon thee." I trust it will not be needful to urge us to conversion by sufferings as terrible. "Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding." Come willingly, since the argument for coming is clear and cogent. I should like you to go this morning mentally through the process by which the Israelites passed practically when they came to the gracious conclusion, "Therefore we will wait upon thee." Let us begin at once with the argument, praying God to send it home to every heart by His good Spirit, that we may reach the desired conclusion.

I. First, consider that man is

A Very Dependent Creature.

He is, in some respects, the most dependent creature that God has made; for the range of his wants is very wide, and at a thousand points he is dependent upon something outside of himself. He is peculiarly dependent upon God as to temporals. We see in the text that when the dews no longer fell, and the rains were withholden, then the unhappy inhabitants of Palestine suffered from drought, and that drought brought with it failure of the harvest, famine, disease, and death. To quote our common saying, "the people died like flies. They fell everywhere by thousands, fainting, famished, doomed. On what a feeble thread hangs human life! Water, though it be itself unstable, is needful to the establishment of human life, and without it man expires.

Yes, and life itself would vanish as the food of life ceased. It would be an instructive calculation if it could be accurately wrought out—to estimate how much bread-food there is at any time laid up upon the surface of the earth. If all harvests were to fail from this date; if there were no harvests in Australia during our winter, no harvests early in the year in India and the warm regions, if there were no harvests in America and in Europe, I have been informed that, by the time of our own harvest months, there would be upon the face of the earth no more food than would last us for six weeks. How dependent we are for each year's crop! for should there be universal failure, starvation would be closely within sight.

In Spiritual Things

this dependence is most evident. Brethren, if God shall bless us with His saving health, and with the visitation of His Spirit, we shall be as a field that God has blessed, and our lives shall be glad with a harvest to His praise. But apart from God what can we do? In this realm of spiritual things we are absolutely and wholly dependent upon God; and without His aid we are as a salt land, which is destitute of verdure. Salvation is of the Lord. Vain is all trust which builds not on Him.

The priceless blessings of pardon and grace: how can we procure them apart from God in Christ Jesus? Justification and acceptance: are not these of God? What can you and I do to justify ourselves, or to make ourselves acceptable with God? These are the gifts of the covenant of grace, and God can give them; but if He gives them not, we can never obtain them.

So is it with the life and the power of the Spirit of God, by which we are able to receive and enjoy the blessings of the covenant; the Holy Spirit, like the wind, bloweth where He listeth, and the order of His working is with the Lord alone. The new life whereby we receive the Lord Jesus: how can it come to us but from the living God Himself?

Can a Dead Soul Quicken Itself?

Can a man steeped in iniquity liberate and purify himself? Every beginning of good, yea, every desire after it, is wrought in us by God, or else it is never in us at all. We are absolutely dependent upon God, not only for all spiritual gifts, but for the power to be partakers of them.

And, brethren, all the graces that are pleasing to the Lord, come they not to us from God our Saviour? Is there a grain of faith in the world that God did not create? Is there a spark of holy love in any human bosom that God did not kindle? Putting this case very broadly—and I cannot put it too broadly—I am not afraid of exaggerating, or going too far in it: I know that for the clouds, and the rain, and the harvest, men are absolutely dependent upon the God of providence; and I know, also, that for the gift of the Holy Spirit, and for the power which saves souls, we are altogether dependent upon the great God who creates all good things.

Here is the pity of it: against God, upon whom we are so dependent, we have sinned, and do sin. We are dependent upon Him, and yet rebellious against Him. Shall the man who accepts from me his daily bread lift up his heel against me? Shall he who could not live without me, yet live to speak evil of me? Shall he abuse my goodness into a means of doing me damage? That were an atrocious thing, which could only spring from a black, ungrateful heart. Yes, every sinner who goes on in sin is acting thus ungratefully. Existing only by His infinite charity, he who continues to do evil is ungrateful in the highest degree to the Lord of love. I wish you could see and feel this great truth; for it would tend to humble you, and prepare you to seek His favor. I pray the Holy Spirit to impress it upon everyone here.

II. Our second remark is this: men may be Reduced to Dire Distress.

Men, being dependent upon God, may be reduced to dire distress if they disobey Him, and incur His just displeasure. Kindly follow me in the earlier verses of my text. Here we have great temporal distress: the people had no water! The highest ranks of society were made to feel the terrible pinch. The whole of the city was tormented with thirst, and the leading men instituted diligent search to find water. They sent to the great reservoirs which Solomon had constructed in his time—the upper and the lower pools; but they found no water. They searched again and again, but the waters had utterly failed, and they were driven to despair. They covered their heads as men who gave themselves up to die without hope. Terrible was the drought which Jehovah sent upon His land because of the sin of His people: it was as if the day of Elias had returned, wherein there was neither dew nor rain for three years and six months.

My dear hearers, there is a spiritual distress of which this drought is a figure. Behold, as in a parable, the state into which we have seen many brought when God has begun to deal with them; to such there cometh drought of life and famine of hope. My hearer, do you know what is meant by God's dealing with a man? If so, you will follow me with understanding when I say God makes the aroused and convicted man conscious of the greatest conceivable want, even of a drought in his own soul. These people were conscious that they wanted water; the case was worse than that, they were tormented with thirst. So does God come to men, and make them feel that they need the living water of His grace, and He sets them thirsting for it.

To proceed a little in detail with the words of my text; when the Lord causes sinners to feel the spiritual drought, Pride is Humbled.

"Their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters." Generally, the nobility concern themselves little enough about water; but in great drought King Ahab and his chancellor, Obadiah, went forth themselves to find water. In this case the nobles sent their servants, nay even their sons and daughters, to discover some source of supply. So God knows how to teach a man so that his lofty thoughts are humbled, and his pride is brought down to the dust. My lord, you will feel yourself a nobody should the Spirit deal with you in conviction. Not long ago, your excellency looked down from the highest seat in the synagogue, but now you sit down in the dust, and count every one your superior. The philosopher grows into a little child, and gladly accepts the cup which aforetime he sneered at. Our noblest thoughts become lowly seekers after the water of life in our distress.

But you observe that when humbled and made thirsty, these people went to secondary causes; they came to the pits, or reservoirs. Reservoirs in the East are sometimes great caverns in the natural rock, and at other times they are excavated by labor, or built up by skill, and then streams are turned into them, and they hold a great storage of water. Some of the children of the nobles thought they knew of caverns which others had not seen, hidden cisterns underground, which had been forgotten; and they went forth to find them. They hurried to the place where they hoped for the priceless water; but we read not that they cried unto God, or sought mercy of Jehovah, who could speedily have given them rain. They resorted to the secondary causes, but they turned not to the hand which smote them. Thus souls, when they are awakened, go to fifty things before they come to God. It is sad that in superstition or in scepticism they look for living streams.

They Try Reformation

of manners—I have nothing to say against it—but apart from God reformation always ends in disappointment. They seek consolation from an orthodox creed, for which I might have much to say; but if a belief in a creed be trusted in, it is as if a man sought to quench his thirst with a bottle, but did not care to see whether it held water or no. A creed is a pitcher, in which the water is held, but it is not the water itself. Some try forms and ceremonies in abundance, and to these they add self-denials and penances; they suffer anything sooner than come to God for His grace. Grace is a port to which no man steers until it is seen to be the only one into which he can enter.

If you read on, you will find that when they went to these secondary supplies they were disappointed. "They came to the pits, and found no water." Disappointed, "they returned with their vessels empty." The women, with their water-pots upon their heads, presented a sad sight as they entered the city gate, and one after another all sighed,

"Empty! Empty!"

They thirsted to drink; but not a drop was found to cool their tongues. It is an awful thing to come home from sermon with the vessels empty; to rise from the communion table, having found no living water, and return with vessels empty; to close the Bible, and sigh, "I find no comfort here, I must return with my vessel empty." When the ordinances and the Word yield us no grace, things have come to an awful pass with us. Do you know what this disappointment means?

Now, upon this disappointment there followed great confusion of mind; they became distracted; "they were ashamed and confounded." On the back of that confusion came despair; "they covered their heads." The Orientals cover their heads when in the deepest grief, as David did when he went over the brook Kedron. It means: "I cannot face it. Do not look on me in my sorrow, nor expect me to look on you.

I cover my head, for it is all over with me." Thus have I met with many who, after going to many confidences, have been disappointed in all, and seem ready to lie down in despair, and put forth no more effort. They fear that God will never bless them, and they will never enter into life eternal; and so they sign their own death-warrants. Shall I confess that I have been better pleased to see them in this condition than to hear their jovial songs at other times? It is by the gate of self-despair that men arrive at the divine hope.

III. I have brought you so far in the argument, now I must rush on to the conclusion. Man is a very dependent creature; man may be reduced to dire distress; and thirdly,

Man's Only Sure Resort

is his God. There is no help anywhere else. Read verse 22: "Are there any among the vanities of the Gentiles that can cause rain?" He saith not "the gods of the Gentiles": those who were "gods" in better days are seen to be, in truth, nothing but vanities in the time of need. To make rain in a divine prerogative; hence the priests of the idols pretend to it for their false deities. The Rain-maker is found in every idolatrous country, but I think scarcely anybody believes in him now. What antics and tricks the rain-makers go through to produce rain, but it does not come, neither can their gods create a cloud! And where can you get grace if you refuse to look to God alone? There is over there at the Ritualistic church, who can produce a shower on the child's heart, by which it becomes "a member of Christ, a child of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven." But I trust you are not so foolish as to believe in him; and therefore you will not make a fruitless journey toward priestcraft. Where will you go? I know where you are likely to go, and that is to your own frames and feelings, to your own resolves and doings. Alas for your folly! Oh yes, you want to get peace, and so you take the pledge, and you vow that you will become a decent, sober body, and all that. What are these confidences but vanities of the heathen? The very best of duties that you and I can perform, if we put our trust in them, are only false confidences, refuges of lies, and they can yield us no help.

A Rain-maker

Nay, look; according to the text there is no help for us even in the usual means of grace if we forget the Lord. Read that second question: "Can the heavens give showers?" Showers come from the heavens, but the heavens cannot yield showers apart from God. The eastern sky, without rain, is blue, bright, beautiful; but after months of pitiless drought, when has stood in the eye of the heavens, the blue color becomes the ensign of melancholy; and if this continues month after month it becomes the color of despair. Until the Lord opens the windows of heaven to pour out the blessing, neither sun nor moon nor stars can help the need of man. If God does not help thee, oh tried and anxious soul, the sacraments are all in vain, though they be ordained of heaven; and preaching and reading, liturgy and song, are all in vain to bring the refreshing dew of grace.

No Tear of Pity

But with God is all power. There is the mercy: "Art not Thou He, O Lord our God? for Thou hast made all these things." See in how short a time He covers the heavens with clouds, and pours forth an abundance of rain till He makes the wilderness a pool, and the dry land springs of water. He can; He can! He can reach the extremity of human weakness and woe.

What Can He Not Do?

Nothing is too hard for the Lord; and thou, poor sinner, dried up like the sand of the desert, God can, within an hour, ay, in a moment, make thy heart to be flooded with His grace. What though thou hast no grace this morning, no, not a drop of it; He can open streams in the desert. Thou canst not find within thyself, wherever thou lookest, any trace of love, or holy feeling, or aught that is good; yet He can give thee all, can give thee all for nothing, can give it thee just now! If thou believest that He can, and wilt trust Him, as He displays His love in the Lord Jesus, He will save thee. He can give thee the power to believe it, and lead thee now to cast thyself on Him.

Well, then, what follows from this? If God hath all this power, our wisdom is to wait upon Him, since He alone can help. We draw this inference: "Therefore we will wait upon Thee." Do I hear somebody say, "How I would like to pray"? Yes, that is the way to come to God. Come to Him by prayer in the name of Jesus. Do you want a prayer? This chapter is full of petitions, and there is one which I would point out to you. Here is a short one for you (verse 7), "O Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, do Thou it." "Do Thou it." "Lord, I cannot create grace in my own heart, any more than I can make rain to fall from the sky; but do Thou it." "Lord, I cannot come to Thee, come Thou to me; do Thou it." Is not that

A Wonderful Prayer?

There is more in it than you think; the more you consider it, the bigger you will see it to be. Three monosyllables: "Do Thou it." And then observe the argument: four words, all of one syllable, "for Thy name's sake." "Do Thou it for Thy name's sake." Heartily do I commend this prayer to every soul here that is seeking the Lord. May the Spirit write it on your hearts? I cannot give you a better. "Do Thou it for Thy name's sake."

Well then, next, if you are really going to wait upon the Lord, you must do it through a Mediator. These guilty people of Jerusalem had Jeremiah to pray for them. Jeremiah with the weeping eye fitly typifies a greater than Jeremiah. Remember the Man of sorrows, the Acquaintance of grief! Jeremiah's Master must be your Intercessor. Beg Him to be your Mediator. You cannot go in unto an absolute God; you need a Mediator.

A Mediator is Provided,

He has presented an acceptable sacrifice, He will plead the causes of your soul. Come, trust yourself with Jesus; for He will save.

Let me advise you to make a full confession of sin. Read verse 20: "We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness: for we have sinned against Thee." Make a clean breast of it, unbosom the past, lay bare the present. Think not to cloak sin. To conceal sin is to ruin yourself; to confess it is to find mercy. Place yourself among the guilty, for there mercy can fitly reach you.

When you have done this, cast yourself down before your God, saying, "Therefore I will wait upon Thee." Come through Christ, believing in the power of His precious blood, and you may draw nigh to God. Though you be loaded with sins enough to sink a world of sinners down to hell, yet if you will believe in the mercy of God through Christ Jesus, and cast yourself down at His feet, and lie there, He will never say "Depart." Jesus hath said, "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." If you perish, it is not because you come and He rejects you. Does your heart say, "I will arise and go unto my Father"? Then am I glad. You have tried the citizens of this country, and they have sent you into the fields to feed swine; and husks are all that you have to feed upon. You have spent your money and wasted your substance in riotous living; you can find no pleasure now, go where you may. Vanity of vanities; all is vanity! Quit the vanities and seek the verities. Turn unto your God. Turn instantly! Hark back! Hark back! You have gone too far already in the evil way. A precipice is before you. One more step, ay, one more step, and you are over, and your eternal ruin is complete. Hark back as quickly as you can to the great God from whom you have departed! Come now, even now, for He invites you: "Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool." While He speaks in this manner, I hope you will answer to the call, and bow at His feet at once. "To-day, if ye will hear His voice, harden not your hearts." May the Holy Spirit lay hold on you, that you may lay hold on Jesus! God grant it, for Christ's sake! Amen.

Because You Do Not Come;

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

The Ancestors of the English-Speaking Nations.*

THE men of the North who settled and conquered part of Gaul and Britain, whose might the power of Rome could not destroy, and whose depredations it could not prevent, were not savages: the Romans did not dare to attack these men at home with their fleet or with their armies. Nay, they even had allowed these Northmen to settle peacefully in their provinces of Gaul and Britain. . . . The museums of Copenhagen, Stockholm, Christiania, Bergen, and many smaller ones in the provincial towns of the three Scandinavian kingdoms, show a most wonderful collection of antiquities, which stand unrivalled in Central and Northern Europe for their wealth of weapons and costly objects of gold and silver, belonging to the bronze and iron age. The remnants of articles of clothing with graceful patterns interwoven with threads of gold and silver, which have escaped entire destruction, show the existence of great skill in weaving. Entire suits of wearing apparel remain to tell us how some of the people dressed in the beginning of our era. Beautiful vessels of silver and gold also testify to the taste and luxury of those early times. The knowledge of the art of writing and of gilding is clearly demonstrated. In some cases, nearly twenty centuries have not been able to tarnish or obliterate the splendor of the gilt jewels of the Northmen. . . . Objects many of which show much refined taste, such as superb specimens of glass vessels with exquisite painted subjects, unrivalled for their beauty of pattern even in the museums of Italy and Russia, make us pause with astonishment and ask ourselves from what civilization they could have come.

Idols Destroyed.

One of the most ancient records contains the following: King Olaf went with his men after Yule to Thrandheim. When he came to Mœri those chiefs of the Thrand who were most opposed to Christianity were there, and with them all the great boendr who had before been accustomed to keep up the sacrifices there. A great crowd was present, and as had been agreed upon at the Frostathing, a Thing [general assembly of the people] was summoned, and both parties went fully armed to it. At first there was noise and tumult; but when it had subsided, and a hearing could be got, King Olaf bade the boendr be christianized as he had done before. Iron-beard answered and said: "Now as before, king, we do not want thee to break our laws; it is our will that thou sacrificest like other kings have done here in the country before thee, and other chiefs of the Thrand. . . . The only thing that will do for thee is to act as we told thee before this winter, for we have not changed our mind since about the belief." Then the king said: "I will do as we agreed to at the Thing at Frosta: I will now enter the temple and see your proceedings and the preparing of the sacrifice." The boendr were well pleased and went to the temple. The king went in with a few of his men and some of the boendr. All who went in were unarmed. The king had a gold ornamented staff in his hand. When they came into the temple there was no lack of idols. Thor sat in the middle and was most worshipped; he was tall, and ornamented all over with gold and silver. The king raised his staff and struck Thor, so that he fell down from the altar and was broken; then the king's men who had entered with him rushed forward and knocked down all the gods from their altars.

* From The Viking Age. By Paul B. Du Chaillu. The controversy as to the origin of the English-speaking peoples receives a valuable contribution in these two large volumes. There can be no question as to the obligation under which the author has laid all students of the subject. His researches have been enormous. They have been both literary and archaeological, and he presents his discoveries in clear and intelligible form. Scholars will doubt the conclusions he draws from them, but his facts are valuable, and those who do not agree with him acknowledge gratefully the light he has shed on these interesting antiquities. Pp. 1,153; profusely illustrated. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

The Late Mrs. Webster Kirkham. (See page 791.)

The Children's Flower Festival.

Locating a Site.

Thorolf Mostrarskegg made a great sacrifice, and inquired from his beloved friend Thor whether he should reconcile himself to the king (Harald Fairhair) or go away from the country and seek other fate. The answer pointed out to him Iceland. Thereupon he got a large sea-going ship, and made it ready for the Iceland journey, and took with him his household and live-stock. Many of his friends went on the journey with him. He took down the temple and carried with him most of the timbers which had been in it, and also the earth and mould from under the altar on which Thor had sat. Thereupon he sailed out to sea with fair winds, reached the land, and went along the south coast, westward, past Reykjanes. Then the fair wind ceased, and they saw that large fjords went into the land. Thorolf threw overboard his high-seat pillars, which had been standing in the temple; the image of Thor was carved on one of them. He declared that he would live in Iceland at the place where Thor landed them. As soon as they left the ship they drifted to the western fjord. Then there came a breeze; they sailed westward and into the fjord.

THE FLOWER FESTIVAL.

ONE of the last services conducted by the late Mrs. Kirkham (whose portrait appears on this page) was a flower festival at the church near her home at New Barnet. The children were invited to bring the flowers from their pretty gardens in the suburban district to the church. There they were welcomed and entertained by the lady evangelist whom they loved, and who delighted in making all around her happy. None knew better than she how to win the way to a child's heart, and how to implant there the lessons which would grow and flourish in after life in the home and the world.

To the children, as they carried their simple offerings to the festival, the flowers were commonplace objects; but before they left, they had heard of Him who is the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley; of Him whose love to man had provided that things of beauty should spring from the soil to gladden his sight; of the grand, beautiful life it was possible to live in homes as unlovely as the soil in which the flowers had their root; and of the sick men and women in the city hospitals to which the flowers were going, who though unknown to the little givers were the brothers and sisters whose claims on the love and kindness of all who would follow Christ must not be neglected. Like the cup of water given to a disciple, the flowers were an offering to the Master, who taught us to think of the poor and afflicted, and whose words and deeds, when made the rule of life, would make every life, however humble, blessed and a blessing.

LOUISE KINGSFORD'S FUTURE.

(See illustration on page 797.)

"HERE is an invitation for Christmas-eve for you, Louise," said Mrs. Kingsford, addressing her daughter, who had just entered their home from a mission service. "It is from Mrs. Lattimer."

"I must decline it, mamma," said the young lady, as she threw off her wraps, revealing a tall, spare figure in keeping with the pale, clear-cut features and lustrous, intense eyes. "We are giving an entertainment to the poor boys and girls at the Mission, and I should not like to be away."

"Nonsense!" said Mrs. Kingsford. "You make altogether too much of the Mission, Louise. I wish I had never consented to your going there. You neglect your social duties, and everything you used to take interest in, for those wretched people. I have not said much about it before, but I lose patience when you throw over a party like this of Mrs. Lattimer's for the sake of those dirty children."

"Oh, mamma! do not be angry. This party is no duty. They will get along without me, but the children would miss me terribly."

"I don't know that it is not a duty, Louise. It seems to me it is a duty to yourself. If you do not go into society you will never be married. At your age, you should have some regard to your future. You do not want to be an old maid, I presume."

"That would not be the worst fate that could befall me, mamma. Indeed, I rather think I should prefer it. Still, I am quite willing to leave my future in God's hands. He will take care of me."

"Oh, you are fanatical, Louise. I should like to see you well married, and you ought to have sufficient prudence to wish it too. You will have barely five hundred dollars a year if your father should die; for we have not been able to save much, and the business is not so good as it used to be. You may imagine how far that sum would go toward keeping you as you have been used to live. You might have a rich husband who would take care of you when we are gone, if you were like other girls."

"But I am not, mamma, and I do not wish to be. Do not worry about my future; I have no anxiety. I have learned to trust in God, and I assure you He never leaves those who trust in Him to want."

"I have no patience with you, Louise! God helps those who help themselves. I shall get your father to talk to you."

Mrs. Kingsford did not get any help from her husband in the matter. "Louise is a good girl," he said, when she tried to incite him to interfere. "I wish I had her faith. It would save me more anxiety than all my forethought. Let her have her way. She will do; if she does not live in luxury after we are gone, she will live happily, and she'll have a better welcome than either you or I when she gets on the other side. A girl so unselfish as she is, is good material for an angel."

It was useless to argue with Mr. Kingsford. His wife had given that up long ago. By sheer persistence she might worry him into doing something he was reluctant to do; but she could never convince him that he was wrong in his first position. If anything was to be done to instil Louise with more worldly prudence, Mrs. Kingsford saw she would have to do it herself. Her husband even abetted the girl about the party, and actually escorted her to the mission on Christmas eve, and helped entertain the little waifs.

Still, Louise was wrong in thinking Mrs. Lattimer's guests would not miss her. One man thought her absence spoiled the evening, and did not rest until he discovered its cause. Then he drew certain inferences, and made a plan. Hugh Randall was as much in earnest as he could be in seeking to win Louise for his wife, though she had given him no encouragement. If Mrs. Kingsford had known of his suit, she would have done all in her power to aid him, for he had the money qualification, which, in her eyes, was the most important of all. His record was not of the best, but a rich young man's faults are easily condoned, and he would reform when he was married.

One afternoon, shortly after that Christmas party, Louise encountered her admirer on her way to the mission, and consented when he asked permission to walk there with her. He showed much interest in her work, and asked many questions about it. Some of his remarks showed penetration, and he made a suggestion or two that struck Louise as being really useful. Finally, he volunteered to help in the mission himself in the evening, when some of the rougher boys were there, and needed a man to control them. He said, frankly, that it was not much in his line, but perhaps it would be better if he did adopt a new line, as the old had brought him sorrow.

A week or two later people were surprised to learn that Hugh Randall was a regular worker in the mission, and wondered what kind of religious teaching he could give. The boys, however, said that he did not give anything of the kind. He looked after the writing and arithmetic, and other studies, but took no part in the addresses or Bible reading. They were observant enough to guess at his motive, for his attentions to Louise were obvious even to them. Nor could Louise herself be ignorant of them, but they pained her, and she tried to avoid them. She gladly noticed the change in Mr. Randall, and prayed that it might be permanent, and lead to real change of heart, but her thoughts were too fully given to divine things to be occupied with the subject which her mother had pressed upon her.

A decision, however, was forced upon her. Hugh Randall had made himself acquainted with her habits, and one afternoon, as she emerged from the lane, which was her usual walk on the days that she did not go to the mission, she met him face to face. She hesitated for a moment, and would have gone back, but he had seen her—in fact, had been waiting for her—and she could not retreat without rudeness. Then he pleaded his cause, and would take no refusal. He would wait patiently as long as she chose, but he must see her parents and tell them of his suit.

That was Mrs. Kingsford's opportunity. The young man could have had no better ally. Day by day Louise was assailed by subtle arguments and persuasions, until at last she yielded a reluctant consent. "Her future is secure, now," Mrs. Kingsford said to her husband triumphantly, as she told him of her success.

"That was secure before," he said; "the girl could have no better security than God's promises to those who trust and serve Him. I am not sure that you have done well in urging her into this marriage."

"I only advised her for her own good," said the wife.

"I hope it may prove so," said Mr. Kingsford. It was evident, however, that he was in doubt. Had he gone to Louise then, and given her the moral support she needed, the marriage might have been averted. How gladly would he have done so could he have foreseen the character of that future which his wife called "secure"! That foresight would have shown him a woman striving to serve God, yet thwarted by a worldly, selfish husband, who strove to draw her back into the world. A woman whose soul was vexed every day by association with godless men and women, who were that husband's chosen companions. Finally a woman, prematurely aged, in a miserable home, waiting upon a husband whose dissipation had left him in utter penury, the prey of disease, and the terror of all who approached him. Better, far better for her had her future been left as she would have left it, in the hands of her faithful God rather than confided to the keeping of a wealthy libertine!

Louise Kingsford Waylaid.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 782.)

Exploration.

MEANWHILE, however, the explorers set out to examine the capabilities of their destined home. They struck inland, and found a little path to certain heaps of sand, one of which they dug into, "musing what it might be." It contained a bow and arrows greatly decayed, the simple memorials of an Indian warrior, one of the last of his race. They left the others untouched, because they thought "it would be odious unto them to ransack their sepulchres." There was deep meaning in this first discovery, though they thought not of it at the time. They met with many more such evidences of death.

The same journal records at the close of the month: "We followed certain beaten paths and tracts of the Indians into the Woods, supposing they would have led us into some Towne, or houses; after we had gone a while, we light upon a very broad beaten path, well nigh two foot broad, then we lighted all our Matches, and prepared our selues, concluding we were neare their dwellings, but in the end we found it to be onely a path made to drive Deere in, when the Indians hunt, as we supposed.

"When we had marched five or six myles into the Woods, and could find no signes of any people, we returned againe another way, and as we came into the plaine ground, we found a place like a graue, but it was much bigger and longer than any we had yet seene. It was also covered with boords, so as we mused what it should be, and resolved to digge it vp, where we found, first a Matt, and vnder that a fayre Bow, and there another Matt, and vnder that a boord about three quarters long, finely carued and paynted, with three tynes or brochies on the top, like a Crowne; also betweene the Matts we found Boules, Traves, Dish-es, and such like Trinkets; at length we came to a faire new Matt, and vnder that two Bundles, the one bigger, the other lesse, we opened the greater and found in it a great quantitie of fine and perfect red Powder, and in it the bones and skull of a man.

"The skull had fine yellow haire still on it, and some of the flesh unconsumed; there was bound vp with it a knife, a pack-needle, and two or three old iron things. It was bound vp in a Saylers canvas Casacke, and a payre of cloth Powder was a kind of Embaulment, and yielded a strong, but no offensive smell; It was as fine as any flower. We opened the lesse bundle likewise, and found of the same Powder in it, and the bones and head of a little childe; about the leggs, and other parts of it was bound strings, and bracelets of fine white Beads; there was also by it a little Bow, about three quarters long, and some other odd knackes; we brought sundry of the pretiest things away with vs, and covered the Corps vp againe. After this, we digged in sundry like places, but found no more Corne, nor any thing els but graues."

Nothing but graves! and the keen frosts and snows of an American winter already settling down upon them; the morrow the 1st of December; and no shelter yet provided against the inclement region! A superstitious or even a desponding mind might be pardoned if, in like circumstances, it read in such ominous traces of death's footsteps the foreshadowing of doom. Yet therein lay their pledge of safety and their charter to the soil. The Red Indian's lease of ages of the forests of the New World had at length come to an end. The Great Spirit had granted it to another race, and the Red warrior and his child reposed together beneath the memorial mounds of the Wampanoags.

And who shall deem the spot unblest,
Where Nature's younger children rest,
Lull'd on their sorrowing mother's breast?

Deem ye that mother loveth less
These bronzed forms of the wilderness
She foldeth in her long caress?

As sweet o'er them her wild flowers blow,
As if with fairer hair and brow,
The blue-eyed Saxon slept below.

The explorers found other relics of the old Indian possessors of the soil more welcome to them than those we have described. Digging into one of the forest mounds, which seemed to have been very recently constructed, they discovered "a little old basket full of faire Indian corne, and digging further found a fine great new basket full of very faire corne of this year, with some 36 goodly eares of corne, which was a very goodly sight. The basket was round and narrow at the top, it held about three or four bushels, which was as much as two of us could lift up from the ground, and was very handsomely and cunningly made." It was a most opportune and seasonable discovery; a treasure of more worth than a tumulus of such gold dust as the first colonists of Virginia sought for in vain.

But the explorers met with other adventures, and found evidence of the Red Indian's ingenuity and skill, ere they got their harvest treasure borne safely home. They had to pass the night in the forest, and in the morning wandered from the track, or as their quaint old journalist records it, "were shrewdly pus-led, and lost their way. As we wandered," he continues, "we came to a tree, where a yong Spritt was bowed downe over a bow, and some Acornes strewed vnderneath; Stephen Hopkins sayd, it had beene to catch some Deere, so, as we were looking at it, William Bradford being in the reare, when he came looked also vpon it, and as he went about, it gaue a sodaine jerk vp, and he was immediately caught by the leg; It was a very pretie devise, made with a rope of their owne making, and having a noose as artificially made, as any Roper in England can make, and as like ours as can be, which we brought away with vs."

It was a pleasant jest to the wanderers, in which the gravest of them doubtless indulged in a laugh at their too curious companion, thus caught in the Indian's deer-trap. The hint, however, was well worth their study; a lesson in New England forestry which might serve them in good stead, ere the ringing axes of the colonists should scare the wild deer to follow the Indian hunter beyond the reach of encroaching civilization. "And thus," adds the honest journalist, "wee came both weary and well-come home, and delivered in our corne into the store, to be kept for seed, for we knew not how to come by any, and therefore were very glad, purposing so soone as we could meete with any of the inhabitants of that place to make them large satisfaction. This was our first discovery while our shallop was in repairing."

The rigor of the northern winter was now setting in, and the want of any fit landing-place added to the difficulties and hardships of the settlers. Every time they came on shore they had to wade, often considerably above the knees. The cold was severe, and the frost frequently so keen that the water froze upon them, and made their garments like coats of mail. Coughs and colds followed, and the seeds of death were sown in many of that forlorn band of pioneers in the wilderness.

The roll of names is printed in the recent edition of the Pilgrims' Journal, from that copied by Mr. Prince from the end of Governor Bradford's folio manuscript. This list only gives the names of the forty-one males who signed the original compact drawn up on board the Mayflower, and of this little company, twenty-one names are printed in Italics, as those who died before the following March.

"For an undefiled conscience, and the love of pure Christianity," says Prince, "they first left their pleasant and native land, and encountered all the toils and hazards of a tumultuous ocean, in search of some uncultivated region, where they might quietly enjoy their religious liberties, and transmit them to posterity, in hopes that none would follow to disturb or vex them." But they were to be sorely tried, and sifted, and winnowed, ere the first-fruits were to be reaped of a harvest sown in such toil and sorrow. Hardships and delays had been the first winnowers of the little host, and now death stepped in and still further reduced the number of these brave adventurers for liberty of conscience. They had gone from "their pleasant and native land," only to find a grave beside the burial mounds of the red Indian.

The shallop was at length fit for sea, and Carver, Bradford, Winslow, and Standish, all celebrated in the annals of the infant settlement of New England, set out with some eight or ten men to explore the shores of the New World, and fix on the spot of their final settlement. But the season was now far advanced. December had brought with it the bitter blasts of winter. The rude gusts of wind dashed the spray of the sea about them, which froze as it fell, congealing upon their garments like the mailed grasp of death.

On shore the prospect was little more cheering, for at length, on the 8th of December, when they had risen before dawn, and commended themselves with pious fervor to the protection of heaven, their ears were for the first time stunned with the horrid yell of the Indian war-whoop, and a flight of arrows gave notice of an attack. A wandering tribe, to whom the English were already an object of hatred, from the wrongs done by former visitors, had stolen on the exploring party; but they stood to their arms, and no harm followed. Once more they thank God for His protecting care over them, and resume their task.

For more than fifteen leagues they steer their shallop along the coast, in search for a convenient harbor, but in vain. A storm sets in, with snow and drizzling rain. The sea rises, the rudder is broken, and the gathering clouds add to the gloom of approaching night. One of the crew, who had visited these regions before, assuring them of a convenient harbor within reach, they crowd all sail, the mast is shivered to pieces, and the whole crew are on the point of perishing amid the breakers of a lee-shore. On gaining the land, the half-frozen and weary wanderers tremble to kindle a fire lest it should guide the fierce savage to their hearth.

"In the morning," adds Bradford, "they found the place to be a small island, secure from Indians; and this being the last day of the week, they here dry their stuff, fix their pieces, rest themselves, return God thanks for their many deliverances; and here, the next day, keep their Christian Sabbath." It was the 9th of December, and the bitter experience of their wanderings had given no uncertain note of winter. Time was pressing. Every consideration demanded haste, and yet these single-hearted and sincere Christian men spent the day in the solemn rites of Christian worship, and awoke the sylvan echoes of the Indian forest with their hymns of thanksgiving and praise to God. "Thou in Thy mercy hast led forth the people Thou hast redeemed; Thou hast guided them in Thy strength unto Thy holy habitation. Thou shalt bring them in, and plant them in the mountain of Thine inheritance, in the place, O Lord, which Thou has made for Thee to dwell in; in the sanctuary, O Lord, which Thy hands have established. The Lord shall reign for ever and ever." So might they—so perchance, may they—have sung, in the words of the old Hebrew Prophet, in that first celebration of the Christian's rest amid the wilds of the New World, which they had gone up to possess, as the servants of the Most High.

"On Monday," says the old Pilgrim chronicler, "we sounded the harbor, and found it a very good harbor for our shipping. We marched also into the land, and found divers corn-fields and little running brooks—a place very good for situation—so we returned to our ship again with good news to the rest of our people, which did much comfort their hearts." This is the day ever memorable to the children of New England as that on which the Pilgrim Fathers first landed at Plymouth. It is one worthy of commemoration; and annual rites and sacred services still mark the return of its anniversary, familiar to the New Englander by the homely but endearing appellation of Forefathers' Day.

"Plymouth," says President Dwight, "the first town built in New England by civil men, and those by whom it was built were inferior in worth to no body of men whose names are recorded in history during the last 150 years. A kind of venerableness, arising from these facts, attaches to this town, which may be termed a prejudice. Still it has its foundation in the nature of man, and will never be eradicated by philosophy or ridicule."

Prejudices we may call them if we please, but they spring from the same source whence the noblest, and the holiest feelings arise in the soul of man; and cold must he be who could tread, unmoved, the spot which well-authenticated tradition has recorded as that of the Pilgrim Fathers' landing. In 1774, the rock, which was in danger of being buried by the increasing wharfage of the thriving sea-port, became an object of attention to the successors of the Pilgrim founders of Plymouth. A mass of it, weighing several tons, was rescued from the threatened destruction, and removed to an open area in the town, where it now stands within an appropriate inclosure—a far fitter memorial of the Fathers of New England than all that the most costly efforts of the sculptor, in brass or marble, could have produced.

It would be folly to attempt to realize the thoughts of these wanderers, as they first set foot on the rocky landing of Plymouth Bay. They dreamt not of cities and empires founded by their efforts. They sought only to discover a place of shelter where the weary voyagers of the Mayflower might rear their home in the wilderness. Nevertheless, be it remembered, their trust was in God, and they were in search of "some uncultivated region," where they might not only enjoy religious liberty themselves, but transmit the same to their latest posterity.

The month of December had nearly drawn to a close, with all the hopes and disappointments of that eventful year, ere, amid the snows or driving rain of an American winter, the Pilgrim founders of New England got a beginning fairly made to their destined settlement. Having fixed on the scene of their intended home, the journal of their proceedings records four excellent and satisfactory reasons for settling there; but the candid annalist adds, "The last and especial reason was, that now the heart of winter and unseasonable weather was come upon us, so that we could not go upon coasting and discovery without danger of loosing men and boat, upon which would follow the overthrow of all. Also cold and wet lodging had so tainted our people, scarce any of us were free from vehement coughs, as, if they should continue long, would endanger the lives of many. . . . It was also conceived, whilst we had competent victuals, that the ship would stay with us, but when that grew low they would begone, and let us shift as we could." This harsh and unanswerable argument of necessity sufficed better than all other reasonings to promote unanimity among the colonists.

Wood was cut down, and reduced to shape for building materials, in the intervals between the storms that usually attend on the closing season of the year. A rising ground was chosen as the site of the new city they were to found, and the citadel which was to secure its safety against the dreaded assaults of the wild Indian. The "great hill," which the old historian of the colony designates as that "on which we point to make a platform and plant our ordnance, which will command all round about," is now known to the modern New Englander as Burial Hill, an eminence commanding one of the most extensive and magnificent sea views in the country. As the difficulties of their task became more apparent, the whole company were divided into families, the unmarried being required to choose a family into whose circle they should be adopted, in order that fewer houses might be needed. By this wise arrangement, the colonists were subdivided into nineteen families; and at length on the 9th of January, 1621, the first operations of building the city were begun.

(To be Continued.)

MAN'S NEW BOOK,
DEC. 1888. THE KINGDOM.

man's lectures for 1888. Fourth Edition 5 cents. Postage free. when of Growth. II. The Struggle On. The Step-child of Time. IV. after-langer. V. The Seed Growing Low mild and striking thought."—The Wise lectures are admirable in saying are more; they are eloquent, forceful Their lines of argument are well laid eader lays the finished volume down with a ith and a larger and stronger hope."—Christ-York.

Intelligent man must be charmed with these every devout man must be edified by them;
no doubt may be comforted and strengthened the clergy will find in them matter enough —perhaps a score—of their very best ser-
—The Churchman.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 Bible House, New York.

WEBSTER

ST HOLIDAY GIFT
Pastor, Parent, Teacher, Child, or Friend.
more Words and nearly 2000 more illustrations than any other American Dictionary.

STANDARD AUTHORITY Government Printing Office, and with the Supreme Court. Recommended by the State intendents of Schools in 38 States, and by College Presidents of the U. S. and Canada. valuable companion in every School and at every Fireside. Sold by all Booksellers.
plet with Specimen Pages, etc., sent free.
MERRIAM & CO., Pub'rs, Springfield, Mass.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
most pressing need-
and can be mailed to address of
HOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
3 Bible House, New York.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING
SHADE-ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE OF PHOTOGRAPH OF
OF THE GENUINE
AND GET HARTSHORN'S

V. T. DEWITT TALMAGE'S

RED GEMS, containing 30 of his best Sermons, 1889. 700 pages, 20 full-page illustrations, including the burning of the Tabernacle, and the burning of the Tower of Babel.
A splendid portrait of Talmage. Low price and desires my motto. Price, bound in cloth, $1.50; paper, $1.00. 5 per cent. discount to live agents.
cents for Prospectus and package of circulars, to work. Address
OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 Rose St., New York.

CHANCE FOR ALL
To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect
Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 34 pounds of Fine Tea, either
Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpow-
der, Young Hyson, Mixed, English
Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea
you want.
nt. Greatest inducement ever offered to get for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder.
E GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
Box 293, 81 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shots at Sunday Targets, by T. L. Cuyler, $2.50.
Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors. E. ited
by T. L. Cuyler, $2.75.
192,000 sold. 5000
copies of Bible $2. By Mail. E. B. TREAT, N.Y.

ORTHAND Writing thoroughly taught
by mail or personally.
tions procured all pupils when competent.
for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N.Y.

UNION INVESTMENT COMPANY,

Paid Up Capital, $1,000,000. Kansas City, Mo.

SPECIAL OFFER TO INVESTORS.

A Guaranteed 7 per Cent. Investment, secured by Business Property centrally located with the opportunity of Participating in Profits.

50 PER CENT. OF THE NET PROFITS TO THE INVESTORS.

Certificates will be in denominations of $100 to $10,000 as desired, and will bear interest at seven per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually in January and July.

Special features which make this one of the Safest and Most Attractive Investments ever presented to our friends, viz.:

FIRST. It is amply secured by Business Property, located in the very center of Kansas City.
SECOND. In addition to the Real Estate Security, the Investor has the direct obligation of the Union Investment Company.

THIRD. The Investor will receive his proportionate share of One Half the Net Profits realized from the sale of the property.

To those who have been familiar with the growth of the city, and who are best able to judge of its future prospects, it will not be considered unreasonable to say that the investment will yield a profit of $100,000 to $250,000 within five years.

The property has been deeded to Hon. William Warner of Kansas City, ex-member of Congress and late Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R., and Mr. E. C. Sattley, Cashier of the Kansas City Safe Deposit and Savings Bank, as trustees for the sole protection of the holders of the certificates.

Indorsement by Prominent Business Men, Bankers and Capitalists.

We, the undersigned, are acquainted with values in the vicinity of the property on Grand Avenue, Main and Walnut Streets, owned by the Union Investment Company, which is offered as security for their certificates amounting to Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars ($250,000).

It is all very desirably located and will undoubtedly increase in value.

We unhesitatingly recommend the certificates to the amount of Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars ($250,000) as a perfectly safe investment, and from our knowledge of the property, and the unmistakable tendency of the business growth of the city, we think a handsome profit on the investment may be reasonably expected.

H. P. STIMSON,
President American National Bank.
B. T. WHIPPLE & CO.,
Real Estate and Investment Securities.
WALTON H. HOLMES,
President Grand Avenue Cable Railway Co.
W. M. B. THAYER,
Of Bullene, Moore, Emery & Co.
E. C. SATTLEY,
Cashier Kansas City Safe Deposit and Sav. Bank.

I am unacquainted with the value of property in Kansas City, having been absent from the city the greater part of the last four years. I do know the men who have signed the above certificate. They are our leading business men; their judgment as to the value of real estate in this city I should unhesitatingly accept as being reliable and trustworthy.

Late Commander-in-Chief G. A. R. and Ex-Member of Congress.

By permission we refer to any of the above gentlemen.

Send for circulars containing description of property and full particulars.

W. P. RICE, PRES.
O. F. PAGE, Sec'y & TREAS.

UNION INVESTMENT CO.

COL. FRED GRANT'S LETTER.—GEN. GRANT was sustained for months previous to his decease almost wholly by the use of BOVININE, as the following letter selected from many others will testify.

"THE J. B. BUSH MANUFACTURING CO.:

"During the last four months of his sickness, the principal food of my father, General Grant, was BOVININE and milk; and it was the use of this incomparable food alone that enabled him to finish the second volume of his personal memoirs.

"October 1st, 1885.

"FRED D. GRANT."

Dr. J. H. DOUGLASS, General Grant's physician and faithful friend, cordially endorses the above statement regarding BOVININE.

BEECHAM'S PAINLESS EFFECTUAL
THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE
PILLS WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

For Weak Stomach—Impaired Digestion—Disordered Liver.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

PRICE 25 CENTS PER BOX.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.

B. F. ALLEN & CO., Sole Agents

FOR UNITED STATES, 365 & 367 CANAL ST., NEW YORK,

Who (if your druggist does not keep them) will mail Beecham's
Pills on receipt of price—but inquire first. (Please mention this paper.)

$60 SALARY. $40 EXPENSES IN ADVANCE allowed each month. Steady employment at home or traveling. No soliciting.
Duties delivering and making collections. No Postal Cards. Address with stamp, HAFER & CO., Ploua, O.

RIDGE'S FOOD
The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans.
Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co.
(on every label). Pulmer, Mass.

RHEUMATISM.—A pamphlet telling in plain terms "What rheumatism really is," "The cause of the pain attending it," and
"how sufferers can obtain relief," will be sent FREE
to any sufferer by F. W. KIMBALL, 357
Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

TURKISH HAIR CROWDER.
Warranted to grow a beautiful moustache on the face or hair on bald heads without injury. In 3 weeks or money refunded. The original and only reliable article of the kind on the market. Use no worthless imitations. One pkg. 15 cts. 2 for 25 cts. 6 for 50 cts. pp.
A fortune for age. TREMONT MAN'G CO., Ste. A, Boston, Ma.

I took Cold,
I took Sick,
I TOOK

SCOTT'S EMULSION

RESULT:

I take My Meals,
I take My Rest,

AND I AM VIGOROUS ENOUGH TO TAKE ANYTHING I CAN LAY MY HANDS ON; getting fat too, FOR Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda NOT ONLY CURED MY Incipient Consumption BUT BUILT ME UP, AND IS NOW PUTTING

FLESH ON MY BONES

AT THE RATE OF A POUND A DAY. I TAKE IT JUST AS EASILY AS I DO MILK.
SUCH TESTIMONY IS NOTHING NEW.
SCOTT'S EMULSION IS DOING WONDERS DAILY. TAKE NO OTHER.

"A Perfect Remedy for Catarrh."

A learned professor in one of the largest and most famous colleges in America, recently told a gentleman that the Pillow-Inhaler had cured a nasal catarrh which he had had from birth, and that he owed his present healthful and rotund appearance to the Pillow-Inhaler.

Rev. James Chambers, pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church, New York City, writes: "I have used the Pillow-Inhaler for over two months and I hereby cheerfully testify to its effectiveness for throat disease and bronchitis. I would not be without it."

A pamphlet explaining all about the Pillow-Inhaler, and testimonials, sent free by addressing The Pillow-Inhaler Co., 1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

WHY

DO I SUFFER
SO?

Do you feel generally miserable or suffer with a thousand and one indescribable bad feelings, both mental and physical? Among them low spirits, nervousness, weariness, lifelessness, weakness, dizziness, feelings of fullness or bloating after eating, or sense of "goneness" or emptiness of stomach in the morning, flesh soft and lacking firmness, headache, blurring of eyesight, specks floating before the eyes, nervous irritability, poor memory, chilliness, alternating with hot flushes, lassitude, throbbing, gurgling or rumbling sensations in bowels, with heat and nipping pains occasionally, palpitation of heart, short breath on exertion, slow circulation of blood, cold feet, pain and oppression in chest and back, pain around the loins, aching and weariness of the lower limbs, drowsiness after meals but nervous wakefulness
at night, languor in the morning and a constant feeling of dread as if something awful was about to happen.

If you have any or all of these symptoms send 40 cents to GEO. N. STODDARD, druggist, 1226 Niagara Street, BUFFALO, N. Y., who will send you, postpaid, some simple and harmless powders, pleasant to take and easy directions, which if you follow, will positively and effectually cure in from one to three weeks' time, no matter how bad you may be. Few have suffered from these causes more than I, and fewer still at my age (51) are in more perfect health than I am now. The same means will cure you.

"Mr. Stoddard is an honest man."—Publisher The Golden Argosy, N. Y.
The Christian at Work, New York, says: "We are personally acquainted with Mr. Stoddard, and know that any commendation to him will receive prompt and careful attention." Say where you saw this advt.

ASTHMA CURED
SCHIFFMANN'S ASTHMA CURE

Instantly relieves the most violent attack. No waiting for results. Its action is immediate, direct and certain, and a cure is the result in all curable cases. A single trial convinces the most skeptical. Price 50c. and $1.00, of druggists or by mail. Trial package free to any address. Dr. R. SCHIFFMANN, St. Paul, Minn.

OPIUM (Morphine Habit, Opium Smoking), etc., easily cured. Box Free. Dr.
J. C. Hoffman, Jefferson, Wisconsin.

THY BLESSED WILL.

Lord, I have been waiting
To know Thy blessed will, and be at rest.
I know that Thou hast led me, though my heart
At times has wayward been. Too oft my feet Have strayed, and ceased to follow in Thy steps;
But when, repentant, I have turned again, Thy hand has always been outstretched to mine,
And with a loving clasp has held me up.
Methinks, to-day, I love Thee more because Thou hast forgiven much, and in my soul
There springs a new desire to show my love
By walking hand in hand with Thee. My trust
Is perfect only when I lean my head
Upon Thy breast, and underneath the arms
Of everlasting love doth compass me;
Then, alone, I find Thy grace sufficient,
And human weakness lost in strength divine.

Lord, help me thus to live and do Thy will O make me perfect in my love to Thee!
Let all my wishes and my hopes be such
As Thou canst bless, and lead me forth to do
The work in life Thou shalt prepare for me.
Thou knowest that I would not idly wait,
And yet I could not go without Thy word.
I hear the Spirit's voice in accents plain;
My trembling heart can do no less than send
A quick response, obedient to my Lord.
Thou knowest all the way, and I can trust
Thy guiding hand amid the darkest hours.
Lord, take me, keep me, make me all Thine own;
So shall Thy presence be my earthly rest,
My home, at length, with Thee in paradise.

—Frances E. Becker.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The Famous Plymouth Rock Pants.

If you cannot reach one
of our branch stores, or
there is no local agent in
your town, write us at once (at Boston), and we will forward you, free, 30
samples of our latest novelties as well as quiet
patterns in men's cloth,
with self-measurement
blanks, the results of which we guarantee to be satisfactory or money refunded. Agents wanted in every town and
village in U. S., where we have none now to
take orders for our famous goods cut to order.
Our reputation secures
your first order and that
FIRST ORDER secures
you a steady customer
every time.

CUT TO ORDER: Pants, $3 to $5.25; Suits, $13.25 to $21; Overcoats, $10.25 to $20.
If you don't know who
we are, look in any commercial agency, or write
to any bank or business firm (except clothiers and tail-
ors) in any of these cities.
PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO.
ADDRESS ALL MAIL TO
Headquarters: 11 to 17 Elliot Street.
Annex: 695 Washington Street.
And 18 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.
BRANCHES: 255 Broadway, New York; 933 Penn.
Avenue, Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago,
Ill.; 914 Main St., Richmond, Va.; 225 E. Baltimore
St., Baltimore, Md.; 110 Canal St., New Orleans;
104 Montgomery St., Montgomery, Ala.; 39 Whitehall
St., Atlanta, Ga.; Burnside Building, Worcester,
Mass.; Hotel Gilmore, Springfield, Mass.; 198 Westminster St., Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building, New Haven, Conn.

CHRISTMAS BOOKLETS.

A series of beautiful ribbon booklets. Dainty and inexpensive. Complete price list on application. For one dollar we will send the following 12 booklets, size 4 1/2 x 3 3/4 inches, with envelopes for each: Devotion. The Watered Lilies. My Times. Words of Trust. Another Year. Christmas Carol. White Chrysanthemums. Through Peace to Light. Just as God Leads Me. If Need Be. Little Servants. Jerusalem the Golden.

WILBUR B. KETCHAM, Publisher,
13 Cooper Union, New York.

STENOGRAPHY.
AND
TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own
me) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching;
ag established: hundreds of graduates holding possible positions; success guaranteed. Also re-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free.
rite or call. VERMILYE'S COLLEGE.
816 Broadway, New York.

By CHAS. F. DEEMS,
B.D. Introduction by Bishop JOHN F.
The family. Elen-
Agents wanted
ance no hin-ance. Liberal terms and clusive territory. Send a full descriptive circular ALBION B. KETCHAM, Pub., 13 Cooper Union, N. Y.

WANTED AGENTS for
The Christian's Legacy.
One reports the sale of 72 copies in a place of 798 people. Another has sold 102 copies in one church in pringfield, Mass., and is a stranger there. Circulars free. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St. New York.

EVERY LADY
WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you.

Our reduced prices
bring the best goods
within reach of all.

We are the only
manufacturers in
the U. S. selling
direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every
piece of goods as represented, or money refunded.
See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the
U. S. Established
in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the

CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS,
for richness of
color, superior
finish and wearing qualities, to
be unexcelled
by any make
of Black Silks in the world. We

offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida
Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and
we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see
for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON,
Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank,
Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Wil-
limate Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

RECOLLECT we send to all parts of the U. S.
With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000
Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of
dress.

THE GOODS are delivered to you PREPAID
all carrying charges

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases,
and Scrofulous Humors.

TO CONSUMPTIVES.—Wilbor's Cod-liver Oil and Phosphates has now been before the public twenty years, and has steadily grown in favor and appreciation. This could not be the case unless the preparation was of high intrinsic value. The combination of the Phosphates with pure Cod-liver Oil, as prepared by Dr. Wilbor, has produced a new phase in the treatment of Consumption and all diseases of the Lungs. It can be taken by the most delicate invalid without creating the nausea which is such an objection to the Cod-liver Oil when taken without Phosphates. It is prescribed by the regular faculty.
Sold by the proprietor, A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, and by all Druggists.

A Gem For The Little Folks.

THE STORY
OF JESUS,

For Little Children.

By MRS. G. E. MORTON.

Fully Illustrated.

12mo, 316 Pages,
Cloth, Printed in Colors,
$1.00, post-paid.

"Told in simple words and a very handsome book.
How wonderful that the biography of the Son of the Highest is better adapted than any other to be told to little children. Angels study it; devils dive into it;
babes love it. Blessed be the Story of Jesus."—C. H.
SPURGEON.

"Full of excellent pictures, printed in clear, large type, and written in simple but accurate language, preserving all the truth and preciousness of the Perfect Life. This excellent work ought to be appreciated by all who love children."—Illustrated Missionary News.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

A Great Combination Offer

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE

ONE YEAR FOR $3.50. (REGULAR PRICE $4.50.)

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE is a superbly illustrated Monthly. Its art are highly interesting and written by celebrated authors.

Send 10 Cents and obtain a recent number with announcement for 1890.

Send 25 Cents and receive the magnificent Christmas number with its 70 illustrations and special gold cover, together with one of paper cutters, of which 16,000 have already been sold.

Address CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 743 Broadway, New York

E. B. TREAT, Publisher, New York. BOOKS WORTH HAVING
5 Cooper Union, 8th Street & 4th Ave.

OUR BEAUTIFUL HOME BOOK. Methers. Home and Heaven. 194,000 s

GOLDEN THOUGHTS ON PROSE & POE

MOTHER HOME AND HEAVEN 400 BES. AUT.

Beautifully Illustrated. Edited by Theo. L. Cuyler, D.D., and oth-
A welcome guest in every house. A work truly rich in thought and sentiment, pertaining to "THE DEAREST NAMES" to mortals given. An Elegant Birthday, Holiday, Anniversary or Bridal Present.

Cloth, $2.75; Parlor Edition, Gilt, $3.50; Presentation Edition, Full Mo,

HOME CULTURE. A Catechetical Cyclopedia of Home Education. 66 Departments or books in one. Edited by President Hunter, of N. Y. Normal College, and others. 672 quarto pages, illustrated, cl. th. $3.50; gilt, $4.00.

CURIOSITIES OF THE BIBLE. 10,000,
pertaining to Persons, Places, and Things, with Key.
Bible Studies, Readings, Talks, &c. 600 pages, $2.

OUR HOME PHYSICIAN. A New Cyclo-
pedia of Family Medicines, Causes, Symptoms,
Remedies. By GEO. M. BEARD, M.D. 1,500 p., $6.

Sent Post Paid on receipt of Price. Special Rates to Clubs. Agents Want

THE
Alfred Dolge
FELT SHOES
AND SLIPPERS.

Noiseless,
Warm, Durable.

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New Yo

MUSIC SALE

To reduce our stock of music
we will send by mail post-paid
70 pieces full
sheet music size, including songs, marches, waltzes, &c.
by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Mozart, &c., for only 20c
WHITE WINGS and 100 songs, words and music, 10c. SATISFACTION GIVEN or money refunded.
C. H. HATHAWAY, 399 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

$3.75 A DAY And steady work right at home
for any man or lady. Write at once. Franklin Co., Richmond, Va.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach,
FOR A DISORDERED LIVER (try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

PERFECT EA AND COMFOI

Made in all Styles for Women, and Childre

Prevent Rheumatism
Cold Feet.
Send for Illustrated Price-Mention Christian Her

ALFRED DOLGE'S
Celebrated
Felt Slippers

Guaranteed 6 years.

PRICE $1.80

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, N.

WANTED—Everywhere—A reliable agent, lady gent to deliver goods and collect. Permanent situation. Salary $5 to $10 monthly. For particulars dress with stamp Excelsior Printing Co., Bridgeport,

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1885, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

This Journal contains every week a Portrait and Biography of some eminent person; a new Sermon by the Rev. C. H. SPURGEON, of London, and the Rev. Dr. TALMAGE'S latest Sunday morning Sermon; also always a Prophetic Article, and a Summary of Current Events, as well as Stories, Anecdotes, etc.

Vol. XII., No. 49. Office, 45 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 4, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF LIEUT. FREDERICK SCHWATKA, and Pictures of Arctic Life.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF SEWING-SOCIETIES. Dr.

Talmage's Sermon at Joppa, the City of Dorcas.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

DR. TALMAGE IN FRANCE.

SOLOMON'S FALL. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE NEAR APPROACH OF CHRIST'S ADVENT.

By Rev. G. Weldon.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF REV. E. W. OAKES.

PEACE: HOW GAINED, HOW LOST. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

A HAZARDOUS VISIT.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Great Fires, etc.

Gems from New Books: A Midnight Conflict—A Story in the McAll Mission.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE HON. GEORGE H. PENDLETON.

ETHEL DAWSON'S RETALIATION. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: Their Perils, Fains, and Privations. (Continued.)

LIEUT. FREDERICK SCHWATKA, THE ARCTIC EXPLORER—Scenes in the Story of His Expedition.

LIEUTENANT FREDERICK SCHWATKA.
The Age of Exploration—Personal Details About Schwatka—The Arctic Expedition—The Five Comrades—Commencing the Longest Sleigh Journey on Record—Schwatka's Narrative—The Relics Discovered—Burying the Skeletons of the Franklin Expedition—A Difficult Journey Down Hill—A Hunt for Reindeer—The Igloo Camp.

STUDENTS of prophecy the world over have during the past few years warned this generation that the coming of the Lord is at hand. They have arrived at this conclusion chiefly by intelligent observation of the prominent characteristics of the age. They recognize those characteristics as precisely those which were to distinguish the closing period of this dispensation. Among them is the one that it should be a time when many should run to and fro, and knowledge should be increased. (Daniel 12:4.) At no period in the world's history has there been a generation so fully corresponding to this characterization. It has been an era of unprecedented exploration, and that not of a superficial character, but with a minuteness and exactitude of detail which increases knowledge. No half century has added to our geographical knowledge so largely as this. America has borne a share in the Arduous and Perilous Work.

To the exploration of the Dark Continent she has given Stanley, and to the fatal region of the Arctic she has given Hayes, Hall, DeLong, Greely, and the distinguished explorer whose portrait appears this week on the first page of this journal—Frederick Schwatka. The record of Lieutenant Schwatka's labors in this field is a long one. The most important and interesting of his journeys, however, is that which he undertook in 1878 in search of the records of the Franklin expedition, and in which he solved the dark mystery in which the fate of that brave man and his associates had been enveloped for thirty-five years. Some account of that expedition, incidents of which are illustrated on the first page, may interest our readers.

The Personal Appearance

of Lieutenant Schwatka is thus sketched by one of his companions on that expedition. He is tall and powerfully built. His face, bronzed by his long life out of doors, shows a mingling of the man of action and the man of thought. Underneath a high, intellectual forehead, his bright blue eyes are half hidden behind his glasses. A straight, large nose, a firmly set mouth, and a heavy chin speak of energy and determination. Although he wears the light mustache and imperial supposed to be peculiar to military men, his appearance is rather that of a German professor with an exceptional physique than of an explorer and a soldier.

At West Point, where he was graduated in 1871, Lieutenant Schwatka pulled stroke oar of his victorious class crew, and afterward, stationed among the Indians on the frontier, he participated in the Sioux War of 1876. In 1878, having obtained indefinite leave of absence, on application of Chief Justice Daly, president of the American Geographical Society, Lieutenant Schwatka was placed in command of the expedition to search for the records of Sir John Franklin.

The Expedition Left New York

June 19, 1878, on board the whaler Eothen. It consisted of only five persons, Lieutenant Schwatka, William H. Gilder, Henry Klutschak, a Bohemian engineer experienced in arctic travel, Frank E. Melms, who had made several voyages on a whaler, and Joseph Ebierbing, who had been a member of the Pandora expedition and could speak the Esquimaux language. The Eothen was manned with special care. Her captain was Thomas F. Barry, who on a previous voyage had discovered the traces of Sir John Franklin which had encouraged the Geographical Society to send out the expedition on the Eothen. The crew consisted of twenty-three men, all inured to the hardships of a Northern climate.

On August 7 Whale Point was reached, and after a long consultation it was decided to go to the mainland near Depot Island to spend the winter, and engage natives, buy dogs, etc., for the sleighing expedition inland. The winter was spent in making these arrangements, and in searching for clues as to the direction in which search for the Franklin relics would have the best prospect of success. On April 1, 1879, all was ready, and the three heavily laden sledges set out on their long journey over the snow (see illustration). The following is the modest record of the journey which Lieutenant Schwatka gave to the Geographical Society:

"My party consisted of four white men, four Esquimaux families, consisting of thirteen persons, all dog-drivers, hunters, etc. We had three sleds, carrying about one thousand pounds each, and forty-four dogs. The sleds carried about one month's provisions for the party and two weeks' food for the dogs. The route was to be directly across land, in a northwest direction, to the nearest point on Back's River, thence to King William's Land. Our greatest obstacle was the well-known tempestuous weather of the Arctic. We had an almost from the 20th of April to the 1st of June—forty-three days. We came upon a small village of about thirty souls, only two of whom had ever before seen any white man. One of these, a very intelligent looking man, aged about fifty-five or sixty years, gave us much interesting information of a lost ship that he had personally visited some thirty years before, eight miles due west of Grand Point. This is evidently one of Sir John Franklin's ships that floated down Victoria Channel after its abandonment.

Uninterrupted Storm

"He remembers Lieutenant Back's exploration in 1834, and recounted minutely his meeting with that explorer at the Dangerous Rapids. He says that the next white man that he saw was a dead one, in a large ship some thirty years ago. The body was in a bunk in the after part of the ship. On the mainland, near Grant and Smith points, he saw the tracks of white men, and judged they were hunting for deer. The first time he saw the tracks of four, and afterward the tracks of three men. He never saw the white men, but thinks that until fall and then moved on the mainland. The natives did not understand how to enter the vessel, so they cut through one side; and when the ice melted in the summer she sank, as the water poured in. After sinking, her masts stuck out of the water, and they collected many things which floated ashore. Shortly after the ship sank they found another small boat in Wilmot Bay. No monuments erected by the white men were ever found.

They Lived in the Ship

"On the 31st of May we encountered a large village, containing about 100 persons. From them we had obtained some very important information, which, coupled with other testimony obtained elsewhere, shows beyond all reasonable doubt the complete destruction of the more important records of Sir John Franklin's expedition at a point (which I called Starvation Cove) three miles northwest from this village. The spot was then visited. At Starvation Cove the natives found a small boat on its keel, and in it some skeletons, while outside were a few scattered around. All of the natives I interviewed, and who had been eye-witnesses of the sad scene, place the number at from six to ten.

"The most important information connected with this boat place, which is evidently the farthest reached by any body of Franklin's men in 1848, is that concerning about two feet long and about one foot square on the ends, which was broken open by the natives and found to contain books, and a small piece of iron to which all pieces of the same material would adhere when brought in contact. This tin box was retained by the natives, and its contents emptied on the ground, where they slowly perished. Some few of them were given to their children for playthings. That men thus placed should have burdened themselves with such a quantity of books, and the careful manner of their preservation, shows an importance which can only be attributed to the records of the expedition. I think it not improbable that the magnetized iron spoken of by these people from its description, was the dip-needle with which the north magnetic pole had been redetermined. This instrument would be a valuable historical relic.

A Sealed Tin Box,

"The party remained on King William's Land from June 10 to November 8, engaged in a thorough search of that island and its adjacent mainland. It may be interesting to note that the civilized food of the party was exhausted June 24. After this date, and until March 2, 1880, the white men subsisted the same as the native allies, principally upon the flesh of the reindeer, 511 of which were killed by the party on the expedition. The snow had sufficient disappeared by the 4th day of July to commence the search, and at this date we were at Cape Felix, King William's Land, near which the Erebus and Terror had been beset in September, 1846. From Cape Felix to Collinson Inlet only from fifteen to twenty-five miles of coastline, we were engaged in searching from July 27 to July 14, traversing 278 miles, the search being thorough, and extending a number of miles inland.

"This strip of coast was important, as being the nearest land to the imprisoned ships during the two years previous to their abandonment.

A Number of Relics

here found was large and interesting. In a grave between Victory Point and Cape Jan Franklin was found a silver medal awarded by the Royal Naval College to John Irving in midsummer of 1830, as second mathematical prize. This, with corroborative evidence, showed the grave to be that of Lieutenant Irving, the third lieutenant of His Majesty's ship Terror, Sir John Franklin's second ship.

"Returning southward, a skeleton was found and interred near Franklin Point, and another, which, from the fine quality of clothing, liner buttons, etc., I infer to be an officer, was reinterred in a desecrated grave on Point Le Vesconte. A skull was found about five hundred yards from a despoiled grave on Payer Point, in the latter there being found only a belt buckle and a musket cap. In South Erebus Bay the boat place was encountered. Here some four or more skeletons were properly buried, and a few interesting relics gathered.

"Near here the ice broke up with us July 24, rendering further sledding impracticable, and we were occupied until August 6 in crossing our effects from Erebus to Terror Bay, a very slow undertaking. The expedition achieved ever made, both in regard to time and distance having been absent from its base eleven months and twenty days, and having traversed 3,295 statute miles. It is the first Arctic expedition whose sole reliance for the subsistence of itself and draught animals has been premeditatedly placed in the game of the locality. It was the first expedition wherein the white men of a party lived solely upon the same diet, voluntarily assumed, as its native allies. From the thoroughness of the search and the conspicuous contrast of bleaching bones with the brown clay-stone composing the flat coasts of King William's Land and adjoining mainland, I do not hesitate to state that not a single unburied man of Sir John Franklin's expedition probably exists."

The Longest Sledge Journey

Other Incidents

of the journey, which fill in the outline presented by Schwatka, were gleaned from his comparisons. One of them (the subject of the second illustration), occurred at the summit of a high hill. The dogs had dragged the sledge up the steep declivity, their efforts stimulated by the peculiar cries of the Esquimaux and an occasional touch of the long whips. There was an interval of a few minutes for the recovery of breath and a look round over the strange, weird wilderness of ice and snow. The dogs were then detached, as the sleighs were to run down the slope by their own gravity. A long pole was passed through the load, and a man grasped it at each end to retard progress. It was one of the most exciting and most difficult passages of travel, for it needed all the strength to maintain the perpendicular with the feet held by the snow and the heavy weight of the sleigh pressing behind. The dogs ran behind, and occasionally one would be entangled in the harness, roll over, and be dragged along, barking and howling, by his companions, who seemed to have almost human enjoyment of practical joking.

On one occasion the ice hummocks became so difficult to climb that it was necessary to attach all the dogs to one sleigh. The party, therefore, divided, some of them going forward with the sleigh, while three others remained behind for a day with the other sleigh until the dogs could return for it. The inaction in that bracing air became intolerable, and Schwatka, Gilder, and Ebierbing set out with guns to try to kill a reindeer. (See third illustration.) They describe this journey as the most pleasant of the expedition. Ebierbing was particularly expert, and the three men, before night, succeeded in killing three reindeer, which formed a welcome addition to the larder.

The camp, in which several weeks were spent while waiting for the snow to melt, is depicted in the fourth illustration. The igloos, as the huts are called, are built of stones, with moss piled up and around them, and these, which were found ready constructed by the Esquimaux, with the tents, furnished accommodation for the party. A long, low passageway leads into the igloo, so constructed as to exclude the wind from the interior, and the only means of ventilation is by leaving open the door. In these places the Esquimaux will crowd and sleep in such numbers as to astonish the white men, who say that the simile of the packing of sardines in a sardine-box affords but a faint idea of the crowding.

DR. TALMAGE IN FRANCE.

FROM a letter from Mr. L. Klopsch, Dr. Talmage's travelling companion, received last week, we extract a few items of public interest. After describing Dr. Talmage's reception in London, where he was urged to stay a week or two, and preach and lecture, but declined, the letter reports the journey to Dover, and thence by steamer to Calais. There in the midst of a babbling crowd of porters, hotel runners, etc., which surrounded the party "a gentleman laid hold of Dr. Talmage's arm, and inquired if he had the 'honneur of addressing Mons. le docteur Talmache?' Having received an answer, he shouted: 'Pardon! I call my wife.' In less time than it takes to pen these words he returned with a bright, cheerful-looking lady, who at once shook both of Dr. Talmage's hands, and then bestowed the same salutation on each of the other members of the party.

"In the meantime her husband quickly apprehending the difficulty we were in, owing to our ignorance of French, straightened out matters in a twinkling. Then taking as much of the hand-baggage as he could manage to carry, he led the way to the waiting-room, where he begged permission to supply the ladies with luscious pears and grapes there on sale, and without waiting for a reply bought sufficient for the party. The acceptance of his friendly offering made him feel proud as a king. Thus encouraged, he again took the lead, carrying baggage in both hands and under both arms to the train, where, taking the conductor to a corner, he managed to secure for us the advantages of a private compartment from Calais to Paris. Our Frenchman was an entire stranger to the party, and thus far all we had managed to ascertain with regard to him was, that he was 'so glad of the honneur to meet Mons. le docteur Talmache.' Dr. Talmage was about to say that he was very thankful, etc., when the Frenchman promptly interrupted him by saying: 'Oh, ve ride a little vay!' and suiting the action to the word he and his wife, after politely bowing to us all, followed and closed the door.

Our strange friend, who spoke English imperfectly, addressed Dr. Talmage exclusively, at the rate of a volume a minute, and never stopped till the train arrived at ancient Calais, which is ten minutes distant from the landing place, known as new Calais. His wife addressed the whole party. Her English was awfully broken, and in her great anxiety to say all that was in her mind to say, she jammed her words together.

We gathered that the pair had been greatly profited by reading the Brooklyn sermons in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Not understanding English, they had managed to carry themselves through them with the aid of a dictionary. Although engaged as an engineer in a cracker bakery, the good man found considerable opportunity to do missionary work among his fellow townsmen, and he found Dr. Talmage's sermons exceedingly helpful to him in his Christian activity. He belonged to the Wesleyan denomination, in which he was an exhorter. Such knowledge of English as he and his wife possessed they had gained exclusively through their efforts to read the Tabernacle sermons, and he was proud of the fact that, though he spoke English but brokenly, he could both read and write it correctly and fluently. From the columns of the paper named, he and his partner had learned Dr. Talmage's plans of travel, and, filled with a burning desire to see the man whose sermons had done them so much good, they had decided to go to the dock at Calais and there await his arrival. To make sure of recognizing him, they had, before they left home, studied the features of a portrait that adorned their home.

As we arrived in Paris the day after the World's Exposition closed, we were, unfortunately, not able to see it in its glory. Getting up early in the morning, however, we took a coach and drove over to the grounds in order to see the famous Eiffel Tower. When questioned as to his impressions of the Tower, Dr. Talmage said: "It surpasses my expectations. I never before saw the exquisite and majestic so effectively combined. The way to look at it is to let your eye start at the base and very slowly ascend, and by the time your sight has travelled to the top, you will find yourself out of breath with emotion. A man who could build that tower could build a world if he had the materials and machinery requisite. Nothing that will ever be built on either continent will take anything from the originality and splendor of the intellect that planned that marvel before yet its two first bars of iron were interlaced. But the idea I have seen in some newspapers, that we cannot equal that structure for our American Exposition of 1892, is an absurdity as high as Eiffel Tower. Our American architects and engineers are as talented, our building materials are as strong, our foundations as solid, our skies as lofty. Surely, the lines of beauty are not all exhausted. I warrant you there are already a dozen American artists who have a tower more graceful than this, either in their brain or actually put in diagram."

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Business Man's Plans Changed.—Mr. Stewart, an evangelist, says: "I knew a business man who before his conversion was in the habit of going to church in the morning, and in the afternoon walking a short distance in the country with a companion, that they might procure drink. One Sunday morning he was at church as usual, and while standing singing he suddenly noticed the solemnity of the words. At once he stopped, for he knew that he was a servant of Satan and not God. He did not sing another word, but silently stood out the remainder of the Psalm. When he got home, he looked so troubled and dejected that his mother and sisters thought he was unwell, and advised him to remain quiet and not go out that day. The conviction of his sin was now so heavy upon him that he felt he could not go with his companions on their usual drinking expedition. In the evening his state of mind became unbearable. He determined to have the matter settled that night, and despite the advice of his mother and sisters he went out to an evangelistic meeting. He stayed at the close of the service and accepted Christ, resolving that from thenceforth he would serve God and Him alone. Soon the effects of his conversion were seen in his home. One by one, first his mother, then his sisters, came to Christ, and now they are a united family."

An Architect Thrown to the Lions.—The Rev. F. B. Meyer says: "It is related that when the Roman Colosseum was built and filled with all the great men and women of that great city there sat beside the Emperor the architect who had designed it. One of the objects of that assembly was to crown this architect and give great honor to his name. But before the Emperor did so he said, 'Let us first see how quickly and how many Christians a few lions can devour; turn the lions into the arena, and let the Christians out of their dungeons.' Before they opened the bars of those Christian dungeons, the architect rose beside the Emperor, and said, 'Sire, stay! if those Christians are to be thrown to the lions, let me be thrown first, for I too am a Christian.' And they took him and hurled him from that place of honor into the very mouths of the lions. He received no laurel crown from an Emperor's hand, but he received a crown that fadeth not away, from the King of kings. He confessed his Lord."

A Convert and the Weaver.—Dr. George F. Pentecost said: "I was converted when a young fellow of twenty. I had gone to a meeting to see the mourners, as we called them, go up to the front bench, and to generally make fun of the whole affair. But it pleased God to send the word home to my heart by the power of the Holy Spirit, and I had to give myself up to Christ. In that same little Baptist church there was a member, a very peculiar man, a Scotch weaver, who kept a number of hand-loom in his house, and spun, carded, and wove wool, making an honest living by his industry. He was a man of so many peculiarities that every one made fun of the queer little Scotchman with the cross eyes, but they never made fun of him in his presence, for he was one of those men who command respect. He was a real Christian. I had never spoken to him before, but the morning after my conversion I went up to him and reaching out my hand, said, 'Good morning, sir.' He looked surprised, and I hastened to explain: 'I thought you would like to know, sir, that I have given my heart to God, and for Christ's sake He has forgiven me.' A bright look came over his face. Thus while 'one touch of nature makes the whole world kin,' one touch of grace makes all Christians kin and feel that they are brothers."

A Tourist Finds Christ.—Mr. Blane, of South Africa, relates: "I knew a young man who was the only unconverted member of his family. At home he was constantly hearing of Christ, and being asked to accept Him as his Saviour. He determined to rid himself of all home restraint, and enjoy himself by going a tour on the Continent. He set out, and for some time all went well. At one of the hotels at which he stayed, there was an old Christian woman, and as was her constant habit, she having first obtained the consent of the proprietor, went from room to room, leaving upon the table of each a little tract or book. She entered this young man's room, and with a prayer to God for guidance, took out a small copy of Sankey's Hymns, and opening it at that hymn beginning with

'There were ninety and nine that safely lay
In the shelter of the fold,' under the guidance of the Holy Spirit she took her pencil and drew a stroke under the third line, 'One was out on the hills away.' Soon the young man entered his room, and at once the book caught his eye. He went over and read the pencilled line. Like a flash the image of his home came up before him, and all the dear ones there, until his stony heart was broken. Throwing himself upon his knees, he cried for mercy, and besought the Father to receive him, for Christ's sake. Soon the answer came, and he rose to his feet a new man in Christ Jesus."

THE BIRTHPLACE OF SEWING SOCIETIES.

DR. TALMAGE expected to spend last Sunday, December 1, in Joppa, now called Jaffa, a port on the southwest coast of Palestine, from which Jonah took ship for Tarshish, and where Peter resided for some time in the house of Simon the Tanner, and had the vision of clean and unclean beasts, and where he raised Dorcas from the dead. The subject Dr. Talmage selected for his discourse at Joppa was the character of Dorcas.

"And all the widows stood by him weeping, and showing the coats and garments which Dorcas made while she was with them." Acts 9: 39.

The Ministry of Dorcas—The Light of Poor Homes—Her Work Interrupted—Lamentations of Her Friends—The Miracle Wrought by Peter—I. Dorcas the Disciple—The Essential Step in Womanhood—II. Dorcas the Benefactress—The Charities of the Needle—Practical Work Needed—Woman in the War—III. Dorcas the Lamented—The Obsequies of the Empress Josephine—IV. Dorcas the Resurrected—Good Influences Never Stop—The Crowd Around the Risen Benefactress—The Heroes of the Crimea.

Christians of Joppa! Impressed as I am with your mosque, the first I ever saw, and stirred as I am with the fact that your harbor once floated the great rafts of Lebanon cedar from which the temples of Jerusalem were built, Solomon's oxen drawing the logs through this very town on the way to Jerusalem, nothing can make me forget that this Joppa was the birthplace of the sewing society that has blessed the poor of all succeeding ages in all lands. The disasters to your town when Judas Maccabæus set it on fire, and Napoleon had five hundred prisoners massacred in your neighborhood, cannot make me forget that one of the most magnificent charities of the centuries was by Dorcas, a woman with her needle embroidering her name ineffaceably into the beneficence of the world. I see her sitting in yonder home. In the doorway, and around about the building, and in the room where she sits are the pale faces of the poor. She listens to their plaint, she pities their woe, she makes garments for them, she adjusts the manufactured articles to suit the bent form of this invalid woman, and to the cripple that comes crawling on his hands and knees. She gives a coat to this one, she gives sandals to that one. With the gifts she mingles prayers and tears and Christian encouragement.

Started in this Seaport

Then she goes out to be greeted on the street corners by those whom she has blessed, and all through the street the cry is heard, "Dorcas is coming!" The sick look up gratefully in her face as she puts her hand on the burning brow; and the lost and the abandoned start up with hope as they hear her gentle voice, as though an angel had addressed them; and as she goes out the lane, eyes half put out with sin think they see a halo of light about her brow, and a trail of glory in her pathway. That night a half-paid shipwright climbs the hill and reaches home, and sees his little boy well clad, and says, "Where did these clothes come from?" And they tell him, "Dorcas has been here." In another place a woman is trimming a lamp; Dorcas bought the oil. In another place, a family that had not been at table for many a week are gathered now, for Dorcas has brought bread. But there is a sudden

Pause in That Woman's Ministry.

They say, "Where is Dorcas? Why, we haven't seen her for many a day. Where is Dorcas?" And one of these poor people goes up and knocks at the door, and finds the mystery solved. All through the haunts of wretchedness the news comes, "Dorcas is sick!" No bulletin flashing from the palace gate, telling the stages of a king's disease, is more anxiously awaited for than the news from this sick benefactress. Alas! for Joppa there is wailing, wailing! That voice which has uttered so many cheerful words is hushed; that hand which has made so many garments for the poor is cold and still; the star which had poured light into the midnight of wretchedness is dimmed by the blinding mists that go up from the river of death. In every God-forsaken place in this town, wherever there is a sick child and no balm, wherever there is hunger and no bread, wherever there is guilt and no commiseration, wherever there is a broken heart and no comfort—there are despairing looks and streaming eyes, and frantic gesticulations as they cry, "Dorcas is dead!" They send for the apostle Peter, who happens to be in the suburbs of this place, stopping with a tanner by the name of Simon. Peter urges his way through the crowd around the door, and stands

In the Presence of the Dead.

What expostulation and grief all about him! Here stand some of the poor people, who show the garments which this poor woman had made for them. Their grief cannot be appeased. The apostle Peter wants to perform a miracle. He will not do it amidst the excited crowd, so he kindly orders that the whole room be cleared. The door is shut against the populace. The apostle stands now with the dead. Oh, it is a serious moment, you know, when you are alone with a lifeless body! The apostle gets down on his knees and prays, and then he comes to the lifeless form of this one all ready for the sepulchre, and in the strength of Him who is the resurrection he cries, "Tabitha, arise!" There is a stir in the fountains of life; the heart flutters; the nerves thrill; the cheek flushes; the eye opens; she sits up!

We see in this subject

Dorcas the Disciple;

Dorcas the benefactress; Dorcas the lamented; Dorcas the resurrected. If I had not seen that word disciple in my text, I would have known this woman was a Christian. Such music as that never came from a heart which is not chorded and strung by divine grace. Before I show you the needle-work of this woman, I want to show you her regenerated heart, the source of a pure life and of all Christian charities. I wish that the wives and mothers and daughters and sisters of all the earth would imitate Dorcas in her discipleship. Before you cross the threshold of the hospital, before you enter upon the temptations and trials of to-morrow, I charge you, in the name of God, and by the turmoil and tumult of the judgment day, oh women! that you attend to the first, last, and greatest duty of your life—the seeking for God and being at peace with Him. When the trumpet shall sound, there will be an uproar, and a wreck of mountain and continent, and no human arm can help you. Amidst the rising of the dead, and amidst the boiling of yonder sea, and amidst the live, leaping thunders of the flying heavens, calm and placid will be every woman's heart who hath put her trust in Christ; calm notwithstanding all the tumult, as though the fire in the heavens were only the gildings of an autumnal sunset, as though the peal of the trumpet were only the harmony of an orchestra, as though the awful voices of the sky were but a group of friends bursting through a gateway at eventime with laughter, and shouting "Dorcas, the disciple!" Would God that every Mary and every Martha would this day sit down at the feet of Jesus!

Further, we see

Dorcas the Benefactress.

History has told the story of the crown; epic poet has sung of the sword; the pastoral poet, with his verses full of the redolence of clover tops, and a-rustle with the silk of the corn, has sung the praises of the plough. I tell you the praises of the needle. From the fig leaf robe prepared in the garden of Eden to the last stitch taken on the garment for the poor, the needle has wrought wonders of kindness, generosity, and benefaction. It adorned the girdle of the high priest; it fashioned the curtains in the ancient tabernacle; it cushioned the chariots of King Solomon; it provided the robes of Queen Elizabeth; and in high places and in low places, by the fire of the pioneer's back log and under the flash of the chandelier, everywhere, it has clothed nakedness, it has preached the gospel, it has overcome hosts of penury and want with the war cry of "Stitch, stitch, stitch!" The operatives have found a livelihood by it, and through it the mansions of the employer are constructed.

Amidst the greatest triumphs in all ages and lands, I set down the conquests of the needle. I admit its crimes; I admit its cruelties. It has had more martyrs than the fire; it has punctured the eye; it has pierced the side; it has struck weakness into the lungs; it has sent madness into the brain; it has filled the potter's field; it has pitched whole armies of the suffering into crime and wretchedness and woe. But now that I am talking of Dorcas and her ministries to the poor, I shall speak only of

The Charities of the Needle.

This woman was a representative of all those who make garments for the destitute, who knit socks for the barefooted, who prepare bandages for the lacerated, who fix up boxes of clothing for missionaries, who go into the asylums of the suffering and destitute, bearing that Gospel which is sight for the blind, and hearing for the deaf, and which makes the lame man leap like a hart, and brings the dead to life, immortal health bounding in their pulses. What a contrast between the practical benevolence of this woman and a great deal of the charity of this day! This woman did not spend her time idly planning how the poor of your city of Joppa were to be relieved; she took her needle and relieved them. She was not like those persons who sympathize with imaginary sorrows, and go out in the street and laugh at the boy who has upset his basket of cold victuals; or like that charity which makes a rousing speech on the benevolent platform, and goes out to kick the beggar from the step, crying: "Hush your miserable howling!" Sufferers of the world want as practice; not so much tears as dollars; not so much kind wishes as loaves of bread; not so much smiles as shoes; not so much "God bless you!" as jackets and frocks. I will put one earnest Christian man, hard working, against five thousand mere theorists on the subject of charity. There are a great many who have fine ideas about church architecture who never in their life helped to build a church. There are men who can give you the history of Buddhism and Mohammedanism who never sent a farthing for evangelization. There are women who talk beautifully about the suffering of the world, who never had the courage, like Dorcas, to take the needle and assault it.

Not so Much Theory

I am glad that there is not a page of the world's history which is not a record of female benevolence. God says to all lands and people, Come now, and hear the widow's mite rattle down into the poor-box. The Princess of Conti sold all her jewels that she might help the famine-stricken. Queen Blanche, the wife of Louis VIII. of France, hearing that there were some persons unjustly incarcerated in the prisons, went out amidst the rabble, and took a stick, and struck the door as a signal that they might all strike it, and down went the prison-door, and out came the prisoners. Queen Maud, the wife of Henry I., went down amidst the poor, and washed their sores, and administered to them cordials. Mrs. Retson, at Matagorda, appeared on the battlefield while the missiles of death were flying around, and cared for the wounded. Is there a man or woman who has ever heard of the Civil War in America who has not heard of the women of the Sanitary and or the fact that, before the smoke had gone up from Gettysburg and South Mountain, the women of the North met the women of the South on the battlefield, forgetting all their animosities while they bound up the wounded, and closed the eyes of the slain? Dorcas, the benefactress.

Christian Commissions,

I come now to speak of Dorcas, the lamented. When death struck down that good woman, oh, how much sorrow there was in this town of Joppa! I suppose there were women here with larger fortunes; women, perhaps, with handsomer faces; but there was no grief at their departure, like this at the death of Dorcas. There was not more turmoil and upturning in the Mediterranean Sea, dashing against the wharves of this seaport, than there were surgings to and fro of grief because Dorcas was dead. There are a great many who go out of life and are unmissed. There may be a very large funeral; there may be a great many carriages, and a plumed hearse; there may be high-sounding eulogiums; the bell may toll at the cemetery gate; there may be a very fine marble shaft reared over the resting-place; but the whole thing may be a falsehood and a sham. The Church of God has lost nothing, the world has lost nothing. It is only a nuisance abated; it is only a grumbler ceasing to find fault; it is only an idler stopped yawning; it is only a dissipated fashionable parted from his wine-cellar; while, on the other hand, no useful Christian leaves this world without being missed. The Church of God cries out, like the prophet: "Howl, fir-tree, for the cedar has fallen." Widowhood comes and shows the garments which the departed had made. Orphans are lifted up to look into the calm face of

The Sleeping Benefactress.

Reclaimed vagrancy comes and kisses the cold brow of her who charmed it away from sin, and all through the streets of Joppa there is mourning—mourning because Dorcas is dead. When Josephine of France was carried out to her grave, there were a great many men and women of pomp and pride and position that went out after her; but I am most affected by the story of history that on that day there were ten thousand of the poor of France who followed her coffin, weeping and wailing until the air rang again, because when they lost Josephine they lost their last earthly friend. Oh, who would not rather have such obsequies than all the tears that were ever poured in the lachrymals that have been exhumed from ancient cities. There may be no mass for the dead; there may be no costly sarcophagus; there may be no elaborate mausoleum; but in the damp cellars of the city, and through the lonely huts of the mountain glen, there will be mourning, mourning, mourning, because Dorcas is dead. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

I speak to you of Dorcas the Resurrected.

The apostle came to where she was, and said: "Arise; and she sat up!" In what a short compass the great writer put that—"She sat up!" Oh, what a time there must have been around this town when the apostle brought her out among her old friends! How the tears of joy must have started! What clapping of hands there must have been! What singing! What laughter! Sound it all through that lane! Shout it down that dark alley! Let all Joppa hear it! Dorcas is resurrected!

You and I have seen the same thing many a time; not a dead body resuscitated, but the deceased coming up again after death in the good accomplished. If a man labors up to fifty years of age, serving God, and then dies, we are apt to think that his earthly work is done. No. His influence on earth will Continue Till the World Ceases.

Services rendered for Christ never stop. A Christian woman toils for the upbuilding of a church through many anxieties, through many self-denials, with prayers and tears, and then she dies. It is fifteen years since she went away. Now the spirit of God descends upon that church; hundreds of souls stand up and confess the faith of Christ. Has that Christian woman, who went away fifteen years ago, nothing to do with these things? I see the flowering out of her noble heart. I hear the echo of her footsteps in all the songs over sins forgiven, in all the prosperity of the church. The good that seemed to be buried has come up again. Dorcas is resurrected!

After a while all these womanly friends of Christ will put down their needle forever. After making garments for others, some one will make a garment for them; the last robe we ever wear—the robe for the grave. You will have heard the last cry of pain. You will have witnessed the last orphanage. You will have come in worn out from your last round of mercy. I do not know where you will sleep, nor what your epitaph will be; but there will be a lamp burning at that tomb, and an angel of God guarding it, and through all the long night no rude foot will disturb the dust. Sleep on, sleep on! Soft bed, pleasant shadows, undisturbed repose! Sleep on!

Asleep in Jesus! Blessed sleep!
From which none ever wake to weep.

Then one day there will be a sky rending, and a whirl of wheels, and the flash of a pageant; armies marching, chains clanking, banners waving, thunders booming, and that Christian woman will arise from the dust, and she will be suddenly surrounded—surrounded by the wanderers of the street, whom she reclaimed, surrounded by the wounded souls to whom she had administered! Daughter of God, so what means this? It means that reward has come, that the victory is won, that the crown is ready, that the banquet is spread. Shout it through all the crumbling earth. Sing it through all the flying heavens. Dorcas is resurrected!

Strangely Surrounded,

In 1855, when some of the soldiers came back from the Crimean war to London, the Queen of England distributed among them beautiful medals, called Crimean medals. Galleries were erected for the two houses of Parliament and the royal family to sit in. There was a great audience to witness the distribution of the medals. A colonel who had lost both feet in the battle of Inkerman was pulled in on a wheel chair; others came in limping on their crutches. Then the Queen of England arose before them in the name of her Government, and uttered words of commendation to the officers and men, and distributed these medals, inscribed with the Four Great Battlefields,

Alma, Balaklava, Inkerman, and Sebastopol. As the Queen gave these to the wounded men, and the wounded officers, the bands of music struck up the national air, and the people, with streaming eyes, joined in the song:

God save our gracious Queen!
Long live our noble Queen!
God save the Queen!

And then they shouted "Huzza! huzza!" Oh, it was a proud day for those returned warriors! But a brighter, better, and gladder day will come when Christ shall gather those who have toiled in His service, good soldiers of Jesus Christ. He shall rise before them, and, in the presence of all the glorified of heaven, He will say: "Well done, good and faithful servant!" and then He will distribute the medals of eternal victory, not inscribed with works of righteousness which we have done, but with those four great battlefields, dear to earth and dear to heaven, Bethlehem! Nazareth! Gethsemane! Calvary!

HEALING DIRECT AND INDIRECT.

A QUAIN testimony to divine healing, which was given in Australia by a colored man, is published by Mrs. M. Baxter in her monthly magazine, Thy Healer.* The man described his conversion, and then went on to relate how he had suffered in bodily health. He said that he had suffered for a long time, but latterly had grown much worse. He obtained no relief from medicine, and was led to trust in the Lord for the healing of his body, as he had trusted Him for the salvation of his soul. He made his severe pain a matter of prayer, and determined to leave it in God's hands. But his faith led to self-examination, and he began to see that his pipe and tobacco were holding a place in his affections inconsistent with his consecration to God,

* Thy Healer and Faith Witness, a monthly Magazine edited by Mrs. M. Baxter, contains original articles on Holiness and Healing, Authentic Testimonies of Divine Healing, and Items of Intelligence from Heathen Lands where missionaries are laboring in faith, soliciting no help from man, but relying solely on God for support. Annual subscription, 30 cents, may be sent to Manager of CHRISTIAN HERALD.

They must be given up. It cost a hard struggle, but eventually he had the moral courage to tie up his pipe, tobacco, and matches, and flung them away. He walked away quickly that he might not be tempted to recover them. Then, feeling that he had passed through the crucible, and his spiritual nature had lost some of its alloy, he renewed his petition for healing. It came; the pain ceased, and he was well. The man had subsequently been informed that his malady had been induced by excessive smoking, and, therefore, there was nothing supernatural about his recovery, and that if he had abandoned smoking without trusting in God he would have recovered. But his faith was not shaken. He knew that he would not have put away his pipe without God's guidance and help, and therefore, whether the healing was direct or indirect, it had come from God.

A HAZARDOUS VISIT.

THE missionary of the American Board at Bailundu in West Central Africa, Mr. Woodside, tells in a letter to the Missionary Herald an incident which shows how intrepid the man can be who puts his trust in the King of kings. He had to go down to the coast to bring up a new missionary who had just arrived. King Kwikwi was at war, and Mr. Woodside's way led near the camp of the dreaded monarch. He soon found that his porters were in great terror at finding they must pass the camp. He goes on to say:

"One morning while they were on their way, three men came from the king's camp, which they had left the day before, warning the porters not to go further. 'You cannot go to the coast: the king will not allow it. You will be caught; they will tie you up; they will take your head off. They have lots of powder; they will shoot you,' etc. They asked me if I was going to the king. When I told them yes, they said: 'You must not go. The king is very angry. Don't go.'

"You can perhaps imagine what effect their story had upon my men. I never saw a caravan move off so quickly. Fortunately our camps were not together. Ours being a little in the rear, they had to pass us, and I succeeded in stopping them, and sent for my headmen. It did not take me long to come to the terms they had proposed in the morning. But they were now determined to return to their villages. They however consented to remain while Tomasi and I went to the king; Moso with most of our boys remaining with them; I taking Bole with my bed, and Mguma with food-box. My tent had to remain behind. Last night I spent my first night in a native hut, and I have this to say: it was the most comfortable one since I started. With a fire in the centre we kept quite warm.

"This morning we came on to the king's camp. We had no serious fears, for we knew we were in the service of One in whose hand are even the hearts of kings. The king was sitting outside the camp, and when he saw me he was very much delighted, and asked if I was going to the coast. When told that our carriers were afraid, he at once delegated one of his men to go with us. He asked us to stay in camp with him, and has given us one of the best huts; I must needs remain here two days waiting for the caravan.

"The king has been here in my hut to visit me. He tells me what he would like from the coast. I have promised to bring him a tepoia net, ten candles, some matches, and he added a blanket. He had me write these things down. He may think of some more things before I go, but it will be optional with me whether to bring them or not."

The Great Crisis from 1889 to 1901. By Rev. M. Baxter. This is a 32-page pamphlet containing a résumé of his larger works, with diagrams and tables of prophetic dates. It has been specially prepared for distribution at meetings, lectures, etc., and is of a convenient size for sending in envelopes through the mails. Persons desiring to arouse the attention of their friends and the public to the momentous character of the period on which we are entering will find this a valuable means of assistance. Price Fourteen Cents per dozen, including postage. Address Manager, 45 Bible House, New York.

SOLOMON'S FALL.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for December 15. 1 Kings 11:1-13. Golden Text, 1 Cor. 10:12.

Bible Photographs—A Common Human Fallacy—Who are Most Likely to Fall—Examples from Scripture—No Inherent Virtue in Man—Paul's Humbling Experience—Prosperity the Severe Test—The Falls of God's People Gradual—Solomon's Disobedience of God's Commands—His Relations with Foreign Nations—His Luxury and Magnificence—The Spiritual Sedative of Sin—The Influence of the Foreign Women—God's Judgment on Him—The Place of Danger—The True Source of Strength.

"LET him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall." God draws no flattering portraits; He shews us, in the many Bible biographies which He has given us, man as he is; and only in the life of Jesus does He fully shew us man as he may be, as he ought to be, as he has been, in the person of our great Example. If we want to know how fallible man is, let us not look into man-written biographies, but into those which are photographed in the Scripture of truth. It is a common fallacy, in our narrow, human way of viewing things, to think that those who are the most gifted, the most advanced, and the most prominent among God's people, are the least likely to fall. God's Word shews us just the contrary. It was the meekest man on the face of the earth who was tempted to and fell by a fit of anger; it was the man after God's own heart who fell into the awful sins of adultery and murder; the very prophet whose best commendation was in his saying, "As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand," fled for his life before the wicked Jezebel; the very forerunner of Jesus, whose vocation it was to preface the way of the Lord, was so tempted to unbelief that he sent unto Him, saying, "Art Thou He that should come, or do we look for another?" The very disciple who proclaimed Him "the Christ, the Son of the living God," was the one who denied Him; and in the history before us we find the wisest of men guilty of the most consummate folly.

"Cease ye from Man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?" (Isa. 2:22.) "Let no man glory in men." (1 Cor. 3:21.)

Oh, how long we take to learn that there is no inherent virtue in man; how slow are we to come to the conclusion which common honesty, in the light of the Holy Ghost, forced on Paul! "In me (that is, in my flesh) dwelleth no good thing." (Rom. 7:18.) The great apostle of the Gentiles saw in himself only ruin, bankruptcy, and death, but it was death for a glorious resurrection. "I am crucified with Christ, nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me."

The peculiar temptation to one in a high state of grace or of gift, is to rest in it instead of resting upon God. Paul learned through his humbling experience of being buffeted by a messenger of Satan, just as any other man might be, to rest in the grace of God as sufficient for him, and not in his revelation or wondrous usefulness, so that his testimony is, "By the grace of God I am what I am" (1 Cor. 15:10), not by my wonderful conversion, not by my being filled with the Holy Ghost even, but "By the grace of God I am what I am;" and his own experience leads him to warn others, through the example of the failure of some who were highly privileged, "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."

Prosperity is truly far more dangerous than adversity. When King Solomon felt so strongly that he was "but a little child," that he knew "not how to go out or to come in," and that so he was unable to judge the people, he was far more secure than when his fame was spread abroad, and there came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth which had heard of his wisdom. (1 Kings 1:34.)

The Falls of God's People

do not come about suddenly. The wicked are "brought into desolation as in a moment." (Ps. 73:19); not so with the people of the Lord.

There is always something which leads up to a fall, a lack of prayerfulness or of recollectedness of spirit, an indulged resentment against someone, a yielding to feelings of envy or to heart-burnings of some kind or other, before the sin becomes a word or a deed. David was acting without reference to the Lord before the enemy had power to bring about his terrible fall; Solomon had fallen into disregard of the word and commands of God before he became the terrible backslider which he was when he fell into open idolatry.

Several centuries before Solomon came to the Throne, God had instituted the law of the kingdom, and given specific commands regarding him who should reign over his people. "He shall not multiply horses to himself" (Deut. 17:16), yet we find that, in defiance of God's command, "Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen." (1 Kings 4:26.) "And Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen; and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed in the cities for chariots, and with the King at Jerusalem." (1 Kings 10:26.) God's command ran, "He shall not . . . cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the Lord hath said unto you, Ye shall henceforth return no more that way." Yet they brought unto Solomon horses out of Egypt and out of all lands." (11 Chron. 9:28.) "And a chariot came up and went out of Egypt (perhaps a kind of mail-cart) for six hundred shekels of silver, and an horse for an hundred and fifty; and so for all the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring them out by their means." Solomon, by this constant communication with Egypt and the surrounding nations, for mercantile purposes, and not with the sole object of winning them to God, gradually lessened the barrier which made Israel a separate people, "a special people" unto the Lord. God had commanded, "Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, yet this is the very glaring sin which is connected with the latter part of his life. And again, "Neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold," yet Solomon made a navy with the express object of bringing gold from Ophir. "And they came to Ophir and fetched from thence gold, four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to King Solomon." In his own house all his drinking vessels were of gold, "and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold: none were of silver; it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon." The weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and three score and six talents of gold, besides that which chapmen and merchants brought." (11 Chron. 9:13, 14.)

That His Heart Turn not Away,"

Thus we see that in the style in which he lived Solomon relaxed from the simple loyalty to God which characterized him when he was a little child in his own eyes. Then he felt himself the steward of God; now, in his glory and fame, and conscious wisdom, he ceased, little by little, to lean upon the wisdom of God; and the wisdom of the world, which seeks its own, colored his life. From self-love, self-will, and self-esteem it is but a short step to idolatry. "Solomon loved many strange women." The holy chasteness and simplicity of the law of God, which he had already forsaken in the matter of horses and riches, and association with the heathen, was now forsaken in his family life. His marriage with Pharaoh's daughter was an alliance with Egypt. She may have become converted, but this is not mentioned. When, however, he "loved many strange women, women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites, of the nations concerning which the Lord said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall not go in to them, neither shall they come in unto you; for surely they will turn away your heart after their gods," Solomon was going straight into sin with his eyes open. (Ex. 34:16; Deut. 7:3, 4). No wonder "his wives turned away his heart." We cannot be guilty of any disobedience toward God without incurring a proportionate deadness and powerlessness in our souls.

Sin is a Spiritual Sedative which acts on the soul as laudanum and morphia do on the body. Insidiously sin got the upper hand of Solomon. No doubt, in his God-given wisdom, he was slow in yielding to the demands of his many wives for the institution of their heathen religion in the land; but the evil was at work within; the separation between him and his God grew; and when old age came on, the wisdom of this wisest of men did not suffice him; "his wives turned away his heart after other gods; and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as the heart of David his father." David was faulty enough in his relation to man, but he never faltered in his allegiance to God as God. When he had sinned he never justified himself, but always justified his God. Solomon, on the contrary, forsook the Lord, and while his outward life was more respectable in the eyes of the world of that day, yet in God's eyes he had fallen far lower than his father fell. He added sin to sin, he "went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom, the abomination of the Ammonites. And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord, and went not fully after the Lord, as did David his father."

Man's Wisdom Without God

is an awful thing; it was the knowledge of good and evil which brought grief and suffering to our first parents. Like a ship without a rudder, it drifted Solomon farther and farther from his God. His departure from God could not be a secret from his people; sooner or later every sin comes to light, he began to build high places for the false gods which his wives worshipped, and he sacrificed to them even on the sacred soil of Jerusalem, which "God had chosen for Himself" to set His name there. (11 Chron. 6:6.)

"And the Lord was angry with Solomon because his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel, which had appeared unto him twice, and had commanded him concerning this thing, that he should not go after other gods; but he kept not that which the Lord commanded." God would not break His word, and He could not countenance sin: He had promised Solomon that He would establish his kingdom if he would serve and obey Him; but Solomon had failed, and God must show His hatred against sin; therefore He declared to Solomon that He would rend the kingdom out of his son's hand, leaving him but one tribe, and that for David's sake, and for Jerusalem's sake. If we are unfaithful to the position in which God places us, He must withdraw us from it. It may be, it probably was, the case that Solomon was brought back before he left this world. The book of Ecclesiastes, with its graphic picture of the hollowness of this world, even where it can be enjoyed in the fullest degree of which human nature is capable, looks like a sorrowful retrospect of one who had made a terrible mistake in life. Oh how different its tone from that of David, "I will bless the Lord at all times, His praises shall continually be in my mouth!" (Ps. 34:1.) "When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedness which he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he shall save his soul alive." (Ezek. 18:27.)

Let us learn the lesson so needful to us all, that we are never out of reach of temptation in this world, never in a state where it is impossible to us to sin. The nearer we are to God; and the more He is pleased to use us, the more surely are we a target for the enemy of souls. While we keep our true place of nothingness, crucified with Christ, expecting nothing from our own zeal or wisdom, our own integrity or experience, but rely only and absolutely on the keeping power of Jesus, the enemy cannot touch us. "He that was begotten of God keepeth him, and the evil one toucheth him not." (1 John 5:18 R. V.) And let us be careful about little infidelities; every step we take is either a step with rod, or away from Him. There is often immense significance in little things, "He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much." (Luke 16: 10.) His grace truly is sufficient for us, but only as we learn with Paul to say, "When I am weak, then am I strong." (II Cor. 12: 10.)

YEAR APPROACH OF CHRIST'S ADVENT.

By Rev. G. Weldon.

It was a memorable declaration of the Apostle John in Revelation 22, that the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy—that is to say, that from Christ all prophecy proceeds; in Him the centres, and to Him returns. Prophecy fulfilled in the history of the past, unfulfilled it is the history of the future. Each accomplishment of any one predicted event is not only a guarantee for the accomplishment of future ones, but affords cumulative evidence of the truth of our Christian faith. A prayerful examination of prophecy shows to us one of the most exalted and delightful views of the Divine economy in the history of the world.

When we think of God looking through the mists of countless ages, beholding generations yet unborn, depicting as in a photograph not only their actions, but their very words and thoughts, and making the conflicting plans andarring passions of perverse human hearts fulfil to the letter the minutest details of His Almighty will, we have a wonderful and magnificent illustration that the Most High ruleth in the kingdoms of men, and is a Governor among the nations.

The most casual observer of events now transpiring in the world must be constrained to admit that we are living in An Age of Rapid Transition.

Events develop themselves now in a single year which, a century ago, would not have appeared in twenty years. Just exactly as a stone rolling down the mountain-side increases its velocity in proportion as it reaches the termination of its course, so, as each succeeding year glides on toward the consummation of our hopes in the Coming of Christ, events develop themselves with increasing interest and progressive speed. And, therefore, as we look around us now in the present age, and take up our Bibles, and read of certain signs which are to transpire in the last days, if we can find such signs actually in existence around us, we are warranted in saying that we are in the last days, and are approaching the Advent of our long expected and absent Lord.

As the end draws nigh, we must expect Wickedness to Become Aggravated.

Just as in the disease of consumption, in proportion as the victim approaches the grave the body becomes more and more the seat of the disease, until at last it sinks a prey to the fell destroyer; so we may expect that as time advances, the various forms of iniquity and developments of evil will appear in an intensified and aggravated degree. The history of the antediluvian world will repeat itself in these last days: "As it was in the days of Noah, even so shall it be in the days of the Son of Man." St. Paul says there will be in the last days some "having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." These are the modern Pharisees and superstitious formalists, who, equally with the sceptical Sadducees, flourish like a green bay tree in these latter times. They may be seen on Sunday morning at fashionable churches, acknowledging in the general confession that they are miserable sinners, and have gone astray like lost sheep; and in the afternoon promenading at fashionable resorts, arrayed in purple and fine linen, with every outward adornment of wealth and luxury; and on week days attending the theatre or opera, or dancing polkas or waltzes in brilliant ball-rooms.

We find Romanism and ritualism putting forth their seductive attractions to deceive, if possible, the very elect; and society, for the most part, becoming more and more worldly, with and extravagance. These, with other things too numerous to particularize, strangely coincide with St. Paul's prediction, "In the last days perilous times shall come, for men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, incontinent, . . . lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." (II Tim. 3: 1, 5.) We are in fact treading upon the borders of the final crisis of this dispensation. We have much reason to believe that the 6,000 years from the creation of man, as well as the 1,260 years from the complete establishment of the Papal and Mohammedan Antichrists, is very near its termination, and that we are on the eve of the appearance of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ, to establish upon this earth the glorious fifth monarchy predicted by the prophet. (Daniel 7: 9-14.)

Superabounding Luxury

THE REV. E. W. OAKES.

(See Portrait on page 780.)

THERE is an important significance in the words which the Master used in the parable in which He depicted the course of events between the time of His ascension and His second coming. He likened the situation to a house in which, when the householder departed for a long absence, He gave authority to His servants and to every man his work. (Mark 13: 34.) It is this discrimination in appointments which has been the most conspicuous mark of the Church's history. When a work needed to be done, a man specially adapted to do that work has been raised up. Happy is that man, and well is it for the Church when the call to special work is recognized and obeyed. Sometimes, like Abraham, the servant of God has to leave home and friends and pleasant surroundings, to obey; but when a conscientious man hears the call he has no alternative.

These thoughts are suggested by an announcement in a recent issue of a daily journal of Manchester, N. H. It states that the Rev. E. W. Oakes (whose portrait appears on page 780), has felt it his duty to resign the pastorate of the People's Baptist Church, in which he has labored for over three years. The reasons for that step are outlined in the report of the proceedings of the church meeting, at which the resignation was tendered, and the adjourned meeting at which, with many expressions of regret, it was accepted. The resolutions then passed record that Mr. Oakes visited Manchester in the summer of 1886, and held evangelistic services, intending to remain only one or two weeks. But a great work resulted from God's blessing on his labors. Crowds filled the First Baptist Church in which the meetings were held, and Mr. Oakes was urged to protract his visit into the winter. He consented, and the meetings continued with ever-increasing blessing.

It was represented that as a large proportion of the persons who came were non-churchgoers, still more of that class might be attracted if the meetings were held in some secular building. The experiment was made of hiring the Mechanics' Hall, and the result justified the theory. The large building was regularly filled. Men and women came who never went to church. Many conversions took place, and gradually a little band of seventy-five persons, who had publicly confessed their faith in Christ by baptism, surrounded the evangelist. They were reluctant to leave the man whom God had blessed to their enlightenment, and begged him to continue his ministrations. Meetings continued to be held almost every night, and the numbers grew. They did not come from other churches, but from the outside ranks of the careless and indifferent. But the work was vigorous and aggressive. It extended widely, and after two years the people desired to change their temporary quarters for a permanent church home.

It was astonishing to see workmen and even the very poor bring their offerings for this work. What sacrifices they must have made to give such sums as they brought, only they knew. But they gave gladly, and a few wealthy friends, who were delighted to see these people gathered from the highways and hedges, came to their help. The People's Baptist Church was built at a cost of $16,000, with a seating capacity of 500 persons. It was speedily filled, more than 200 members have been received into church fellowship, and numerous spheres of aggressive Christian work have been occupied.

Now Mr. Oakes has tendered his resignation. The consternation with which it was received shows that pastor and people had been looking at the work from different standpoints. The church thought they had a permanent pastor; the pastor thought that his mission had been to gather a people together, see them well organized, and then hand them over to a suitable pastor, when he would go to other fields for the rough pioneer work. An adjournment for a week was taken, that God's will might be learned in prayer, and that the pastor's friends might labor with him to change his determination if that should seem best. But Mr. Oakes was clear that God's purpose with him was to use him in evangelistic work, and that in that sphere rather than in the comfortable position of a church pastor he might expect a blessing. There was no gainsaying this view of his call, and the church, therefore, sorrowfully accepted his resignation, only stipulating that he should return to them once a year to hold evangelistic meetings.

We admire the promptitude with which a soldier or a sailor in the service of his country quits his home or station at the call of his commanding officer to duty in the field, and this seems to be a like case. A permanent home, a regular salary, association with old and tried friends, are no mean adjuncts of happiness, but the soldier of Christ does not make his personal happiness his chief object in life. Mr. Oakes seems to look chiefly for the sphere in which he can render the most effective service for the Master, and in that aim must be found the motive of his action.

We sincerely trust a very wide sphere may be opened to him. As a sketch of his life appeared in this journal a few years ago, it is sufficient to say here that a very sad experience has fitted him to deal specially with the degraded and abandoned outcasts of society. He is able to tell them that he was once under the power of evil, which held him helpless in its remorseless grasp; that neither in pious and influential friends, nor in his own good resolutions nor in temperance alone, could he get deliverance. That when all seemed lost, and his ruin for time and eternity seemed inevitable, Christ took him and gave him a new nature, and made him a new man. While sympathizing with the depraved as only a fellow-sufferer can, he can tell them of the means of his own rescue, and point them to the same sure way of escape. In the Bowery of New York, in other large cities in the East, and across the continent to the Pacific slope Mr. Oakes has done this work, and none will ever know until all God's rescued children are gathered at last into the Father's house in heaven how many have been brought in through the testimony and example of this devoted evangelist. We are glad to know that this grand work is to be resumed, and hope that the pastors in the cities where drunkenness and vice abounds will summon Mr. Oakes to their help in fighting the Lord's battle against the mighty. His address until January 1, 1890, is at Manchester, N. H.

NEW EDITION OF REV. M. BAXTER'S PAMPHLETS.

THREE PAMPHLETS IN ONE

1. Coming Wars from 1888 to 1891, and Translation of 144,000 living Christians on March 5, 1895, before the 3½ years' persecution by Napoleon, etc.

2. Twenty Predictions about Coming Wars, by Twenty Learned Expositors.

3. End of this Age by the Descent of Christ in Passover Week, April, 1901, being 45 years from the Crimean War Treaty of Peace in Passover Week, April, 1856, and 2,345 years from Passover Week, April, B. C. 444-5, as shown by Daniel's Dates.

The Three Pamphlets in an Illuminated Cover, 144 Pages, postage included,

Price Twenty Cents.

For sale at this office, 71 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FOR 1890.

THE announcement that the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD intended to enlarge the paper at the beginning of next year has called forth a large number of letters from the subscribers. Among them are a few expressing regret that there should be any change. It is gratifying to learn that the journal, in its present form, is so highly appreciated, and it is pleasant to be able to inform its friends that the change contemplated will not materially alter its form, although by the intended slight alteration its appearance will be much improved. It is proposed to make the page an inch and a quarter longer and half an inch wider. Thus the paper will retain the shape which has been found convenient for reading, and will nevertheless contain in the aggregate considerably

MORE READING-MATTER.

Each column will have twelve more lines than now, and the lines will be a little longer. The result will be that the reading-matter on each page will be more than now goes on a page by about seventy lines of the present length, and the thirteen pages will contain as much as would fill sixteen pages of this size.

As readers will perceive, this change will entail increased expense for paper, composition, and electrotyping, and if the primary object of the publishers had been to make money by the publication, the change would not be made. Their endeavor has been to supply their subscribers, at a low price, with a good, bright, elevating journal, which should be pure without being inane, instructive without being dull—a paper which should be a practical proof, to young and old, that the printed page can be made interesting without records of crime, and illustrations attractive without pandering to prurient tastes. The publishers believe they have achieved their object, and now that the support the Christian public has given them justifies an increase of expenditure, they propose to make THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a still more valuable journal by supplying more reading-matter.

NEW TYPE

and better illustrations without raising the price. In taking this new departure, the publishers cherish the hope that a still more extended field of usefulness will be opened to them. They are anxious that the gospel truth contained in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD might reach a still greater number of homes than it has ever done. There are thousands of Christian families in our broad land who do not know of the existence of such a paper—thousands who have children growing up with a desire for entertaining literature, which they will have, but which the godly parents do not know how to give them without deleterious elements. Such a paper as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is precisely what they are looking for. Canvassers might reach such families, conspicuous advertisements in local journals might inform them, but the cost of either method would be enormous, and would curtail the means the publishers would prefer using in improving the paper itself. Besides this, the present large circulation has been mainly built up by the labor of the subscribers themselves, and the publishers believe they can do no better than continue to rely on the same method. They therefore, with the object of getting THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in its improved form still more extensively circulated, announce that the paper is from now until the end of this year to any person in the United States or Canada. Subscribers having friends to whom they would like to introduce the paper, have only to send the names and addresses of their friends by letter or postal card to the Manager, 45 Bible House, New York, and the remaining numbers of this year will be mailed to those addresses free of charge each week, as they are published, until the end of 1889. It will also be mailed free for the same period to any person, not a subscriber, who may wish to have it, and who will notify the Manager of his wish, and state his name and address.

TO BE SENT FREE

This offer is made in the hope that a large number of names will be sent, and the paper so become known and made useful in districts which it has not reached heretofore.

Subscribers intending to canvass or make up clubs would do well to send to the Manager, enclosing two-cent postage stamp for the new list of terms, which have been slightly changed in their favor, and so avoid the delay and mistakes liable to occur in the busy season at the end of the year.

N. B.—Any person sending $1.50 now will receive the paper until the end of 1890, including the remaining issues of this year. This applies to old subscribers as well as new ones.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Session of Congress Which Opened on Monday last promises to be a barren one. The small majority which the Republicans have in the House, which is always liable to be depleted by absence, illness, etc., will be likely to be more productive of deadlocks than of legislation. Besides the interminable tariff question, which will probably give rise to a long debate, the subjects which are expected to occupy its attention are a national bankruptcy bill, the currency question in relation to the silver coinage, the proposal of subsidies arising out of the deliberations of the Pan-American Congress, and the federal control of elections for Congress. The necessity for going early to press precludes our giving a sketch of the proceedings at the opening.

The Postmaster-General's Annual Report, issued last week, shows a deficiency of $6,350,183. The gross receipts were $56,175,611, from which is deducted $27,596 for bad debts, etc.; the gross expenditure was $62,498,198. The total number of employees is now 150,935, of whom 59,838 are postmasters, 5,640 are in the railway mail service, and 47,466 are clerks. Mr. Wanamaker makes several suggestions in his report, and one important admission which, it may be hoped, he will not have to repeat next year. Referring to the proposed reduction of the letter-rate to one cent, he says: "It would seem to be wiser first to improve the facilities rather than reduce the postage while the service still remains conspicuously imperfect." It is worse than imperfect: it is in a most deplorable condition. One of his suggestions is to save time in the delivery of foreign mails by having sorting offices on board the mail steamers. This would enable the Post-Office to dispatch the foreign mail to cities in the interior immediately, without waiting for them to be sorted in port. A matter that concerns a very large class of the public is the establishment of Post-Office Savings Banks. Mr. Wanamaker takes a favorable view of this project. He suggests "early consideration of the question of establishing postal savings banks at 10,000 of the fourth-class offices, in towns where such facilities are most needed, leaving the extension of this privilege to be determined after a trial of two years."

Two Gigantic Fires were Chronicled Last week. On Tuesday the town of Lynn, Mass., was a scene of desolation. A fire which started about noon in a wooden factory, spread from building to building over fifteen acres of the business portion of the town, burning almost unchecked for ten hours. Large factories, stores, hotels, churches, and newspaper offices fell before it. The heat was so intense that the firemen had to work behind shields, and but for their heroic persistence the whole town must have been destroyed. It is matter for congratulation that, although an enormous number of operatives were employed in the factories, only one life is reported to have been lost. The loss is estimated at $5,000,000, but the most serious feature is that on the verge of winter about eight thousand operatives must be thrown out of work. On Thursday Boston saw the largest fire since the great fire of 1872, which destroyed sixty million dollars worth of property. The fire on Thursday started in the granite building occupied by the dry goods firm of Jordan, Marsh &

Co., which was supposed to be fire proof. The fire spread rapidly, owing to the high wind, and two acres covered with tall buildings holding valuable stock were burned over before it was under control. The loss, which was at first estimated at eleven millions, will not, it is now thought, exceed six. The general belief is that it originated in a crossed electric wire.

The Bargain with the Chippewas Concluded last week, is another step in the right direction in the Government's dealings with the red men providing its terms are honestly observed. The Chippewas are to receive for their land in northern Minnesota, comprising about two and a half million acres, not only $1.25 per acre for the farming lands, but a price for the timber on their extensive and valuable pine lands, which, though it cannot be exactly reckoned yet, will amount to many millions. Instead of being scattered at many points, the various bands of Chippewas will concentrate on two main reservations, where they are to hold their lands in severalty. That appears to be the only true and rational solution of this perplexing problem, and it must be supplemented by a thorough system of Christian education or even the individual possession of land will not be beneficial to the Indian.

The Scheme of Federation of the British Empire which has been advocated by many eminent statesmen is vigorously opposed by the party in power. Lord Salisbury, speaking on November 27 at a Conservative Conference, condemned the declaration recently made by Lord Rosebery, that the reform of the House of Lords must be of a drastic character, and said that the declaration was a rash one. If Lord Rosebery meant that the House of Lords ought to contain an elected element superior to the hereditary members, that necessarily involved an encroachment upon the rights and privileges of the House of Commons. Referring to the progress of the home rule scheme to federate England, Scotland, Ireland, and Wales, Lord Salisbury said he considered the application of such a scheme to Great Britain as chimerical.

The Death of the Poet Martin Farquhar Tupper took place on November 29. He was seventy-nine years of age, and of late but little had been heard of him. It is nearly fifty years since his work entitled Proverbial Philosophy was issued, and made his name a household word with American readers. He continued to write even so lately as 1886, but none of his later works had the popularity of the Proverbial Philosophy, of which half a million copies were sold in America alone. He visited this country in 1851 and 1877.

Letters Received From H. M. Stanley show with what reluctance Emin Pasha abandoned his province. Nothing but the advance of the Mahdists, massacring all they met, seems to have decided him to leave. Then came the rebellion in his own camp, in which he was made prisoner with one of Stanley's officers. But for the ammunition which Stanley carried to him, he could never have suppressed the mutiny, nor held the Mahdists at bay long enough to make his escape. He must have perished at Wadelai, or been carried captive to Khartoum. As it is, the fruits of his long labors have been scattered to the winds, and the officers who did not accompany him on his retreat with Stanley will probably add to the forces of the Mahdists. After Emin had consented to accompany Stanley, there was a long delay in gathering the people with their effects for the march, and then Stanley himself was stricken down with sickness. He says it was "a dreadful illness. The strain had been too much, and for twenty-eight days I lay helpless, tended by the kindly and skilful hand of Surgeon Parkes. Then little by little I gathered strength, and ordered the march for home." Stanley's letter is dated from the Church Missionary Society's station at the south end of Victoria Nyanza, and the explorer dwells on the gratitude to God which filled his heart when he saw rising above it the cross, which told him that he had reached the outskirts of blessed civilization.

The Revs. H. R. Keates and W. M. Stonehill, who have had long and successful experience in Evangelistic work in Great Britain and Ireland, and who are commended by Bishop Richardson, R. E. C., and the Rev. M. Baxter, of London, have just arrived in this country for the purpose of conducting special evangelistic or revival services; and they are holding meetings during December in the W. C. T. U. Rooms, Gates Avenue, Brooklyn, on Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday evenings; and in Ridgewood Hall, corner Lexington Avenue and Broadway, Brooklyn, on Sunday evenings. Pastors who may desire to correspond with a view to their conducting revival meetings in their churches, or any of our readers who may know of openings for such meetings in their locality, are invited to address Rev. H. R. Keates, care of Manager CHRISTIAN HERALD, 45 Bible House, New York.

The Providential Escape of Bishop Whipple of Minnesota in a railroad accident is reported from Albany, Ga. He was travelling on the Savannah, Florida, and Eastern Railroad on November 23. The train had attained a speed of forty miles an hour when on reaching a point five miles east of Albany a broken rail caused the sleeping-car in which Bishop Whipple was to fall on its side. It was dragged about three hundred feet, but before the train could be stopped it was detached and rolled down over an embankment. There were eight passengers in the sleeper, all of whom were badly bruised and shaken up. They were made as comfortable as possible until the train reached Way Cross, where Surgeon Folks, of the Savannah, Florida, and Western Road came aboard and attended the injured ones. No bones had been broken, and all were able to proceed. The Bishop spoke of his escape as almost miraculous.

A Cablegram From Dr. Talmage, Published by the daily journals on November 28, announces that on the previous day he and his party left Alexandria for Cairo. He expected to eat his Thanksgiving dinner under the shadow of the Pyramids and to proceed thence to Jaffa, the ancient Joppa. Thence he intended to go straight to Jerusalem. He will make an extensive tour in Palestine, visiting Jericho, the Sea of Galilee, Bethsaida, Tiberias, Nazareth, Mount Carmel, Sidon, and other points of interest, leaving Beyrout about Christmas Day. The route followed by Dr. Talmage is about the same as the one taken by the Roman Catholic Pilgrims last Spring.

A Little Girl's Appeal to a King has Received a favorable reply, as announced in the Philadelphia Inquirer of November 18. It states that among the sailors on the Belgian steamer Rhynland, of the Red Star line, plying between Philadelphia and Antwerp, was a sailor who was a citizen of the former city. About five years ago, while the vessel was in the American port, he received a letter stating that his sister was dying, and begging him to come to her. He showed the letter to his captain, and begged for leave of absence. But the vessel was just going to sail, and leave was refused. Thereupon the sailor deserted, and made his way to his sister's home just in time to receive her dying farewell. After her death he shipped on the Waesland, a sister ship of his former vessel, the Rhynland. He shipped under another name, and tried to conceal his identity. But after several voyages he was discovered, and when his ship was in Antwerp he was sentenced to seven months imprisonment for desertion. On the return voyage a shipmate went to his friends and reported what had occurred. The story made a deep impression on the orphan daughter of his dead sister, who had written the letter which led to his offence. She was deeply concerned about her uncle, and finally concluded to write to the King of the Belgians himself, stating the facts, and asking for her uncle's release. She did so simply and respectfully. An answer has now come from the King's private secretary. It was addressed to the little girl, and said that "in compliment to his majesty's little correspondent in Philadelphia, the King had ordered the sailor's immediate release." He had not served one-half his sentence. Instances have been known of still greater condescension. The prayers of children to the King of kings have been heard and answered in the deliverance of the captives of sin and Satan. (Matt. 18: 10.)

A Whale Entangled in an Ocean Telegraph cable was found recently off the coast of Brazil. For some months past there has been a defect in the cable of the Western and Brazilian Telegraph Company. It was located at length, and the repairing steamer Viking was sent out to raise the cable and restore the insulation. At the place where the fault was detected the cable lay in fifty-seven fathoms of water. The strain of drawing it up was much greater than was expected, and finally the cable broke at the fault. As the end came to the surface it brought with it part of the carcass of an enormous whale, fifty feet long. The whale had evidently made a desperate struggle for liberty, for the cable was twisted twice around its tail, and had almost cut the monster in two. Though it had been able by its gigantic strength to strain the cable and impair its usefulness, it had not been able to break it and it lost its life in the struggle. The suicidal folly of the great enemy of souls is manifested in an analogous conflict. In attempting to sever the tie that unites Christ with His people, and interrupt their communion with Him, he courts defeat and involves himself and the men whom he uses as instruments in destruction. (Matt. 21: 44.)

A Bride's Mortification is Described by the Atlanta Constitution. It states that a young lady of that city had been engaged for some time to be married to a very devoted lover, whose patience she had tried severely by her capricious ways. He had vainly endeavored to get her to fix a day for their marriage. She would answer him flippantly, or would declare that she did not mean to be married for some years. The lover bore with her treatment uncomplainingly, for he loved her well and believed that in time she would yield to his wish. As his business took him away from the city, he pressed her to arrange the wedding for a particular day, when he knew that he would be at liberty to go to Atlanta for the purpose, but as usual she treated his request lightly, and he forbore to press it. But it appears that the capricious young lady had concluded that it was time to stop playing with him. After he was gone, she began to make arrangements to be married on the day he had named. The bridal dresses were purchased and minister and guests invited, but she omitted to notify the bridegroom. When the party was gathered he was absent. They waited until late, but when he did not come the bride became agitated and wept bitterly. The wedding had to be postponed until the next day, when the bridegroom could be sent for. Even then he could with difficulty be convinced that he was not being made the victim of a practical joke, but he went and gladly took his part in the delayed ceremony. There are some who have postponed union with Christ for years, and who have put off final decision from time to time, though always intending to give themselves to Him some day. Such conduct is wicked as well as dangerous, and it is not surprising that when they seek Him in earnest they have difficulty in finding Him. (Prov. 1: 28.)

Widows' Weeds Were Joyfully Cast Off by a lady in Canandaigua, N. Y., on November 27. Three years ago she was married to a young man, who after making a futile attempt to increase his income to meet his increased expenditure, went West, and engaged in business with two partners. The firm settled in Kansas, and for a time did a good business. As a precaution against a disastrous loss of capital, each member of the firm insured his life for $5,000, for the benefit of the surviving partners, the premiums on the policies being treated as business expenses. The young husband corresponded regularly with his wife, whom he had left behind with her mother; but suddenly his letters ceased, and shortly afterward his partners notified her that he was dead. She put on widows' weeds, and mourned for him bitterly. Recently she heard that the company with which her husband had insured, had demurred about paying his life policy. Inferring that there must be some reason for their action, she sent a friend to aid in the investigation. On Tuesday of last week she learned to her intense joy that her husband had been found alive in a lunatic asylum. He had suffered from a slight aberration of mind, and had been secretly sent to the asylum, his partners had then declared he was dead, and had tried to collect his life insurance. The telegram announcing the discovery of him, stated that he had recovered his reason, and was coming East to rejoin his wife. Some Christian families have been similarly gladdened by the conversion of a godless member. The erring one was not utterly dead to the things of God, as they were apt to think, but was held captive by Satan, his mind being alienated. Under the Holy Spirit's influence he has "come to himself," and sought his heavenly Father's house. (Luke 15: 17.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. M. Baxter delivered prophetic discourses on November 17 in the Corn Exchange, Lincoln, England, to crowded congregations.

Messrs. Bliss and Towner have been greatly blessed in their evangelistic work at Salina, Kans. Thence they went to Lawrence to hold meetings.

A new 1,000-pound bell, inscribed, "Presented to the First Methodist Episcopal Church, York, Neb., by the Young Converts of the Winter of '89," now swings in the belfry of that church.

Dr. and Mrs. Ludlow have gone to Japan to take charge of the Rev. A. B. Simpson's mission at Yokohama. Miss Helen Kinney, who preceded them to the same sphere of labor, has arrived safely.

Mr. D. L. Moody has promised to preach to Dr. Talmage's congregation in the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, next Lord's Day. He will also give addresses on Saturday in the Hall of the Brooklyn Y. M. C. A.

A conference of Y. M. C. A.'s is to be held some time during the winter in Jerusalem. Representatives are expected from all the associations in Syria, which are Beirut, Damascus, Jaffa, Nazareth, and Jerusalem.

Mr. Terence V. Powderly, Grand Master Workman of the Knights of Labor, in spite of all the conflicts he has had with capital, said in a recent address in Chicago that the saloon is the worst enemy of the workingman.

Rev. B. Fay Mills is holding services in New York this week in the Thirtieth Street Presbyterian Church, between Sixth and Seventh Avenues. Two services are held each day, and a great work of grace is in progress.

Major Whittle is holding United Evangelistic services at Woolwich, England. Woolwich is a large military centre, and efforts are being made to attract the soldiers. Major Whittle desires the prayers of his Christian friends.

A hopeless paralytic, aged thirty-five, committed suicide at Pottstown, Pa., on November 28. A few months ago he was a strong, healthy man. He was stricken with paralysis after an awful outbreak of blasphemy. He was dumb from that moment until his death.

The American Sabbath Union will hold its first anniversary on December 10 and 11, in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York. Among the speakers, are to be Drs. Arthur Little, of Boston, T. A. Fernley, of Philadelphia, W. W. Atterbury, and R. S. MacArthur, of New York, and Hon. E. L. Fancher, President of the Bible Society.

A paper on the Limited Area of Christianity is to be read before the American Institute of Christian Philosophy on December 9, at 8 P. M., by Professor William W. Olszen D. D., of St. Stephen's College, Annandale, N. Y. The meetings of the Institute are now held in the Lecture Room of the Y. M. C. A., Twenty-third Street and Fourth Avenue, New York.

In the city of Melbourne, Australia, the law decrees that no newspaper shall be published on Sunday, and no vehicle must drive past a place of worship during the hours of divine service at a faster pace than a walk. Numerous attempts have been made to start Sunday newspapers in Melbourne, but the law invariably extinguished them at the second or third number.

Dr. L. W. Munhall closed his services at York City, Pa., on November 21, with appropriate addresses to the new converts. Three meetings were held that day. Eighteen clergymen of various denominations took part in the night meeting. During the series of services, 816 persons have made profession of faith and have given their names to the evangelist in token of their resolve in Christ's strength to be true to Him. Of these, 251 have expressed a preference for joining the Lutheran Churches, 123 for the Presbyterians, and the others for various evangelical denominations.

PEACE: HOW GAINED, HOW LOST.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"I will hear what God the Lord will speak; for He will speak peace unto His people, and to His saints: but let them not turn again to folly." Ps. 85: 8.

The One Harmonious Voice—Foot-notes to Prayer—The Voice of Command—I. What the Lord will Speak—To a Certain Company—Saints Once Given Over to Folly—The Only Real Peace—The False Peace of Carelessness—Of Sullenness—Peace Sure at the Last—II. How the Blessing May be Marred—By Inward Conflict—By Hasty Judgment—By Doubt and Distrust—By Intellectual Speculation—By Sin—The Jonah in the Ship.

"I WILL hear what God the Lord will speak." There were voices and voices. There were voices of the past concerning God's wondrous mercy to His people: "Thou hast been favorable unto Thy land; Thou hast brought back the captivity of Jacob." But mingled with these were the sad voices of the present. From this mingling of singing and sighing the Psalmist turned away and cried, "I will hear what God the Lord will speak; I will get me into the secret place of the tabernacles of the Most High; I will hear that voice from between the cherubim which speaketh peace to the soul." Beloved, herein is wisdom. Resort to the sanctuary of God. When you cannot find harmony in the voices of the street, or the voices of the church, turn to the melody of that one voice which "will speak peace unto His people."

Again, the Psalmist had been praying. At the mercy-seat he had spread out this petition, "Wilt Thou not revive us again: that Thy people may rejoice in Thee? Show us Thy mercy, O Lord, and grant us Thy salvation." When he had spoken, he desired an answer. He watched and waited till the Lord God should give him a reply. A friend, kindly wishing to spare me, puts at the end of his letter,

"No Answer Expected."

This is too often a foot-note to men's prayers. David did not pray in that fashion: he did expect an answer from the mouth of the Lord. He said within himself, "I have spoken: but now I will speak no more, but hear what God the Lord will speak." Always follow up prayer with holy expectancy. Prayers which expect no answer are guilty of taking the name of God in vain; they are a misuse of the holy ordinance of supplication; and they are a question put upon the divine existence, inasmuch as they reduce the Godhead to an idol, like to those images of the heathen which have ears, but they hear not, neither speak they through their throats. Prayers without faith are an insult to the attributes of God, and do dishonor to His sacred name. If thou prayest aright, in the name of Jesus, expect the Lord to hear thee, even as thou wouldst hear thy child if he asked bread of thee.

In addition to this, it should be the daily resolve of every Christian man—"I will hear what God the Lord will speak." Not only when I am dazed and confused with other voices, nor only when I have expressed my heart in prayer, but at all times and seasons, I will hear what God the Lord shall speak. There are many doctrines and controversies; but "I will hear what God the Lord will speak." His voice, by His prophets and apostles, shall be the umpire of every dispute with me. I will also turn to the Word of God for the rule of my daily life, as well as for the instruction of my mind in doctrine. I will have regard to the precepts as well as to the promises. "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." When I would know my duty, "I will hear what God the Lord will speak;" and, hearing His word of command, I will need neither whip nor spur, but will make haste in the way of His commands. Like Samuel, say, "Speak, Lord; for thy servant heareth."

I. First, let us consider

What We Know

the Lord will speak. "I will hear what God the Lord will speak; for He will speak peace." The first point is, He speaks peace to a certain company—"to His people, and to His saints." Let us, then, ask ourselves, Has the Lord ever spoken peace to us, or will He do so? He will certainly do so if we have an ear to hear His voice; for God will not speak sweet words to those who turn to Him a deaf ear. He that will not hear the gospel of peace, shall never know the peace of the gospel. If you will not hear the Holy Spirit when He warns you of your sin, neither shall you hear Him revealing peace through pardon. If you will not hear the Lord when He proposes to you reconciliation through the sacrifice of His dear Son, if you will not hear Him when He bids you repent and believe, and be washed in the blood of the Lamb, then He will never speak peace to your soul.

Those to whom the Lord speaks peace are His people, and they acknowledge Him to be their God. If God is everything to you, you are among His people, and He will speak peace unto you. That peace is, however, for it is added, "and to His saints." His people and His saints are the same persons. Those who have a God know Him to be a holy God, and therefore they strive to be holy themselves. He that hath no saintship about him will have no peace about him. If thou livest a blundering, careless, godless life, thou wilt have much tossing to and fro, and many questionings of heart. "There is no peace," saith my God, "unto the wicked;" but to His people, His saintly ones, His sanctified ones, the people who follow after righteousness—to these the Lord Himself will secure peace by His own word of mouth.

Always Connected with Holiness,

Do I hear anyone saying, "Alas! I could not venture to be classed with saints"? Listen one minute: these people, though they are now God's people, and though they are now made saintly by His grace, were once given over to folly. How do I know this? Because the text says, "Let them not turn again to folly;" which shows that once they did follow after folly. Therefore, dear hearer, let not thy past foolishness dismay thee, if thou wouldst now come to God. Fool as thou mayest have been, the Lord is turning thee from folly; and if He brings thee to be numbered among His people and His holy ones, He will speak peace to thee.

I think I hear one say, "I have turned away from folly, but I feel that there is in my heart a tendency to return to it!" I know it. I, too, have felt the old Adam pulling at my sleeve, to draw me back to the old way if possible. So it was with these people, or else the Lord would not have needed to say, "Let them not turn again to folly." If thou findest within thee, fermenting unto evil, and making thee feel sick at heart to think that thou shouldst be so base, then bow low at thy Saviour's feet, and cry to Him in the language of the publican, "God be merciful to me a sinner." Yet remember, even if it be so with thee, yet nevertheless thou mayst be numbered with the Lord's people, of whom He has said that He will speak peace unto them. But if you have no horror of sin; if you have no conflict with evil; if you have no longing for righteousness, and no ear for the voice of the Lord, then God will not speak peace to you; but one of these days He will speak thunderbolts, and accent His words with flames of fire, and this shall be the tenor of His speech: "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." May you never hear that voice of wrath; but may peace be spoken into your soul!

The Old Leaven Working

But now, dear friends, I notice here that the peace which is to be desired is peace which God speaks, and all other peace is evil. The question is sometimes put—"We see bad men enjoy peace, and we see good men who have but little peace." That is one of the mysteries of life; but it is not a very difficult one as to its first part. Why do bad men enjoy a kind of peace? I answer; sometimes their peace arises from sheer carelessness. They will not think, reflect, or consider. They do not intend to look about them or before them; for "they count it one of the wisest things to drive dull care away." They go through the world like blind men. They live right merrily, like the men of the old world; they marry and are given in marriage, they drink and are drunken, till the flood comes, and there is no escape.

Many are quiet in conscience because of worldliness. They are too much occupied to give fair attention to the affairs of their souls. They are taken up with business; at it from morning till night; shutters up and shutters down; they can find time for nothing but counting their money, or shifting their stock. Adam was lost in the garden of Eden; but these men are lost in their shops, lost in their warehouses, lost in their ships, lost in their farms, lost in the market. They give no thought to the world to come, because this world engrosses them. From this kind of peace may we be delivered!

And some have a peace of sullenness;

An Awful Peace

of despair, in which the man steels himself against that which he calls his fate. A man says, "I know I am to be lost; I have sinned myself beyond all hope of mercy; and why should I trouble myself further?" Like a condemned criminal, who hears the hammers fitting up the scaffold, and gives himself up to silent despair, he feels, "I am doomed; it is all over with me." Oh my friend, it is not so; this is a lie of Satan's own invention. Whilst thou livest, there is hope. Whilst thou art yet in the land where Christ is preached, thou mayest come to Him and live. But deadness, sullenness, and obstinacy are thy worst enemies.

God alone can speak true peace to the soul. When once a soul begins to feel its sinfulness, and to tremble at the wrath to come, none but God can speak peace to it. Ministers cannot. I have often failed when I have desired to bring comfort to troubled hearts. Books cannot do it, not even the most wise and gracious of them. The Bible itself cannot do it, apart from the Spirit of God. The ordinances of God's house, whether they be baptism, or the Lord's Supper, or prayer, or preaching—none of these can bring peace to a heart apart from the still small voice of the Lord. I pray that none of you may rest in anything short of a divine assurance.

I have told you that only God can speak this peace; let me remind you that He can give it you by speaking it. One word from the Lord is

The Quiet of all Trouble.

No deed is needed, only a word. Peace has not now to be made: the making of peace was finished more than eighteen hundred years ago on yonder cross. The Lord Jesus, who was our peace, went up to the tree bearing our iniquities, and thus removing the dread cause of the great warfare between God and man. There he ended the quarrel of the covenant. Harken to these words, "The chastisement of our peace was upon him." Yet think not that for God to speak is a little thing. His voice is omnipotence in motion. He spake the universe out of nothing: He spake light out of darkness. Where the word of our King is, there is power. He speaks, and it is done. If He speaks peace, who can cause trouble? In Jesus Christ there is divine peace, for the guilty soul.

Sooner or later the Lord will speak peace to His own. How blessed are of the Lord God! "He will speak peace unto His people." Doubt it not. He will. He will. Some of you have lost your peace for a while; yet, if you are believers, "He will speak peace unto His people." You have come to Christ, and are trusting him, but you do not enjoy such peace as you desire. Yet "He will speak peace unto His people." There may be a time of battling and of struggling, the noise of war may disturb the camp for months; but in the end "He will speak peace unto His people." If peace comes not before, yet "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace." The Lord will not put His child to bed in the dark: he will light his candle ere he sleeps the sleep of death.

The Shalls and Wills

Beloved, when the Lord does speak peace to His people,

What a Peace it is!

It is sound and safe. You may have as much of it as you will, and suffer no harm. The peace of God is never presumptuous. It is a holy peace; and the more you have of it, the more you will strive to be like your Lord and Master, Jesus Christ. It is a peace which rules the heart and mind, and not merely the face and the tongue. It is a peace that will rise superior to circumstances. You may be very poor; but you shall find an inward wealth of contentment. You may be lonely; but communion with God will bring you company. You may be very sick in body; but peace of soul enables a man to bear pain without complaining. Beloved friends, do not be satisfied without the constant possession of unbroken peace. You may have it; you ought to have it. It will make you greater than princes, and richer than misers. This peace will shoe your feet for ways of obedience or suffering. "May the peace of God keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus!"

II. Now we must come down from our elevation, to talk about a more humbling theme,

What May Mar This Blessing

of peace. "He will speak peace unto His people, and to His saints; but let them not turn again to folly." The grounds of a believer's peace are always the same, but a believer's enjoyment of that peace varies very greatly. I always have a right to the divine inheritance, but I do not always enjoy the fruit of that inheritance. Peace may be broken with the Christian, through great trouble, if his faith is not very strong. It need not be so; for some of those who have had the greatest fight of affliction have had the sweetest peace in Christ Jesus. Inward conflict, too, may disturb our enjoyment of peace. When a man is struggling hard against a sin, when some old habit has to be hanged up before the Lord, when corruption grows exceedingly strong and vigorous, as at seasons it may do, the believer may not enjoy peace as he would wish. And yet I have known warring times when the fight within has not diminished my peace. "How so?" you may say. I have found peace in the very fact that I was fighting! I have seen clearly that if I were not a child of God, I should not struggle against sin. The very fact that I contend against sin, as against my deadliest foe, proves that I am not under the dominion of sin; and that fact brings peace to my soul.

When the Lord hides His face, as He may do as the result of grave offence that we have given Him, ah! then we cannot have peace. Peace runs out to a very low ebb when we are under withdrawals; and then we cry, "Oh that I knew where I might find Him, that I might come even to His feet!" We can never rest till we again behold the smile of His face, and take our place among the children.

But, after all, the chief reason why a Christian loses his peace is because he "turns again to folly." What kind of folly? Folly is sin and error, and everything contrary to divine wisdom. I will briefly show you a few of the Different Shapes of this Folly.

There is the folly of hasty judgment. Have you never judged without knowing and considering all the surroundings of the case? Have you not come to a wrong conclusion, when you have ventured to judge the dealings of God with you? You have said, "This cannot be wise, this cannot be right; at any rate, this cannot be a fruit of love;" but you have found out afterwards that you were quite mistaken, that your severest trial was sent in very faithfulness. Your rash judgment was most evidently folly; and if you turn again to such folly in your next season of sorrow, you will certainly lose your peace.

Another kind of folly is of like order: it is repining, and quarrelling with the Most High. Some are never pleased with God; how can He be pleased with them? There can be no use in contending with our Maker; for what are we as compared with Him? "It is hard for thee to kick against the pricks." No man, by quarreling with God, can gain any advantage, for the right is on God's side, and eternal principles establish His government. When the barque wars with the rock, we know which will suffer. Yield thee, O my brother, yield thee to the Lord of love! Thine hope can only climb on bended knee; thy peace can only return with bowed head; for to proud rebellion there is no peace, since it is folly of the grossest kind.

Another kind of folly to which men turn is Doubt and Distrust.

What peace you have had has come by faith; and when faith departs, peace goes also. To doubt the Lord is folly; even the least degree of it is folly of the worst order. Be satisfied with God, and you shall be satisfied in God. Go not back to your old doubts and fears, for they are as a thicket of thorns. It seems to me that some of you were born doubting, and have hardly left off ever since. Some professors never seem to be happy unless they are miserable. I hardly know whether to call some of you doubters or believers. Yes, I thank God that I hope you are really believers; but you are terrible old doubters still. I am persuaded you will get to heaven, but you will not have much of heaven on the road unless you shake off this pernicious habit of distrust.

Some lose their peace by turning again to the folly of intellectual speculation. Some of our friends, who once walked in the light, as God is in the light, and were as happy as all the birds of the air, have now lost their joy because they have read a pernicious book, which started for them a whole host of difficulties, of which they never dreamed before. Would you like me to answer those difficulties? Suppose I took the trouble to do so, and succeeded, what would happen? You would read another book tomorrow, and come to me with another set of doubts; and if we were to slay all these, you would simply invite another band of invaders to land on the shores of your mind. Therefore, I decline to begin the endless task. No fact, however certain, is beyond a critic's questioning. I have done with the whole band of quibblers. People say, "Have you seen the new book? It is terribly unsettling!" It will not unsettle me: first, because I know what I know; and secondly, because I do not care one atom what the unbeliever has to say. If you have once been staggered by modern thought, do not turn again to that folly. Be not like silly people, who seem to fall down in the mud for the sake of being brushed. Why desire to be befogged and bewildered for the sake of getting set in the right way after long straying? Stick to the Scriptures.

The Worst Form of Folly

is sin. Scripture continually calls sinners fools; and so they are. What a touching pleading there is about this use of language! "God will speak peace unto His people; but let them not turn again to folly;" as much as to say, "to turn aside will not only grieve Me, but it will harm you. Sin is not only fault, but folly. It will be to your own injury as well as to My displeasure." Dear child of God, are you out in the storm just now? Have you no rest? Let me whisper in your ear. Is there not a cause? Somebody on board your vessel has brought this storm upon you. Where is he? He is not among the regular sailors that work the ship; he is neither captain nor mate; but he is a stranger. Down under the hatches is a man named Jonah; is he the cause of the tempest? "No," you say, "he is a good fellow, for he paid his fare." This makes me feel all the more suspicious. He is the cause of the mischief. You will never get peace until the Jonah of sin is overboard. Cast him into the sea, and it will be calm unto you. Many a child of God harbors a traitor, and hardly knows that he is doing so; and the Lord is at war with him because of the harbored rebel.

Beloved, I pray that no one of us may go back to folly. If we have ever tasted the peace of God, and communion with God, can we leave it for earthly joys? Can we quit the banquet of infinite love for the coarse pleasures of sin? God forbid! Remember what it cost your Lord to make you free from the consequences of former folly; never return to it. Beloved, we cannot turn again to folly! O God, do not permit us to do so! Grant us thy peace, that by it we may be kept, both in heart and mind, loyal to thee! With minds at perfect peace with God, we set our face like a flint, and press on toward the haven where peace will never end. Glory be to God, who will bring us safely there! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Midnight Conflict.*

ALL night he walked the floor of his room at the inn in conflicts sharp and crucial. As knights of old fought with giants, slew dragons, conquered wild beasts, and fearlessly encountered every foe, so now this modern knight battled for his faith against all the unseen hosts of evil, marshalled by the devil of doubt. Now he conquered, now was baffled; now, slew a sneering fallacy, now was beaten back by some diabolical suggestion. Suddenly in the hottest of the fight, when the mortal man, pale with agony, braced his quivering nerves to a renewed attack—suddenly, like lightning's flash, shone before his mind's eye a blinding vision, and a voice whispered to his soul, "He was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Down he fell, like Saul of Tarsus; the wilderness temptation, Gethsemane, the cross, the Resurrection, all flashed before his soul in visions of dazzling light. Why should he try to fight the devil with his puny human strength? The divine Christ had fought and conquered Satan, sin, and death. Did he believe now in His divinity? Ah, who but God has ever achieved this victory? Believe Him! Oh, thank God, to believe in this divine Christ meant to lay upon His heavenly shoulders his load of doubt and guilt; nay, more; already had that divine Substitute borne his sins upon the cross. Did his will accept this atonement on his soul's behalf? Ah! with streaming eyes the weary, doubt-harassed man cried: "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do? My Lord and my God!" And the doubting cavalier arose from his knees a Christian knight of faith. Peace entered his soul, and when he turned with brave defiance to meet the devil of doubt, lo! he had gone. The Christ had flashed forth His glorious Divinity in the sight of Satan, and the tempter slunk away abashed and defeated.

A Debt to a Mission.

Eric saw a tall man rise, and heard him say: "I have come to pay a debt I owe to the McAll Mission." He spoke in fluent French, though with a slightly foreign accent. "I am a Russian," he continued. "Six years ago I was in Paris. I was then an infidel, and an anarchist. I imagined that society needed reforming, and I bent my mind and energies to the work of stirring up rebellious spirits like myself. I had inherited a fortune, and received a liberal education. I used both mind and money in the furtherance of my scheme. Like most of my class, I was wild, reckless, and dissipated, giving myself up to every form of immorality and vice.

"One rainy evening I was wandering through the streets listlessly, and I stumbled into one of the McAll Halls, on the Rue St. Honoré. The eloquence of the preacher arrested my attention, and his text shot like an arrow to my soul: 'Rejoice, oh young man, in thy youth, and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou that for all those things God will bring thee into judgment.' I went out from that hall with my conscience awakened, but I determined to stifle it. So I plunged again into my anarchist schemes, but I found that for some reason they were less attractive than before. Then I resolved to rush deeper into pleasure, and I went to Geneva, where I squandered my fortune in vice. At length, so low did I sink that, with purse empty, fortune gone, health shattered, and mind in despair, I sought the Lake of Geneva with the intention of ending my wretchedness in suicide.

* From A Knight of Faith. By Lydia Hoyt Farmer; a story of religious struggle and religious life amid trial, doubt, and temptation; pp. 288; price $1; published by J. S. Ogilvie, 57 Rose Street, New York.

Rev. E. W. Oakes. (See page 775.)

The Late Hon. George H. Pendleton.

"Along the lake side I wandered, gazing into the still depths of the water with intense longing for rest. Should I find rest at last beneath those tranquil waves? I made ready to plunge into the watery grave, when, like a flash of lightning, came those words to my soul: 'For all these things God will bring thee into judgment.' Back I started in horror. If I had spurned Christ in Paris, I received the baptism of the Holy Spirit in Geneva. I am here on my way to Belgium, commissioned by the Temperance Association to work for the Master among those ensnared by the devil in the haunts of drunkenness and vice. But I could not pass this city without acknowledging the debt I owe, through God's providence, to this wonderful mission!"

THE LATE HON. G. H. PENDLETON.

(See Portrait.)

THE death of Mr. Pendleton, which occurred in Brussels on Monday of last week, is a national loss. Politicians will not grieve over him, though he was a politician. The Democratic party, to which he belonged, will not mourn his loss. It is the nation as a whole that is the sufferer, and it is the best and wisest men in the nation who alone understood his worth, and know how much has been lost in his death. He was a statesman in the best sense of the word; one of the very few men we have who hold the national welfare in higher regard than their own interest or that of their political party.

George Hunt Pendleton was sixty-four years of age, having been born July 25, 1825, in Cincinnati, Ohio. His grandfather, Nathaniel Pendleton, was a Virginian. He was appointed by Washington a judge of the United States District Court for Georgia. He acted as Hamilton's second in his duel with Aaron Burr. His son, Nathaniel G. Pendleton, was a warm personal friend of President William Henry Harrison, grandfather of the present President, and was a devoted supporter of Henry Clay. George H., the deceased statesman, studied at Woodward High School and Cincinnati College until he was nineteen, when he went to the famous university of Heidelberg, Germany. Here he became a first-rate classical scholar, and acquired that proficiency in French, German, and other European languages for which he was noted in after years.

At the close of his university course he spent three years in European travel. He studied closely the systems of government he found there, and gained that wider and higher view of statesmanship which the pot-house politicians who swarm in Congress are incapable of understanding. On his return he settled down in Cincinnati to the practice of law, but in 1853 he was elected, without his own solicitation, to the State Senate, and in 1856 he was sent to Congress by his district. He was re-elected in 1858, 1860, and 1862. In the Presidential contest of 1864 Mr. Pendleton ran for Vice-President on the McClellan ticket. In 1868 he came within two and a half votes of securing the Democratic nomination for the Presidency. The next year he was nominated for the Governorship of Ohio, but was defeated by Rutherford B. Hayes. In 1878 the Ohio Legislature elected him United States Senator in succession to Stanley Matthews. His term expired in March 1885, and President Cleveland then appointed him Minister to Germany.

Mr. Pendleton's most noted achievement was the Civil Service Reform measure, which is now in operation. It was interesting to note how it divided Congress. The selfish and tricky politicians of both parties opposed it violently, as they still do, while patriotic men who were anxious to remove the scandal which disgraces the country, and half-kills every President in the first year of his term, supported it heartily. The passage of the measure was a fatal blow at the power of the party bosses throughout the country. The detestation in which they hold him is a crown of honor, which will adorn his record in American history.

ETHEL DAWSON'S RETALIATION.

(See Illustration on page 781.)

"It never rains but it pours," said one of Ethel Dawson's school friends as the two were walking away from the Young Ladies' Academy at the close of an autumn day.

"Everything has gone wrong with me to-day," had been Ethel's remark calling forth her friend's quotation of the old saw. "The professor misunderstood me, and thought I was saucy; and I forgot to mail mamma's letter, and she will be angry; and I lost my knife that Cousin Maude gave me. Oh! it has been a day of vexations."

"Well, it is about over now," said her friend. "I get such days sometimes. Grown up people think girls do not have any troubles, but they are mistaken. My mamma says they are all of my own making. It is just as hard for us if they are."

Ethel did not mention in her list of troubles the primary influence which had agitated her early in the day, and unfitted her for bearing annoyances. The last words she had spoken before leaving home in the morning had been to her elder sister. Laying some money and a bit of bright-colored wool on the table she said, "There, Clara, you may get your own ribbon yourself, I am not going to be bothered with matching colors for a girl who treats me as you do."

"But you promised, Ethel," Clara said, "and you are going right past the store. You know I cannot go myself, and if you do not get it for me I cannot finish my work in time. You know you did promise."

"Yes, but that was before you persuaded mamma not to let me go to the concert. It was only because you wanted Nettie Rawlings to go with you instead of me. You gave her the ticket I should have had, I know you did. It was real mean of you, and you may just get the ribbon yourself, or ask her to get it for you; I won't. Perhaps it will teach you a lesson of sisterly behavior."

Ethel gave her sister no time to reply, but walked out of the house feeling that she had administered righteous retribution, which would be salutary for her sister. She did not feel quite at peace with herself, and was half inclined to turn back, when she reached the corner of the street, and make her peace with Clara by undertaking the commission. But she reflected that to do so would be a sign of weakness which would rob the lesson of its moral influence, so she went on, with firm step, as became the moral educator. But the harp strings were jarring, and she had not the equanimity which should have resulted from conduct based on principle. The annoyances Ethel reported to her friend followed, and the little lady was returning home with anything but a roseate view of this mortal life.

She was looking forward to the time when, supper over, and certain usual duties performed, she could retire to her own room for reading, drawing, or any recreation that suited her mood. Her behavior in the interval was as dignified as Ethel could make it, but its effect was spoiled by her mother inquiring why she was so dull, and by Clara remarking that she did not like to see "a child in the sulks." Ethel did not consider herself a child, nor think that dignity could have been mistaken otherwise than wilfully for sulkiness. But at last she made her escape, and when once in her own sanctum, felt herself safe from further vexation. Letting down the long golden hair over her shoulders, and taking up some needlework which was to be a triumph of neatness and establish the reputation of the worker for skill in that department, she stitched vigorously for a few minutes. Her mind, however, worked even more rapidly than her fingers, and soon the work was forgotten and Ethel lost herself in a reverie.

Mrs. Dawson thought she formed a pretty picture as she sat there lost in thought, when a little later she opened her daughter's door.

Motherly solicitude over the girl prompted the visit. So much may be done to save the future life from trouble by timely counsel when it is tenderly and judiciously given. Mrs. Dawson was well aware of the fact, and hoped to seize the right moment for planting some sound moral lessons in the mental soil so evidently broken upon.

"What is wrong, Ethel, love?" she asked, sitting down by her daughter's side and taking one of her hands lovingly in her own.

The confidence she sought was not easily won, but when at length the whole story came out, the mother saw that there was abundant opportunity for her good offices.

"And you would have matched Clara's ribbon for her," she said, after listening to Ethel's defence of herself, "if you had not had that grievance?"

"Oh yes, mamma; I had really promised, you know, but she did not deserve to have me do anything for her after being so mean."

Mrs. Dawson was too wise to discuss the conduct of her elder daughter with Ethel. "Do you think duty a conditional thing, Ethel?" she asked, "Does the conduct of another absolve you from a duty? That would make duty a kind of contract binding upon one party only so long as the other is faithful. I fear my daughter has much trouble and sorrow, and perhaps remorse, before her if she cherishes that idea. It is not for us to punish each other, my child, for dereliction of duty. God will see to all that. Especially we should not try to inflict punishment by acting unkindly ourselves. That degrades us, and it is an offence in God's sight. To go right on, doing our duty, doing acts of kindness whenever we have opportunity, resenting no injury, leaving vindication and the righting of our wrongs to God, that is the true and noble line of conduct. Think what would be our case if God treated us as we deserve. Think of Jesus dying for His enemies. Come, let us pray about it, and see if some better rule of life than this of yours does not commend itself to you."

Ethel Dawson's Reverie.

Mrs. Dawson knelt down with her daughter and prayed. When they rose, Ethel's cheeks were wet with penitent tears, but there was a purpose in her heart that, being held in the strength of God, saved her shedding tears far more bitter in after life.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 766.)

The Settlement.

FRESH difficulties perplexed the wanderers as they touched the shores of the New World. The place of their destination was the Hudson River, which lay to the south, and the patent which they had obtained under the Virginia Company's seal, at considerable cost and after long vexation and delay, was of less value in that northern latitude than the sheep-skin on which it was engrossed. But the land seemed to the weary voyagers to smile in welcome. The place of their intended settlement was one of the most fertile and convenient along the whole Atlantic seaboard, and, whether from treachery or ignorance, their captain had guided them to one of the least inviting portions of the coast. But the Pilgrims yielded to the natural impulse of the tempest-tossed wanderer at the sight of the green earth.

"The appearance of it," says Governor Bradford, "much comforted us, especially seeing so goodly a land, and wooded to the brink of the sea, it caused us to rejoice together, and praise God that had given us again to see land."

Nevertheless, they were not inclined to overlook the risks which they must incur by forfeiting the privileges of the charter it had cost them so much labor and difficulty to procure; and after they had gratified themselves by setting foot on the New World, towards which their hopes had so long been turned, they resolved to endeavor still to reach their destined settlement.

Half a day was thus spent. The Pilgrims then urged the captain to pursue his course southward. But the Dutch had resolved to establish settlements of their own in those parts, and had bribed the commander to frustrate the purpose of the colonists in that respect. This he did by entangling the ship amidst shoals and breakers, instead of putting out to sea, and, foul weather coming on in the early part of the second day, they were driven back to Cape Cod.

It was now the middle of November. The shelter offered at the cape was inviting. The captain became impatient to dispose of his company and return. He admonished them that nothing should induce him to expose himself and his men to the hazard of wanting provisions. Unless they meant, therefore, that he should at once set them and their goods on shore and leave them to their course, it would behoove them to adopt their own measures and to act upon them without delay. They knew that the documents they had brought with them from England gave them no authority to attempt a settlement on the land now before them. But the plea of necessity was upon them, and was more than enough to justify them in selecting a home wherever it might be found.

"The voyage had reduced most of them to a weak and sickly condition. The wild country, as they gazed upon it from their ship, was seen to be covered with thickets and dense woods, and already wore the aspect of winter. No medical aid awaited them on that shore, no friendly greetings, but hardship and danger in every form. They felt that their safety, and such poor comfort as might be left to them, must depend on their power to confide in God and in each other. Hence, before they left the Mayflower, they constituted themselves as subjects of their 'dread sovereign lord, King James,' into a body politic, and bound themselves to such obedience in all things as the majority should impose."

"Writers are, not unnaturally, inclined to make the most of the independent position thus forced upon the Pilgrim Fathers of New England. The terms of this voluntary political constitution were thus briefly drawn out, and signed by all the men of the party: "In the name of God, amen; we, whose names are underwritten, the loyal subjects of our dread sovereign, King James, having undertaken, for the glory of God and advancement of the Christian faith, and honor of our King and country, a voyage to plant the first colony in the northern parts of Virginia, do, by these presents, solemnly and mutually, in the presence of God and one of another, covenant and combine ourselves together into a civil body politic, for our better ordering and preservation, and furtherance of the ends aforesaid; and by virtue hereof, to enact, constitute, and frame such just and equal laws, ordinances, acts, constitutions, and offices, from time to time, as shall be thought most convenient for the general good of the colony. Unto which we promise all due submission and obedience."

This most interesting document is worthy of admiration, because of the wisdom and sagacity it displayed in these Fathers of the New England State. It was a recognition of the advantages of social union, and of well-defined laws, over the wild liberty of men loosed from all restraint; and it acquires its peculiar value when we remember that the men who thus carefully guarded these fruits of civilization, had been driven forth to this inhospitable wilderness by the oppressive laws of this same "dread sovereign, King James," whose loyal subjects they so anxiously strove still to remain.

"This instrument," says Bancroft, "was signed by the whole body of men, forty-one in number, who, with their families, constituted the one hundred and one, the whole colony, 'the proper democracy,' that arrived in New England. This was the birth of popular constitutional liberty. The Middle Ages had been familiar with charters and constitutions; but they had been merely compacts for immunities, partial enfranchisements, patents of nobility, concessions of municipal privileges, or limitations of the sovereign power in favor of feudal institutions. In the cabin of the Mayflower humanity recovered its rights, and instituted government on the basis of 'equal laws' for the 'general good.' John Carver was immediately and unanimously chosen governor for the year."

In like terms, Dr. Cheever rejoices over the "unpatented and unfettered" landing of the Pilgrims to take possession of their new homes; though acknowledging that another patent, which included their settlement, had been drawn up and signed ere their landing. "Meanwhile," says he, "the noblemen and gentlemen engaged before in the old patent for North Virginia were seeking a new and separate patent of incorporation for New England, under the style and title of the council established at Plymouth, in the county of Devon, for the planting, ruling, ordering, and governing of New England, in America, which, says Mr. Prince, is the great and civil basis of all the future patents and plantations that divide this country. This patent they at length obtained from King James; but it was not signed by the King until long after the Pilgrims had set sail, not indeed till November 3, 1620, just before the Mayflower anchored in Cape Cod harbor. There the Pilgrims were to land in New England, unchartered by any earthly power, and were to take possession at Plymouth of their desired retreat in the wilderness, in full liberty of conscience, unpatented and unfettered."

Years of suffering, perplexity, and fears had prepared the exiles of Leyden for contentment with a humble resting-place, and tedious months of hardships and disappointments schooled them into moderating their humblest wishes, ere at length they set foot on the New England shores. It seems to be the appointed law of Providence to perfect men in the school of suffering, for every great work; and many circumstances had combined to accumulate hardships round these devoted pioneers of civilization. They had parted with their brethren at Delft Haven in the warm month of July, and the bright skies of an early English harvest cheered them as they embarked at Southampton on board the Mayflower. But hope long deferred had made them sick at heart, and the warm breezes of July had been exchanged for the boisterous gales of the Atlantic ere the weary fugitives stepped on the New England shores just as winter was assuming its keenest severity.

They stood between the wilderness and the sea. In doubt and difficulty, their leaders strove to explore the coast, with the hope of lighting on some more sheltered and convenient spot whereon to found the first city of refuge for the outcast children of England. But time was pressing; the captain of the Mayflower was impatient to be gone, and no friendly guide appeared to bid them welcome and point them to a haven of rest. No friendly guide—and yet an unseen hand was there, not unrecognized, amid all their sufferings, by these weary wanderers. God, in His good providence, was leading them by a way that they knew not. The chosen spot whereon they were to find rest and the liberty of conscience, in pursuit of which they had braved such perils, was already prepared; even as the land of promise, when "the ark of the covenant of the Lord of all the earth" passed over before them into the Jordan, and the people of Israel entered as an armed host to take possession of their long-promised inheritance.

To the bold hunter who sought pleasure as well as profit in the toils of the chase, or to the hardy adventurer whom the novelties of a strange land had attracted from the Old World, there were not wanting romantic incidents on the New England coast. But though these have been preserved to us in the quaint and graphic descriptions of Governor Bradford's journal, they offered no attractions to the poor exiles, cast amid the inclemencies of winter on a bleak and inhospitable shore. Nevertheless, they were no body of unprincipled adventurers, such as those who had landed on the shores of Virginia during the previous reign, in expectation of possessing the golden treasures with which the New World was reputed to abound. In the Chronicles of the Pilgrims we find evidence enough that they had counted the cost before leaving the shores of Europe.

"Some," says the contemporary annalist, "from their reasous and hopes conceived, labored to stir up and encourage the rest to undertake and prosecute the same; others, again, out of their fears, objected against it, and sought to divert from it, alleging many things, and those neither unreasonable nor unprobable; as that it was a great design, and subject to many inconceivable perils and dangers; as, besides the casualties of the seas (which none can be freed from), the length of the voyage was such as the weak bodies of men and women and such other persons, worn out with age and travail (as many of them were), could never be able to endure; and yet if they should, the miseries of the land which they should be exposed unto would be too hard to be borne, and likely, some or all of them, to consume and utterly to ruin them. For there they should be liable to famine and nakedness, and the want, in a manner, of all things." Nor does the chronicler forget the "danger of the salvage people, who delight to torment men in most bloody manner that may be." But to all these it had been answered, "That all great and honorable actions were accompanied with great difficulties, and must be both enterprised and overcome with answerable courages."

"It was granted the dangers were great, but not desperate, and the difficulties were many, but not invincible; for although there were many of them likely, yet they were not certain. It might be that some of the things feared might never befall them; others, by providence, care, and the use of good means, might in a great measure be prevented; and all of them through the help of God, by fortitude and patience, might either be borne or overcome."

From the greatest of all these dangers—that of the savage Indian—they were rescued by the good Providence that cast them, against their wills, on the bleak coast of New England. Had they followed out their original plan, and the requirements of the charter granted under the seal of the Virginia Company, they would in all probability have perished by the hands of the Red Indian tribes, who then populated the vast savannahs along the shores of the Hudson. Various attempts had been made from time to time to colonize New England, but without success; and at length all thought of it seemed abandoned by the boldest of English adventurers, unless where they occasionally established a temporary summer station there, for trafficking with the Indians. But the chosen soil which had thus been protected by the rude hand of the savage from the mere mercenary adventurer in search of gain, was suddenly prepared for the reception of those who "sought a faith's pure shrine."

The first of the natives with whom the Pilgrims had any intelligible intercourse was Samoset, an Indian of the Wampanoags, who had acquired some smattering of the English tongue from frequent intercourse with the fishermen who visited that shore. From him they learned that a terrible pestilence had broken out among the tribes of Massachusetts only four years before, and that out of these Indian nations, who had numbered among them thirty thousand fighting men, scarcely three hundred were left alive. There was no need of the signing of treaties, or the smoking of the calumet of peace, as in the negotiations of the founder of Pennsylvania. The land was without possessors; the succession of heirs had failed; and the broad savannahs had been gifted anew, by their great suzerain, to the wandering outcasts of the pale-faces.

Scarcely any position can be conceived of as more desolate than that of the passengers on board the Mayflower when it rounded Cape Cod and cast anchor in Plymouth Bay. After their tedious and long-protracted voyage, their eyes at length rested on the land of promise. But no friendly hand was extended to welcome them to the shore. Along the coast, far as the eye could reach, no spot appeared to offer even a convenient landing, or a commodious shelter; while, on board, they must have felt that they could repose little faith on the friendly aid of the mercenary hirelings who had guided the Mayflower thus far from their destined haven, and were now impatient to land them and be gone. Dreary indeed must have been the prospect that presented itself, when, after a tempestuous passage, during which the little band, with their wives and infant children, had been exposed for nine weeks to all the terrors of the stormy Atlantic, they still hesitated to land.

Exploring parties tracked their way through the woods, followed on the trail of the wild Indians, and strove with all diligence to familiarize themselves with the capabilities of the new country they had come to take possession of. Their desires were humble enough, their gratitude overflowed in thanksgivings at the least favor of heaven. After a long and devious ramble, in which their slender stock of provisions had proved inadequate for their wants, their own journalist remarks:

"About ten a'clocke we came into a deepe valley, full of brush, wood-gaile, and long grasse, through which we found little paths or tracks, and there we saw a deere, and found springs of fresh water, of which we were heartily glad, and sat us downe and drunke our first New England water, with as much delight as ever we drunke drinke in all our lives."

So soon as the voluntary charter of association, already referred to, had been drawn up and signed by every member of the new colony, a party of sixteen explorers was sent on shore "to see what the land was, and what inhabitants they could meet with." Time pressed; the chill blasts of winter were already come, and the little band, with their wives and helpless infants, were to be left to brave its worst on that inhospitable shore. Yet some sixteen more precious days were spent ere the carpenter could unship the shallop and render it seaworthy, they "having been forced to cut her downe in bestowing her betwixt the decks, and she was much opened with the peoples' lying in her." There are no complaints or murmurs recorded in these early journals of the Pilgrims, from which we quote. It is only from such passing allusions as this that we learn of their privations. For the tedious weeks of the long voyage, when tossed about by the equinoctial gales of the Atlantic, the shallop between the decks had been the hard couch of these uncomplaining wanderers.

(To be continued.)

UNION INVESTMENT COMPANY,
Paid Up Capital, $1,000,000. Kansas City, Mo.
SPECIAL OFFER TO INVESTORS.
Guaranteed 7 per Cent. Investment, secured by Business Property centrally located with the opportunity of Participating in Profits.
50 PER CENT. OF THE NET PROFITS TO THE INVESTORS.
Certificates will be in denominations of $100 to $10,000 as desired, and will bear interest at seven per cent. annum, payable semi-annually in January and July.
Special features which make this one of the Safest and Most Attractive Investments ever presented to our friends, viz.:
1. It is amply secured by Business Property, located in the very center of Kansas City.
2. In addition to the Real Estate Security, the Investor has the direct obligation of the Union Investment Company.
3. The Investor will receive his proportionate share of One Half the Net Profits realized from the sale of the property.
4. Those who have been familiar with the growth of the city, and who are best able to judge of its prospects, it will not be considered unreasonable to say that the investment will yield a profit of $250,000 within five years.
5. The property has been deeded to Hon. William Warner of Kansas City, ex-member of Congress and Commander-in-Chief of the G. A. R., and Mr. E. C. Sattley, Cashier of the Kansas City Safe Deposit Savings Bank, as trustees for the sole protection of the holders of the certificates.

Endorsement by Prominent Business Men, Bankers and Capitalists.
The undersigned, are acquainted with values in the vicinity of the property on Grand Avenue, and Walnut Streets, owned by the Union Investment Company, which is offered as security for certificates amounting to Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars ($250,000).
It is all very desirably located and will undoubtedly increase in value.
We unhesitatingly recommend the certificates to the amount of Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand Dollars ($250,000) as a perfectly safe investment, and from our knowledge of the property, and the untimely tendency of the business growth of the city, we think a handsome profit on the investment may be easily expected.
H. P. STIMSON,
President American National Bank.
B. T. WHIPPLE & CO.,
Real Estate and Investment Securities.
WALTON H. HOLMES,
President Grand Avenue Cable Railway Co.
WM. B. THAYER,
Of Bullene, Moore, Emery & Co.
E. C. SATTLEY,
Kansas City Safe Deposit and Sav. Bank.
I am unacquainted with the value of property in Kansas City, having been absent from the city the greater part of the last four years. I do know the men who have signed the above certificate. They are leading business men; their judgment as to the value of real estate in this city I should unhesitatingly regard as being reliable and trustworthy.
WILLIAM WARNER,
Late Commander-in-Chief G. A. R. and Ex-Member of Congress.
I give permission we refer to any of the above gentlemen.
and for circulars containing description of property and full particulars.
RICE, PRES.
PAGE, Sec'y & TREAS.

UNION INVESTMENT CO.

ANOTHER GREAT OFFER OF STANDARD WORKS!
THE PEERLESS
Waverley Novels!
COMPLETE AND UNABRIDGED, 25 IN ALL,
FOR ONLY $1.50.
Next to Dickens' Works those of Scott rank in importance and popularity. The Waverley Novels occupy a unique place in literature. Scott's masterful delineation of human character and depiction of marvellous scenes from common life have never been surpassed. His works are singularly and strikingly original. A complete set of The Waverley Novels should occupy an honored place in every library. Heretofore the price has been so high as to place these matchless volumes beyond the reach of the masses.
We will send the Complete Set of 25 Novels, made into 12 handsome 12mo. books, good print, good paper, and neatly bound,

FOR ONLY $1.50.
COMPLETE LIST OF THE WAVERLEY NOVELS.
1. Waverley, 9. Black Dwarf, 17. St. Ronan's Well,
2. Antiquary, 10. Heart of Mid-Lothian, 18. Red Gauntlet,
3. The Two Rovers, 11. The Monastery, 19. The Betrothed,
4. The Abbot, 12. The Pirate, 20. The Talisman,
5. The Monastery, 13. The Pirate, 21. Woodstock,
6. The Two Rovers, 14. Fortunes of Nigel, 22. Fair Maid of Perth,
7. The Abbot, 15. Peveril of the Peak, 23. Anne of Geierstein,
8. The Two Rovers, 16. Quentin Durward, 24. Count Robert of Paris,
9. Black Dwarf, 25. Surgeon's Daughter.
When the fact is considered that the common cloth edition of WAVERLEY sells everywhere at $10 the price of our offer may be more appreciated.
This set of novels will supply a season's reading. All who have them exclaim as with one voice, "How Cheap!"
SEND IN YOUR ORDERS AT ONCE FOR CHRISTMAS.
Remember, there are no additional expenses; we deliver the set free.
ADDRESS ORDERS TO BRIDE & CO., 54 & 56 Duane St., New York.

MEXICO
Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico most pressing need - and can be mailed to address of HOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
13 Bible House, New York.

THE AMERICAN TEA COMPANY
CHANCE FOR ALL
To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER of 8 1/2 pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you desire. Greatest inducement ever offered to get for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
Box 289, 51 and 53 Vesey St., New York.

AM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills.
AM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

PLAYS! DE WITT'S AMATEUR AND STANDARD PLAYS! DICKENS' LONDON ACTING EDITION
PLAYS! OF PLAYS. Complete Descriptive Catalogue of over 200 Plays: Dialogues; Readings and Recitations; Charades; Tableaux; Pantomimes; Books of Games; Sports and Amusements. Athletics, Gymnastics, etc., etc., sent free on application to The DeWitt Publishing House, 33 Rose St., N. Y.

BAILEY'S
COMPOUND light-spreading Silver-plated Corrugated Glass REFLECTORS.
A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO., 112 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

500 LOTS Given Away to advertise our new towns. Send full name and address with 4c. postage and we will send you a deed to a lot 25x125 feet.
MIDLAND TOWN CO., Kansas City, Mo.

$3.75 A DAY And steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write at once. Franklin Co., Richmond, Va.

OPIUM (Morphine Habit, Opium Smoking, etc., easily cured. Book Free. Dr. J. C. Hoffman, Jefferson, Wisconsin.

CONSUMPTION. "It is by the aid of the digestive organs alone that Consumption can be cured. Leave the lungs alone, and direct the attention to the organs of nutrition, the stomach and bowels," which will receive BOVININE and return with interest in new blood and tissue the care bestowed upon them. BOVININE is the vital principles of Beef concentrated, a highly condensed raw food, palatable to the most delicate taste, and is indispensable in CONSUMPTION, Pneumonia or Bronchitis, and all wasting diseases. Will sustain life for weeks by injection. Causes feeble infants and their mothers to thrive wonderfully. BOVININE is the only raw food that will not spoil, and is retained by the most irritable stomach; is daily saving life in cases of Phthisis, Typhoid Fever, Diphtheria, Bright's Disease, &c.
BOVININE is sold by All Druggists.

HAVE YOU CATARRH?
ARE YOU GOING INTO CONSUMPTION?
Do You Have Asthma?
By means of the PILLOW-INHALER, sufferers in every part of the land have been cured of the above diseases, and many who were for years afflicted are now strong and well. The PILLOW-INHALER is apparently only a pillow, but from liquid medicines that are harmless (tar, carbolic acid, iodine, etc.) it gives off an atmosphere which you breathe all night (or about eight hours), whilst taking ordinary rest in sleep. There are no pipes or tubes, as the medicine is contained in concealed reservoirs, and the healing atmosphere arising from it envelops the head. It is perfectly simple in its workings, and can be used by a child with absolute safety. Medicine for the reservoirs goes with each INHALER, ready for use. The wonderful and simple power of the PILLOW-INHALER is in the long-continued application. You breathe the healing vapor continuously and at a time when ordinarily the cavities of the nose and bronchial tubes become engorged with mucus, and catarrh, throat and lung diseases make greatest progress. From the very first night the passages are clearer and the inflammation is less. The cure is sure, and reasonably rapid.
CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.
"Rev. Dr. J. T. DRYDEN, of Boston, writes: 'I really think the PILLOW-INHALER is a very great hit, and the man who made it deserves the gratitude of all sufferers. I never slept more soundly, and my voice is better since using it.'"
Rev. J. R. DANFORTH, 2030 Wallace St., Philadelphia, says he received great benefit from the use of the PILLOW-INHALER for Bronchial troubles, and cordially recommends it.
Wm. C. CARTER, M. D., Norfolk, Va., a physician in regular practice, says: "I believe the PILLOW-INHALER to be the best thing for the relief and cure of Lung Troubles that I have ever seen or heard of."
Mr. R. D. McMANIGAL, of the firm of McManigal & Morley, Miners and Shippers, Logan, Ohio, writes: "I suffered fifteen years with Catarrh of the throat. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and after four months' use of it my throat is entirely cured." Send for Descriptive Pamphlet and Testimonials.
THE PILLOW-INHALER CO.,
1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HOSPITAL REMEDIES
THE Favorite Prescriptions of the Brightest Medical Minds in the world, as used by them in the Hospitals of London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna.
ONE MEDICINE FOR ONE DISEASE.
No. 1—Cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, Rose Cold, Catarrhal Deafness.
No. 2—Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption. A Peerless Remedy.
No. 3—Rheumatism, Gout.
No. 4—Liver & Kidneys, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation, Bright's Disease.
No. 5—Fever and Ague, Dumb Ague, Malaria, Neuralgia.
No. 6—Female Weakness, Irregularities, Whites. A Golden Remedy.
No. 7—A Perfect Tonic, which gives Health, Form and Fulness, Clear Complexion, Good Blood and lots of it.
No. 8—Nervous Debility, Loss of Power, Impotence, an incomparable remedy.
RELIABLE AGENTS WANTED. Every bottle guaranteed to cure its special disease if OURABLE and to give permanent relief ALWAYS. Descriptive Circulars sent free on application. HOSPITAL REMEDY COMPANY, Toronto, Canada.

$60 SALARY. $40 EXPENSES IN ADVANCE allowed each month. Steady employment at home or traveling. No soliciting. Duties pelivring and making collections. No Postal Cards. Address with stamp, HAFFER & CO., Pious, O
$50 OUTFIT ON 30 DAYS' TIME TO AGENTS Guaranteed $150 profits. In four weeks or no pay, to travel or work at home. No competition. C. JARVIS & CO., Racine, Wis.
FREE samples of cloth the famous Plymouth Rock & 3 Pants are cut from. Including self-measurement blanks and linen tape-measure, if you mention this paper. Address Plymouth Rock Pants Co., 11 to 17 Eliot St., Boston, Mass.

Children always Enjoy It.
SCOTT'S EMULSION
of pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda is almost as palatable as milk. Children enjoy it rather than otherwise. A MARVELLOUS FLESH PRODUCER it is indeed, and the little lads and lassies who take cold easily, may be fortified against a cough that might prove serious, by taking Scott's Emulsion after their meals during the winter season.
Beware of substitutions and imitations.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE.
If you are thinking about building a house you should send 25 cents for my new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up, costing from $300 to $5,000. A book of great value to all who desire to build a house, and will suit you almost as well as if you paid $5 for a book. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents. Address
J. S. OGILVIE, Publisher, 57 ROSE ST., New York.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.
THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS
Has a pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

For a DISORDERED LIVER
Try BEECHAM'S PILLS.
25cts. a Box.
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

RHEUMATISM.—A pamphlet telling in plain terms "What rheumatism really is," "The cause of the pain attending it," and "how sufferers can obtain relief," will be sent FREE to any sufferer by F. W. KIMBALL, 357 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTY.
ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

RIDGE'S FOOD
The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Nota medime, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach, 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Write to F. W. Co. (on every label). Pulmer, Mass.

TRUST AND DISTRUST.

Distrust thyself, but trust His grace;
It is enough for thee!
In every trial thou shalt trace
Its all-sufficiency.

Distrust thyself, but trust His strength;
In Him thou shalt be strong:
His weakest ones may learn at length
A daily triumph-song.

Distrust thyself, but trust His love;
Rest in its changeless glow:
And life or death shall only prove
Its everlasting.

Distrust thyself, but trust alone
In Him, for all—for ever!
And joyously thy heart shall own That Jesus faileth never.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

CLEARANCE SALE OF CHRISTMAS BOOKLETS.

An Exceptional Offer.

I.—GOLDEN SHOWERS.

Poems from Shakespeare to Longfellow, selected by CHRISTINE FORREST. Illustrated by A. HANSLIP. Printed in monotype and colors. Size 6½x7½ inches. Illuminated covers, round corners, tinted edges. Price reduced from 50 to 25 cents.

II.—THE BETTER LAND.

By Mrs. HEMANS. Beautifully illustrated in chromo lithography. Size 4½x5½ inches. Chaste cover, round corners. Price reduced from 35 to 20 cents. This edition of Mrs. Hemans' famous poem makes one of the daintiest and most popular booklets.

III.—ANGEL VOICES ON LIFE'S PATHWAY.

Illustrated by J. F. WEEDON. With texts of Counsel and Guidance for the month. Done in colors and monotype. Oblong shape, 3½x5½ inches. A remarkably pretty booklet for the price. Reduced from 25 to 15 cents.

IV.—AT EVEN-TIDE.

Texts for Quiet Moments. Illustrated by J. F. WEEDON. Uniform in size and style to "Angel Voices," and just as attractive. Reduced from 25 to 15 cents.

V.—CROWNING MERCIES.

A text book for every day in the month. Arranged and illustrated by J. STANLEY, M.A., with gold edges. Reduced from 25 to 12 cents.

SPECIAL OFFER.

Clergymen and teachers supplied with any number for prizes or rewards, at the above named reduced prices, prepaid to any point in the U. S. or Canada.

A sample copy of each sent, postpaid, on receipt of 90 cents.

This is a special offer for the holiday season only.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 Bible House, New York.

STENOGRAPHY.

TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching; long established; hundreds of graduates holding responsible positions; success guaranteed. Also type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free. Write or call.

VERMILYER'S COLLEGE.
816 Broadway, New York.

Stepping

Heavenward

By ANSON D. F. RANDOLPH & CO., 38 West Twenty-third St., New York.

Christmas Booklets.

Our price-list is now ready and will be sent free on application, together with our various circulars descriptive of holiday books. In order to introduce our booklets, we will send a sample package for $1.00 post paid, the regular price being $1.50.

WILBUR B. KETCHAM, Publisher,
13 Cooper Union, New York.

WANTED AGENTS for

The Christian's Legacy.
One copy is the size of 12 c-pins in a package of 75 people. Another has sold 102 copies in one church in Springfield, Mass., and is a stranger there. Circulars free. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.

TRACTS

Sound, clear, pointed Gospel Tracts always on hand at moderate prices, also booklets and books for Christians at the TRACT DEPOT, 401 N. 1st St., Philadelphia. Sample packet and catalogue sent to intending purchaser on receipt of 4 cents.

THE Alfred Dolge FELT SHOES AND SLIPPERS.

Noiseless,
Warm, Durable.

A CHRISTMAS SUGGESTION.
THE WIFE (tenderly): "Cousin Belle's yearly Christmas present gives me an idea! What could be better than to send Alfred Dolge Felt Shoes or Slippers to all on our Christmas list. Nothing could give more comfort and pleasure."

PERFECT EASE AND COMFORT.

Made in all Styles for Men, Women, and Children.

Prevent Rheumatism and Cold Feet.
Send for Illustrated Price-List. Mention Christian Herald.

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York.

The excellence and durability of our instruments was established years ago.

PIANOS
$150 to $1500.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES.

By avoiding Agents you save their enormous expenses and profits which double the costs on every first-class Piano they sell.

We send for trial in your own home before you buy, and guarantee every instrument for six years.

ABSOLUTELY PERFECT.

ORGANS

$35.00 to $500.

Local Agents and Dealers must sell you an inferior instrument or charge you double what we ask.

BEAUTIFUL AND COMPLETE OUT-FIT SENT WITH EACH INSTRUMENT

ESTAB. 1859. CATALOGUES FREE. INCOR. 1877.

THE MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.
235 East 21st Street, New York.

The Connecticut Lamp.

Patented March 16, 1886. Nov. 1, 1887.

SPECIAL OFFER FOR THE HOLIDAYS.

Upon receipt of $2.50 we will send you by express, securely packed, one Nickel-plated Connecticut Lamp (see cut), with white dome shade, shade-holder, chimney and wick, complete ready for use. This is a central draft lamp, made of solid brass, heavily nickel-plated, gives a marvellous light, never needs trimming. Just the thing for poor eyes. You never miss the daylight when you use the "Connecticut." Every Lamp guaranteed. We refund your money if you are not satisfied. Remit $2.50 by check, bank draft, post-office or express money order, and write your address plainly.

WALLACE & SONS, Lamp Manufacturers, 59 Chambers St., New York.
ESTABLISHED 1848.
REFERENCE: Importers and Traders National Bank, New York.

HUTCHINSON'S GLOVES ARE THE BEST.

made with care from selected skins and WARRANTED. Those wanting serviceable gloves and to learn how to get them and save money, send stamp to the manufacturer for the book "About Gloves." It will interest you. Established 1862. Will send a good glove measure with book to those who mention this paper.

John C. Hutchinson, Johnstown, N.Y.

IF YOU WANT AN "OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE,

OR BAGSTER BIBLE,

send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

If You Want

A PULPIT BIBLE, A FAMILY BIBLE,
A TEACHER'S BIBLE,
HELPS TO BIBLE STUDY, (Concordances, Commentaries, etc.)
BOOKS FOR THE AGED,
BOOKS FOR THE YOUNG,
BOOKS FOR THE CHILDREN,
A HYMN BOOK or SONG BOOK,
the Picture of Christ on Calvary,
the Picture of Christ before Pilate to buy anything in this line,
to be our Agent and make money.

Write to or call upon

THOS. T. TASKER, Sr., Publisher, 921 Arch St., Philadelphia.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,

It makes no difference where you see them advertised, or by whom or where they are published or sold, send your orders to me and I will attend to them promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Pastors Teachers Can make big pay in cash or elegant premiums getting subscribers to this Magazine.

The Evangelical Monthly
Illustrated, $2.50, Pastors $3.00.

6th Year
PASTOR & PEOPLE

Sermons, Lectures, Bible Comments, Mission and S. S. Work, Christian Ethics and Home Culture. Samples Free. Agents Wanted. E. B. Treat, Pub. New York.

SILVERWARE AT REDUCED PRICES

by dealing direct with the Silversmith. An opportunity now offered every one to buy the genuine 1847 Roger Bros. Standard Plate at lower prices than ever been offered before. We sell our goods by mail, postage paid, (safe carriage guaranteed) in all kinds of tableware, spoons, forks, knives, etc. This is a grand opportunity to buy your silverware either for yourself or to give as a wedding, birthday, holiday or complimentary present to your friends. Our house has been established since 1831, fifty-six years. Send stamp for our beautifully illustrated Catalogue giving prices and showing new and latest designs, and how to order direct from the Silversmith, and be assured of better service than is offered by the local stores. MENTION THIS PAPER.

OSCAR LEACH & CO., Durham, Conn.

OH SEE
Our Elegant Cards & Scrap Pictures please the children. Over 100,000 sold this year. All praise them. 50 different pieces 10 cents. 100 " " 15 " 500 " " 50 " Beautiful Cards for one penny each and upward. Address Art Dept., G. S. V. & Co., Clintonville, Conn.

WANTED—Everywhere—A reliable agent, lady or gent to deliver goods and collect. Permanent position. Salary $35 to $150 monthly. For particulars address with stamp Excelsior Plating Co., Bridgeport, Ct.

Royal Armure Plaid

A new line of all-wool Royal Armure Plaids, just arrived, are common to purchasers for beauty of design and coloring; width 48 inches, price $2 per yard.

A large variety of Serge and Felt Plaids at 75 cents and $1 per yard. We would also direct attention to remarkable values in Robes and Pattern Dresses; Patterns worth $2 and $25, may be purchased for $1 and $16.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.
NEW YORK.

If Boys want Scroll Saws it indicates that they have a mechanical turn of mind, and can learn to use to advantage. While sawing is a better exercise than any kind of play, it contents the boys to stay at their work, and makes their hands for any artistic or mechanical employment which may wish to follow in after years. It will thus them a comfortable support if they have no trade or profession.

We can give the names of many thousands have turned these saws to great profit during past ten years. We sell the best foot-power saw (called the Rogers), with Drilling Attachment, Blower, and Designs, for $8.50. The Goodell Lathe, as the above cut, costs $12.00 with Scroll-saw and all necessary tools and designs. We sell the Headquarters for all things in the Scroll line, including Foot and Hand Machines, Saw Blades, Designs of every kind, Wood, Clocks, etc., etc. Send money with order for what you want, or buy from hardware dealers. Circulars full particulars sent to any address on receipt two-cent postage stamp.

MILLERS FALLS CO.,
93 Reade Street, New York.

WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATES OF LIME, SODA, IRON

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases, and Scrofulous Humors.

Almost as palatable as cream. It can be taken with pleasure by delicate persons and children, who, after using it, are very fond of it. It mixes with the food, increases the flesh and builds up the nervous system, restores to mind and body, creates new, rich blood, in fact, rejuvenates the whole system.

FLESH, BLOOD, NERVE, BRAIN. This is far superior to all other preparations of Cod-liver Oil; it has many imitations, equals. The results following its use are recommendations. Be sure, as you value health, and get the genuine. Manufactured by Dr. A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston, Mass. by all Druggists.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered, according to Act of Congress in the year 1886, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 48. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 27, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF MR. CHARLES COOK, the Evangelist and Prison Philanthropist
THE GLORIOUS REVELATION. Dr. Talmage's Sermon at Athens, Greece, last Sunday.
NECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE INDICATIONS OF THE LAST DAYS. By George H. Pember, M. A.
DR. TALMAGE AT SEA: A Letter from the "City of Paris."—A Living Book.
SOLOMON AND THE QUEEN OF SHEBA. By Mrs M. Baxter.
PICTURE OF THE ISLAND OF LOANDA.

A PARALLEL AND A CONTRAST. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
Gems from New Books: How Jefferson Looked, etc.
PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF DOM PEDRO, the Recently Exiled Emperor of Brazil.
THE MISSING CHEQUE. (With Illustration.)
THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: (Continued.)

MR. CHARLES COOK, THE EVANGELIST AND PRISON PHILANTHROPIST—Scenes in His Life.

MR. CHARLES COOK.

A Romantic Life—The Modern John Howard—Early Orphanhood—Years of Dissipation—His Conversion—Open Air Preaching—Rescue of a Drowning Boy—Travellers on the Alps Saved From a Precipice—Attractions of Prison Work—Interceding for Untried Prisoners in Egypt—The Horrors of Greek Jails—A Scramble for Bibles in Italy—Other European Dungeons—Work in Morocco—Prison Fever—Results of Open Air Services.

ONE of the most remarkable of the English evangelists is Mr. Charles Cook, who has been holding meetings this month in the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, of which the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon is pastor. He is known to many of our readers through his visit to this country in 1882, and many others are familiar with his name by reputation. Few, however, know the strange and almost romantic story of his life, and as it is most interesting and instructive, a brief sketch of it is here given, with a portrait on the preceding page.

Mr. Cook is the son of prosperous tradespeople in London, and was born there in 1846, so that he is now forty-three years of age. When he was only fifteen his mother and father, who were both most excellent people, suddenly died, and the lad was left to confront the world alone. A mere boy in years and experience, with money at command to gratify his tastes, and without the restraining influence of religion, it is not surprising that he gave his days to pleasure. The next six years he rapidly trod

The Downward Road.

Scenes of dissipation, the racecourse, the theatre, and haunts of degrading vice marked the stages of his career. But a startling change was at hand. Happening one day in 1867 to stroll into a church—an unusual thing with him, as may be supposed—it was his good fortune to hear an able sermon from the text, "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you." The words haunted him; he knew not why, he knew not how. Unlike those mystic characters on the wall that proclaimed to King Belshazzar his reprobation and doom, they encouraged him with hope that in their fulfilment there were mercy and peace everlasting. It was as if an angel had spoken. He went home to meditate on this strange message he had never understood before, and all at once its hidden meaning flashed upon his soul. That was of his life. He knelt down, and with many tears of penitence prayed for guidance and strength to lead a godly life in the future. And the prayer was granted. He yielded himself to Christ. Henceforth his former haunts knew him no more, and the blandishments and derision of his old associates was like the rush of an angry sea, which bespatters the rock that it cannot shake. He had chosen the better part, and it should never be taken away. Nor was it long before in the first glow of his new-born love for the Saviour, he felt impelled to proclaim to others the tidings of great joy he had himself received. His first address was delivered on a common near London, to the wonderment of all who had known him previously; and thereafter, in the commonest lodging-houses of the city and at street-corners, he became a familiar figure as the years sped on. He had a bright, winning manner, he was in earnest, and he knew the evils against which he warned his hearers, and the remedy for them.

The Turning-Point

The Rescue of a Life

early in his evangelistic career, was the subject of much notice at the time. Mr. Cook was holding services at Lowestoft, a port on the south-eastern coast of England, when one afternoon as he was walking by the sea, near the harbor, there was a cry of "A boy drowning!" It appears that a number of boys were playing, when one carelessly pushed one of his companions into the harbor, where he was sinking for the second time. Rapidly divesting himself of his coat and vest, Mr. Cook jumped from the pier into the water and, managing to reach the drowning lad, held him up until a boat came to their rescue. (See illustration on first page.)

A Struggle On the Alps

was another memorable incident in Mr. Cook's life. Crossing the Tête Noire Pass in the Swiss Alps in 1878, on a mule, his guide walking alongside, he noticed on the path ahead a carriage containing three ladies and a gentleman. The road being very narrow, he wondered how a second carriage which was coming towards them could pass. When they met, the vehicles collided, and the off-side carriage swayed toward the verge of the abyss. Seeing with horror that the earth was breaking away from the feet of the opposite mule, Mr. Cook jumped off his mule and ran to the rescue. By a desperate effort he succeeded in getting the ladies out of the carriage (see illustration on first page), the driver hanging on to the pole of the carriage to save the vehicle from going over the precipice, which is about 2,000 feet in depth at this point. It needed no exhortation to give God thanks for His delivering mercy, and in no heart that day was gratitude so profound as in his who had been used as the means to save precious lives from an imminent death.

The Modern Howard

is the character in which Mr. Cook is best known. It has been said that prison philanthropy is wasted and that wrongdoers who are caught and lodged in jail have no claims on the good offices of philanthropists who should rather give all their time and effort to the honest poor who do not break the laws. There is common sense and justice in this view but men who have learned the lesson of the Cross do not adopt it. They know that it was not for the righteous that Christ came to die and that if we were all treated as we individually deserve our case would be deplorable. Therefore they do not regard the evildoer as outside the pale of pity, and they are encouraged to tell him the glad tidings of salvation by the thought that in prison he is in favorable circumstances for realizing the consequences of sin. That is a work to which Mr. Cook has given much time, and in which he has been much blessed. Beginning with the prisons of his own land he visited one after the other, and in addition to work among the prisoners, studied the reformatory methods in operation. Thence he went to other countries. The influential position England holds in Egypt led Mr. Cook to make that country one of the first points of his journey of mercy. As England might lose her ascendancy there, and, if he delayed, it might be too late. He thus speaks of his Tour of Egyptian Prisons.

"From seaboard to Soudan, from Alexandria to Philæ, did we travel, scattering the Word in villages and towns, on board the steamers, and in cells of prisons. In Cairo the prisons were not so very bad; but in other places, and especially in Upper Egypt, they were most unhealthy; it was no uncommon thing to find the water used for drinking purposes kept in the latrine, and in some cases there was a cesspool under the room where the prisoners slept. This was bad indeed; but on inquiry of the authorities, I found over 1,400 men in prison awaiting trial, and I was officially informed that many of them had thus been imprisoned without trial for nearly seven years. This and other instances of injustice led me to lodge a strong protest at the Palace of the Khedive; and, writing to his Highness, I complained bitterly of the inhumanity of detaining prisoners so long before bringing them to trial. Whether actually through this letter or not, I noticed that three days afterwards 150 poor wretches were released, and others were to follow. (See illustration on first page.) I thanked God and took courage; and having given copies of the Scriptures to all who could read in the prisons of Egypt, I left these miserable dungeons, with their chained and manacled inmates, and sailed for the classic shores of Greece."

Horrors in Greece.

"Passing by the island of Crete, in less than three days, from Alexandria, we reached the Piræus, and after a long and dusty drive, we entered Athens. Visiting the prisons here, we were surprised to find them dirtier than those we had recently left, and quite as unhealthy; for in one room only ten feet square we found ten men, and in another, where thirteen men were confined—one being dangerously ill—the room measured twelve feet square, the only mode of ventilation we could see being the occasional opening of the door. No work was given the prisoners to do, and no books were provided for them to read; whilst the floors, staircases, and passages were simply thick with dirt. On our arrival, the chief prison in Athens was in a great uproar, as three prisoners had escaped, and only one had just been recaptured. This man we visited, and gave him a copy of the Gospels; but so dejected and miserable did the captives all appear, that we first ordered them all to be supplied with coffee, and then left copies of the Scriptures in modern Greek for them all. We wrote to the Minister who has charge of the prisons, pointing out the urgent need of immediate reform, and complaining of the unsanitary condition of the place. We had to leave Athens before there was time to get an answer, but trust something was done to mend matters."

In Italian Prisons

Mr. Cook found abundant scope for Christian effort. He says: "From Milan, in the north, to Naples, in the south; from Puzzuoli to Brindisi, in the old state dungeons of the Inquisition at Venice, to the convict prisons of Rome itself, have I had the joy and pleasure of distributing the Word of life. The people of Italy are struggling to be free from the thralldom of the Romanist priests—are far more loyal to the King than to the Pope; and I was rather helped than hindered in my work by all of the officials I came in contact with. Among the many interesting visits paid to the jails of Italy, I select but one. We had run through Rome, visiting every prison it possesses, and leaving behind us our precious books without any opposition from the authorities, and reached Brindisi, where some 600 convicts were imprisoned in the old castle. So eager were these men to possess the Scriptures, that they pressed round us so closely as to anger the governor, who was conducting us over the place.

"We were in one of the exercising yards—prisoners in chains all around us clamoring for our books; the governor was about ordering the men into their cells, because of their noise, etc. Not a moment was to be lost; so, taking all the copies I had with me, and smiling the official into a good humor, I threw them into the middle of the yard. The noise of the chains clanking on the stones, caused by the scrambling of the convicts to obtain possession of those books, will ever live in my memory. In this country there are over 5,000 men imprisoned for life, and these are known by their dress."

The French Jails

were next visited. "How long has this man to endure solitary confinement?" I asked of the warden, who was conducting me over the 'Maison Centrale,' of Caen, in Normandy. 'Ten years,' was the answer. 'What is the effect of this on the prisoners?' I asked. 'It drives them mad,' replied the officer. Descending into the lower part of the prison, I found a man in a 'dark cell,' and inquired the time he had been thus immured. 'He has been in this cell twenty-five days, and has five more to stay,' was the answer. The light of the lantern which I carried almost blinded the man. We gave away our books to the prisoners, with a prayer for their salvation, and left the place."

No Roman Catholic Government supplies its prisoners with Bibles; but Mr. Cook has travelled in many such countries, visiting them for the purpose of given them the Scriptures in their own tongue, and has been most gladly welcomed. The nine huge prisons of Paris alone occupied him nearly two years. The prison discipline of France, he says, is extremely rigorous; but there is nothing about it which is calculated to reform a man, much less to convert him. The result is seen in the enormous per of men who are convicted again and and who, at last, have to be shipped as rigibles to the wilds of New Caledonia.

Austrian Prisoners

more difficult to reach, because of the jealousy of the despotic government, which suspended even the simple evangelistic efforts of pious designs. Mr. Cook says: "I learned several persons had been arrested for giving away tracts, and the wife of the chaplain to British Ambassador told me they were not red to hold public prayer-meetings in their house. We managed, however, to give four hundred and fifty Testaments in four in the streets of Vienna. By the aid of our entials, we were soon in possession of the ful authority for visiting the prisons of ria. It would not be wise, concerning this try, to speak in detail; enough to say that estants, Catholics, and Jews alike shared in blessing of having the Word in their own age. We asked for and received an official pt for all the books which we gave away. ource, I found that what could be done in na it was possible to do in the provinces, the receipt we held was, as I expected, of use to me when we reached Hungary, e we felt that we were breathing another Though still under the rule of Austria, the garians are a liberty-loving people; and I liberty given me to go where I liked and o wished. In the capital—Buda-Pesth—in day I supplied every prisoner with God's d. Servians, Hungarians, Croats, and rs, all received the books with thankfulness. ventilation of the prisons here was bad, the th was horrible; but the authorities thank- te for calling attention to it, and promised medy it." Last year Mr. Cook paid

A Visit to Morocco,

finding the prisoners famishing for food, he ht up all the bread to be had in Tangier day, and supplementing this with grapes, ed the two prisons of Tangier, and fed all prisoners (see illustration on first page); by the help of a friend who spoke Arabic, ad the Word of God to them, preached the el of Christ, and left with all who could copies of the Word of God; managing, to get one prisoner released from incarceration by paying his debt. At Tetuan, an inland t, he was also enabled to feed all the poor gry wretches who were there confined. On way home he visited the prisons of Spain, h he found indescribably filthy. There the eless abominations through which he passed ight on him an illness which prostrated him three months, and compelled him to abandon further investigations in Spain. It was the prison-fever, once well known in all Euro- lands, and which found its victims, not only ng the prisoners, but among the warders, sometimes the contagion spread in the tinal courts even to judge and jury. Hap- the right of prisoners to good sanitary argments is now recognized in the more istian lands, and the fever has disappeared, gh its memory is perpetuated still in many rts by strewing the ledge in front of the oners' dock with herbs supposed to have dis- ing properties. Mr. Cook suffered terribly, has now recovered, and has resumed his ngelistic work by his recent meetings in Mr. rgeon's Tabernacle. It should also be men- ted that in the intervals of his prison work, continued his open air meetings in London. le Park was his favorite Sunday afternoon rt, and frequently he had an audience there hree thousand persons. So much good red from these services that a hall has been d near the spot for the winter months, and y Sunday night it is crowded with non- rch goers, who by their orderly manner and e attention prove the value of these efforts.

Volume XI., of the Christian Herald, contain the numbers for 1888, with complete index, bound in t, may be had from this office; price, $2.50, including age. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, and 1887 are also for We can also furnish complete volumes for 1884, 1885, 1888, unbound, price $1.50, including postage.

A LIVING BOOK.

AN interesting incident was related on October 25 at a meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions in Chicago, by Dr. Peoples, who has returned from his work in Laos to procure type to print the Bible in the language of his people. It referred to a man who, being unable to read, and too old to learn by rote, brought to the mission his son, who committed passages of the Bible to memory so as to recite them to his father: Dr. Peoples said:

One of the last events that transpired before we left Lakawn was the conversion of a prominent man. He had been one of the most conscientious, faithful Buddhists, remarkable among his neighbors, yet he was not able to read; having heard of the Christian teachers, he became interested inquired about them, but could not learn anything. So he came, like Nicodemus, by night to our place, and finding a native elder, he asked if it would be out of place for him to visit the teacher; then, he asked about the new religion. The elder took the Bible and began to read the first of Genesis, "In the beginning," etc. Listening attentively, he presently said, "Is that the way?" as if a mental problem had been solved. Then the elder turned to the New Testament and read of the Saviour of men. He then said, "What shall I do? I cannot remember, I cannot read, I cannot wait to learn." He came to me, and I could but be impressed with the straightforwardness and simplicity of his character. The next time he came he brought a little son of about five years; the elder read to the boy, who committed to memory what he heard, so as to be able to repeat to his father. This man has become a Christian, but is now ostracized and persecuted. His wife's relations were about to take his children from him, saying, "The foreigners would take them to feed their spirits." (This is actually believed.) But we had, fortunately, gained enough influence to prevent their taking his property or forcing his children from him, although they persuaded the younger children to live with them.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

How to Get into Heaven.—Dr. Pentecost said: "I well remember the last week of a series of meetings conducted by Mr. Moody in our city. The crowds were immense, and more people standing outside who could not get in than were in the great tabernacle. Towards the last day of the mission I slipped out to the little side-door to get some fresh air. In front of this door were massed about 3,000 people, anxious to enter. As I stood there a splendid carriage drove up, and a lady, richly attired, stepped out, and going up to the policeman in charge, said, 'I wish to get in.' 'I am very sorry,' he replied, 'but it is impossible.' The lady looked first at the policeman, and then at her horse and carriage, as much as to say, 'That is all good enough for common people, but I must get in.' But the policeman was obdurate, and she had to go again into her carriage and drive away. Then there came up one of the city aldermen, and asked to be admitted. 'My orders are very strict,' replied the officer: 'I cannot allow anyone to pass in.' The alderman looked at him as if to say, 'Will you not let me in?' but he had to retire. He had scarcely gone when another gentleman came up, who explained that he had just arrived from Washington, and had to go back the same night, would he not let him in, but was told that it was impossible. 'I scarcely like to use this means,' he said, as he handed the policeman his card, and there he saw the name of one of the first governors in the United States, but his name did not avail him there. I was just turning away when a little, hard-working looking man squeezed his way up to the door and asked to get in. 'I have been turning away aldermen and governors, and do you think I'll let you in?' said the policeman. Turning to me, the little man said, 'Go and tell Mr. Moody that his brother George is here.' I carried the message, and Mr. Moody exclaimed, 'My brother George!

I did not know he was in town. Why, get him in!' Then, turning, he said to the crowd on the platform, 'Make a passage for my brother!' Soon he was in and seated on Mr. Moody's chair, the only vacant one in the hall. Similarly we may knock at the gates of heaven, and make any plea we like, but if we be not 'Sons of the Most High and brothers of Christ,' we cannot enter."

"Never Too Late to Mend."—A Minister Remarks: "There was a young man who, when his conscience was awakened, and he was in a state of most intense anxiety about his soul, tried by every means to turn a deaf ear to the loud callings of the Spirit. One evening, when more than usually disturbed, he resolved to go to the theatre and see if he could find distraction there. On his way he met a friend, a Christian young lady, who, as they shook hands, said, 'What do you think of the evangelistic meetings that are being held just now?' 'Oh,' he replied, carelessly, 'I do not think much about them. There seems to be a lot of daft folk making an ado about nothing.' Yet, even as he spoke, he was most anxious about his soul. He went to the theatre, bought a play-bill, and when settled comfortably in his seat, glanced over it. There was to be a tragedy, followed by a farce. Alas! that in real life the sinner's career should be exactly opposite—a farce followed by a tragedy. The first part was over, and the young man consulted his play-bill to see the name of the farce. It was, 'It is never too late to mend.' The words struck home to his heart. 'Never too late to mend,' he murmured. He became oblivious to all that took place on the stage; he heard the laughter and applause, but it seemed to him as if coming from persons far away from him; he was thinking of these words, 'Never too late to mend.' Were these words true of him? Would God pardon him? When he left the theatre he went home, and locking himself in his room, he knelt in prayer and sought Christ as his Saviour."

A Talk Between Two Campbells.—Mr. Campbell relates: "Not long ago, I was at a place on the river Clyde, and one fine day I thought I would cross the river by the ferry, and visit a brother pastor who lived on the other side. I arrived at my friend's house and was shown into the study. There were three chairs in the room; he took one, and I took another, leaving a vacant one between us. We had not been long seated when a young man came into the room, and seating himself on the middle chair, burst into tears exclaiming, 'I am not saved! I am not saved!' Then the minister, my friend, said, 'Here is a Mr. Campbell, an evangelist, and here is a Mr. Campbell, a sinner; let the one speak to the other.' Turning to the young man, I said: 'You say you are not saved; did you ever think you were?' 'Yes,' was the reply, 'I heard that Jesus died for all mankind; therefore He died for me, and consequently, I was saved among the rest.' Then I showed him that he must accept Christ as his personal Saviour. The result of the interview was that he professed that very night to accept Christ. As he left us, I said, 'I shall be here for some time, and shall be pleased to see you at the meetings on the other side of the water.' He promised to come, and night after night he was present at the hall, perceptibly growing in grace and in the knowledge of the Lord. Before his conversion he was resting on a false assurance. It is only as a personal Saviour that we feel Christ nearest and dearest to us."

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 71 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

THE GLORIOUS REVELATION.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon at Athens, Greece, November 24, 1889.

"For now we see through a glass, darkly." 1 Cor. 13: 2.

"Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard." 1 Cor. 2: 9.

Classic Associations — Eclipsed by Paul's Visit — His Sojourn at the Neighboring City of Corinth — The Ancient Splendor of that City — Paul's Proclamation of Greater Magnificence — The Day of Vision Yet Future — The Bible Chained to the Throne — Our Dim Knowledge Introductory — The Vision of God — The Excellency of Christ — The Mysteries of Providence — The Death of Your Child Explained — Financial Trouble Understood — Heaven's Dense Population — Its Incomprehensible Happiness — The Glorious Reunions — The Gleaming Mountain-Tops.

BOTH these sentences were written by the most illustrious merely human being the world ever saw—one who walked these streets, and preached from yonder pile of rocks, Mars' Hill. Though more classic associations are connected with this city than with any other city under the sun, because here Socrates and Plato and Aristotle and Demosthenes and Pericles and Herodotus and Pythagoras and Zenophon and Praxiteles wrote or chiseled or taught or thundered or sung, yet, in my mind, all those men and their teachings were eclipsed by Paul and the gospel he preached in this city and in your nearby city of Corinth. Yesterday, standing on the old fortress at Corinth, the Acro-Corinthus, out of the ruins at its base arose in my imagination

The Old City as Paul Saw It.

I have been told that for splendor the world beholds no such wonder to-day as that ancient Corinth, standing on an isthmus washed by two seas, the one sea bringing the commerce of Europe, the other sea bringing the commerce of Asia. From her wharves, in the construction of which whole kingdoms had been absorbed, war galleys with three banks of oars pushed out and confounded the navy-yards of all the world. Huge-handed machinery, such as modern invention cannot equal, lifted ships from the sea on one side and transported them on trucks across the isthmus, and set them down in the sea on the other side. The revenue officers of the city went down, through the olive groves, on the beach to collect a tariff from all nations.

The mirth of all people sported in her Isthmian games, and the beauty of all lands sat in her theatres, walked her porticoes, and threw itself on the altar of her stupendous dissipations. Column and statue and temple bewildered the beholder. There were white marble fountains into which, from apertures at the side, there rushed waters everywhere known for health-giving qualities. Around these basins, twisted into wreaths of stones, there were all the beauties of Sculpture and Architecture,

while standing, as if to guard the costly display, was a statue of Hercules of burnished Corinthian brass. Vases of terra cotta adorned the cemeteries of the dead—vases so costly that Julius Cæsar was not satisfied until he had captured them for Rome. Armed officials, the corintharii, paced up and down to see that no statue was defaced, no pedestal overthrown, no bas-relief touched. From the edge of the city the hill held its magnificent burdens of columns and towers and temples (1,000 slaves waiting at one shrine), and a citadel so thoroughly impregnable that Gibraltar is a heap of sand compared with it. Amid all that strength and magnificence Corinth stood and defied the world.

Oh! it was not to rustics who had never seen anything grand that Paul uttered one of my texts. They had heard the best music that had come from the best instruments in all the world; they had heard songs floating from morning porticoes and melting in evening groves; they had passed their whole lives among pictures and sculpture and architecture and Corinthian brass, which had been moulded and shaped until there was no chariot wheel in which it had not sped, and no tower in which it had not glittered, and no gateway that it had not adorned. Ah, it was a bold thing for Paul to stand there amid all that and say: "All this is nothing. These sounds that come from the temple of Neptune are not music compared with the harmonies of which I speak. These waters rushing in the basin of Pyrene are not pure. These statues of Bacchus and Mercury are not exquisite. Your citadel of Acro-Corinthus is not strong compared with that which I offer to the poorest slave that puts down his burden at that brazen gate. You Corinthians think this is a splendid city; you think you have heard all sweet sounds and seen all beautiful sights; but I tell you eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love Him."

Indeed, both my texts, the one spoken by Paul and the one written by Paul, show us that we have imperfect eyesight, and our day of

Vision is Yet to Come:

For now we see through a glass, darkly, but then, face to face. So Paul takes the responsibility of saying that the Bible is an indistinct mirror, and that its mission shall be finally suspended. I think there may be one Bible in heaven fastened to the throne. Just as now, in a museum, we have a lamp exhumed from Heracleum or Nineveh, and we look at it with great interest and say, "How poor a light it must have given, compared with our modern lamps!" so I think that this Bible, which was a lamp to our feet in this world, may lie near the throne of God, exciting our interest to all eternity by the contrast between its comparatively feeble light and the illumination of heaven.

The idea I shall develop to-day is, that in this world our knowledge is comparatively dim and unsatisfactory, but, nevertheless, is introductory to grander and

More Complete Vision.

This is eminently true in regard to our view of God. We hear so much about God that we conclude that we understand Him. He is represented as having the tenderness of a father, the firmness of a judge, the pomp of a king, and the love of a mother. We hear about Him, talk about Him, write about Him. We lisp His name in infancy, and it trembles on the tongue of the dying octogenarian. We think that we know very much about Him. Take the attribute of mercy; do we understand it? The Bible blossoms all over with that word—Mercy. It speaks again and again of the tender mercies of God; of the sure mercies, of the great mercies, of the mercy that endureth forever, of the multitude of His mercies. And yet I know that the views we have of this great Being are most indefinite, one-sided, and incomplete. When, at death, and we shall look directly upon Him, how new and surprising! We see upon canvas a picture of the morning. We study the cloud in the sky, the dew upon the grass, and the husbandman on the way to the field. Beautiful picture of the morning! But we rise at daybreak, and go upon a hill to see for ourselves that which was represented to us. While we look the mountains are transfigured. The burnished gates of heaven swing open and shut, to let pass a host of fiery splendors. The clouds are all abloom, and hang pendant from arbors of alabaster and amethyst. The waters make pathway of inlaid pearl for the light to walk upon; and there is morning on the sea. The crags uncover their scarred visage; and there is morning among the mountains. Now you go home, and how tame your picture of the morning seems in contrast! Greater than that shall be the contrast between this scriptural view of God and that which we shall have when standing face to face. This is a picture of the morning; that will be the morning itself.

The Gates Shall Fly Open,

Again: My texts are true of the Saviour's excellency. By image, and sweet rhythm of expression, and startling antitheses, Christ is set forth—His love, His compassion, His work, His life, His death, His resurrection. We are challenged to measure it, to compute it, to weigh it. In the hour of our broken enthrallment, we mount up into high experience of His love, and shout, until the countenance glows, and the blood bounds, and the whole nature is exhilarated, "have found Him!" And yet it is through glass, darkly. We see not half of that compassionate face. We feel not half the warmth that loving heart. We wait for death to let rush into His outspread arms. Then we shall be face to face. Not shadow then, but substance. Not hope then, but the fulfilling of prefigurement.

That will be a magnificent unfolding. Throwing out into view of all hidden excellencies the coming again of a long-absent Jesus to me us—not in rags and in penury and death, but amidst a light and pomp and such as none but a glorified intelligence could experience. Oh! to gaze full upon the brother that was lacerated, upon the side that was pierced, upon the feet that were nailed: to stand close up in the presence of Him who prayed for us on the mountain, and thought of us by the sea, and agonized for us in the garden, and died for us in horrible crucifixion; to feel of Him, to embrace Him, to take His hand, to kiss His feet, to run our fingers along the scars of ancient suffering, to say: "This is my Jesus! He gave Himself for me. I shall never leave His presence. I shall forever behold His glory. I shall eternally hear His voice. Lord Jesus, now I see thee! I behold where the blood started, where the tears coursed, where the face was distorted. I have waited for this hour. I shall never turn my back on thee. No more looking through imperfect glasses. No more studying thee in the darkness. But as long as this throne stand and this everlasting river flows, and these gay lands bloom, and these arches of victory remain to greet home heaven's conquerors, so long shall I see thee, Jesus of my choice, Jesus of my song, Jesus of my triumph—forever and forever—face to face!"

Outbursting Joy

The idea of my texts is just as true when applied to God's providence. Who has not come to some pass thoroughly inexplicable? You say

"What Does This Mean?"

What is God going to do with me now? He tells me that all things work together for good. That does not look like it." You continue to study the dispensation, and, after a while, guess about what God means. "He means to teach me this. I think He means to teach me that. Perhaps it is to humble my pride. Perhaps it is to make me feel more dependent. Perhaps to teach me the uncertainty of life." But, after all, it is only a guess—a looking through the glass, darkly. The Bible assures us there shall be a satisfactory unfolding. "What I do thou knowest not now but thou shalt know hereafter." You will know why God took to Himself that only child. Next door there was a household of seven children. Why not take one from that group, instead of your only one? Why single out the dwelling in which there was only one heart beating responsive to yours? Why did God give you a child at all, if He meant to take it away? Why fill the cup of your gladness brimming, if He meant to dash it down? Why allow all the tendrils of your heart to wind around that object, and then, when every fibre of your own life seemed to be interlocked with the child's life, with strong hand to tear you apart, until you fall bleeding and crushed, your dwelling desolate, your hopes blasted, your heart broken? Do you suppose that?

God will Explain That?

Yea. He will make it plainer than any mathematical problem—as plain as that two and two make four. In the light of the throne you will see that it was right—all right. "Just and true are all Thy ways, thou King of saints!" Here is a man who cannot get on in the world. He always seems to buy at the wrong time and sell at the worst disadvantage. He tries this enterprise, and fails; that business, and is disappointed. The man next door to him has a lucrative trade, but he lacks customers. A new prospect opens. His income is increased. But that year his family are sick, and the profits are expended in tryto cure the ailments. He gets a discouraged look. Becomes faithless as to success. Begins to expect disasters. Others wait for something to turn up; he waits for it to turn down. Others, with only half as much education and character, get on twice as well. He sometimes guesses as to what it all means. He says: "Perhaps riches would spoil me. Perhaps poverty is necessary to keep me humble. Perhaps I might, things were otherwise, be tempted into dissipation." But there is no complete solution of the mystery. He sees through a glass darkly, and must wait for

A Higher Unfolding.

Will there be an explanation? Yes; God will like that man in the light of the throne and say: Child immortal, hear the explanation! You remember the failing of that great enterprise. This is the explanation." And you will answer: It is all right."

I see, every day, profound mysteries of Providence. There is no question we ask oftener than Why? There are hundreds of graves that need to be explained. Hospitals for the blind and lame, asylums for the idiotic and insane, almshouses for the destitute, and a world of pain and misfortune that demand more than human solution. Ah! God will clear it all up. In the light that pours from the throne no dark mystery can live. Things now utterly inscrutable will be illumined as plainly as though the answer were written on the jasper wall or sounded in the temple anthem. Bartimeus that he was blind, and Lazarus that he was covered with sores, and Joseph that he was cast to the pit, and Daniel that he denuded with lions, and Paul that he was humpbacked, and David that he was driven from Jerusalem, and the sewing woman that she could get only a few pence for making a garment, and that invalid that for twenty years he could not lift his head from the pillow, and that widow that she had such hard work to earn bread for her children. You know that in a song different voices carry different parts. The sweet and overwhelming part of the hallelujah of heaven will not be carried by those who rode in high places, and gave sumptuous entertainments; but pauper children will sing it, beggars will sing it, redeemed hodgepotters will sing it, those who were once the scouring of earth will sing it. The hallelujah will be all the grander for earth's weeping eyes, and aching heads, and exhausted hands, and bowed backs, and martyred agonies.

Will Thank God

Again: The thought of my texts is true when applied to the enjoyment of the righteous in heaven. I think we have but little idea of heaven. Infidels say, "Your heaven will be very small place compared with the world of the lost; for, according to your teaching, the majority of men will be destroyed." I deny the charge. I suppose that the multitude of the really lost, as compared with the multitude of the finally saved, will be a handful. I suppose that the few sick people in the hospitals of our great cities, as compared with the hundreds of thousands of well people, would not be smaller than the number of those who shall be cast out suffering, compared with those who shall have upon them the health of heaven. For we are to remember that we are living in only the beginning of the Christian dispensation, and that this whole world is to be populated and redeemed, and that ages of light and love are to flow on. This be so, the multitudes of the saved will be vast majority.

The Number of the Righteous

Take all the congregations that have assembled for worship throughout Christendom. Put them together, and they would make but small audience compared with the thousands and tens of thousands, and ten thousand times a thousand, and the hundred and forty and a thousand that shall stand around the throne. Those flashed up to heaven in martyrdom; those tossed for many years upon the invalid couch; those fought in the armies oferty, and rose as they fell; those tumbled from high scaffoldings, or slipped from the mast, or were washed off into the sea. They came up from Corinth, from Laodicea, from the Red Sea bank, and Gennesaret's wave, from Egyptian brickyards, and Gideon's threshing-floor. Those, thousands of years ago, slept the last sleep, and these are this moment having their eyes closed, and their limbs stretched out for the sepulchre. A general expecting an attack from the enemy stands on a hill, and looks through a field-glass, and sees in the great distance multitudes approaching, but has no idea of their numbers. He says: "I cannot tell anything about them. I merely know that there are a great number." And so John, without attempting to count, says: "A great multitude that no man can number." We are told that heaven is but what do we know about happiness? Happiness in this world is only a half-fledged thing; a flowery path, with a serpent hissing across it; a broken pitcher, from which the water has dropped before we could drink it; a thrill of exhilaration, followed by disastrous reactions. To help us understand the joy of heaven, the Bible takes us to a river. We stand on the grassy bank. We see the waters flow on with ceaseless wave. But the filth of the cities is emptied into it, and the banks are torn, and unhealthy exhalations spring up from it, and we fail to get an idea of the River of Life in heaven.

A Place of Happiness;

We get very imperfect ideas of the reunions of heaven. We think of some festal day on earth, when father and mother were yet living, and the children came home. A good time, that! But it had this drawback—all were not there. That brother went off to sea, and never was heard from. That sister—did we not lay her away in the freshness of her young life, never more in this world to look upon her? Ah! there was a skeleton at the feast; and tears mingled with our laughter on that Christmas day. Not so with heaven's reunions. It will be an uninterrupted gladness. Many a Christian parent will look around and Find all His Children There.

"Ah!" he says, "can it be possible that we are all here—life's perils over? The Jordan passed and not one wanting? Why, even the prodigal is here. I almost gave him up. How long he despised my counsels! but grace hath triumphed. All here! all here! Tell the mighty joy through the city. Let the bells ring, and the angels mention it in their song. Wave it from the top of the walls. All here!"

No more breaking of heartstrings, but face to face. The orphans that were left poor, and in a merciless world, kicked and cuffed of many hardships, shall join their parents, over whose graves they so long wept, and gaze into their glorified countenances forever, face to face. We may come up from different parts of the world, one from the land and another from the depths of the sea; from lives affluent and prosperous, or from scenes of ragged distress; but we shall all meet in rapture and jubilee, face to face.

Many of our friends have entered upon that joy. A few days ago they sat with us studying these gospel themes; but they only saw dimly—now revelation hath come. Your time will also come. God will not leave you floundering in the darkness. You stand wonderstruck and amazed. You feel as if all the loveliness of life were dashed out. You stand gazing into the open chasm of the grave. Wait a little. In the presence of your departed, and of Him who carries them in His bosom, you shall soon stand face to face. Oh that our last hour may kindle up with this promised joy! May we be able to say, like the Christian not long ago, departing: "Though a pilgrim walking through the valley, the mountain-tops are gleaming from peak to peak!" or, like my dear friend and brother, Alfred Cookman, saying in his last moment that which has gone into Christian classics: "I am sweeping through the pearly gate, washed in the blood of the Lamb!"

THE EX-EMPEROR OF BRAZIL.

(See portrait on page 764.)

WE did not expect to ever read or write that title of the worthy gentleman and liberal statesman whose portrait is here given. It was thought that the vast Empire over which he ruled could not much longer resist the influence of the example of her neighbors, but the Emperor was so much respected and beloved by his people that it seemed probable he would retain the throne until he died. Then a republic would be inevitable, for his daughter, who was his heiress and natural successor, did not share his popularity. But unforeseen events have precipitated the revolution; Dom Pedro II. has been deposed, and on November 17 he quitted his country for Europe.

Dom Pedro is sixty-four years of age, having been born December 2, 1825. To men who retain the old reverence for "blue blood," he must be an object of reverence by his illustrious descent. In his veins flows the blood of the Braganzas, the Bourbons, and the Hapsburgs, families whose representatives have occupied for centuries the proudest thrones in Europe. His father was a Braganza, and his mother a Hapsburg whose sister was the wife of Napoleon I. Yet a more striking and creditable contrast than that existing between Dom Pedro and the families to which he is allied by blood cannot be found. The faults and vices which have made those great names hateful to thousands have no existence in the great mind and noble spirit of the American monarch.

He was proclaimed Emperor in April, 1831, when he was little more than five years old. His father, Dom Pedro I., had incensed the people by banishing the most popular leaders, and by acts which aroused the suspicion that he was scheming to attain absolute power. Finally, in 1831 he abdicated and sailed for Portugal, leaving his three children—one son and two daughters—behind. The boy Emperor was at once proclaimed, and a council of three regents was elected by the Legislative chambers to superintend his education and to carry on the business of the country in his name. Three years later two of the regents were dispensed with, and Brazil became practically a republic under Feljoe, who was elected sole regent by the Legislature. His administration was not successful, more than one of his measures having aroused doubts of his fidelity to the young Emperor. Arango Lima, his successor, also failed to satisfy the nation. In July, 1840, the patience of the people and the Legislature was exhausted, and, encouraged by the reports of the young Emperor's ability, he was declared of age, and began to govern before attaining his fifteenth year.

It was soon found that the Emperor possessed wisdom rare at his age. He was modest, studious, and solicitous of the welfare of the nation. His first efforts were directed to organizing a scheme of national education, and he personally aided the statesmen entrusted with the duty of executing it. His next effort was to devise plans for the gradual extinction of slavery, and this became the most earnest and persistent labor of his life. He struggled to overcome the prejudices of his people in favor of slave labor, and, by planting colonies of European immigrants, to prove to them that their own interests would be promoted by employing free men instead of slaves. It was a gigantic task, and it was not until 1871 that he had the pleasure of signing a decree declaring free every child born of slave parents after that date.

Of his war with Paraguay, which was a severe strain on the resources of Brazil, and of the other important events of his long reign of fifty-eight years, we have not space to write at this time. Nor has a clear account yet arrived of the circumstances which have involved his fall. That he foresaw the republican tendencies of the nation is well known, and it is to his credit that he did not attempt to check them. He rather sought, by every means he could devise, to render the nation fit to govern itself when the time should come that it desired a republic.

SOLOMON AND THE QUEEN OF SHEBA.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for December 8, 1 Kings 10:1-13; Golden Text, Matt. 12:42.

Solomon's Glory not of Conquest—Directly from God—His Fame World-Wide—The Royal Philosopher and Poet—The Queen Seeking Knowledge—Solomon Teaching—The Journey Well Taken—A Greater Teacher than Solomon—The Spirit in Which to Inquire of Him—The Temple He is Building—His Servants and their Apparel—What it is to Stand in His Presence—Solomon a Vicegerent—His Gifts to the Queen.

"THE Queen of the South shall rise up in the judgment with this generation, and shall condemn it; for she came from the uttermost parts of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon, and behold a greater than Solomon is here." (Matt. 12:42.) Such is the reference made by our Lord Himself to the Queen of Sheba.

The fame of Solomon spread far and wide; he became the leading man of his day. In all countries, far and near, his name was a household word. It was not the extent of his territory, nor the conquests that he made, which brought him this popularity, for Solomon, as his name implies, was "a man of rest." (1 Chron. 22:9.) The fame of Solomon when in the height of his glory was

Concerning the Name of the Lord.

What a rebuke to the men of note in our own day, who, as a rule, ignore the name of the Lord, and substitute their own name! Here was a man of unquestionable mental power, embracing in its exercise every department of literature, art, and science; and at a time when there was neither post nor telegraph, neither newspaper nor other modern means of communication, his reputation became world-wide, and always in connection with the name of God, whom he served!

His learning was very extended; "God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the seashore." The variety of his learning is thus described: "He spake three thousand proverbs; and his songs were a thousand and five." So much for his philosophy and poetry. "And he spake of trees, from the cedar-tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall." Thus he was a botanist, fully understanding the treasures of the vegetable world. "He spake also of beasts, and of fowls, and of creeping things, and of fishes." Thus natural philosophy was one of his studies. Architecture and mechanics must also have formed a part, as we see in the construction of the Temple; political economy and all that appertained to good government also. It was a capacious mind, stored by the hand of God. We have no reason to think that Solomon did not take pains to acquire knowledge; no doubt he did, but God was specially with him in his studies, leading him to grasp and retain that which he learned in an unusual manner.

The Queen of Sheba must have been a remarkable woman of her time, possessed of no small intelligence and force of character. Her responsibility as queen pressed upon her, and questions arose within her which no man she knew could answer. Hearing in her remote country of this king of Israel, of his wisdom and of his glory, every account accompanied with the name of his God, she naturally came to the conclusion that this man's God must be totally different from the gods she knew and worshipped. But she did not mean to be deceived, so she determined to come to Jerusalem and to prove the King with hard questions. If he could answer questions in her mind which no one else had been able to solve, then she would believe in him and in his God. She spared no trouble,

She Was in Earnest

about the matter; if Solomon's God were the true God, then it was for her to teach her people to worship Him. As a true mother of the people she came to put the report about Solomon to the test. She came to Jerusalem with a very great train. Probably she had foresight enough to perceive that if some of her chief courtiers heard with her the wisdom of Solomon concerning his God, they would more easily consent to a work of religious reform in the land. She brought also evidences of the wealth and industry of her country, "camels that bare spices, and very much gold, and precious stones."

When she arrived, this practical woman did not begin by sightseeing, but went straight to the point. The main business of her journey was the inquiries she had to make concerning the name of the Lord. "And when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart. And Solomon told her all her questions: there was not anything hid from the King that he told her not." Heaven is all around the earth, and so is God around us on every side; He can send light from any quarter.

We may be quite sure that this woman became truly converted to God, that her anxiety gave way to peace, and that she entered upon a life of faith in God, of obedience to and communion with Him. Oh what a new life for her! No more questions now, only worship; she could say, "Mine eyes have seen the King." The great source of Solomon's fame and wisdom, the God who made him what he was, was her God too, and would teach and strengthen her to govern as He had taught Solomon. All the expenditure of time and money and strength for the journey, all the risk of leaving her government in other hands during her absence, was worth the while because she had found God.

And we? Are we sometimes perplexed in the hard questions? Are these things so inexplicable in the course of events around us, and in God's dealings with ourselves and others, that we are in trouble about them? Well, "a greater than Solomon is here." But He would have us take the same trouble which the Queen of Sheba took to have a personal interview with Him about the matter, leaving prejudice aside, abstaining from reasonings, and all which keeps us on a human level: He wants us to commune of all that is in our heart. So many who have questions commune about Jesus to other Christians, but do not come direct to Him. It is alone with Him and with His Word that questions get answered, and the heart gets satisfied and stilled. Even when we get light through a brother or sister, we have to go over the matter alone with God in order to get confirmed in what we have apprehended of His truth. There are many who say, "I have prayed about such and such a thing, and have received no answer." They pray with the thought in their minds, "Now I have done my part; if God does not hear me, it is no fault of mine," and they have no definite expectation of being heard; the idea is rather to satisfy their own conscience than to listen to the Lord. The true spirit of an inquirer is to place his question before the Lord with a heart open to receive all He may have to say, avoiding all distraction possible, but maintaining no unnatural strain because the trusting heart is sure that God desires to communicate His thoughts to His attentive children. So many take for granted that God must answer them in a certain way, by the teaching of some Christian, by the reading of some book, etc., and they do not look for God to speak directly to them. Yet, as though He would invite our questions, Jesus says, "The Queen of the South came from the uttermost part of the earth to hear the wisdom of Solomon, and behold,

With Him

A Greater Than Solomon is Here."

"And when the Queen of Sheba had seen all Solomon's wisdom, and the house he had built, and the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel, and his cup-bearers, and his ascent by which he went up to the house of the Lord, there was no spirit in her. And she said to the King, 'It was a true report that I heard in mine own land of thy acts and of thy wisdom; howbeit I believed not the words until I came, and mine eyes had seen it, and behold, the half was not told me; thy wisdom and prospered the fame which I heard.' What our Solomon? Do we speak thus to Him? It is a fact that, as we read His precious Word, the wondrous wisdom of that Word dawn upon us, our hearts cry out, 'The half was not told me.' Are our hearts full of wonder at the spiritual house which Jesus is building of 'stones,' to be an habitation of God through the Spirit?" (1 Peter 2:5; Eph. 2:2.) Have we found our own place in the building? Are we fitted into Jesus, the one foundation, and into one another as parts of the whole? (1 Cor. 3:11; Rom. 12:4, 5.) And then, the measure of his table, the Bread of Life which came from heaven. (John 6:51.) Is He our 'meat indeed' to us, and is His blood 'indeed,' and are we 'made partakers of Christ'?

Then there is "the sitting of his servants," "made to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." (Eph. 2:6.) "The attestation of his ministers." In the household of the servants or slaves may sit down, but the ministers who serve from love and not from obligation, stand, because it is their privilege; service is perfect freedom," it knows no age. Yet the freewill servants, ministers make no bargains about wages, but leave to the Lord, like the later laborers in the field (Matt. 20:4-9), find theirs is the best portion of all. "And their apparel"—robe of righteousness, garments of salvation (Isa. 61:10) the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit (1 Peter 3:4)—such is the apparel of those who minister to Jesus. And then His "cup-bearers." It is not one of us who has not, by our sins, Jesus to drink of the cup of suffering, the His Father's wrath against sin. What now give Jesus to drink? Does He have through us? What is the portion which He receives at our hands? "And his ascent by which he went up unto the house of the Lord." He ascended into the highest heavens, but I ascend He took with Him our nature, so that our Brother-man, He sits at the right hand of God, God-man in heaven as He was God on earth. If we let all this goodness of Solomon sink into our hearts, we shall echo the words of the Queen of Sheba:

"The Half Was Not Told Me."

"Happy are thy men," continued the Queen of Sheba, "happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom. Oh, if this was so, how infinitely more happy are they who stand before Jesus, and hear His wisdom. Elijah was a man whose distinguishing characteristic was that he lived in the presence of God; 'The Lord God of Israel whom I stand'" (1 Kings 17:1), he could and no man disputed his word. A man of God would answer by bringing the dead again, by stopping the rainfall three and forty years, by turning King and people as one back to the fear of God, by sending rain upon earth, had a right to say, 'God I whom I stand.' But shall we leave such a privilege to Elijah alone when it is the privilege of the weakest Christian who will take it? Well, all, if we will, live continually in the presence of our God, and so be happy as His servants.

"Blessed be the Lord thy God, which doeth in thee, to set thee on His throne, king for the Lord thy God; because thy loved Israel to establish them forever, the made He thee king over them to do judgment and justice." (11 Chron. 9:8.) The Queen of Sheba had learned much during her visit, had learned the greatness of God, so that she saw Solomon as only His deputy, he was for the Lord his God. We may well inquire what an apostle of God this woman was, she returned to her own land. But have we learned, in all our several spheres, to be what we are and what we are for the Lord our God? Do we see that our true vocation in life is to be prepared for Jesus, masters, teachers, employers, servants, children, or workmen for Jesus; living, not to ourselves, but to Him?

The Queen had brought costly presents

King "an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices very great store, and precious stones; there came no more such abundance of spices as these which the Queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon." Royal gifts, but gladly given, not as necessary tribute, but as the ready acknowledgment of a grateful heart. These are the gifts which Jesus loves, especially when they come in thanksgiving for His grace, "Not grudgingly or of necessity; for God loveth the cheerful giver." (II Cor. 9: 7.) During the visit of the Queen of Sheba, Hiram, King of Tyre, brought a great quantity of almsg-trees, as well as gold and precious stones, so that, princely as were the gifts of the Queen of Sheba, she could see that others equalled or excelled her in the honor done to Solomon. "When ye have done all, say, We are unprofitable servants." (Luke 17: 10.)

"And King Solomon gave unto the Queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty: so she turned and went to her own country, she and her servants." And thus it is with Jesus; of His royal bounty He gives us life from the dead, a free, unmerited pardon for all our sins, purchased by the precious blood. But above all that, infinite as it is, He says, "whatsoever ye shall ask in My name that will I do, that the Father may be glorified in the Son. If ye shall ask anything in My name I will do it." (John 14: 13, 14.) "What things soever ye desire, when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." (Mark 11: 24.) God calls us to give ungrudgingly, because He gives in like manner, and would have His children resemble Him. "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."

If we could have followed the Queen of Sheba to her own country, we should have found a humbler and a wiser woman than the one who set out. She had found in Solomon not only an equal, but one who was vastly superior to her, and she saw him living in the presence of his God, whom he reckoned infinitely superior to him. The world was larger to the Queen than before, and heaven and eternity, and responsibilities beyond this life, were now a reality to her who was lately an inquirer. She came to see Solomon; she departed knowing God.

DR. TALMAGE AT SEA.

FROM a letter received from Mr. Louis Klopsch who has accompanied Dr. Talmage on his trip to the Holy Land, we extract the following remarks written on board the City of Paris:

Dr. Talmage is the lion of the trip. As such he attracts attention and excites comment whenever he appears. Fortunately he is in full command of his physical and mental energies. The Doctor evidently is as good a sailor as he is a preacher. He is down to meals just as regularly and as promptly as though he were engaged to lead off the company of hardy travellers who have the disposition and the ability to enjoy three square meals a day regardless of the ups and downs inevitable to life at sea. No more valiant trencherman ever handled knife and fork (I mean in crossing the deep), and 'tis prophetic of future displays of picturesque oratory that the ocean breezes give him capacity to eat things that never tempt him at home in Brooklyn. Everybody talks to the genial divine, and he talks to everybody. He is in great spirits, and active as a boy. "When I first talked of taking this trip," he said to me the other day, "lots of people told me that the sea would be rough, and I should have a hard time of it at this season of the year. Well, there always have been and always will be more Jeremiahs than Isaiahs in this world." Dr. Talmage has

A Smile Peculiarly His Own.

It has never been copyrighted, and I have never heard that any one has pirated it. Once started, it grows in breadth. A passenger noticing this peculiar smile in its early stage, congratulated the Brooklyn orator on his happy frame of mind and body. "Thank you," responded he, "my spirits are ninety-five on this trip. Generally they are about sixty on the sea." "Then you have known what it is to be seasick, Doctor," timidly chimed in a lady. "Yes, indeed; when I first crossed the sea, in 1870, I was under an engagement to write a series of magazine articles. The ocean was as gentle and quiet as a mill-pond all the way, and I felt that it had been wofully maligned and maltreated by all previous writers. My sense of justice compelled me to prophesy smooth things concerning it. So I penned an article which I called The Smile of the Sea. Since that time, with this exception I have never seen anything but its anger, petulance, cruelty, and fury; and although I have now crossed it eight times, I have never seen the sea smile again. I generally spend the time on shipboard seated at the foot of the smokestack, looking out upon an ocean of ipecac."

The "Church of Roses"

which was sent to Dr. Talmage by one of his Brooklyn admirers, is in an admirable state of preservation, notwithstanding the inability of the stewards to place it in the refrigerator because of its enormous size. It stands at the upper end of one of the centre dining-room tables, and its steeple is in close proximity to the organ, the sweet tones of which support the voices of worshippers during devotional exercises. Dr. Talmage's intention is to present this marvel of beauty and of floral wealth to some unsectarian charitable institution on our arrival at Liverpool. He was greatly touched by the gift of this magnificent tribute of gratitude from one whom he had helped to find spiritual peace.

Sunday on board the Paris had as its leading incident service according to the Church of England form. Captain Watkins officiated as reader with effective elocution. Dr. Talmage sat in the place he usually occupies when at meals, I noticed that he joined in the responses and in the singing of the hymns, which were very appropriate to the occasion.

THE INDICATIONS OF THE LAST DAYS.

By Rev. Geo. H. Pember.*

1 WHEN the blue gray-clouds begin to gather in the sky and move toward each other, though we may as yet have perceived neither flash nor sound, we know that a storm is impending.

"Ye hypocrites," said our Lord to the Pharisees, "ye can discern the face of the sky, and of the earth; but how is it that ye do not discern this time?"

He spoke thus of His first coming, the signs of which are not nearly so fully depicted in Scripture as those of His second.

What, then, will He say to us if we fail to discover the secret of God in the things which are taking place around us, when we have so wonderful a commentary whereby to explain them? Even the statesmen, philosophers, and thinkers of this world are in its social and political condition. Surely, then, it becomes us to search and see whether the ceaseless preparations which are everywhere apparent, the tendency of opinions in matters civil and religious, and the generally unsettled and frequently lawless state of Christendom, do not show that the last times of our age have come; that the world will shortly be confronted by her despised but rightful and all-powerful King; and, therefore, that His Church—the living and the dead alike—no longer may, but must, speedily be summoned to meet Him in the air.

Expecting Great Changes

Were we floating on a broad river which, at no great distance, was hurling itself in mighty cataract to a lower level, what should we infer when we found that we were being borne along more swiftly by the quickening stream, when we perceived an ever-increasing agitation in the waters around us, and began to hear, mingling with their tumult, the sound of a deeper roaring? Should we not at once understand that we were already within the rapids caused by the terrific fall?

And have we not exactly described the present condition of the stream of time? For both the prophets and the Lord Himself foretold a mighty catastrophe which will usher in a new age;

A Season of Perplexity

and trouble immediately preceding the times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord; a general disruption and disintegration of society, amid wars, tumults, and the most appalling calamities, to be followed by the glorious reign of the Prince of Peace. And are not signs of our approach to these predicted days of terror continually multiplying around us? Do not events, which were wont to float by in slow procession, now chase each other before our bewildered eyes with such rapidity that they pass away in months or weeks, instead of years?

Doubtless one chief cause of all this confusion has been that very thing which the world regards as a cure for every evil—

The Spread of Knowledge.

For many of those who acquire a little learning—and the majority of mankind can do no more—are not slow to give proof that in very deed "shallow draughts intoxicate the brain," and are wont, by a confident and persistent setting forth of their opinions, to lead astray those whose ignorance exceeds their own, and in this manner to confound the counsels of wiser and more experienced guides.

Meanwhile, the growing impatience and irritability of men, arising from stimulants and narcotics, and the painful pressure and excitement of modern life, are beginning to manifest themselves in deeds of recklessness and violence, such as may be found in the records of any newspaper; while lawlessness and crime of every description are increasing, and—which is still worse—often assume shapes difficult to detect or punish.

And over all this sin and misery the giant forms of more terrible woes are projecting their Advancing Shadows.

Europe is armed to an extent hitherto unknown, and has been converted into a vast camp through the jealousy of the great Powers, which are simply waiting for an opportunity of carrying out their aggressive schemes. Few are those who expect more than a brief respite before the air is again tormented with the rush of shot and shell, and polluted with the smoke of burning villages and homesteads.

Nor are physical commotions wanting to heighten the excitement. The last few years have been unusually prolific in violent destructive to life and property. Earthquakes have become alarmingly frequent, and seem by their ubiquity to betoken a widespread disturbance in the bowels of the earth which may culminate in some appalling catastrophe. And although the greater number of shocks are at present comparatively slight, yet there have been not a few grave disasters—such as those at Casamicciola, Chio, Ischia, and Java, the last of which has been characterized by competent authorities as the most stupendous convulsion on record. Famines, too, have occurred in divers places—in different parts of India, in Persia, in China, in Morocco, and in several other countries; while various kinds of sickness and disease seem to be more than usually prevalent.

Storms and Inundations.

The inhabitants of earth must awake some morning to find that the Day of the Lord is present; and as a snare will it come upon all those who have not understood the warnings of revelation. We should, therefore, pray for wisdom that we may understand, and for the power of the Spirit that we may watch. Nor could words be stronger than our Lord's injunction upon this point: "Take ye heed," He said, "watch and pray: . . . For the Son of man is as a man taking a far journey, who left his house and gave authority to his servants, and to every man his work, and commanded the porter to watch. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch!"

*From his invaluable work on prophecy, entitled The Great Prophecies Concerning the Jews, the Gentiles, and the Church of God; for sale at this office, 71 Bible House, New York. It is written in a most popular and eloquent style, and describes the impending fulfilment of Revelation and Daniel, and is illustrated by a colored chart. 458 pages. Price, including postage, $1.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FOR 1890.

THE announcement that the publishers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD intended to enlarge it for the coming year, has called forth a large number of letters from the subscribers. Among them are a few expressing regret that there should be any change. It is gratifying to learn that the journal, in its present form, is so highly appreciated, and it is pleasant to be able to inform its friends that the change contemplated will not materially alter its form, although by the intended slight alteration its appearance will be much improved. It is proposed to make the page an inch and a quarter longer and half an inch wider. Thus the paper will retain the shape which has been found convenient for reading, and will nevertheless contain, in the aggregate, considerably

MORE READING-MATTER.

Each column will have twelve more lines than now, and the lines will be a little longer. The result will be that the reading-matter on each page will be more than now goes on a page by about seventy lines of the present length, and the thirteen pages will contain as much as would fill sixteen of the pages of this size.

As readers will perceive, this change will entail increased expense for paper, composition, and electrotyping, and if the primary object of the publishers had been to make money by the publication, the change would not be made. Their endeavor has been to supply their subscribers, at a low price, with a good, bright, elevating journal, which should be pure without being inane, instructive without being dull—a paper which should be a practical proof, to young and old, that the printed page can be made interesting without records of crime, and illustrations attractive without pandering to prurient tastes. The publishers believe they have achieved their object, and now that the support the Christian public has given them leaves a margin of profit over expenditure, they propose to use that profit in making THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a still more valuable journal by supplying more reading-matter,

NEW TYPE,

and better illustrations without raising the price. In taking this new departure, the publishers cherish the hope that a still more extended field of usefulness will be opened to them. They are anxious that the gospel truth contained in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD might reach a still greater number of homes than it has ever done. There are thousands of Christian families in our broad land who do not know of the existence of such a paper—thousands who have children growing up with a desire for entertaining literature, which they will have, but which the godly parents do not know how to give them without deleterious elements. Such a paper as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is precisely what they are looking for. Canvassers might reach such families, conspicuous advertisements in local journals might inform them, but the cost of either method would be enormous, and would curtail the means the publishers would prefer using in improving the paper itself. Beside this, the present large circulation has been mainly built up by the labor of the subscribers themselves, and the publishers believe they can do no better than rely on the same method. They, therefore, being anxious that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in its improved form should be still more extensively circulated, offer additional facilities to subscribers in making it known. They will send, free of charge, all the numbers from this date to the end of this year to any address in the United States or Canada. This offer is chiefly made to enable subscribers

TO INTRODUCE THIS PAPER.

to as many of their friends and acquaintances as they think may be interested in it, of which opportunity it is hoped all will take advantage. Simply send postal-card or letter, with their names and addresses, and the paper will be mailed as published. We are sending this issue to a number of persons who have not previously seen the paper, who, by writing us, expressing their desire, may have the paper free from now to the end of the year. It is also being sent to many whose names have dropped from our lists, in the hope that this reminder may lead them to renew the acquaintance of an old friend. Those wishing to do so, by subscribing now for 1890 will receive the remainder of this year's issues free, as will all new subscribers.

Those of our subscribers intending to canvass and to make up clubs, are asked to send stamp for terms, which have been slightly altered in their favor, and so prevent mistakes in remitting during the rush of our busy season.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Significant Figures Appear in the Annual report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. They are more gratifying to him in his official capacity than to social reformers. It appears that the revenue has increased 5 per cent. over the previous year, and was, in all, $130,894,434. It is estimated that the receipts for the current fiscal year will reach about $135,000,000. The additional receipts were chiefly due to the taxes on distilled spirits. There was a very decided increase in the amount of tobacco and snuff and the number of cigars and cigarettes taxed, and a considerable increase in the quantities exported; but that in distilled spirits was the most remarkable; in 1888 the taxed production was over 70,000,000 gallons, but in 1889 it was over 89,000,000 gallons, an increase of 19,000,000 gallons. Of this about 75 per cent. was in what is known to the trade as Bourbon whisky.

Numerous Dismissals in the Pension Office are said to be impending. Secretary Noble's disapproval of Commissioner Tanner's proceedings was clearly emphasized when Tanner resigned, and the report is now circulated that such of the employees as were instrumental in having their cases rerated and increased, in violation of the law, as interpreted by the Interior Department officials, will be dismissed from the service, and the money so obtained will be recovered, if necessary, by legal process. What action the Secretary may take in the case of such employees as were not instrumental in procuring an increase for themselves, and who refund the amounts received, has not, it is understood, been definitely determined upon.

The Pan-American Congress Returned to Washington, after its trip through the States, on November 20, and resumed its sessions. Our visitors, however, think that the travelling experience might be advantageously extended by a reciprocal tour. In an interview with a correspondent of the New York Herald, one of the delegates said that the Central and South American members were anxious to have representatives of the United States travel through the countries represented in the Congress, and had drawn up the plans of such a journey. "The advantages," said the gentleman, "to be derived from such a trip are manifold, but the most prominent is that your manufacturers will have a chance to study the requirements of the markets; they will see the goods now shipped to Mexico, Central and South America, from England, Germany, France, and other countries. They will thus know what goods of their own manufacture will meet ready sale, and what modifications are necessary to suit the consumers in the countries south of us." Each nation would gladly bear the travelling expenses of the Congress within its own borders.

Startling Evidence was Given by Mormons and apostate Mormons last week in the Salt Lake court, which was investigating the fitness of applicants for naturalization. Dr. Richards, who belongs to the Melchisedec order of priesthood in the Mormon Church, admitted in cross-examination that he understood it to be a doctrine of the Church that if a man apostatized he should yield himself up voluntarily to be killed for the atonement of that sin. It was thought such a killing would be perfectly lawful, and that it would not be looked upon as murder. John Bond confessed that when he went through the Endowment House he took an oath to obey every obligation of the Church, especially in opposition to the United States, under penalty of his life. He was also required to take an oath to avenge the blood of Joseph Smith on this nation, and to teach this to his children and children's children to the latest generation. Charles W. Penrose, editor of the Deseret Evening News, and one of the leaders of Mormonism, was sent to prison for contempt of court, because he refused to answer the question, how many wives he had, though he admitted that he was protected by President Cleveland's amnesty from any criminal proceedings in which a confession of polygamy might otherwise have involved him. It is supposed that he has married another wife since the amnesty was granted, or else he preferred imprisonment to standing the test of further cross-examination.

The Reports from Brazil Continue to Be vague, and in some respects contradictory. It is known, however, that the Emperor has quitted the country, after writing a dignified letter to the Provisional Government, expressing an earnest desire for the national welfare under the new form of government. The Senate and State Council have been abolished and the Chamber of Deputies dissolved. A proclamation by Deodora Fonseca, the chief of the Provisional Government, has been issued, in which he promises that the army and navy, the ordinary functions of the Department of Justice, and the civil and military administrations, will continue under their existing organizations, and respect for those holding position will be maintained. The Provisional Government has promised to respect the Princess's matrimonial contract, and also the pensions conceded the poor by Emperor Dom Pedro. All Brazilians able to read and write are entitled to vote at elections for Government officers. The Republican flag is the old national colors, with the addition of twenty-one stars, representing the different States of the new United States of Brazil.

A Gift of a Million and a Quarter Dollars has been made by Sir Edward Guinness, the noted Dublin brewer, for philanthropic purposes. He has placed the sum in the hands of trustees, to be applied to the erection of dwellings for laborers. One million is to be spent in London, and $250,000 in Dublin. The income derived from the rents of the dwellings is to be invested until the principal sum is exhausted, when the invested income is to be used for the erection of more dwellings. It will thus form a perpetual fund for the benefit of the poor. It is carefully stipulated that the houses shall be designed for the rank below that of artisans. The gift is a magnificent one, but as Sir Edward derives his wealth from the brewing trade, which is largely responsible for the extent of pauperism, he probably felt that he ought to be liberal if he moved in the matter at all.

A Letter from Mr. H. M. Stanley, Written so lately as November 11, is published by the New York Herald. It reports the explorer's arrival at Mpwapwa with Emin Pasha and his party. Altogether the company numbers 750 souls. Emin's people are 294, of whom 59 are children. The majority of his men refused to follow him in his southerly course, as every step took them farther from their homes. They were unable to perceive that if they reached Zanzibar they could reach Egypt by sea more quickly and more easily than by land. Mr. Stanley says: "We had as stirring a time for four days as we had anywhere. For those four days we had continuous fighting during the greater part of daylight hours. The foolish natives took an unaccountable prejudice to the Pasha's people. They insisted that they were cannibals and had come to their country for no good. Talking to them was of no use. Any attempt at disproof drove them into white-hot rage." Mr. Stanley reports the important geographical discovery of a southwest extension of the Victoria Nyanza, which brings its waters within 155 miles of Lake Tanganyika.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying Colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $20.50. They are from Woodhaven, N. Y., $5; Marple, Pa., $1; Lancaster, Pa., $3; Minneapolis, Kans., $6; Horn Brook, Pa., $5.50. A Canadian subscriber who has contributed to this fund sends us an interesting letter from a colored minister who has been receiving THE CHRISTIAN HERALD through her kindness. His sincere and warm thanks are mingled with testimony to the help which, by God's blessing, the paper has rendered to him, his family, and his church. Our correspondent says that she is a Sunday-school teacher, that it is the children in her class who gave a few cents each to send the paper to the colored minister, and that they are so delighted with the result of their gifts that they are making another collection among themselves to send a second copy to some other minister. She thinks other Sunday-school teachers may be glad of the suggestion.

The Rev. W. F. ReQua's Mission at Lone Wolf's camp has already been blessed with fruit. It was opened avowedly as a Christian school for the Indian children, especially for orphans, but of course Mr. ReQua availed himself of the opportunity of preaching to the adults. The next morning an Indian came to him and humbly but earnestly avowed his desire to give himself to Christ, and asked for public baptism as a testimony of his faith. This early conversion which Mr. ReQua believes is genuine, greatly encourages him in this arduous undertaking. He has now returned to McAlester, Ind. Ter., for a time, leaving his assistant in charge of the work at Lone Wolf's camp. Contributions for the general work among the Indians should be sent to him at McAlester. Gifts of clothing, which are very badly needed for the children at Lone Wolf's camp, should be sent to Vernon, Tex., and a letter at the same time notifying the missionary of their being sent, should be addressed to him at Quartz City, Ind. Ter., so that he may send to Vernon for them.

How a Chalk-Marked Coat Secured Privileges to the wearer is told by the Journal, of Lewiston, Me. It says: "John Goddard, who died last week, was a king among Penobscot lumbermen in his day. Goddard sent large crews into the woods every year. As soon as he had hired his man he started him off for the scene of operations. He always furnished transportation, together with food and lodging, while on the way. He franked the men through, as it were. Upon the back of each he scrawled a few chalk-marks, and a man bearing that superscription was entitled to all the privileges that stage-line or hotel could furnish. John Goddard settled the tariff and paid the score. Furthermore, no man was received by the woods boss unless he could whirl about and show Goddard's bold chirography in the vicinity of his spinal column." Every stage-driver and hotel-keeper knew that Goddard would pay for the accommodation furnished to his employee. Christians should have the same confidence as to gifts to Christ's servants. The promise is sure and the Promiser faithful. (Mark 9:41.)

The Extraordinary Recklessness of a Ship's captain caused a wreck on the shores of Long Island, N. Y., on November 19. Just as the sun was setting, the guard at the Life Saving Station at Point Lookout saw a vessel, with all sails set, heading direct for the shore. It began raining heavily and soon darkness settled, hiding the warning signals which were made at the station. Then the night danger signals were sent up and red lights burned, but to the astonishment of the guard no notice was taken by the ship, which did not alter her course a single point. A bad wreck was clearly inevitable, so the surf boats and rocket lines were brought out in readiness for use. Fifteen minutes later the ship struck the shore with such force that her masts were broken by the shock. The life-saving crews launched their boats, and after a hard struggle reached the vessel and took off sixteen men from the wreck. The captain refused to leave, so he was left on board. The men who were saved said that the danger signals had been seen on the ship, but in spite of their protests the captain refused to take in sail or change the course. Even when their proximity to the shore was pointed out to him, he was obstinate. The men said the captain had been drinking, which explained his foolhardiness. But the same excuse cannot be offered for thousands who, in their sober senses, disregard the warnings given by clergymen and Christian workers and keep on their wicked course until they are wrecked for time and eternity. (Ezek. 33:9.)

The Story of a Horse's Broken Heart was told recently by an army officer. He said: "When it comes to battle a horse seems to know everything that is going on; but he does his duty nobly. He enters into the spirit of the battle like a human being. He shows no fear of death. A horse in my battery was once struck by a piece of a shell on the head and badly wounded. The driver turned him loose, but he walked up by the side of the gun. When a shell would burst near by he would calmly turn and look at it. When he saw his own team going back for ammunition, he ran back to his own place and galloped back to the caisson with the rest. When the lieutenant pushed him aside to put in another horse, he looked at the other one sorrowfully while he was being harnessed up, and when he seemed to realize that there was no further use for him he lay down and died. The lieutenant strongly asserted that he died of a broken heart." Such fidelity to duty until death is truly wonderful. In a horse we cannot understand the basis of it; in a soldier it might be based on patriotism; and in the soldier of the Cross on devotion to his Lord, who has promised a crown of life to them who are faithful until death. (Rev. 2:10.)

The Lost Cabin Gold Mine has had Three more victims. More than forty years ago this mine was found among the Wolf Mountains. The finders were driven away by Indians, but they reported the mine to be immensely rich, and they returned with sufficient force to hold it. But they could not relocate the claim. The Indians had skillfully obliterated every trace of the white men's visit. That the Indians hold the clue to the mine is proved by their selling at periodical intervals small quantities of virgin gold. Many parties have been organized in Wyoming to search for the mine; but all have failed. Three years ago, three men set out from Linkville, Ore., on the same errand. Last week the authorities of Carbon County were notified that their dead bodies had been found on the mountain. There was no evidence to show the cause of their death, but as their watches and money were still in their pockets it seems improbable that they were murdered. One of them had kept a diary for several months, and it was found on his body. It recorded the story of their daily search. On some days the entries are in a hopeful strain; on others they are despairing, but one of the last of them records their united resolve to dig over every inch of the wilderness of several hundred thousand acres before abandoning their search. This is only one of many parties who have lost their lives in the futile attempt to find the mine. It is a fatal quest, but even its melancholy record is not so appalling as is the record of those pursuits which also have riches as their object, and in which men lose their souls. (1 Tim. 6:9.)

A Man who Married a Very Ugly Woman Explained his reasons for doing so to a party of drummers recently. The husband and wife entered a railroad car at a country station, and as the wife had on bridal attire the couple at once attracted notice. It was observed that the woman's face was seamed and distorted to a state of extreme ugliness, and the drummers in the car whispered some rude remarks about it to each other which produced laughter. When shortly afterward they went to the smoking-car the bridegroom followed them. He said he would like to tell them the story of the marriage, because there was a moral lesson in it. A few months before, the bride was a beautiful woman. Several young men were suitors for her hand. The narrator was one, and he was in terrible earnest. He became so jealous that one day when she was going for a drive with his chief rival, he went to the stable and drove a few tacks into the harness. When they came to start, the horse ran away. The man jumped and escaped injury, but the woman was dragged along the road, and her face almost smashed. When she recovered, she was so ugly that there was no rivalry, but the man through whom she had suffered felt that she had then a double claim upon him, and he married her. After telling the story he left the drummers to point the lesson for themselves, and returned to his wife. They might have learned from it a lesson of Christian obligation. He who bore humiliation, cruel scourging, and death on the cross to atone for their sins, has claims on their devotion which it is wicked to ignore. (1 Peter 2:24.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Rev. M. Baxter gave prophetic discourses on Sunday, November 13, in the Lyric Hall, West London, to large audiences.

The Rev. J. L. Countermine has resigned his charge at Waterloo, Douglas County, Neb., and accepted a call to the pastorate of the First Presbyterian Church, Fort Howard, Brown County, Wis.

Evangelist John Puttenham, who has labored zealously and successfully in Port Hope, Ont., for upward of two years, was presented recently with an address and a purse at a large meeting of friends in Baxter Hall.

A German journal states that "at Vienna, last year, 363 Jews became Christians;" and another tells us that "at no period since the first century have conversions from Judaism to Christianity been so frequent."

Dr. Talmage's arrival in Athens, Greece, is announced by cable. On Friday he preached to a large congregation of English-speaking visitors, and attended the reception of the ex-Empress Frederick, of Germany, who was visiting the city.

Rev. B. Fay Mills commenced services in New York on Sunday last at the Fourteenth Street Presbyterian Church, just east of Sixth Avenue. Thence he goes to the Seventh Avenue Church, near Fifteenth Street. Prayers are asked for a blessing on these services.

Dr. A. T. Pierson, late of Bethany Church, Philadelphia, has promised to preach for Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, London, on December 1. Mr. Spurgeon has gone to Mentone to escape the suffering which the English fogs of the early winter always entail.

Mr. Philip Phillips is holding meetings every evening this week in Seventeenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church, between Second and Third Avenues, New York. His stereopticon views of scenes in the Yosemite Valley and the Yellowstone Park delight large audiences, while his singing has all its old-time power and sweetness.

Miss Emma C. Nason, President of a Committee of King's Daughters at Blodgett Mills, N. Y., sends an earnest appeal for help in their endeavor to support an evangelist in the lumber regions of northern Michigan, to which men go in the winter months. Churches are far away, and dens of vice, saloons, and temptations abound.

The name of "The Gospel Train" has been given by the railroad men to a train running between Norristown, Pa., and Philadelphia. The name originated in the fact that during Dr. Munhall's services in the former city the conductor of the train was successful in leading to Christ the engineer, fireman, baggage-man and two brakemen.

The Rev. J. C. Quinn, Ph. D., pastor of the Second Presbyterian Church, Helena, Mont., has been doing a valuable and very successful work among the workmen of the city. An earnest congregation has been gathered. Though mainly poor men, they have subscribed $1,500 to build a church. They need a little outside help, which if sent to Dr. Quinn he will gratefully receive and acknowledge.

Dr. Justin D. Fulton's campaign in Canada is arousing public attention to a remarkable degree. Last week he was at London, Ont. He preached and lectured in the Falbot Street Baptist Church and in the Adelaide Street Church to crowded audiences. The local papers report him fully, and reach still wider circles. The Doctor's exposure of Romish iniquities has enlightened many minds, and is doing great good.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's services at York, Pa., continue to enjoy a large outpouring of the Spirit. On Sunday November 17, three thousand were present at the women's meeting in the Central Market House. Such a meeting in York was never seen before Dr. Munhall's coming. At the evening meetings the Hall is thronged as soon as the doors are opened, and crowds stand around the doors unable to obtain admission.

A PARALLEL AND A CONTRAST.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit," Eph. 5:18.

The Moloch of the Nineteenth Century—Drunkenness the Mother of Vices—The Prohibition and the Command—I. A Parallel—Motives for Drinking—To Find Exhilaration—To Gain Strength—To Brace the Courage—To Assuage Pain or Sorrow—To Promote Good-Fellowship—II. A Contrast—Drunkenness Leads to Riot—Contention—Folly—Unnatural Behavior—Weakness—III. The Lessons of the Comparison—Reverence the Spirit—Do not Grieve Him—Be Fit for His Presence—Obey Him.

WHILE I was reading to you just now, in the fourth and fifth chapters of Paul's letter to the Ephesian believers, I could not help feeling that you could little understand the elevation and the purity of the precepts of the apostle, as they must have appeared to the inhabitants of such a wicked city as Ephesus. When first read, these precepts must have seemed like an unearthly light. We have now a public sentiment which condemns drunkenness, lying, and many other vices, which were scarcely considered worthy of censure by that degraded people. Christianity had not affected public sentiment at the time; that sentiment was distinctly immoral. The sin of fornication was scarcely judged to be sinful; theft was most common, as, indeed, it is in the East to this day; lying was universal, and only blamed if committed so clumsily as to be found out. I may say of drunkenness, that, although it was not regarded as a commendable thing, yet it was looked upon as not to be too much condemned. The apostle sets before his new converts, not a modified system of right and wrong, but the purest virtues and the most heavenly graces. As the ages have rolled on, we have seen the wisdom of holding up from the first an elevated standard, both of doctrine and practice. We must not bring the standard down to the men, but the men up to the standard. We may not, with the design of making converts more rapidly, alter the pure Word with which our Lord has entrusted us.

A Failing of Great Minds,

Brethren, I am not going to speak to you at this time about the sin of drunkenness. Many of you feel an intense aversion to that degrading vice. If there are any here who require a homily upon drunkenness, they have only to let conscience speak, and it will tell them how base a sin it is. Perhaps of all the sins that are rife in our country to-day, drunkenness brings the most present misery upon mankind. A very large proportion of the want from which people suffer is due to wasteful excess in drink. You know it is so, if you are intelligent observers. Other sins may seem to go deeper into the soul, and are more subject to punishment by law; but for creating widespread suffering, suffering brought upon the innocent, upon the wife, and upon the child, this vice raises its head above all others. This throngs our workhouses, fills our jails, and crowds our lunatic asylums; ay, and fairs our cemeteries with carcasses of men and women who die before their time. This is

The Moloch of the Century.

I am not going to preach about that one particular vice now, as though I would saw off a big limb from the tree of evil. It is my custom to lay the axe at the root of the tree, aiming my blows at the very nature which bears this evil branch. Still, this is a very far-spreading bough; and, as I have seen the woodmen lopping the tree before they cut it down, there will be no waste of time if I aim a blow or two at this huge branch of the tree of evil, this bough of drunkenness. It is far too common to this day; but, thank God, through the efforts of temperance friends, and, I hope, through the power of the Spirit of God upon many, it is not as it used to be; and it is regarded now in a very different light from that in which it was viewed even by Christian people years ago.

The apostle has been pleased, in this passage, guided by the Holy Spirit, to put in apposition, and, in some respects, in opposition, a prohibition and a command: "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit." There was a reason, and a very good reason, for this conjunction of things so far apart in character. I think that I see two reasons. The first is because there is a parallel between them—a degree of similarity amid their infinite difference. Secondly, he so placed them because there is a contrast between them of a very striking kind. The contrast is as instructive as the parallel. "Be not drunk with wine"; but hasten to the opposite extreme, and "Be filled with the Spirit."

I. First, let me draw

The Parallel.

Why do men become drunk with wine or other alcoholic liquors? There are several reasons. I shall not mention them all, for they are innumerable, and many of them too ridiculous to be mentioned in a sermon. One motive is to find in wine an exhilaration. It is a feast-day; let us have wine, that we may warm our hearts, and laugh and sing, and make merry. It is a marriage-day; it is a birthday; it is a royal holiday; it is something out of the common; bring forth the wine-cup! So say the sons of men. Strong drink is taken to exhilarate; and for a while it has that effect. How some men are carried away when intoxicated! How lifted up they are! What a great man the least becomes! What a divine the man who never looked into his Bible! What a philosopher the boor that does not know his letters! What a lord of creation the loon who has not two shirts! What a hero, every way, the coward who is afraid of his shadow! He is exhilarated when he has taken wine.

I grant you, that it is natural that we should all wish to be somewhat exhilarated. We like to have stirring times, in which we do not lie still and stagnant; we would have our whole nature stirred with pleasure. We like to have our high-days and holidays, even as others. "Now," says the apostle, "that you may enjoy be filled with the Spirit." When He comes into a man with extraordinary power, so as to fill his soul, He brings to his soul a joy, a delight, an elevation of mind, a delightful and healthful excitement, which lifts him up above the dull dead level of ordinary life, and causes him to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory.

Exquisite Exhilaration,

Furthermore, I have known people to take wine with the idea of being strengthened thereby. There are such individuals still alive in the light of this advanced century. Many of the best physicians tell us that there is no strength whatever in strong drink. At any rate, whatever strength there is in the drink, it does not give any strength to the man. There is no doubt that many indulge in wine with the object of getting strength thereby. I believe their action to be founded on a very grave mistake. But to you Christian people instruction comes in here. "Be not drunk with wine," with the view of gaining strength thereby; "but be filled with the Spirit," for the Spirit of God can give you strength to the highest degree. He can gird you with spiritual strength—the strength of faith; and there is for all things are possible to him that believeth. He can give you the strength that wrestles in prayer, that lays hold upon the angel of the covenant, and will not let him go, except he grant a blessing. The Spirit of God gives the strength to suffer and the strength to labor; the strength to receive and the strength to give out again; the strength to hope, the strength to love, the strength to conquer temptation, the strength to perform holy action. When you are filled with the Spirit, how strong you are!

No Strength Like it;

In the next place, wine has been taken by a great many, and taken to excess, to embolden them; and it does embolden them to a very high degree. A man under the influence of liquor will do what he would never think of doing at any other time: he will be rash, foolhardy, and daring to the last degree. We have heard of foreign nations whose troops have been so afraid of the fight that they have dosed them with strong drink to induce them to march into the battle. We used to hear the expression, "Dutch courage," which meant the boldness which came of ardent spirits; though I do not suppose the Dutch had more of it than the English. No doubt many a man under the influence of drink has risked his life, and performed what looked like feats of valor, when indeed, he was simply beyond himself, and out of his right mind, or he would not have been so foolhardy. Wine does embolden many men in a wrong way. Beloved friends, we are not to make ourselves but bold with the spirit of truth. "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is riot," in order, to be emboldened to do anything; but be ye filled with the Spirit of the living God, wherein is quietness, and whereof cometh a courage which is to be admired, and not derided. A man in whom the Spirit of God dwells abundantly says: "I shall never think, from this day forth, what may be to me the consequences of any course of action which the Lord my God commands me to follow. If it is right in the sight of God, I will do it. If God approves it, so shall it be; but if it be wrong, not a world made of gold, if it could all be mine, should tempt me to parley for a moment." Be ye filled with the Spirit. It will make you bold in the cause of the Lord Jesus.

Ridiculous With Fanaticism;

Wine has been also taken in large quantities, for the destruction of pain, for the drowning of misery, for support in the agony of a cruel death. Solomon says: "Give strong drink unto him that is ready to perish, and wine unto those that be of heavy hearts. Let him drink, and forget his poverty, and remember his misery no more." No doubt many persons have most foolishly taken to drink in order to forget their grief and assuage their sorrow. We must earnestly condemn such wicked conduct; but still, so it is; and the apostle puts it, "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit;" for that will remove depression and sustain under anguish in a most wonderful way; indeed, in a holy and perfect way. If you want to forget your misery, remember to apply for a sweet visitation of the Comforter.

Again, I think a fifth reason why some have been drinking is to arouse themselves. They feel flat, they say. "I want a pick-me-up. I am rather down, seedy, dull. I want

Something That Will Brace Me,

so that I may be up to the mark." By the time the man has had enough of his stimulant he is worse than before. Many have most effectually knocked themselves down in their desire to set themselves up. But, Christian man, if ever you feel dull, "be filled with the Spirit." There is not a more dull or stupid head than mine in this place. But I have a remedy, and I fly to it. I wish you would all do so. I go to Him—you know His glorious name: He is the Resurrection and the life. I look to Him for quickening, and it comes. May that be an example to some of you whenever you feel dull! We have found the true arousing; and there will be no reaction after it, no falling back into a deeper depression.

Once more, many men, no doubt, become drunkards from love of what is called good-fellowship. "Look," said a wife to her husband, "how can you drink at the rate you do? Why, a hog would not do so." The wretched man replied, "No, I do not suppose that it would. It would be more sensible than I am, no doubt, but," he said, "if there was another hog at the other side of the trough that said, 'I drink your health,' this hog would be obliged to do the same; and if there were half a dozen of them together, and they kept on toasting one another, I expect the hog would get as drunk as I am." Sad are the effects of evil fellowship. The fellowship in which people indulge, and which they think it necessary to stimulate by drink, has led many into drunkenness. Now see the beauty of this expression, "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be filled with the Spirit." When the Spirit of God comes upon Christian men, what fellowship they have with one another, what delight they take in holy conversation, what joy there is in meeting together for solemn worship! I do not wonder that it is added immediately after, "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord."

II. I cannot stay longer on this parallel, I have already been too long: now let me point out

The Contrast.

I do not think that Paul was running the parallel only, for it would dishonor the work of the Holy Spirit to think that his operations could be in all things likened to the influence of alcohol. No, the divine afflatus far excels anything that earthly excitements can produce. "Wine creates riot," says the apostle; and that is a point of contrast. When men are drunken what a noise they will make! They are ready for any disturbance; but the Holy Spirit, when you are full of Him, makes you quiet with a deep, unutterable peace. I do not say that you will not sing and rejoice, but there will be a deep calm within your spirit. I wish that some Christian people were filled with the Spirit, if there were no other effect produced upon them but that of peace, self-possession, restfulness, and freedom from passion. Our friends, the members of the Society of Friends, who speak much of the Spirit of God, whatever virtues they may not have, certainly have this one—that they are, usually, a very quiet, unexcitable, peaceable people. We want more Christians of this sort.

The next point of contrast is, that wine causes contention. When men are drunken with it, how ready they are to quarrel! They make a harmless word to be an insult. Many a man, when full of wine, will bear nothing at all: he is ready to fight anybody and everybody: he cannot have his fill of fighting. But when you are filled with the Spirit, what is the result? Why, peaceful submission. Listen to this: "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God." Be filled with the Spirit, and you will soon submit to inconvenience, misapprehension, and even exaction, for the sake of doing good to those who are out of the way, and in the hope of edifying the people of God. Wine causes riot; the Spirit causes peace. Drunkenness causes contention; the Spirit causes submission.

Furthermore, drunkenness

Makes Men Foolish;

but the Spirit of God makes them wise. I am keeping to the connection of my text. Read the fifteenth verse, "See, then, that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise." The drunken man cannot walk at all, because he has not made up his mind as to which way he will go. He attempts to go two ways, and ends in staggering till he falls. The man filled with the Spirit has a very definite idea of which way he is going. He knows the right, and he deliberately chooses it; he perceives the strait and narrow way, and he steadfastly follows it; for God has made him wise. Folly clings to the wine-cup; but wisdom comes with the Holy Spirit.

In the next place, drunkenness makes men forget their relationships, but the Holy Spirit makes us remember them. The rest of the chapter goes on to mention our domestic conditions as wives, husbands, children, fathers, servants, masters. The drunken man is bad in every relation, and the drunken woman is, if possible, worse. A special infamy hovers around womanhood soaked in liquor: relationships, in such instances, are quite forgotten under the influence of the accursed drink. Selfishness eats up the very heart of those who else might have been the objects of reverence and love. The contrast to this is the fact that when filled with the Spirit the husband is the tenderest of husbands, the wife the best of wives. No master is so just as the man that is mastered by the Spirit of God; no servant so diligent as he that serves the Lord. By the Holy Spirit our relationships become ennobled.

Lastly, excess of drink leaves a man weak and exposed to peril. But to be filled with the Spirit!

When filled with the Spirit the man is no longer naked, like the drunkard. He no longer lies upon the ground in danger, as one overcome with wine. He is no longer open to the attack of adversaries, as one who sleeps through strong drink. God hath made him strong, and armed him, and now he goes forth to fight in the service of his Master. I think that you will see the contrast. It is as evident as the parallel.

I shall keep you no longer, except to say this: My beloved Christian friends, our heart's desire is, that the members of this Church, and, indeed, all the members of Christ's mystical body, should be filled with the Spirit. Oh, that you may come absolutely under the sway of the Holy Ghost, and may abide under His most powerful inspirations! Do you ask how this is to be? First, reverently regard Him.

Reverently Regard Him.

Never speak of the Holy Ghost as it. Talk not of the Third Person of the adorable Trinity as an influence. He is very God of very God. God has guarded the sanctity of the Holy Spirit by causing a certain sin to be specially condemned, and excepted from pardon—the sin against the Holy Ghost. Honor Him much, then: worship Him, and adore Him, and look to Him for help.

Next, do not grieve him. If there be anything that would grieve the Holy Spirit, let it grieve you, so that you may keep clear of it. Put away every thought, idea, principle, and act that is not agreeable to His mind. Neither live in sin, nor trifle with evil, nor fall into error, nor neglect the reading of the Word of God, nor fail to obey the commands of the Lord. Do not grieve the Comforter, but welcome Him as your best friend. Open your heart to His influences. Watch each day to hear His monitions. Pray every morning, "Holy Spirit, speak with me, bedew me, enlighten me, set me on fire, dwell in me." As you welcome Him when he comes, so to you, and dwell in you. Be clean, for He is pure. Do not expect the Holy Ghost to dwell in a foul chamber. You cannot make that chamber like Solomon's temple, wherein the cedar wood was overlaid with pure gold; but you can take care that it is well cleansed. Only the pure in heart shall see God. Oh for a clean life, a clean tongue, a clean hand, a clean ear, a clean eye, a clean heart! God give you these, and then you shall be ready for the Spirit to dwell in you.

Be Fit for Him to Come

And when He does come, learn this thing. If you would have Him fill you, obey Him. If you believe that an impulse is from the Spirit of God, follow it out. Never trifle with conscience—especially you that are beginning life. Mind you set the tune for the whole of your life by the tenderness of your consciences at the first. Young men, young women, mind you begin straight! Do not begin with truckling and making compromises. If you take your hats off to the devil to-day, you will have to take your shoes off to him soon; and by and by you will become utterly his slaves. Be strong for the truth. Quit yourselves like men. Stand fast for God and holiness. You will be filled with the Spirit if you are obedient to Him.

If you are filled with the Spirit of God, and wish to retain His gracious presence, speak about Him. Note this, "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is riot; but be filled with the Spirit; speaking." That is to follow so soon. The Holy Ghost is not a dumb Spirit; He sets us speaking. "Speaking to yourselves;" it is a poor audience; but, still, it is a choice audience if you speak to your brethren. "Speaking to yourselves in psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, singing and making melody in your heart to the Lord." Beloved, when the Spirit of God fills you, you will not only speak, but sing. Let the holy power have free course; do not quench the Spirit. If you feel like singing all the while, sing all the while, and let others know that there is a joy in the possession of the Spirit of God which the world does not understand, but which you are feeling, and to which you wish to bear witness. Oh, that the Spirit of God would come upon this entire church, and fill you all to overflowing! May the members of other churches that are here take home fire with them, and set their churches on flame! The Lord bless you, for Jesus Christ's sake! Amen.

A Curious Word

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

How Jefferson Looked.*

SENATOR MACLAY, of Pennsylvania, thus described him in 1790, when he had returned from France to become Secretary of State, and appeared before a committee of the Senate to answer questions about foreign relations: "Jefferson is a slender man; has rather the air of stiffness in his manner. His clothes seem too small for him. He sits in a lounging manner, on one hip commonly, and with one of his shoulders elevated much above the other. His face has a sunny aspect. His whole figure has a loose, shackling air. He had a rambling, vacant look, and nothing of that firm, collected deportment which I expected would dignify the presence of a Secretary or Minister. I looked for gravity, but a laxity of manner seemed shed about him. He spoke almost without ceasing; but even his discourse partook of his personal demeanor. It was loose and rambling; and yet he scattered information wherever he went, and some even brilliant sentiments sparkled from him." Augustus Foster gives another but similar description in 1804: "He was a tall man with a very red, freckled face, and gray, neglected hair; his manners good-natured, frank, and rather friendly, though he had somewhat of a cynical expression of countenance. He wore a blue coat, a thick gray-colored hairy waistcoat with a red under-waistcoat lapped over it, green velvet breeches, with pearl buttons, yarn stockings, and slippers down at the heel—his appearance being very much like that of a tall, large-boned farmer."

How Louisiana was Acquired.

On April 10, 1803, Napoleon, addressing two of his ministers, said he wished to explain his intention of selling Louisiana to the United States; and he did so in his peculiar way. He began by expressing the fear that England would seize Louisiana as her first act of war. He said, "I think of ceding it to the United States. I can scarcely say that I cede it to them, for it is not yet in our possession. If, however, I leave the least time to our enemies, I shall only transmit an empty title to those republicans whose friendship I seek. They ask of me only one town in Louisiana; but I already consider the colony as entirely lost, and it appears to me that in the hands of this growing Power it will be more useful to the policy, and even to the commerce, of France, than if I should attempt to keep it. . . . Irresolution and deliberation are no longer in season; I renounce Louisiana. It is not only New Orleans that I cede; it is the whole colony, without reserve. I know the value of what I abandon. I have proved the importance I attach to this province, since my first diplomatic act with Spain had the object of recovering it. I renounce it with the greatest regret; but to attempt obstinately to retain it would be folly. I direct you to negotiate the affair. Have an interview this very day with the American Minister."

On April 29 Messrs. Livingston and Monroe, representing the United States, called on the French Secretary. Mr. Monroe thus wrote of the interview: "We called on M. Marbois and gave him our project, which was read to him and discussed. We proposed to offer fifty million francs ($10,000,000) to France, and twenty millions ($4,000,000) on account of her debt to the citizens of the United States, making seventy in the whole." Marbois replied that he would proceed only on the condition that eighty millions were the price. Then, at last, the American commissioners gave way, and with this change Marbois took their project for reference to Napoleon the next morning.

* From The History of the United States During the First Administration of Thomas Jefferson. By Henry Adams. A valuable work, ably written, covering an interesting period of our national life. 2 Vols. Price $4. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

Dom Pedro, Ex-Emperor of Brazil. (See page 757.)

The Island of Loanda, on the Coast of Africa.

THE ISLAND OF LOANDA.

THE accompanying illustration gives an idea of a typical African town in its stage of development under the influence of advancing civilization. It is situated on the western coast of Africa, about 200 miles south of the mouth of Congo, opposite to the town now known as St. Paul de Loanda, in Angola. This island is distinguished by its having been the site of the first Portuguese settlement in West Africa. Its history dates back to 1484, when, according to a Portuguese historian, a naval expedition under the command of Diego Cam sailed on a voyage of discovery along the coast of Africa. At various points along the coast he set up stone pillars, which he had brought with him for the purpose of marking the points touched at, and implying that King Joas II. of Portugal claimed dominion there by right of discovery. A few years later a settlement was made on Loanda Island, and in 1534 the settlers had extended their operations northward to the Congo, had converted the King of Congo to the Roman Catholic faith, and had erected several churches.

The Portuguese claim to the Congo, which has been so embarrassing to Stanley, had its origin in these facts. The King of the Congo, it is claimed, was attacked by the savage tribe of Jaggas, who overran his country, burnt San Salvador and its cathedral, and killed nearly half his people. The King, and such of the people as could escape, fled with the Portuguese priests to an island in the Congo near Boma; from thence an appeal was sent to the King of Portugal, who responded with an expedition of 600 men. They attacked the Jaggas with fire-arms, which terrified all they did not kill, and the invaders speedily evacuated the country. A document is still in existence at St. Paul de Loanda, dated 1570, in which the King of the Congo covenants, in return for this service, to give the King of Portugal all the territory between the mouth of the river Congo and the mouth of the river Coanza, 250 miles to the south. This, however, according to a Dutch geographer, was declined by the King of Portugal. The Portuguese were expelled from San Salvador about 1634, but still maintained their ascendancy at Loanda, and actively engaged in the slave trade, which they continued to carry on long after every other European nation had abandoned it.

CONTAMINATION BRAVED.

THE good medical missionary who has charge of the Christian Hospital at Oroomiah, Persia, writes: One day an old man, a Mohammedan, having his arm badly gangrened, came and lay down at the gate of the Hospital, and asked for the physician. Dr. Cochran sent for him to come into the dispensary, where he could be examined. "No, no," replied the man. "I have been a faithful Mohammedan. I have fasted, and prayed, and taken pilgrimages, and now near the end of my life I am not going to forfeit my right to enter Paradise by contamination with Christians." The doctor protested against his remaining outside, insisting he must at least come into an outer room, where he could be treated. The man said he must not defile himself by touching Christian food or eating off Christians' dishes. So, at first he was treated at the gate, but later was gotten into the hospital, and placed on a bed in the ward, where he could receive full attention from nurse and physician. One night the man was much worse. The nurse called the doctor, who worked over him a long time. When somewhat relieved the man burst into tears, and said: "How could I think what you should do for me would keep me from Paradise? How kind and good you are!" Over and over he expressed his confidence in the doctor, and humbly implored forgiveness for having thought that contact with so good and wise a man could injure his prospect of Paradise. Afterwards, alluding to his former fear of contamination, he said: "I will eat your food off your dishes." Thus the old man's prejudices were removed, and when he left, it was to tell others of the good he had received of the Christian missionaries.

THE MISSING CHEQUE.

(See illustration on page 765.)

THERE was no difference of opinion among those who knew him, as to the character of Horace Maynard. He was a hard man. Strictly just, scrupulously honest, and the very soul of honor, but merciless when there was any failure on the part of others to fulfil their obligations. One year after the new firm name of Hervey, Stuart & Maynard appeared on the brass plate of the merchants' stores, Horace Maynard married.

The marriage was a surprise to his friends. It was thought that so shrewd a man as Maynard would have seen in marriage an opportunity for strengthening the one weak point in his position. Every one expected him to marry a rich wife if he married at all, which was doubtful of a man so cold and self-contained. But the girl whom he married was poor, and had scarcely the style to grace the position which Maynard might one day reach in society. "She will not ruin him by extravagance," was the prediction of one of his friends. "No," said the man to whom the remark was made; "and I fancy Maynard thinks it is just as good to have a wife who can save a fortune, as to have one who would bring him a fortune, and then want it all spent on herself in dresses and carriages, and society pleasures. Oh! he knows what he is about."

There was some truth in the observation. Eleanor Maynard managed her husband's domestic affairs with the economic skill that comes of a childhood spent in genteel poverty, and astonished him by the smallness of the sum she required to maintain his home in comfort. He could spend his evenings as he chose, without giving account of his doings, and Eleanor was content to remain quietly at home alone, or to accompany him if he invited her. Her respect for him amounted to veneration, and Maynard could play the tyrant whenever he chose. There were depths in her nature that he had never sounded, though he knew they were there. Only once had he touched them, and then, to his amazement, Eleanor had told him quietly that the matter in question was a duty to God, and she must act according to her conscience, even though it might grieve him. She was so submissive in all their relations, that her unexpected firmness on this occasion gave him pause, and he made a mental note of the fact that there were boundaries to his authority over her.

Only one really urgent, importunate request could Maynard remember his wife making to him. She had been content to receive what he gave her, and to ask for no money or privilege of her own accord. But she did ask him one favor, and her heart was in it. She begged him to take her young brother Walter into his office. Maynard was reluctant to comply. He had made up his mind that he was not marrying the whole family when he married Eleanor. But there had been no evidence that the family wanted to draw upon him, and he had seen but little of them since his marriage. And Walter seemed a bright, intelligent boy. Still he hesitated, but his wife was so much in earnest that he finally yielded, and Walter was received into the office. The lad took no advantage of his relationship, was respectful and industrious, and though Maynard was on his guard against approaches he had no reason to complain.

Two years had passed since Walter had entered his brother-in-law's employ, and he had been promoted for merit to a more responsible position, when one night a clerk came hurriedly to Maynard's residence. Maynard was dressing for an evening party, so Mrs. Maynard sent the clerk into the library to wait until her husband could see him. Half an hour later she heard Maynard let the clerk out himself, and then he entered the room where she was sitting. His face was pale even to ghastliness, looking still more deathly as its leaden hue contrasted with the broad expanse of snowy shirt bosom disclosed by his evening dress.

"Eleanor," he said, in a hoarse voice, "your brother is a thief; he is a disgrace to you, and to me too. Why did you insist on my taking him into the office?"

Eleanor sprang to her feet, letting the basket she had in her lap roll to the floor. "What!" she cried, in a voice of agony. "It is not true; I will never believe it!"

Maynard looked at her sternly. "I am not accustomed to make false accusations," he said. "The head clerk of the department has just been here with conclusive evidence. I will tell you. A letter from my broker came for me to-day with a cheque for a large amount inclosed. That cheque has disappeared, and the letter and envelope in which it came have been found in your brother's desk. Is not that clear proof of his guilt?"

"Oh! I do not understand it," cried Eleanor; "I cannot explain it, but I am sure Walter never stole the money."

"Well, then you are the only one who could doubt. Every one else would be sure, and he will be arrested to-night."

Maynard turned and left the room, and Eleanor heard him close the outer door as he went to his evening's pleasure. What could she do? With her there was no question. Going to her own room, she shut herself in, and bending before God she laid the whole case before Him, entreating His help in her time of bitter trouble. Indisputable as the proof of her brother's guilt seemed, she could not believe it, and she besought God to vindicate the youth, who, like herself, was an earnest servant of Christ.

How long she remained pleading at the Mercy-seat she did not know. She was aroused by a ring at the door-bell. She met the servant coming up to inquire when Mr. Maynard would be home. The same clerk who had brought the dreadful news wished to see him. She told the man where her husband was, and he said he would go there to him, as he had something important to tell him. Eleanor dare not ask him what it was, but that night her husband told her. When the policeman had gone to arrest her brother, Walter had shown no consternation. "The cheque is in the safe," he said. "I saw the letter had been overlooked by the chief clerk, and knowing it contained the cheque I took it out and put it in the safe and put letter and envelope in my desk until morning. You will find it there." And there they did find it. The chief clerk had remembered leaving the letter, and had returned to the office to rectify his omission, but not finding the letter, had searched the desks of the other clerks, and made the discovery which had seemed to implicate the protégé of the junior partner. "I am sorry, deeply sorry, Eleanor," Maynard said, as he finished the story; "it will be a lesson to me in future not to be so ready to doubt."

Conclusive Evidence of the Missing Cheque.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

(Continued from page 750.)

The Voyage to America.

"MANY weighty reasons, often and seriously discussed, inclined the Pilgrims to change their abode. They had been bred to the pursuits of husbandry, and in Holland they were compelled to learn mechanical trades; Brewster became a printer; Bradford, who had been educated as a farmer, learned the art of dyeing silk. The language of the Dutch never became pleasantly familiar; and their manners still less so. The climate was not grateful to the aged; and close occupation in mechanical trades was detrimental to the young.

"Upon their talk of removing, sundry of the Dutch would have them go under them, and made them large offers; but the Pilgrims were attached to their nationality as Englishmen, and to the language of their line. A secret, but deeply-seated love of their country, led them to the generous purpose of recovering the protection of England by enlarging her dominions. They were 'restless' with the desire to live once more under the government of their native land.

"And whither should they go to acquire a province for King James? The beautiful fertility and immeasurable wealth of Guiana had been exhibited in dazzling colors by the brilliant eloquence of Raleigh. But the terrors of the tropical climate, and the proximity of bigoted Catholics led them rather to look toward Virginia; and Robert Cushman and John Carver repaired to England to obtain consent of the London Company to their emigration. The envoys were favorably received; and a patent and ample liberties were cheerfully promised. Assured of the approbation of Sir Edwin Sandys, they declined completing their negotiation till they could consult the multitude with whose interests they were entrusted.

"The Pilgrims, following the principles of democratic liberty, transmitted to the company their request, signed by the hands of the greatest part of the congregation. 'We are well weaned,' added Robinson and Brewster, 'from the delicate milk of our mother country, and inured to the difficulties of a strange land; the people are industrious and frugal. We are knit together as a body in a most sacred covenant of the Lord, of the violation whereof we make great conscience, and by virtue whereof we hold ourselves straitly tied to all care of each other's good, and of the whole.' It is not with us as with men whom small things can discourage."

The desire for peace induced them to leave Amsterdam in 1609, after they had lived there about a year, although, says Governor Bradford in his History of Plymouth Colony, "they well knew it would be much to the prejudice of their outward estate, both at present and, in all likelihood, in the future; as indeed it proved to be." The old historian, after enlarging on the attractions of Leyden, as "a fair and beautiful city, and of a sweet situation," adds of it, "but, wanting that traffic by sea which Amsterdam enjoyed, it was not so beneficial for their outward means of living and estates. But being now here pitched, they fell to such trades and employments as they best could, valuing peace and their spiritual comfort above any other riches whatsoever; and at length they came to raise a competent and comfortable living, and with hard and continual labor.

"Being thus settled, after many difficulties, they continued many years in a comfortable condition, enjoying much sweet and delightful society and spiritual comfort together, in the ways of God, under the able ministry and prudent government of Mr. John Robinson and Mr. William Brewster, who was an assistant unto him in the place of an elder, unto which he was now called and chosen by the church; so as they grew in knowledge and other gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, and lived together in peace and love and holiness. And many came unto them from divers parts of England, so as they grew a great congregation. And if at any time any differences did arise or offences broke out (as it cannot be but that sometimes there will, even amongst the best of men), they were ever so met with and nipped in the head betimes, or otherwise so well composed, as still love, peace, and communion was continued, or else the church purged of those that were incurable and incorrigible, when, after much patience used, no other means would serve; which seldom comes to pass."

The magistrates of the city bore honorable testimony to their virtuous and peaceable lives during the years they sojourned among them: and when they spoke of seeking a place of final settlement in the New World, "sundry of the Dutch would have them go under them, and made them large offers." But England was still the home of their hearts, and its institutions a birthright derived from their fathers, which they would not willingly forego. They dreaded "that their posterity would in a few generations become Dutch, and so lose their interest in the English nation," while love rather than ambition prompted the desire "to enlarge His Majesty's dominions, and to live under their natural prince."

Negotiations were immediately entered into with the Virginia Company, and even the favor of the King was sought to be conciliated, but in vain. Their generous and unquenchable loyalty met with no like response. It was in the year 1618 that the messengers from the exiles at Leyden were received by the London merchants, who controlled the direction of the Virginia Company. Until four years preceding this, the whole extent of country between Florida and Canada was loosely comprehended under the name of Virginia; but in 1814 the name of New England began to be generally applied to the northern portion. Two companies had been chartered by James to colonize the country, and empowered to effect regular and permanent settlements, extending to a hundred miles inland. The one of these merchant companies was in London, the other in Plymouth, and it was with the latter that the Pilgrims of Leyden negotiated their scheme of colonization.

The enterprise had already been maturely weighed. Solemn days of humiliation had been set apart, in which they sought divine guidance by united prayer; and at length it had been resolved, "that part of the church should go before their brethren into America, to prepare for the rest. And if in case the major part of the church should choose to go over with the first, then the pastor should go along with them; but if the major part stayed, that he should then stay with them." The church at Leyden had good reason to look up with confidence to their generous guide, who was indeed a pastor to that little flock. He appears to have been a man of the most noble and disinterested heroism, whose abilities fitted him to shine in a far more conspicuous station, had he not chosen rather to cast in his lot with the people of God. But like Moses, he was only to guide them through the wilderness, and behold the promised land from afar.

Delays and difficulties yielded before the persevering exertions of the expectant colonists. Their property was sold and converted into a common stock, not, however, as Robertson the historian affirms, "under the influence of a wild notion of imitating the primitive Christians," but as an arrangement into which they were necessarily forced by the nature of their negotiations with the English Company of Merchants, on whose co-operation they mainly depended for success. Their first expenditure from this fund was in the purchase of the Speedwell, a small vessel of sixty tons. In this the brethren who had formed the deputation to England, returned when their negotiations were completed. Landing at Delft Haven, they thence proceeded to Leyden, and reported their success. A patent had been obtained for the emigrants under the Company's seal, which secured their civil rights and ample liberty of worship, along with some prospect of worldly comfort: though in the latter respect the Merchant Company had dictated terms wherein more respect was paid to their own profit than to the interests of those who were to risk all in the attempt.

In addition to the Speedwell, which the intending emigrants had purchased in order to retain possession of it for the service of the colony, the Mayflower, a ship of 180 tons, was hired in London to sail in company with it, and to bear the chief portion of the emigrants. The limited accommodation which could be afforded in these vessels, admitted of only a minority of the congregation at Leyden proceeding to their new destination; and Robinson therefore remained behind. The parting between these pioneers and their brethren was a most touching scene.

The time had come at length. Nearly the whole congregation, old men, women, and children, accompanied the emigrants from Leyden to Delft Haven, and spent the last night in friendly converse and prayer. They were to see their beloved pastor's face no more, and doubtless the anticipation that such might be, added not a little to the natural shrinking from the perils they were about to face.

At parting, Robinson addressed to them the most affectionate and earnest counsels, characterized by a spirit of enlightened judgment and true liberality, such as was rare indeed in that age. "Brethren," said he, "we are now quickly to part from one another, and whether I may ever live to see your face on earth any more, the God of heaven only knows; but whether the Lord has appointed that or no, I charge you, before God and His blessed angels, that you follow me no further than you have seen me follow the Lord Jesus Christ. If God reveal anything to you by any other instrument of His, be as ready to receive it as ever you were to receive any truth by my ministry; for I am verily persuaded the Lord has more truth yet to break forth out of His holy Word."

"For my part, I cannot sufficiently bewail the condition of the Reformed Churches, who are come to a period in religion, and will go at present no further than the instruments of their reformation. The Lutherans cannot be drawn to go beyond what Luther saw; whatever part of His will our good God has revealed to Calvin, they will rather die than embrace it. And the Calvinists, you see, stick fast where they were left by that great man of God, who yet saw not all things.

"This is a misery much to be lamented, for though they were burning and shining lights in their times, yet they penetrated not into the whole council of God; but were they now living, would be as willing to embrace further light as that which they first received, for it is not possible the Christian world should come so lately out of such thick Antichristian darkness, and that perfection of knowledge should break forth at once."

In the same noble spirit, Robinson wrote to the band of New England emigrants ere they finally sailed for their destination, urging upon them motives of action which afford us the best evidence of the principles by which they were actuated. It was a small and feeble company who were thus committing themselves to the wide waste of waters, and to the wilderness beyond; but there were brave and true men among them, whose names are now mentioned with pride in the populous cities of New England.

"As morning dawned," says Bancroft, "after the night of parting passed by them at Delft Haven in Christian converse and prayer, Carver, Bradford, and Winslow, Brewster, the ruling elder, Allerton, and the brave and faithful Standish, with their equal associates—a feeble band for a perilous enterprise—bade farewell to Holland; while Robinson, kneeling in prayer by the seaside, gave to their embarkation the sanctity of a religious rite. A prosperous wind soon wafts the vessel to Southampton, and, in a fortnight, the Mayflower and the Speedwell, freighted with the first colony for New England, leave Southampton for America. But they had not gone far upon the Atlantic before the smaller vessel was found to need repairs; and they enter the port of Dartmouth.

"After the lapse of eight precious days, they again weigh anchor; the coast of England recedes; already they are unfurling their sails on the broad ocean, when the captain of the Speedwell, with his company, dismayed at the dangers of the enterprise, once more pretend that his ship is too weak for the service. They put back to Plymouth to dismiss their treacherous companions, though the loss of the vessel was 'very grievous and discouraging.' The timid and the hesitating were all freely allowed to abandon the expedition. Having thus winnowed their numbers of the cowardly and disaffected, the little band, not of resolute men only, but wives, some far gone in pregnancy, children, infants, a floating village, yet, in all, but one hundred and one souls, went on board the single ship, which was hired only to convey them across the Atlantic; and, on the sixth day of September, 1620, the passengers in the Mayflower set sail for a new world, where the past could offer no favorable auguries.

"Had New England been colonized immediately on the discovery of the American continent, the old English institutions would have been planted under the powerful influence of the Roman Catholic religion; had the settlement been made under Elizabeth, it would have been before activity of the popular mind in religion had conducted to a corresponding activity of mind in politics. The Pilgrims were Englishmen, Protestants, exiles for religion; men disciplined by misfortune, cultivated by opportunities of extensive observation, equal in rank as in rights, and bound by no code but that which was imposed by religion, or might be created by the public will."

The difficulties seemed enough to daunt the stoutest heart; but the exiles were strong in the courage supplied by noble principles and a pure faith, and if these had failed them, had they not even the courage of despair? Whither were these poor outcast children of England to go, if not onward, even amid such dangers? The all that they possessed was with them, and their only hope lay beyond the terrors of the Atlantic. But God's eye was over them, and His dealings seemed as the winnowing of Gideon's band—"It shall be that of whom I say unto thee, This shall go with thee, the same shall go with thee; and of whomsoever I say unto thee, This shall not go with thee, the same shall not go." These, indeed, were the true founders of a colony, the elements from whence a great nation might arise, and return upon the Old World the influences of the noble principles in which it found being.

The pioneers of civilization, who bear the seeds of future colonies and kingdoms to distant lands; require, under the most favorable circumstances, the utmost courage, firmness, and self-denial; and never were such virtues more eminently required than among the wandering outcasts whom the little Mayflower was bearing to the New England shores. On the 22d of July, 1620, they had taken their last farewell look on the fond group of brethren and friends who knelt on the shore, and commended them to the protection and favor of heaven. The vessel weighed anchor, and stood to sea under a smiling sky and favoring breeze; and soon the receding sail faded before the eyes of these faithful watchers, and disappeared on the faint blue line of the distant horizon. Wives were there, and children; the young, the sanguine, and hopeful; old men, too, were there, and some who looked forward with doubt and fear, even under the smiling skies and prosperous breeze. How must their hearts have sunk within them when weeks and months passed over, and found them still far from the goal of hope! It was the sixth of September ere the Mayflower at length sailed from Plymouth, and the Pilgrim Fathers saw the headlands of England fade forever from their sight. The Old World had cast them forth; it was with no cheering welcome that the New World received her adopted sons.

Nevertheless, the eye of God was upon them, and His good providence had prepared for them the chosen land. From amid the convenient harbors and the majestic bays and estuaries with which the coasts of America abound, the Pilgrims had chosen for their destined home the mouth of the river Hudson, where now the wealth of every quarter of the globe is borne by native sails. But a less hospitable coast had been chosen for them, where they should rear their tabernacle in the wilderness. After a long and stormy voyage of sixty-three days, during which the emigrants had endured great sufferings, and one had died, the anxious outlookers were gladdened by the sight of land.

(To be continued.)

RULES FOR DAILY LIFE.

he day with God;

down to Him in prayer;
thy heart to His abode,
seek His love to share.

le Book of God,

read a portion there;
may know all thy thoughts,
sweeten all thy care.

ugh the day with God,

er thy work may be;
er thou art—at home, abroad,
all is near to thee.

re in mind with God;

spirit heavenward raise;
wedge every good bestowed, offer grateful praise.

le the day with God;

sins to Him confess;
n the Lord's atoning blood,
plead His righteousness.

n at night with God,

gives His servants sleep;
en thou tread'st the vale of death,
ill thee guard and keep.

tr. Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, the above poem in leather form at twenty cents. A Strong's Index of 30 leaders (two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

Word to House-keepers.

It is the too common habit of neglecting in quantities the daily necessities of home-life no more expensive way of living than our corner grocery for every article as it is in nothing is this more true than as re-indispensable factor in the household soap. Messrs. J. D. Larkin & Co., Buffalo, supplying direct from their factories; thus the purchaser at intermediate expense an unit of soap for toilet and ordinary uses, Tooth Powder, Shaving Soap and Borax at moderate price of the entire box, which these places it within the reach of everybody. Letters have been received by praising the delight and astonishment of purchase quantity and quality of their goods.
No payment is required, and all freight prepaid, but the offer is made only to subscribers. See the great offer on back of "Our Mammoth Christmas Box."

MUHLBERG.

THE AND WORK OF WILLIAM MUGUSTUS MUHLBERG. By NE AYRES. FOURTH EDITION.
534 pages, with two steel portraits, etc. Cloth, extra. Price, $2.00.

he merit of this delightful biography unusually transparent as a medium rich to regard a remarkable man. His is unfeigned desire to serve, his ardent nt. husbanding all resources for pos-sion, and his nature freely giving of its ance through channels only dreamed of.
These have a perennial charm as set its unpretending and satisfying biography have known such a man, even throughout have received an inspiration from Atlantic Monthly.

be forwarded, prepaid, on receipt of price.

S WHITTAKER, Publisher,
43 Bible House, New York.

ARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.
TICE GRAPH OF THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN.

ENOGRAPHY.

TYPE-WRITING.

able profession of Stenography or shorthand personally or by mail in your own Vermilye's rapid system of teaching;
ished: hundreds of graduates holding positions; success guaranteed. Also taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free.
VERMILYER'S COLLEGE.
816 Broadway, New York.

D'S PRAYER illustrated and the COMMANDMENTS and BEAT-TITUDES combined, size 10x22, chromocolored and gold. Over $2,000 made by one cent 25¢ (10¢ for 50¢) One Million presents at $2.50 per 100. For 30 days sales price, to introduce other goods we offer at $3.50 for 50 copies, 100 for $4.00 and more money. Terms for other goods,
T & CO., 173 Park Row, New York

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you.
Our reduced prices
bring the best goods
within reach of all.
We are the only
manufacturers in
the U. S. selling
direct to consumers. You
take no risk. We warrant every
piece of goods as represented, or
money refunded.
See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U. S. Established
in 1838, with
over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS,
for richness of
color, superior
finish and wearing qualities, to
be unexcelled
by any make
of Black Silks in the world. We

offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida
Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and
we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see
for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON,

Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank,
Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Wil-
limate Savings Institute, or Willimantic, Conn.

RECOLLECT With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000
Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of
dress.

THE GOODS are delivered to you PREPAID
all carrying charges

RICH DRESS SILKS.

We offer two beautiful assortments of Rich Colored Silks at $1 and $1.25 per yard. These prices represent about half the original value.

Our Sale of Rich Fancy Silks will also be continued.

Orders by mail receive careful attention.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect
Tea. A TRIAL ORDER OF
8½ pounds of Fine Tea, either
Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpow-
der, Young Hyson, Mixed, English
Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea
you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289, 81 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

RIDGE'S FOOD

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans.
Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co.
(on every label). Palmer, Mass.

SHORTHAND Writing thoroughly taught situations procured all pupils when competiend for circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N. Y.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach,
For a Disordered Liver try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

The Famous Plymouth Rock Pants.

CUTTO ORDER: Pants, $3 to $5.25; Suits,
$13.25 to $21; Overcoats, $10.25 to $20.

If you don't know who
we are, look in any commercial agency, or write
to any bank or business firm (except clothiers and tail-
ors) in any of these cities.

PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO.

ADDRESS ALL MAIL TO
Headquarters: 11 to 17 Elliot Street.
Annex: 695 Washington Street,
And 18 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.
BRANCHES: 245 Broadway, New York; 943 Penn.
Avenue, Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago,
Ill.; 914 Main St., Richmond, Va.; 225 E. Baltimore
St., Baltimore, Md.; 110 Canal St., New Orleans;
104 Montgomery St., Montgomery, Ala.; 39 Whitehall
St., Atlanta, Ga.; Burnside Building, Worcester,
Mass.; Hotel Gilmore, Springfield, Mass.; 198 Westminster St., Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building, New Haven, Conn.

$3.75 A DAY And steady work right at home
for any man or lady. Write
at once. Franklin Co., Richmond, Va.

THE Alfred Dolge FELT SHOES AND SLIPPERS.

Noiseless,
Warm, Durable.

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S PILLS EFFECTUAL

For Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, Blisters on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nervous and Trembling Sensations, &c. THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES. This is no fiction. Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one Box of these Pills, and they will be acknowledged to be a Wonderful Medicine. "Worth a guinea a box."
BEECHAM'S PILLS, taken as directed, will quickly restore females to complete health. For a WEAK STOMACH; IMPAIRED DIGESTION; DISORDERED LIVER; they ACT LIKE MAGIC;—a few doses will work wonders upon the Vital Organs, Strengthening the muscular System; restoring long-lost Complexion; bringing back the keen edge of appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. These are "facts" admitted by thousands, in all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE OF ANY PATENT MEDICINE IN THE WORLD. Full directions with each Box.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.
Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN & CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York.
Sole Agents for the United States, who (inquire first), if your druggist does not keep them,
WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, 25 CENTS A BOX.

AGENTS Send for E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books, Shots at Sundry Targets by 1000
$2.50. Quick sales. Big
pay. Also, Mother,
Home & Heaven,
400 best authors. E. B. T.
by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75.
192,000 sold 5000
Curiosities of Bible $2. By Mail, E. B. TREAT, N. Y.

WANTED AGENTS for
The Christian's Legacy.
One reports the sale of 72 copies in a place of 798
people. Another has sold 102 copies in one church in Springfield, Mass., and is a stranger there. Circulars
free. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St. New York.

500 LOTS Given Away to advertise our new towns. Send full name and address with 3c. postage and we will send you a deed to a lot 25x125 feet.
MIDLAND TOWN CO., Kansas City, Mo.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

DOES CURE CONSUMPTION

In its First Stages.

Be sure you get the genuine.

RHEUMATISM.—A pamphlet telling in plain
terms "What Rheumatism
really is," "The cause of the pain attending it," and
"how sufferers can obtain relief," will be sent FREE
to any sufferer by F. W. KIMBALL, 357
Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

PERFECT EASE AND COMFORT.

Made in all Styles for Men,
Women, and Children.

TRADE MARK
ALFRED DOLGE'S
Celebrated
Felt Slippers

Prevent Rheumatism and
Cold Feet.
Send for Illustrated Price-List.
Mention Christian Herald.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY ORGANS

$150 to $1500 $35 to $400
Guaranteed 6 years.
They Lead the World
We sell direct to families, and send for trial in your own
home before you buy.
Catalogue Free.
Established 1859. Incorporated 1877.
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, N. Y.

TURKISH HAIR CROWDER.

Wanted to grow a beautiful mustache on the face without pain, without injury, without money expended. These hair and only reliable article of the kind on the market. Use no mercury and no other dangerous ingredients. Write for free circular. TRIMM, 507 Broadway, New York.

OPIUM

Morphine Habit. (Opium Smoking.)
etc. easily cured. Frank P. Fox, Dr.
J. C. Hoffman, Jefferson, Wis. main.

OUR MAMMOTH CHRISTMAS BOX

Our object in getting up this Mammoth Christmas Box is to introduce to the American people our "Sweet Home" Family Soap and Fine Toilet Articles. They are the purest, best, and most satisfactory, whether made in this country or England; everyone who uses them at once becomes a permanent customer. We propose a new departure in the soap trade and will sell direct from our factory to the consumer, spending the money usually allowed for expenses of traveling men, wholesale and retail dealers' profits, in handsome and valuable presents to those who order at once. Our goods are made for the select family trade and will not be sold to dealers, and to induce people to give them a trial we accompany each case with all of the useful and valuable presents named.

Larkin's Mammoth Christmas Box makes this boy happy and it will make 100,000 other boys, girls, men and women, old and young, just as happy; because it contains the greatest lot of Christmas Presents ever seen for the money. Beautiful things! Something for everyone in the family, father—mother—all of the boys and girls—the baby—and hired girl. Such fun opening the box you never heard of. It is a great surprise to all who get it. It contains so many of the very things everyone wishes to receive. Nowhere can such liberality be found.

This offer is only to Subscribers of this Paper.

The following are articles of our own manufacture which we take great pride in presenting to the readers of this paper. Send us your name on a postal card and we will deliver you freight prepaid, on terms given below, a Mammoth Christmas Box containing all of the articles named below:

ONE HUNDRED CAKES "Sweet Home" Family Soap enough to last a family one full year. This Soap is made for all household purposes and has no superior.

SIX BOXES BORAXINE.
ONE-FOURTH DOZEN MODJESKA COMPLEXION SOAP.
ONE BOTTLE MODJESKA PERFUME.
ONE BOTTLE MODJESKA TOOTH POWDER.
ONE STICK NAPOLEON SHAVING SOAP.
ONE-FOURTH DOZEN OCEAN BATH TOILET SOAP.
ONE-FOURTH DOZEN ARTISTIC TOILET SOAP.
ONE-FOURTH DOZEN CREME TOILET SOAP.
ONE-FOURTH DOZEN ELITE TOILET SOAP.
ONE ENGLISH JAR MODJESKA COLD CREAM.

Soothing, Healing, Beautifies the Skin, Improves the Complexion, Cures Chapped Hands and Lips.

Our Mammoth Christmas Box contains a great variety of Toys, Playthings, etc., for the Babies and sundry useful and amusing things for the older folks. It also contains

One fine Silver-plated Sugar Spoon,
One fine Silver-plated Child's Spoon,
One fine Silver-plated Butter Knife,
One fine Silver-plated Individual Butter Plate,
One fine Silver-plated Button Hook,
One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder, (very best)
One Arabesque Mat, One Turkish Towel,
One Wash Cloth, One Glove Buttoner,
One Package Pins, One Spool Black Silk Thread,
One Japanese Silk Handkerchief,
One Gentleman's Handkerchief, large,
One Lady's Handkerchief,
One Child's Lettered Handkerchief,
One Biscuit Cutter, One Cake Cutter,
One Doughnut Cutter, One Handsome Scrap Book or Portfolio,
One Package Assorted Scrap Pictures,
Two Celluloid Collar Buttons, (patented), Twenty-three Photo-engraved Pictures of the Presidents of the U. S.

TWENTY-FOUR PICTURES.—Many of which are Copperplate Engravings suitable for framing and are handsome decorations for the parlor, entitled:

Desdemona,	Owl'd Lang Syne,
Our Boys,	Our Pets,
Doe's Head.	The Darling.
Morning in the Highlands.	Evangeline.
Evening in the Highlands.	La Petite Babette.
A Faithful Friend.	The Maid of Orleans.
Marguerite,	After the Storm.
Sunshine and Shadow.	Love's Young Dream.
Jockey Joe.	Futurity.
Skye Terrier.	The Interview.
Phunny Fellows.	On the Sands.
The Monkeys,	Yachting.

Our price for the MAMMOTH CHRISTMAS BOX complete is $6.00, freight prepaid.

To Get the Box simply write your name and address on a postal card and mail it to us and we will send you the goods (freight prepaid) on 30 day's trial and you are under no obligations to keep the box if it does not in every way meet your expectation. We know the great value of our articles, and are willing to put them to the severest kind of a test, hence will send you the box on 30 day's trial and if not satisfactory will remove it. We pay freight only to points in U. S. east of the Rocky Mountains.

THE ABOVE OFFER ONLY HOLDS GOOD UNTIL JANUARY 1st. SEND IN YOUR ORDERS AT ONCE.

J. D. LARKIN & CO., Factories--Seneca, Heacock and Carroll Streets, BUFFALO, N. Y.

Some people prefer to send cash with order; we do not ask it, but in such cases we place one extra present of value in the box and ship the same day the order is received, freight prepaid, all other orders being filled in their turn.

REMEMBER "Sweet Home" Family Soap is an extra fine, pure soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity each cake will do double the work of the common cheap soaps usually sold from groceries.

Our firm has been in the Soap business many years, and as to our reliability refer to any banker in the United States. When in Buffalo, call on us, you will be welcome. Our works have a capacity of Ten Million Pounds per year.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1886, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 47. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 20, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS AND LIVES OF DR. JOSEPH ANGUS AND DR. SAMUEL H. BOOTH.
A MEDITERRANEAN VOYAGE. Dr. Talmage's Sermon at Brindisi, Italy.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

DIAGRAM OF THE FOUR FUTURE PROPHETIC EPOCHS.

The Murdered Missionary—A Big Convert—An Indian Woman Physician—A Buddhist Nun.

THE TEMPLE DEDICATED. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

CURRENT EVENTS: The Pan American Congress—The Cronin Murder, Etc.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SOWERS. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: An Unpromising Community—Cheating the Missionary—Chamion Chiefs.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF DR. CARL PETERS, Recently Murdered in Africa.

PICTURE OF THE ENTRY OF THE EMPEROR OF MOROCCO INTO TANGIER.

THE SISTERS' MISSION. (With Illustration.)

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS: Their Perils, Pains and Privations.

REV. JOSEPH ANGUS, D.D., Principal of Regent's Park College.

REV. SAMUEL BOOTH, D.D., Secretary of the Baptist Union.

THE NEW ART GALLERY.

THE DAWSON AND CHAMBERLAIN MEMORIALS.

STATUE OF SIR JOSEPH MASON.

THE TOWN HALL.

REV. JOSEPH ANGUS, D.D., AND DR. SAMUEL H. BOOTH—A Scene in Birmingham, England

THE ENGLISH BAPTIST UNION.

THE withdrawal of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon from the Baptist Union has attracted to that body the attention of the religious community in all the world. It has recently been holding its annual meeting at Birmingham, the great midland metropolis, and there was some curiosity manifested by outsiders as to the course it would take. Some predicted that Mr. Spurgeon and the ministers who think with him, having come out of the Union, there would be a manifestation of the spirit which caused the unhappy divergence. It is gratifying to learn that the Down grade controversy was not even mentioned, and still more gratifying to see from the reports of the sermons and speeches that the ministers composing the union devoted their attention to the practical subjects of Foreign Missions, the social problems of the day, and the best means of making Christianity a potent and beneficent influence on the outside world.

Whatever ministers may think, such problems are more urgent than internal doctrinal differences. In these last days there is no work more pressing than that of gathering out of the world a people for Christ; any Christian brother who is willing to work zealously in that effort ought to be welcomed in the ranks, even though he may have doubts about some of the doctrines which other workers think are taught in the Bible. He may think his brethren are wrong in drawing those inferences from the Scripture, but if he has full faith in the gospel as the power of God for the conversion of the world, let him go out and proclaim it, and let every other minister and worker bid him God-speed. Doctrinal differences can wait for their solution for further light when every man is fully persuaded in his own mind. That seems to have been the spirit in which the Baptist Union went to its work, and it is one worthy of all honor.

This week, realizing the interest a large number of our readers take in the doings of this influential denomination on the other side the Atlantic, we give portraits of Dr. Angus, one of its most famous ex-presidents, and Dr. Samuel H. Booth, its secretary, with a picture of a scene in Birmingham, the town in which its meetings were held.

REV. JOSEPH ANGUS, D. D.

THIS eminent minister is best known in this country by his incomparable Bible Hand-Book, which is used in our schools and colleges of all denominations, and is valued and used by ministers, teachers, and Christian workers throughout our land. It has been translated into French, Italian, Armenian, Magyar, and Welsh, and in each tongue has had an immense circulation. That book is the work of a scholar and a hard student, as every page proves. Its author is now at the head of the great educational institution of Stepney College, and he is identified with this country by his degree of D. D., which was conferred upon him by Brown University.

Joseph Angus was born in Bolam, in Northumberland, on January 16, 1816, so that he is now approaching the seventy-fourth year of his age. The family to which he belongs came out of Scotland in the year 1580, and settled in Tyne-side. One member of the family is Mr. George Fife Angus, one of the founders of the Colony of South Australia. Some branches of the family occupy leading positions in the city of Newcastle-on-Tyne at the present time.

A studious boyhood prepared the way for higher paths. When he was only fourteen he began the study of Hebrew and Chaldee beneath the roof of a relative at Accrington, the Rev. Joseph Harbottle, and the account which Dr. Angus himself has given of those days is probably one of the pleasantest.

Reminiscences of His Life.

He says: "I spent three or four months at Accrington, and studied with Mr. Harbottle. We were related. The different branches of our family had long been bound together by common religious feelings, and by a strong clannish affection. Traditions lingered in our northern home of visits paid to the far-distant regions of Cumberland, and the younger members of our families heard and read of Tottlebank and Accrington as the very ends of the earth. Once or twice members of the Harbottle family visited us in the north, and left behind fragrant memories of simplicity, affection, and faith. I was a mere lad of fourteen, grave and thoughtful beyond my years, with a taste for study, and especially for religious inquiry and discussion. Owing to these circumstances, Mr. Harbottle admitted me to a degree of intimacy which surprised me at the time, and which I have valued ever since."

After leaving Mr. Harbottle the young student became a scholar in the Ancient Royal Grammar School of Newcastle—the school of Lord Eldon, the famous judge, and Lord Collingwood—at that time in charge of Dr. Mortimer, between whom and himself there sprang up a lifelong friendship; and when Dr. Mortimer, having accepted the head-mastership of the city of London School, in 1833, young Angus accompanied him to the metropolis, and became

A Student at King's College.

In 1835 he went to the University of Edinburgh, attended the lectures of the renowned Dr. Chalmers, and in 1837 graduated as M.A. Already well prepared by his previous studies, Mr. Angus pursued an almost unparalleled career at the modern Athens. He took the first prize in Greek, in Logic, in Rhetoric, in Mathematics, and the Gold Medal in Moral Philosophy. He closed his university course with the Students' Prize for the best essay on "The Influence of Lord Bacon's Philosophy," a prize open to competition to the entire University.

Animated by a spirit of devout consecration, and with a heart stirred by a desire to lead men to Christ, to whom he himself had been converted before he left home, Mr. Angus now laid all his gifts and attainments at the feet of the Saviour, and resolving to become

A Minister of the Gospel,

he entered the Baptist Academy at Stepney, of which Dr. Murch was then the President, to go through a course of theology. That institution was then one of the antique houses of old London, having been, according to common report, formerly associated with the inglorious history of King John. At the close of the year 1837, and before he was of age, he accepted an invitation to become the minister of the church in New Park Street, London. Dr. Rippon, whose hymn-book was once extremely popular, Dr. Gill, the author of the celebrated Commentary which bears his name, and Benjamin Keach, author of The Key to open Scripture Metaphors, were all successively pastors of the same church; and it was this congregation of which the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon took charge in 1854.

In 1840 Dr. Angus was appointed one of the Secretaries of the Baptist Missionary Society, and soon afterward, owing to the death of his colleague, the entire responsibility of this office devolved upon him. Two years later he was called to the Presidency of Stepney College, and added the arduous duties of that office to those of his secretaryship, and continued to perform them both with efficiency and zeal for seven years. At the end of that time, the claims of the college having multiplied through the large number of students attracted to it by his reputation, he resigned his office in the Missionary Society and concentrated his labors on the college. His collegiate reign has been, in every respect, eminently successful. In 1856 the institution was transferred from Stepney to Regent's Park, where it occupies a building which originally cost $250,000. Mentally, also, the standard of the college has been greatly raised, its affiliation with the London University marking a new epoch in its history. In recent years provision has been made for largely extending and perpetuating its work: and the sum of $150,000 has just been secured through Dr. Angus's instrumentality for the double purpose of guaranteeing more efficient Biblical and theological teaching, and extending the advantages of the college to an increased number of students.

Recognition of his erudition and ability outside his own denomination has not been lacking. He was appointed examiner in the English language and literature in the London University, and for a long time has fulfilled a like duty in the College of Preceptors. In 1870 also, he was selected for his pre-eminent qualifications as of the Authorized Version of the New Testament, and was entrusted with the organization of the American Companies who co-operated with their English brethren, who met in the Jerusalem Chamber, Westminster, for several years, engaged in the solemn work of Bible Revision.

One of the Company of Revisers

Rare indeed are the men in whom the qualities of preacher, foremost scholar, popular author, and theological tutor are so happily and efficiently combined as in Dr. Angus. The services he has rendered his day and generation are most distinguished. He is beloved as a father by the hundreds of students, professors, and others who have been enriched by his genius as an instructor; trusted by the denomination of which he is a member, and affectionately cherished by Christians of all churches, by whom his evangelical piety, his great gifts, and devotion to the kingdom of Christ at large are justly recognized.

REV. SAMUEL H. BOOTH, D. D.

THE present Secretary of the Baptist Union, whose portrait accompanies that of Dr. Angus, on the first page, is sixty-five years of age. He was born in London in 1824. He had a pious mother, whose prayers for his conversion were answered in his youth. When he was eighteen years old he was baptized and received into the Church. Soon after making a public profession of Christ, he began to preach in the villages near St. Albans. His education for the Christian ministry was gained at Stepney (now Regent's Park) College, of which Dr. Angus is still the Principal.

After completing his college course, Mr. Booth settled at Birkenhead, and became the pastor of the Baptist church there. This was in 1847. In 1851 he removed, from this sphere to Falmouth, but under the influence of a severe domestic loss, he returned to Birkenhead, when the people erected what is known as Grange Lane Chapel for him. It was not long before his special secretarial gifts were discovered by his brethren in the north, and he was made Secretary of the Lancashire and Cheshire Association of Baptist Churches. He occupied various spheres of labor until 1877, when he was asked on the retirement of the Rev. J. H. Millard, B.A., to undertake the secretariat of the Baptist Union, the work and responsibility in connection with which had assumed large proportions. At the same time he received overtures from several important churches, whose members were desirous of securing his services as pastor. He, however, was constrained to accept and to devote his energies to its service. That position he held till 1880, when he retired, and the Rev. W. Sampson was invited to succeed him. To the great grief of all who knew him, Mr. Sampson's useful career as a devoted minister of Christ was cut short by death, after a lingering illness in November, 1882. Throughout Mr. Sampson's prolonged sickness, Mr. Booth discharged the duties of secretary, generously foregoing all salary in favor of his stricken brother. The period during which Mr. Booth thus gratuitously rendered service was from February 1, 1882, to Mr. Sampson's decease toward the close of the year. He subsequently became pastor of a church at Beckenham, but has now returned to the office which he seems pre-eminently adapted to fill as secretary of the Baptist Union.

The Secretaryship of the Union,

BIRMINGHAM'S PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

THE illustration on the first page represents the large square in the centre of Birmingham around which are grouped the Town Hall and other Municipal and County buildings. The Town Hall which is shown on the right of the picture, is capable of holding 7,000 persons. The New Post-office is also a magnificent building. The palatial Council House, where the Mayor's reception of the Baptist Union took place, is a noble edifice of Corinthian architecture, nearly adjoining the Town Hall. And among other noteworthy structures in the group may be mentioned the Central Free Library, the Museum of Arts and Art Gallery, Sir Josiah Mason's Science College, the Queen's College, etc. The Exchange is a handsome pile of brick and stone, more than 180 feet long, whilst the Central Railway Station, is one of the finest in the country. The population of the town is 448,000.

The Town 800 Years Ago

is thus described as it then appeared: "It was crowded with timber within and without; her streets dirty and narrow, but much trodden. The inhabitant became an early encroacher upon her narrow streets, and sometimes the lord was the greatest. Her houses were mean and low, but few reaching higher than one story, perhaps none more than two; composed of wood and plaster—she was a stranger to brick. Her public building consisted solely of one, the church."

Toward the close of the fourteenth century, when Wycliffe's doctrines began to be circulated, and copies of the Scriptures found their way into several towns and villages in the Midlands, many of the inhabitants of Birmingham became dissatisfied with the religious services and the vicar. Those who lived at a remote distance from the church, therefore, made plausible excuses for absenting themselves from the services. Such a state of things became unsatisfactory to the more piously inclined, and they resolved to build a church for themselves. They were able to accomplish this in due course, and an arrangement was made with the bishop whereby they acquired the right of choosing their own minister. Birmingham has been noted all through its history for its sturdy republican spirit, as it is to this day. When King Charles I. visited the town on his march to Shrewsbury, a few days before the battle of Edge Hill, in 1642, he found no support forthcoming from its inhabitants. Indeed, the day after he had left Aston Hall, where he was entertained, the inhabitants seized his carriages containing the royal plate and other valuables, and sent them to Warwick Castle. They also attacked the royal party, and harassed them in many ways sending the prisoners to Coventry. For this disloyalty to the king's party they were shortly afterward severely punished. Prince Rupert arrived with an army of 2,000 men, and ordered the town to be set on fire. This was done, and the fight that ensued when the royalist troops attempted to plunder is known as "the battle of Birmingham."

The Manufactures of the Town were famous more than two centuries ago. They were chiefly of fire-arms, buttons, and base coinage, the latter product earning for the place an unenviable reputation. During the next century the extension of the hardware trades of the town was exceedingly rapid, and its progress has continued until the present time. Everything that can be made of metal is made at Birmingham, and it is said that the town is so busy a place that there is not a street, however small, without a manufactory and an engine of some kind in it. One of its most influential men is well known and esteemed in this country. He is Dr. R. W. Dale, the Congregational minister who succeeded John Angell James.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 71 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for November:

- That Glorious Future. By Rev. J. L. Thompson.
- Prophetic Diagrams.
- General Signs of the Times and Those Relating to Israel.
- Seven Proofs that Antichrist is Future.
- H. I. H. Prince Victor Napoleon Bonaparte in Brussels.
- The Coming of Christ. Address by an Evangelist of the Catholic Apostolic Church.
- "Quidams" Gladstone.
- Passing Events. Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

A BUDDHIST NUN.

In a letter from Shanghai, China, to the Missionary Link, Miss Andrews gives the following account of the conversion of a Buddhist nun in the hospital where she labors: "One rainy day in April, when we had few patients in the Dispensary, a Buddhist nun came to us, and wanted Dr. Gale to cure her. She had a growth which Dr. Gale told her must be removed, and if she wished this she must remain at the hospital, for several weeks at least. The nun consented, saying she had prayed to one of her idols, and she or he had told her to go to Shanghai and be cured. As soon as she went into the ward, all the patients began to talk to her about 'the new doctrine,' as her dress proclaimed her profession at once. They shave the head, and look very like a man. As soon as we could, we gave the nun a Bible and hymn book, which she read all day, and far into the night. I seldom went into her room without finding her reading the Bible, and learning the hymns. She asked many questions about what she read, and tried very hard to understand it. She would sit for hours by herself, and read and think. When our Bible-reader, Mrs. Tae, one of the most powerful women in China, came in, she would ply her with all manner of questions. She told us that she had been looking for the right road to eternal bliss all her life, and that she had lived by what she was taught. She had perfect faith in the idols until she came to us, but now she believed she had found the right road through Christ to God the Heavenly Father. When she was eight years old she was sent to the nunnery, because her mother had too many daughters, and as she grew older she became the head nun, and has seven under her. She is about forty-two years old, and has a very strong face. She wishes to give us her temple to have the Gospel preached in, so her friends can hear the good news."

One of the Bible women returned with her, and reports that the people are willing to listen and the nun is earnestly giving testimony, and a great work has commenced.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Holding on by a Finger.—A Devoted Worker says: "A gentleman, accompanied by his two little sons, was out walking on a very cold and frosty day. The ground was so slippery that they could scarcely get along. One after the other the boys fell, until one of them took hold of his father's hand, and then he walked quite securely. But the other did not think that he needed the whole of his father's hand; he could almost walk alone. By the aid of one of his father's fingers he walked a short distance; then he fell. He got up, and still unconscious of his own inability, he took the finger again and again, until at last thoroughly humbled and feeling his helplessness, he said, 'Father, give me your hand.' Then he walked on safely! How many of us are like that boy! We think that with a little help from God we shall be quite able to get along, but time and again we fall in the slippery path of sin, until we come to see that we are safe only as we hold our Heavenly Father's hand."

A Victim of Heart Disease.—Dr. Pentecost said: "A friend of mine, an American commercial gentleman, was taken ill with heart disease. His physician told him that if he would preserve his health he must give up business for some time, and take complete rest and change of air. The doctor, knowing his patient was wealthy, advised a tour in Europe, adding that when passing through Paris he might call upon a celebrated doctor there, a specialist in that species of disease with which he was affected. The gentleman set out, and one of his first visits was to the Parisian physician, to whom he stated his condition. The doctor made a most careful examination, and as he proceeded the gentleman was alarmed to see the grave expression which overspread his face. When he had finished, my friend, summoning all his courage, said, 'Now, doctor, please tell me the result of your examination. What is your diagnosis? Tell me the worst; I am quite able to bear it.' The physician answered, quietly, 'All I can say is, if you have any affairs to settle, you should settle them in order at once.' 'Why? You don't think I am going to die? I don't feel anything wrong with me. I am comparatively well,' the gentleman replied. 'My advice to you is to make your arrangements at once,' the physician replied, 'for you will die within ten days.' 'Die within ten days! Stuff and nonsense! I don't feel a bit like it, I have not an ache,' was the answer. The gentleman returned to his hotel; he did not believe the doctor, and went on in his usual way, but within three days he was dead. He had not felt it, yet the fell disease was doing its deadly work, and soon the citadel of life succumbed. Many sinners, when advised of their peril from sin and the law, reply they do not feel it. Their conscience is dead; they do not feel sin entwining its deadly grasps. But suddenly the climax comes. We therefore tell you of your danger, and say, 'Prepare to meet thy God.'"

Returning to the Filthy Mire.—Mr. Campbell relates: "About thirty years ago a man came into an evangelistic meeting, and being impressed with what the preacher said, he waited among the anxious to be pointed to Christ. There was no need to tell him he needed a Saviour. He had upon himself and within himself ample evidence of the degradation that drink works upon its slaves. His body was weak and emaciated, his clothes ragged and worn, while his shifting eye and flushed cheek showed too plainly his failing health. In the after-meeting he professed to accept Christ, and indeed he seemed to be altogether changed. From being a confirmed drunkard he became a sober, industrious man, and to outward appearance seemed to be a true Christian; but I was never very sure of him. After twelve years of decent moral living he fell, and plunged again into the abyss of drunkenness, going deeper than he had ever done before, and died in that horrible condition. What was wrong? The man had looked at his drunkenness and thought that if he were free from that, he would be all right; and the natural result was that he fell again into temptations."

A Judge Pays a Prisoner's Fine.—A Criminal was brought before a Scottish judge, charged with a grave violation of the law, the penalty of which was a fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment until the fine was paid. As the poor, miserable criminal was brought in, he looked at the judge, and at once a bright smile took possession of his hitherto dejected countenance. It was also noticed that as the judge regarded the prisoner, a slight flash of recognition crossed his face. From that moment the prisoner seemed to lose all anxiety. Witness after witness was called, and the case clearly proved, and now it only remained for the judge to pronounce the sentence, yet the prisoner seemed to have no fear of the result. The judge and he had been old school-fellows and close companions. The one by his energy had attained an honorable position on the bench, but the other went down step by step in the path of sin until he came to the criminal dock. The prisoner was called, and condemned to pay a fine of $500 and to be imprisoned until it was paid. As the prisoner heard it, he murmured, 'My old friend does not know me.' The officers removed him, and as soon as he was gone the judge said to the clerk of the court, 'Make out the prisoner's discharge; I will pay the fine.' He paid when the day's business was finished, and then he hastened after his old friend, and, seizing him by the hand, said, 'O Donald!'—and there was tenderness in his voice as he continued—'when I was on the bench I was the representative of the law and must be just, but here is your discharge; I have paid the fine. Come home with me till I see what can be done for you.' Sinners, if we stand before the law we must be condemned. God must condemn sin, but He has found a substitute, even Jesus Christ. 'For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'

A MEDITERRANEAN VOYAGE.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon at Brindisi, Italy, November 17, 1889.

"And so it came to pass that they escaped all safe to land." Acts 27: 44.

The Associations of Brindisi—Near the Port where Paul's Warning was Given—The Warning Disregarded—Paul's Consoling Assurance—Lessons of the Voyage—I. Those Who Get us Into Trouble do not Help us Out—II. Danger of Rejecting Counsel—III. Christians Always Safe—Experience of an Atlantic Cyclone—A Night to Turn the Hair White—The Scene in the Saloon—The Crashing Skylights—Cries of the Steerage Passengers—Like a Sea of Fire—Prayers of Prayerless Men—The Morning of Peace.

HAVING visited your historical city, which we desired to see because it was the terminus of the most famous road of the ages, the Roman Appian Way, and for its mighty fortress overshadowing a city which even Hannibal's hosts could not thunder down, we must to-morrow morning leave your harbor, and after touching at Athens and Corinth, voyage about the Mediterranean to Alexandria, Egypt. I have been reading this morning in my New Testament of a Mediterranean voyage in an Alexandrian ship. It was this very month of November. The vessel was lying in A Port Not Far From Here.

On board that vessel were two distinguished passengers: one, Josephus the historian, as we have strong reasons to believe; the other, a convict, one Paul by name, who was going to prison for upsetting things, or, as they termed it, "turning the world upside down." This convict had gained the confidence of the captain. Indeed, I think that Paul knew almost as much about the sea as did the captain. He had been shipwrecked three times already; he had dwelt much of his life amidst capstans and yardarms and cables and storms; and he knew what he was talking about. Seeing the equinoctial storm was coming, and perhaps noticing something unseaworthy in the vessel, he advised the captain to stay in the harbor. But I hear the captain and the first mate talking together. They say: "We cannot afford to take the advice of this landsman, and he a minister. He may be able to preach very well, but I don't believe he knows a marline-spike from a luff tackle. All aboard! Cast off! Shift the helm for headway!"

Who Fears the Mediterranean?

They had gone only a little way out when a whirlwind, called Euroclydon, made the torn sail its turban, shook the mast as you would brandish a spear, and tossed the hulk into the heavens. Overboard with the cargo! It is all washed with salt water, and worthless now; and there are no marine insurance companies. All hands ahoy, and out with the anchors! Great consternation comes on crew and passengers. The sea-monsters snort in the foam, and the billows clap their hands in glee of destruction. In a lull of the storm I hear a chain clank. It is the chain of the great apostle as he walks the deck, or holds fast to the rigging amidst the lurching of the ship—the spray dripping from his long beard as he cries out to the crew: "Now I exhort you to be of good cheer: for there shall be no loss of any man's life among you, but of the ship. For there stood by me this night the angel of God, whose I am, and whom I serve, saying, Fear not, Paul; thou must be brought before Cæsar: and, lo, God hath given thee all them that sail with thee."

Fourteen days have passed, and there is No Abatement of the Storm.

It is midnight. Standing on the lookout, the man peers into the darkness, and, by a flash of lightning, sees the long white line of the breakers, and knows they must be coming near to some country, and fears that in a few moments the vessel will be shivered on the rocks. The ship flies like chaff in the tornado. They drop the sounding-line, and by the light of the lantern they see it is twenty fathoms. Speeding along a little farther, they drop the line again, and by the light of the lantern they see it is fifteen fathoms. Two hundred and seventy-six souls within a few feet of awful shipwreck! The managers of the vessel, pretending they want to look over the side of the ship and undergird it, get into the small boat, expecting in it to escape; but Paul sees through the sham, and he tells them that if they go off in the boat it will be the death of them. The vessel strikes! The planks spring! The timbers crack! The vessel parts in the thundering surge! Oh, what wild struggling for life! Here they leap from plank to plank. Here they go under as if they would never rise, but, catching hold of a timber, come floating and panting on it to the beach. Here, strong swimmers spread their arms through the waves until their chins plow the sand, and they rise up and wring out their wet locks on the beach. When the roll of the ship is called, two hundred and seventy-six people answer to their names. "And so," says my text, "it came to pass that they escaped all safe to land."

I learn from this subject: First, that

Those Who Get Us Into Trouble

will not stay to help us out. These shipmen got Paul out of Fair Havens into the storm; but as soon as the tempest dropped upon them, they wanted to go off in the small boat, caring nothing for what became of Paul and the passengers. Ah me! human nature is the same in all ages. They who get us into trouble never stay to help us out. They who tempt that young man into a life of dissipation will be the first to laugh at his imbecility, and to drop him out of decent society. Gamblers always make fun of the losses of gamblers. They who tempt you into the contest with fists, saying, "I will back you!" will be the first to run. Look over all the predicaments of your life, and count the names of those who have got you into those predicaments, and tell me the name of one who ever helped you out. They were glad enough to get you out from Fair Havens, but when with damaged rigging you tried to get into harbor, did they hold for you a plank, or throw you a rope? Not one! Satan has got thousands of men into trouble, but he never got one out. He led them into theft, but he would not hide the goods or bail out the defendant. The spider shows the fly the way over the gossamer bridge into the cobweb, but it never shows the fly the way out of the cobweb over the gossamer bridge. I think that there were plenty of fast young men to help the prodigal spend his money, but when he had wasted his substance in riotous living, they let him go to the swine pastures, while they betook themselves to some other new-comer. They who take Paul out of Fair Havens will be of no help to him in the breakers of Melita.

I remark again, as a lesson learned from the text, that it is Dangerous to Refuse Counsel

of competent advisers. Paul told them not to go out with that ship. They thought he knew nothing about it. They said, "He is only a minister!" They went, and the ship was destroyed. There are a great many people who now say of ministers, "They know nothing about the world! They cannot talk to us!" Ah, my friends, it is not necessary to have the Asiatic cholera before you can give it medical treatment in others. It is not necessary to have your own arm broken before you can know how to splinter a fracture. And we who stand in the pulpit, and in the office of a Christian teacher, know that there are certain styles of belief, and certain kinds of behavior that will lead to destruction as certainly as Paul knew that if that ship went out of Fair Havens it would go to destruction. "Rejoice, oh young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment." We may not know much, but we know that.

Young people refuse the advice of parents. They say, "Father is over-suspicious, and mother is getting old." But those parents have been on the sea of life. They know where the storms sleep, and during their voyage have seen a thousand battered hulks marking the place where beauty burned, and intellect foundered, and morality sank. They are old sailors, having answered many a signal of distress, and endured great stress of weather, and gone scudding under bare poles; and the old folks know what they are talking about. Look at that man—in his cheek the glow of infernal fires. His eye flashes not as once, with thought, but with low passion. His brain is a sewer, through which impurity floats, and his heart the trough in which lust wallows and drinks. Men shudder as the leper passes, and parents cry, "Wolf! wolf!" Yet he once said the Lord's Prayer at his mother's knee, and against that iniquitous brow once pressed a pure mother's lip. But he refused her counsel. He went where euroclydons have their lair. He foundered on the sea, while all hell echoed at the roar of the wreck: Lost Pacifics!

Another lesson from the subject is that Christians are Always Safe.

There did not seem to be much chance for Paul getting out of that shipwreck, did there? They had not in those days, rockets with which to throw ropes over foundering vessels. Their lifeboats were of but little worth. And yet, notwithstanding all the danger, my text says that Paul escaped safe to land. And so it will always be with God's children. They may be plunged into darkness and trouble, but by the throne of the eternal God, I assert it, "they shall all escape safe to land."

Sometimes there comes a storm of commercial disaster. The cables break. The masts fall. The cargoes are scattered over the sea. Oh! what struggling and leaping on kegs and hogsheads and cornbins and store shelves! And yet, though they may have it so very hard in commercial circles, the good, trusting in God, all come safe to land. Wreckers go out on the ocean's beach and find the shattered hulks of vessels; and on the streets of our great cities there is many a wreck. Mainsail slit with banker's pen. Hulks abeam's end on insurance counters. Vast credits sinking, having suddenly sprung a leak. Yet all of them who are God's children shall at last, through His goodness and mercy, escape safe to land. The Scandinavian warriors used to drink wine out of the skulls of the enemies they had slain. Even so God will help us, out of the conquered ills and disasters of life, to drink sweetness and strength for our souls.

You have, my friends, had illustrations of How God Delivers His People.

I have had illustrations in my own life of the same truth. I was once in what on your Mediterranean you call a Euroclydon, but what on the Atlantic we call a cyclone, but the same storm. The steamer Greece, of the National line, swung out into the river Mersey at Liverpool, bound for New York. We had on board seven hundred—crew and passengers. We came together strangers—Italians, Irishmen, Englishmen, Swedes, Norwegians, Americans. Two flags floated from the masts—British and American ensigns. We had a new vessel, or one so thoroughly remodeled that the voyage had around it all the uncertainties of a trial trip. The great steamer felt its way cautiously out into the sea. The pilot was discharged; and, committing ourselves to the care of Him who holdeth the winds in His fist, we were fairly started on our voyage of three thousand miles.

It was rough nearly all the way—the sea with strong buffeting disputing our path. But one night at 11 o'clock, after the lights had been put out, a cyclone—a wind just made to tear ships to pieces—caught us in its clutches. It came down so suddenly that we had not time to take in the sails or to fasten the hatches. You may know that the bottom of the Atlantic is strewn with the ghastly work of cyclones. Oh! they are cruel winds. They have hot breath, as though they came up from infernal furnaces. Their merriment is the cry of affrighted passengers. Their play is the foundering of steamers. And, when the ship goes down, they laugh until both continents hear them. They go in circles, or, as I describe them with my hand, rolling on! rolling on! with finger of terror writing on the white sheet of the wave this sentence of doom: "Let all that come within this circle perish! Brigantines, go down! Clippers, go down! Steamships, go down!" And the vessel, hearing the terrible voice, crouches in the surf, and as the waters gurge through the hatches and port-holes, it lowers away thousands of feet down, farther and farther, until at last it strikes the bottom; and all is peace, for they have landed. Helmsman, dead at the wheel! Engineer, dead amidst the extinguished furnaces! Captain, dead on the quarter-deck! Passengers, dead in the cabin! Buried in the great

Cemetery of Dead Steamers, beside the City of Boston, the Lexington, the President, the Cambria—waiting for the archangel's trumpet to split up the decks, and wrench open the cabin doors, and unfasten the hatches. I thought that I had seen storms on the sea before; but all of them together might have come under one wing of that cyclone. We were only eight or nine hundred miles from home, and in high expectation of soon seeing our friends, for there was no one on board so poor as not to have a friend. But it seemed as if we were to be disappointed. The most of us expected then and there to die. There were none who made light of the peril save two: one was an Englishman, and he was drunk; and the other was an American, and he was a fool! Oh, what a time it was! A night to make one's hair turn white. We came out of the berths, and stood in the gangway, and looked into the steerage, and sat in the cabin. While seated there, we heard overhead something Like Minute Guns.

It was the bursting of the sails. We held on with both hands to keep our places. Those who attempted to cross the floor came back bruised and gashed. Cups and glasses were dashed to fragments: pieces of the table getting loose, swung across the saloon. It seemed as if the hurricane took that great ship of thousands of tons and stood it on end, and said, "Shall I sink it, or let it go this once?" And then it came down with such force that the billows trampled over it, each mounted on a fury. We felt that everything depended on the propelling screw. If that stopped for an instant we knew the vessel would fall off into the trough of the sea and sink, and so we prayed that the screw, which three times since leaving Liverpool had already stopped, might not stop now. Oh how anxiously we listened for the regular thump of the machinery, upon which our lives seemed to depend! After a while some one said: "The screw is stopped!" No; its sound had only been overpowered by the uproar of the tempest, and we breathed easier again when we heard the regular pulsations of the overtasked machinery going thump! thump! thump! At 3 o'clock in the morning the water covered the ship from prow to stern, and the skylights gave way! The deluge rushed in, and we felt that one or two more waves like that must swamp us forever. As the water rolled back and forward in the cabins, and dashed against the wall, it sprang half way up to the ceiling. Rushing through the skylights as it came in with such terrific roar, there went up from the cabin which I pray God I may never hear again. I have dreamed the whole scene over again, but God has mercifully kept me from hearing that one cry. Into it seemed to be compressed the agony of expected shipwreck.

A Shriek of Horror

There were about five hundred and fifty passengers in the steerage, and as the water rushed in and touched the furnaces, and began violently to hiss, the poor creatures in the steerage imagined that the boilers were giving way. Those passengers writhed in the water and in the mud, some praying, some crying, all terrified. They made a rush for the deck. An officer stood on deck and beat them back with blow after blow. It was necessary. They could not have stood an instant on the deck. Oh how they begged to get out of the hold of the ship! One woman, with a child in her arms, rushed up and caught hold of one of the officers and cried: "Do let me out! I will help you! Do let me out! I cannot die here!" Some got down and prayed to the Virgin Mary, saying: "O blessed mother! keep us! Have mercy on us!" Some stood with white lips and fixed gaze, Silent in their Terror.

Some wrung their hands and cried out, "O God! what shall I do? What shall I do?" The time came when the crew could no longer stay on the deck, and the cry of the officers was: "Below! all hands below!" Crash! went the lifeboat on one side. Crash! went the lifeboat on the other side. The great booms got loose, and, as with the heft of a thunderbolt, pounded the deck and beat the mast—the jibboom, studdingsail boom, and squaresail boom, with their strong arms, beating time to

The Awful March

and music of the hurricane. Meanwhile the ocean became phosphorescent. The whole scene looked like fire. The water dripping from the rigging, there were ropes of fire; and there were masts of fire; and there was a deck of fire. A ship of fire, sailing on a sea of fire, through a night of fire. May I never see anything like it again! Everybody prayed. A lad of twelve years of age got down and prayed for his mother. "If I should give up," he said, "I do not know what would become of mother." There were men who, I think, had not prayed for thirty years, who then got down on their knees. When a man who has neglected God all his life feels that he has come to his last time, it makes a very busy night. All of our sins and shortcomings passed through our minds. My own life seemed utterly unsatisfactory. I could only say, "Here, Lord, take me as I am. I cannot mend matters now. Lord Jesus, thou didst die for the chief of sinners. That's me! It seems, Lord, as if my work is done, and poorly done, and upon thine infinite mercy I cast myself, and in this hour of commit myself and her whom I hold by the hand to thee, O Lord Jesus! praying that it may be a short struggle in the water, and that at the same instant we may both arrive in glory!" Oh! I tell you that a man prays straight to the mark when he has a cyclone above him, an ocean beneath him, and eternity so close to him that he can feel its breath on his cheek.

Shipwreck and Darkness

The night was long. At last we saw the dawn looking through the port-holes. As in the olden time, in the fourth watch of the night Jesus came walking on the sea, from wave-cliff to wave-cliff; and when He puts His foot upon a billow, though it may be tossed up with might, it goes down. He cried to the winds, Hush! They knew His voice. The waves knew His foot. They died away. And in the shining track of His feet I read these letters on scrolls of foam and fire, "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of God as the waters cover the sea." The ocean calmed. The path of the steamer became more and more mild, until, on the last morning out, the sun threw round about us a glory such as I never witnessed before. God made a pavement of mosaic, reaching from horizon to horizon, for all the splendors of earth and heaven to walk upon—a pavement bright enough for the foot of a seraph, bright enough for the wheels of the archangel's chariot. As a parent embraces a child, and kisses away its grief, so over that sea, that had been writhing in agony in the tempest, the morning threw its arms of beauty and of benediction, and the lips of earth and heaven met.

As I came on deck—it was very early, and we were nearing the shore—I saw a few sails against the sky. They seemed walking the billows. I leaned over the taffrail of the vessel, and said, "Thy way, O God, is in the sea, and Thy path in the great waters."

Like the Spirits of the Night

It grew lighter. The clouds were hung in purple clusters along the sky, and, as if those purple clusters were pressed into red wine and poured out upon the sea, every wave turned into crimson. Yonder, fire-cleft stood opposite to fire-cleft; and here, a cloud, rent and tinged with light, seemed like a palace, with flames bursting from the widows. The whole scene lighted up until it seemed as if the angels of God were ascending and descending upon stairs of fire, and the wave-crests, changed into jasper and crystal and amethyst, as they were flung toward the beach, made me think of the crowns of heaven cast before the throne of the great Jehovah. I leaned over the taffrail again, and said, with more emotion than before, "Thy way, O God, is in the sea, and Thy path in the great waters!"

So, I thought, will be the going off of the storm and Night of the Christian's Life.

The darkness will fold its tents and away! The golden feet of the rising morn will come skipping upon the mountains, and all the wrathful billows of the world's woe break into the splendor of eternal joy. And so we came into the harbor. The cyclone behind us. Our friends before us. God, who is always good, all around us. And if the roll of the crew and the passengers had been called, seven hundred souls would have answered to their names. "And so it came to pass that we all escaped safe to land." And may God grant that, when all our Sabbaths on earth are ended, we may find that, through the rich mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ, we all have weathered the gale!

Into the harbor of heaven now we glide,

Home at last!

Softly we drift on the bright silver tide,

Home at last!

Glory to God! All our dangers are o'er,

We stand secure on the glorified shore,

Glory to God! we will shout evermore,

Home at last!

Home at last!

THE IMPERIAL ENTRY INTO TANGIER.

(See Illustration on page 748.)

SINCE the courageous and zealous labors of Mr. Pearce and his colleagues among the Kabyles of northern Africa have been extended to the Berber races of the other sections of that region, Christian people have taken a growing interest in all that relates to these extraordinary nations. The accompanying illustration, therefore, depicting the entrance, into his great city of Tangier, of Muley Hassan, Emperor of Morocco, Sultan of Fez, etc., etc., will be welcome to our readers. The high potentate was received on September 22 last with all the pomp and barbaric splendor that the city could organize. Two files of soldiery were drawn up to do him honor. On the one side Aska infantry, on the other Majasnia cavalry, and between these the monarch rode, preceded and followed by a suite magnificently bedecked, and carrying the insignia of their offices. The city lies a few miles southwest of the point of the African coast opposite Gibraltar, and is a strongly fortified port, highly prized by his Moorish majesty.

They are a strange and deeply interesting race, these Moors, differing widely from the other races of Africa, and very proud of the differences. Their language is Arabic, and their religion the highest type of Mohammedanism. Until 1881 no systematized effort was made to proclaim the gospel among them. It was generally believed that the effort would be futile. A race that had forced Mohammedanism upon unwilling neighbors by the sword did not appear a promising field for gospel effort. But in that year Mr. Pearce labored with so much success among the Kabyles that when he returned two years later with the report of what God had effected through him, arrangements were at once made for extending the mission to Morocco and other lands. Both in Tunis and Morocco a wide field was found for Christian work, and no serious obstacles were encountered, except such as arise from the wretched misgovernment of the country. The mission has ten workers there, and several friends who co-operate. It has a medical mission, which includes a hospital and dispensary. The workers are full of hope, and have already been cheered by several conversions.

THE TEMPLE DEDICATED

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for December 1, 1 Kings 8: 12-63; Golden Text, Heb. 2: 20.

The Momentous Question About the Temple—God Appearing When Men Retire—The Effect of the Monarch's Testimony—Solomon's Question—His Humility—The City Without a Temple—The Temple of Christ's Body—Special Crises Foreseen and Cited—The Refuge for All Troubles—a King's Blessing—All Committed to God—Recognizes Him as a Person, Not an Idea—Ancient and Modern Notions of Fools—The Attesting Glory—The Joy of the People.

"THE Lord is in His holy temple; let all the earth keep silence before Him." The essence of true worship is to let God have His place, to let Him have the word. God was pleased when first David thought of building the temple, and He watched over all the preparations which were made, and over the progress of the building itself; but the question still remained open, Would He dwell there? Solomon had a grand dedication service. He thought such an occasion demanded the presence of "the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, . . . that they might bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of the city of David, which is Zion." The presence of the ark of the covenant, the witness of God's covenant with His people, was to be the real dedication of the building. Between the cherubim, where the ark was set, was the place for the glory of the Lord, the visible token of His dwelling among His people.

The "men of Israel," following the example of their elders, assembled themselves unto King Solomon in such numbers that the sacrifices that they brought, and offered, "could not be told nor numbered for multitude." When the priests brought in the ark of God to the most holy place under the wings of the cherubim, nothing remained in the ark at the time but the tables of stone containing the commandments of God. The golden pot of manna, and Aaron's rod that budded had been lost when the ark was in the hands of God's enemies. Man had done what he could, they had assembled to do honor to God, they had brought up the ark, all was in order, but one thing was lacking still; it needed for man to retire before God could take full possession. "And it came to pass, of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord." "The Lord is in His holy temple."

When the Priests Were Come Out

It is impossible to consider this subject without remembering "Ye are the temple of the living God." (2 Cor. 6: 16.) "What! know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost which is in you, which ye have of God?" (1 Cor. 6: 19.) The body may be presented a living sacrifice to God, it may be made a receptacle for the ark of the covenant, that is, we may be converted, and even consecrated, but man must go out for God to come in, self must give way before God. "The Lord is in His holy temple." What then? "Let all the earth be silent before Him," let all that is of self, all that is of the earth, earthy, go out from His dwelling-place, that His name may be hallowed, His kingdom come, His will be done, in us. God and self cannot reign together, both cannot have the kingdom. In order that he might be better heard, King Solomon had caused a brazen scaffold to be constructed, and he had "set it in the midst of the court; and upon it he stood and kneeled down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven." (11 Chron. 6: 13.) Oh what a day it would be for any country if the reigning monarch had it in his heart to pour out a full heart to God in prayer in the midst of the people. We can hardly conceive of the effect it would have upon the masses of the people if such a testimony of the true fear and love of God were given from the throne. Solomon's glory was very great, his wisdom was unsurpassed, but never did he so shine as the king and father of his people as at this moment. Solomon was Not Ashamed of His God, as so many people are in the present day; it was his glory to shew what a value he set upon his God. Having blessed the people, as being their royal priest for the time, he told out to the assembled multitude the origin of the temple building in the communion with God which his father David had had on the subject, how the Lord had not permitted David his father to build the temple, but had promised him a son who should rise up in his stead and build; and the King testified to the faithfulness of God in fulfilling His word. "The Lord hath performed His word which He spake; and I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as the Lord promised, and have built an house for the name of the Lord God of Israel. And I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the Lord, which He made with our fathers, when He brought them out of the land of Egypt." And there before the altar where the sacrifice—the type of "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world" (John 1: 29)—was laid, Solomon began to pray. "Lord God of Israel," he said "there is no God like Thee, in heaven above, or on earth beneath, which keepeth covenant and mercy with Thy servants that walk before Thee with all their heart." Here was a king justifying and glorifying the King of kings. A king who was no cypher in the politics or in power, whose intellectual gifts were the wonder of the age, yet, on the greatest occasion of his life, not ashamed to commend his God, but acting the prophet and the priest in his own person.

What Has Come to the so-called Christian kings and queens of our days, that we hear of no such royal testimonies to our God? How comes it that in high circles the fear of God is at a discount, and men of intellect and position so often look down on those that fear God? Alas! "the fear of God," which "is the beginning of wisdom," is wanting in the wisdom of this world which God hath made foolish. (1 Cor. 1: 20.)

But the powerful King Solomon finds himself in the real, felt presence of a greater than he, and he says, "But will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain Thee; how much less this house that I have builded!" Solomon, great as he was, did not delude himself into the idea that he was conferring a great favor upon God by building Him a temple. On the other hand, he counted it a great favor of God to accept anything at the hands of His servants; and he continued, "Yet have Thou respect unto the prayers of Thy servant, and to his supplication, O Lord my God, to hearken unto the cry and the prayer which Thy servant prayeth before Thee to-day; that Thine eyes may be open toward this house night and day, even toward the place of which Thou hast said, My name shall be there, that Thou mayest hearken unto the prayer which Thy servant shalt make toward this place. And hearken Thou to the supplication of Thy servant, and of Thy people Israel, when they shall pray toward this place: and hear Thou in heaven, Thy dwelling-place; and when Thou hearest, forgive."

Solomon took in the situation—the infinite God could not be circumscribed by place or time. But since He called Himself the God of Israel, Solomon prayed that His eyes and His ears might specially be open toward the temple, and those who prayed toward it, so that the eye of the great Father might meet His children's eyes, the ear of the great God might hear the cry of His creatures. Thank God, in the new Jerusalem there is no temple, for "the Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the temple thereof." (Rev. 21: 22.) Thank God, those of us who have taken our place as members of Christ's body, of His flesh, and of His bones, look toward the temple of His body, and there our eye and ear meet God's.

Then the king particularized certain cases in which he claimed the answer to prayer which should be made toward the temple. In the case of wrong between man and man, he claimed that God should show which was the guilty party: in the case of defeat in war, as a judgment following sin, that, upon confession, God should forgive and restore them; in the case of drought or famine, pestilence, blasting, mildew, locust, caterpillar, or if besieged by an enemy, there be; what prayer and supplication soever be made by any man, or by all Thy people Israel, which shall know every man the plague of his own heart, and spread forth his hands toward this house, then hear Thou in Heaven Thy dwelling-place, and forgive, and do, and give to every man according to his ways, whose heart Thou knowest, . . . that they may fear Thee all the days that they live in the land." Solomon recognizes there that no trouble comes by chance or by accident; he recognizes the hand of God in all; he does not ask for pardon without confession; and then He asks it, not simply for the penitent, but "that they may fear Thee." All through this marvellous prayer the King takes the side of God, and looks at things from His point of view. He asks for the stranger who shall come and pray before this house, that God will hear him in all that he calleth to Him for . . . "that all people of the earth may know Thy name."

"Whatsoever Plague, Whatsoever Sickness

At the end of his prayer, as at the beginning, Solomon blessed the people: he rose from his knees and stood and blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice, saying, "Blessed be the Lord that hath given rest unto His people Israel, according to all that He hath promised; there hath not failed one word of all His good promise which He promised by the hand of Moses His servant." . . . "Now therefore arise, O Lord God, into thy resting-place, Thou and the ark of Thy strength; let Thy priests, O Lord God, be clothed with salvation, and let thy saints rejoice in goodness. O Lord God, turn not away the face of thine anointed." (11 Chron. 6: 41.)

It was one definite committal of himself and his people unto the hands of God, with perfect confidence that he was dealing with the living God, who was an interested party in the welfare of his people. Modern religion scouts the idea of the efficacy of prayer, and reduces God to an insensate and immovable idea. It is out of fashion to deal with God as one who has power to interfere in things which happen around us; a cynical smile creeps over the face of those who hear God mentioned as

A Real Living Person

But the wisest of men thought differently. In his days those who said "no God" were counted fools (Ps. 53: 1), now, those who believe in Him are counted fools. Solomon believed in the supernatural, and according to his faith it was unto him. When he had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven and consumed the burnt offerings and the sacrifices; and the glory of the Lord filled the house." There was a token from God that the prayer was heard, a visible witness which human eyes could see. "And the priests could not enter into the house of the Lord, because the glory of the Lord had filled the Lord's house." The priests could not add anything to a God-filled house.

This distinct answer from God awed the people. All the children of Israel looked on when the fire came down, and the glory of the Lord was upon the house, and with one common impulse they threw themselves upon their faces "and worshipped and gave thanks unto the Lord, saying, For He is good, for His mercy endureth for ever." Solomon had shewn great power of organization; the priests and Levites were all in their offices, as though the temple worship had been an habitual thing, and there was much of music in the worship. Then Solomon dedicated the middle court, and afterwards the altar, the ceremony taking seven days, to signify that this was a perfect dedication. Jerusalem must have been filled with the little tents of people from all parts of the land, "from the entering in of Hamath," on the extreme north, "to the river of Egypt," on the extreme south.

What was the effect of this ceremony upon the people? Some pretend that the service of God leads to melancholy and depression. "On the three and twentieth day of the seventh month, he sent the people away unto their tents, joyful and glad of heart (not sullen or morose), for the goodness that the Lord had shewed unto David, and to Solomon, and to Israel his people." There is life and power, joy and gladness in the service of the Lord; contact with God dignifies man, and gives him liberty of movement in all his being, as nothing else can.

THE MURDERED MISSIONARY.

NEWS has come that the Rev. E. B. Savage, the well-known missionary in New Guinea has been murdered by the natives. It arrived on October 29, and but few details were given in the cable dispatch, nor have since come.

The mail, however, brought a letter from Mr. Savage himself, which, though written in June, arrived almost simultaneously with the telegram announcing his death. The latter discloses facts from which it is not difficult to infer the circumstances that led to his massacre. It described a visit which the writer had just paid to a wild tribe of skull-hunting cannibals, by whose treachery his life had been greatly imperilled.

There was in the centre of New Guinea a tribe of people called Togari, a most mysterious race of unknown origin, speaking a different language from the other inhabitants, and though Mr. Cousins, the friend to whom Mr. Savage addressed his letter, could not, as a matter of certainty, say that Mr. Savage and his native companions had been murdered by these savages, everything seemed to point in that direction. Mr. Savage said that he had spent Sunday, May 21, at Sabail, an island off the coast, and the Togari had been seen on the mainland on the previous Thursday. A high fence was put up round the mission house as a protection, and the men armed themselves. Before long a lugger came up bringing tidings that the Togari had attacked a village not far off, and had killed a man named Martin. They cut off his head, but left the body, and therefore Mr. Savage thought they were not cannibals. On the following Thursday, as he was going on board to return to Sabail from the mainland, fire was discerned on the mainland. A native chief pressed him to go and see what the intentions of the Togari were. Mr. Savage replied "I am quite willing to go, but it will be to try and make friends with them, and you must not spoil my work by commencing hostilities."

He started in the Mary with two canoes following, and saw a regular string of Togari canoes coming toward them. Presently to his

DIAGRAM of APPROXIMATE LENGTH of each of the Four Epochs or Intervals which have yet to elapse during the ensuing Four Years and Six months between the present month of November, 1889, and Napoleon's Jewish Covenant on April 21, 1894, which commences the Seven Final (Jewish) Years of this Christian Age, ending on April 11, 1901.

THE FOUR EPOCHS.

FIRST EPOCH of Continuance of the existing general European Peace onward from the present month of November, 1889, until the outbreak of the Prophetic War, which is to reconstruct the map of Europe, and change 23 kingdoms now existing within the territories of Cæsar's Roman Empire into a Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms. (Dan. 7: 24; 2: 41.)

SECOND EPOCH of the Greatest European War ever known, which will end with changing the existing 23 kingdoms of Cæsar's Roman Empire into 10 Confederated Kingdoms ruled by Ten Kings as foretold in Daniel 7: 24; 2: 41.

THIRD EPOCH of an ensuing Peaceful Interval from the Formation of the Confederacy of the Ten Kings until the rise of Napoleon as an Eleventh Little Horn or King in or near Macedonia. (Dan. 8: 9.)

FOURTH EPOCH of Napoleon's earlier career, from his first rise as a Little Hellenic King (over some Little State like Macedonia), and his waxing great toward the South and the East and "Pleasant Land," until he becomes King of Syria and makes a seven years' covenant with the Jews on Passover Day, April 21, 1894 (Daniel 7: 24; 8: 9; 9: 27), reaching to Passover Week 1901.

THEIR DURATION.

Surely not longer than several months, until near the middle of 1890. For can the wars and revolutions that are to change Twenty-three kingdoms into Ten—apparently by the end of 1892—be accomplished within less time than two years, from the midst of 1890 to the midst of 1892?

Most likely not shorter than eighteen months, but more probably about two years, and beginning near the middle of 1890, much more probably than so late as the early part of 1891, and ending not later than the middle of 1892.

This interval may be expected to be scarcely less than several months, nor longer than about a year, and probably falling to a great extent within 1892.

Napoleon's initial exploits included in this Epoch seem to occupy at least eighteen months, and, therefore, as they culminate in his covenant on April 21, 1894, to commence not later than the latter part of 1892, but they might occupy as long a time as two years, and, therefore, begin in the early part of 1892.

The Foregoing Diagram indicates the expected course of events between now and Passover Day, April 21, 1894. The occurrences afterwards are: the renewal of sacrifices in a rebuilt temple at Jerusalem, on November 8, 1894: then the translation of 144,000 watchful living Christians on March 5, 1896: then after nine months of great Gospel preaching from March to Dec. 1896, eight months of universal war from Dec. 1896 to August 1897 (Rev. 6: 2-4): and lastly, 3½ years of the Napoleonic Antichrist's world-wide reign of terror until Antichrist perishes at Christ's descent in Passover Week 1901, which is the end of Daniel's great period of 2,345 years from Artaxerxes' command to rebuild Jerusalem in Passover Week B. C. 445 (Daniel 8: 14; 12: 11, 12; 9: 25; Neh. 2).

astonishment and dismay, he saw smoke from a rifle fired by one of his own men, and then knew that all hope of a friendly meeting had passed. His people, however, assured him afterward that they had only fired after a Togari had shot arrows at them. The Togari fled, and on examining what had been left behind by the Togari, he was shocked by the signs of barbarism. Mr. Savage wrote, "At present I can see no way open to reach them, but God may open it when we least expect it." The murdered missionary was thirty-five years of age, and had been at the New Guinea station about four years.

A BIG CONVERT.

At a meeting of Congregational ministers at Hull, England, last month, the Rev. W. Mottram, who has been successfully preaching the gospel for twenty-eight years, thus described his infantile ordination and first service: My dear old father used to say to me, "William, when they told me you were born, and I might go upstairs, the first thing I did was to go and kiss your cheek, and then kiss the brow of your mother, and then," he said, "I went straight away to my barn, and in that barn I prayed that my dear boy might love Jesus from his earliest childhood, that he might become a Christian man, and a minister of the gospel, and preach the Lord Jesus Christ to hundreds and thousands of souls." I was born, sir, with a feeling that I must be a preacher of the Cross of the Lord Jesus Christ. I gave my heart to the Lord Jesus early, and before I was fifteen my father said to me, "Now, William, yonder is a little congregation, there will be twenty or thirty people; I cannot go because of this bronchitis; you must go and do your best." Well, I was not fifteen, but I went and stood up in my round jacket, and took these words as my text: "Him that cometh unto Me I will in no wise cast out." A great big farmer was there, six feet high. He came to me afterward, and said, "Well, William, if a little fellow like you has begun to serve the Lord Jesus, it is time a great big fellow like I did." He said, "Now, William, you must pray for me." I did so, and he bowed down his ear to me, for I could not reach up to him, and I talked to him, and told him how I believed in the cross of Christ, how I knew Jesus had saved me, and felt sure He would save him. Two years ago, and more than thirty years after that service, I went to the death-bed of my own dear mother, and on my way I called at the farmhouse; but Philip Miles was not there; two months before he had gone to heaven, and his widow told me the very day before he died he said, "Thank God that William Mottram came to conduct that meeting that night. I am going to heaven, and I rejoice in my Saviour."

AN INDIAN WOMAN PHYSICIAN.

In his Medical Missionary Record Dr. Dowkontt reports that a girl of the Omaha tribe has graduated in medicine at the Philadelphia Woman's Medical College, and has received her diploma. He says: "The lady is Dr. Susan La Flesche, who had already become a favorite among her people, and now that she returns to take them scientific medicine, combined with Christianity, to replace the 'Medicine Man' of former days, we may feel assured of her usefulness and success among them."

"Dr. Walker, one of the principal lecturers of the college, in his address at its Commencement, spoke thus of the Indian graduate; 'Dr. La Flesche commenced her studies of English at the school on the Indian reservation. Coming East, she continued them for awhile at a boarding-school, and later at the excellent school for her people at Hampton, Va., where she graduated in 1886, and came at once to Philadelphia to study medicine. The impulse to a professional career was not of recent growth nor from friendly suggestions from those who had watched her course. It came as an inspiration when at home with her people, and was born of a desire to see them independent, so far as she could make them, of the too frequently unskilled and oftener indifferent attention of the reservation doctor. Thoughtful of a service to her people, child though she was, she permitted not the magnitude of her task to stay the inspiration, but bravely, thoughtfully, diligently pursued the course, and to-day receives her fitting reward. All this without a precedent. She will stand among her people as the first woman physician. Surely we may record with joy such courage, constancy and ability.'"

Prophetic Studies. A Report of the Address delivered at the Prophetic Conference at Chicago, with portraits of some of the speakers. It contains 216 pages. Fifty cents in paper covers, including postage. Address Manager, 63 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

NOTICE.

At the beginning of next year the "Christian Herald" will be enlarged by making the pages a little longer and wider than now, so that thirteen pages will contain a larger quantity of reading matter than fourteen of the present size. The price of the annual subscription will NOT be increased.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Benefits to be Expected from the Pan-American Congress were outlined by Senator Frye, of Maine, last week in an interview with a reporter. As the Senator was the originator of the legislative action which resulted in the meeting of the Congress, his opinions are of more than ordinary weight in the matter. It appears that he has no expectation of free trade being established between this country and the States represented in the Congress, nor does he believe that if the Congress advised it, the proposal would find favor with this Administration. He thinks, however, that special concessions of tariff might be made mutually, which would enormously increase our commerce with our southern neighbors without detriment to home producers. He mentions, as an instance, some kinds of sugar and a particular variety of wool, which are not produced here, but are grown in South America. By abolishing the duty on those two articles, and getting, as compensation, free admission from them of some of our own products, we would suffer no loss and get a fourfold advantage. Some such arrangement, and the adoption of a common silver coin to be current in all the countries, are, the Senator thinks, the main direct advantages to be hoped for from the Congress. Indirectly, he expects that the 6,000-mile trip the Congress is making through the States will enlighten the members as to the extent and resources of this country, which cannot fail to increase their respect and induce a desire for closer relations.

Proposals for a New Treaty Between Hawaii and the United States have been brought by the Hawaiian Minister who has just returned to Washington from Honolulu. The chief of these proposals, and the one that involves the greatest responsibility, is that the United States shall guarantee the independence of the Hawaiian kingdom. That this is a grave position to take is evident from the recent complication with Germany in the Samoan question, and the struggle in the Berlin conference. At the same time it is generally understood that our Government has practically, though not formally, assumed the position of guarantor. For more than forty years it has been known that the United States would not tolerate the interference of any European power with the independence of Hawaii, and the proposed treaty would simply give formal expression to that understanding, and might be a useful warning to some parties whom it may concern. On the other side Hawaii offers, in order to inspire us with confidence, to pledge herself to make no treaties with foreign powers without the cognizance and consent of the United States. Besides this external advantage which Hawaii would gain, it would relieve her of an internal vexation. Certain interested or nervous politicians periodically arouse national prejudice by circulating a report that the United States are plotting to annex Hawaii. A clause of the treaty pledging us to make no such attempt would reassure the Hawaiian people and disarm apprehensions which have led to political complications in the Islands.

A Warning to the Ocean Greyhounds was administered on November 12 by the International Maritime Conference now in session at Washington. An effort was made to remove a clause of the existing regulations relating to the speed of vessels in a fog, mist, or falling snow. This was opposed by the delegates from Germany, France, and Norway, who desired to make the regulation still more stringent instead of removing it. In fact, Mr. Flood, a Norwegian delegate, urged the conference to forbid any vessel proceeding in a fog at more than half its normal speed. The English and American delegates were in favor of leaving the rate of speed to the discretion of the captains, on the theory that concern for the safety of their own ships would make them cautious. Finally, however, the conference rejected their arguments, and passed an amendment requiring "moderate speed," and ordering that whenever a steamer was apprised by a fog-horn of a ship being apparently before her beam, her engines should be stopped until all danger of collision is over.

The Attitude of the Roman Catholic Church in America on the public school question was defined last week at the great Congress of the Church in Baltimore, Md. The committee appointed to frame the platform adopted the following clause: "As in the State schools no provision is made for teaching religion we must continue to support our own schools, colleges, and universities already established, and multiply and perfect others so that the benefits of a Christian education may be brought within the reach of every Catholic child within these United States." It was evident, however, from the speeches that this negative censure of our public schools did not fully express the views of the delegates. One of them went so far as to contend that "the State which demands education, which collects money by public taxes, and pays that money out for teaching, must pay equally all who teach." This implies that the State should pay the Roman Catholic teachers who are teaching Romanism to the children. It is well that the public should understand this, and be on its guard.

The Trial of the Men Charged With the murder of Dr. Cronin reached the end of its first stage last week. The State rested its case after the evidence of a most important witness, who supplied a missing link in the chain of proof. The witness was a German woman, who apparently did not herself know the full import of her story. She stated that on the night of the murder she passed the Carlson cottage just as the now famous buggy and white horse stopped at the door. She saw a man jump from the buggy and enter the cottage. She did not know Dr. Cronin, but her description of the man, his dress, and the instrument-case he carried, proved that it was Cronin whom she saw. Passing the cottage again a few minutes later, she heard the sound of a scuffle, cries for help, and then murderous blows, which crashed as if breaking something. Painful circumstances of a personal character had served to fix the exact date and time and place in the woman's memory. Her testimony remained unshaken under cross-examination. It must therefore be impossible for the jury to doubt that on the night of May 4 Dr. Cronin entered the cottage, as the State contends. The evidence previously given, with this last link unexpectedly supplied since the case began, makes a very strong case.

An Expedition to Meet Mr. H. M. Stanley, bearing provisions and supplies, is being sent out by the New York Herald from Zanzibar. As it will march through territory under German control, it will carry the German flag and be under the protection of the German Government. The fact that Emin Pasha is a German will make this action a gratification to the German people. Stanley, too, will naturally be peculiarly gratified that the journal which equipped him and sent him on his first journey to Africa when he went in search of Livingstone should go to his succor in this the most arduous and perilous of all his undertakings. He will surely be in need of medicines and provisions, as he does not, according to his latest letters, expect to reach Zanzibar before the middle of January, and will therefore be in a condition to appreciate the relief which the Herald is sending. The expedition will consist of seventy-five men besides its German escort, and its supplies will comprise quinine, tea, coffee, and other luxuries. As Mr. Stanley is a total abstainer, it will not be necessary to take wine or spirits for his use.

A Revolution in Brazil was Reported in a brief cable dispatch on November 15. It stated that there had been an outbreak at Rio Janeiro, that a republic had been proclaimed, with Senator Da Fonseca as President, and that the army was in control. The news caused profound astonishment, as the Emperor, Dom Pedro, was believed to be heartily beloved by the whole nation. His daughter, who is heiress to the throne, was not so popular, but it is not long since her husband, the Comte D'Eu, publicly stated that she was ready to renounce her claims whenever a popular vote indicated that the nation desired a republic. The revolution is the more surprising because, at the recent election, the advocates of republican institutions were unable to elect more than two members of the Chamber of Deputies. It is conjectured that the movement is exactly the reverse of the general order of such outbreaks. Persons acquainted with Brazilian politics say that the change may be in the direction of a less liberal form of Government, and has probably been organized by discontented Conservatives and slave owners, who resented the emancipation proclamation of last year, by which half a million slaves were set free without compensation to their owners. Should the revolution be successful there will be no monarchy left in America. Every other independent nation on the two continents is a republic.

The Election of President of the French Chamber of Deputies has placed that office in the hands of M. Floquet. An effort is made to show that the choice indicates radical supremacy. Another and more probable explanation is that it is merely an indication of tact and moderation on the part of the Opportunists. It would appear that in the face of the alliance of the enemies of the Republic, its friends are concentrating their forces and dropping their minor differences. If the Radicals can be conciliated by the election of so experienced and able a president as M. Floquet, the Opportunists could well afford to make the concession.

A Roseate View of the Condition of Ireland was taken by the English Premier in his speech at the banquet given by the Lord Mayor of London. He said that he was glad to be able to affirm that Ireland was progressing. Prosperity was increasing in that country, disorder was vanishing, and there was every prospect of a permanent settlement of the burning questions between the two countries. No member of the Government indulged in wild theories of home rule, but were ready with a practical policy which would satisfy the country. He added that the Government had not the faintest intention of changing its Irish policy. Dispatches from American press correspondents, however, indicate that there is trouble ahead for Lord Salisbury. He could not maintain his position without the aid of Lord Hartington, Mr. Chamberlain, and the other deserters from the Liberal party, and they are said to be demanding too high a price for their support. A prominent Conservative is reported to have declared that he and his friends would prefer to see his party out of office than to see them abandoning Conservative principles at the dictation of their Liberal allies. If this feeling spreads, Lord Salisbury will have to decide whom he will offend, his own party or his allies, and either decision will be disastrous.

A Testimony in the White House to the Value of the Bible was given recently before a band of Indians. Mr. Wanamaker, in the course of a speech at the meeting to bid farewell to Dr. A. T. Pierson on the eve of his departure to Scotland, said that a company of Indians called on President Harrison in the White House. The Indian chief remarked on the comfort of the President's surroundings, and contrasted them with the rude, primitive state in which he himself lived. He asked why there was such a difference, and what was the remedy for this condition. General O. O. Howard, who was present, took up a Bible and said, "This is it—the Word of God."

The Silver Cross Circle of the King's Daughters in New York has undertaken an appropriate work. It has organized a project for aiding a number of poor families to get better homes than they now occupy. There are many parents in the city with straitened means who are now obliged to live and rear their families amid vicious surroundings, where the health of body and soul is imperilled. The King's Daughters propose to build an improved tenement house in a central situation, and to rent its rooms to godly families at the same rates which they now have to pay in the objectionable tenements. It is believed that after the first outlay the enterprise would be nearly, if not quite, self-supporting. Those who are feeble and aged, and the weak and friendless, widows with little ones to maintain, and wives with sick husbands, who are, of necessity, the only bread-winners, will have the preference.

The Plans for the New Brooklyn Tabernacle were finally determined last week. It is to be the most imposing church edifice in the city, and is to cost $150,000, exclusive of the site. The style is Norman, but not of the conventional ecclesiastical type. The material is a species of granite, with dark-red veins running through it, which is found in Connecticut. The facings will be of Lake Superior brown. The striking characteristics of the exterior will be a high tower at the corner, and two large gables on each façade, with small towers at the extreme ends of each façade. The corner tower will be 160 feet high from the ground to the finials. Its general form will be square, but over the two principal entrance-ways, one of which is on the Clinton Avenue side, and the other on the Greene Avenue side of the tower, there is a rounded projection which is carried up for two stories. Above that the tower is square, but the corners will be treated with slender round turrets, each of a different size, and somewhat different in treatment. The framework of the steeple will be of iron, and it will be covered with Spanish tiles. The general shape of the interior will be that of a large amphitheatre, semicircular in shape. There will be two galleries, and the whole seating capacity will be about five thousand people, about one-half on the main floor, and the remainder in the galleries. The roof is to be open-timbered, with all the beams in sight, and its apex will be seventy feet above the ground. We hope to publish a picture of it soon.

A Search for an Heiress has Been Commenced by a firm of lawyers in Jersey City, N. J. Eighteen years ago a wayward girl, the daughter of an English baronet, left her home, and no trace could be found of her. About the same time a young man connected with the family was also missing, and it was conjectured that the two had gone away together. This suspicion was confirmed in the opinion of the family when, a few years after their departure, a brief letter was received announcing the death of the young man in New York. The handwriting of that letter was recognized as that of the missing girl. Search was made for her at the address of the letter, but she was not found, nor could any record be found of the death announced in the letter. The baronet died recently leaving a large estate, part of which is bequeathed to his wayward daughter. Advertisements have been inserted by the New Jersey lawyers who are acting for the executors in this country, urging the girl to appear and claim her fortune. As she has not done so, the lawyers are coming to the conclusion that she must be dead. They are probably right in that opinion, for when a fortune is to be had people are not usually backward in claiming it. Unhappily there is not the same eagerness to seize the offer of eternal riches which God makes to those who come to Him through Christ. (Eph. 1:18, 19.)

A Poetic Retribution Befell Some Litigants in Chicago some time ago. In the course of a recent debate on the respective merits of high license and prohibition, one of the speakers quoted an amusing illustration of the fact that evil sometimes comes home to those who promote it. He said that several suits of an analogous character were brought in a Chicago court, and it was agreed to make one of them a test case, the decision in which should govern the other cases. The litigants shared the expense of legal talent to fight the test case, but when the lawyer whom they had engaged appeared in court on the day of trial he was under the influence of liquor. He was not uproariously drunk, nor "dead drunk," or some other lawyer would have taken charge of the case, but he was so bemuddled and stupefied that, though he could perform his duty after a fashion, he did it so clumsily that his clients lost their case. Such things have happened before, and deplorable results, involving ruin to the litigants, have ensued, for which the sufferers deserve our sympathy, but in this case the losers were all saloon-keepers, who thus had an opportunity of realizing, under most favorable circumstances, the evils produced by the beverage they supply. It is well that sometimes men who dig a pit for the destruction of others should fall into it themselves. (Prov. 26:27.)

A Dispute About a Prayer Test is Described by the Journal, of Lewiston, Me., in the course of some reminiscences of Elder John Stephens, of Gardiner. It states that the elder was riding one day along the road to West Gardiner, when he overtook an ox team attached to a wagon which was fast in the mud. The discouraged oxen had refused to pull any more, and the exasperated driver was beating them and uttering awful oaths. The elder expostulated and advised the driver, to try prayer. "Try it yourself," said the driver contemptuously. "I'll do it," said the elder, and he knelt down in the road by the wagon and besought the help of the Lord of the cattle on a thousand hills. Then he rose and was about to make an effort to start the oxen, when a team was seen approaching in the opposite direction. The elder immediately asked the new-comer for help, which he readily consented to give. But the swearing teamster objected. He contended that as the elder had chosen to try prayer, doubling-up was not fair. The elder replied, "My friend, the Master I serve is abundantly able to move this load with a single yoke of oxen—or without any oxen at all, but when, in direct answer to prayer, He sends me an extra pair of cattle, I'm going to hook 'em on!" It was done, and the wagon was pulled out of the mud. We should hear less of unanswered prayers if those who complain were ready to recognize as an answer help that comes in a way unexpected to them. When men attempt to dictate to God the means He shall use in answering their requests they are very likely to be disappointed. (Prov. 16:9.)

A Man Without Nationality has Been Placed in an awkward dilemma by arrangements which he made to evade a disagreeable duty. On November 13 a young German arrived in New York from a Prussian port. He said that he had been ordered out of Prussia by the German Government, and he had come to seek redress from our State Department. It appears that he came here once before when he was seventeen years of age, and declared his intention of becoming a citizen, hoping thereby to avoid the military service required of young men born in Prussia. Subsequently he had reason to believe that he need not have taken that step, as certain physical defects exempted him from military service. He therefore did not complete his naturalization and after staying here a short time he returned to Prussia to look after a considerable property to which he was heir. There he was seized by the authorities and held for examination. They secured evidence of his having taken the preliminary step to naturalization, and would not discuss the question of his right of exemption. They held that he was practically an American citizen who had evaded German military service, and as such he was ordered to leave the country. When he refused he was summarily taken and put on board a steamer bound for the United States, and was brought back against his will. As he did not complete his naturalization our Government will not interfere in his behalf, and he is thus repudiated by both Governments. Consequences still more disastrous await some professing Christians, who, though nominally members of the Church, are living as worldlings and trying to make the best of both worlds. (Matt. 6:24.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. M. Baxter has been distributing Second Advent pamphlets in French at Calais and Boulogne.

An unprecedented revival of religion and conversion of souls has taken place in Airdrie, Scotland, under Dr. Pentecost's preaching.

Rev. C. H. Yatman has just closed a most successful series of services at Ashtabula, O. He was invited by the Y. M. C. A., and the various churches co-operated.

The meetings of the Revs. Messrs. Crossly and Hunter are exciting such great interest in Kingston, Canada, that the police have been needed to regulate the crowds outside the building.

Mr. E. P. Telford has consented to remain at Troy, N. Y., another week, as the work there is growing daily in power and blessing. Grace M. E. Church, in which the meetings are held is crowded at every service. A large number of young men have been led to confess Christ. Mr. Telford's next point is at Gloversville, N. Y.

Mr. Ferdinand Schiverea is conducting evangelistic meetings at Peoria, Ill. A very hopeful work of grace has commenced, and appears to be spreading rapidly. The work at Stratford, Ontario, Canada, which he has just concluded, was marked throughout by a very deep and strong current of public interest. On the last day of the services a special train was run from Seaford and other towns to bring in the crowds anxious to hear him once more before his departure from Canada.

The American Sabbath Union holds its first anniversary in New York, December 9, 10, and 11. The first meetings will be held in St. Paul's M. E. Church, corner of Fourth Avenue and 22d Street, at 7:30 P. M. December 9. The meetings of the next two days will be held in the Broadway Tabernacle, corner Sixth Avenue and 34th Street. Particulars as to railroad fares, etc., may be obtained from the Corresponding Secretary, Rev. W. J. R. Taylor, D. D., 23 Park Row, New York.

A Union Bible Conference was commenced in Calvary Baptist Church, West 57th Street, New York, last Sunday at 3:30 P. M. and it is to be continued every Sunday afternoon through the winter. It is conducted by Mr. William C. Conant. The main object of its studies is to show from evidence that the Bible and Christianity are not mere evolution of human thought, as the leaders of the new school contend, but a revelation from God. Ministers and Christian men and women of all denominations are invited.

The Evangelical Alliance holds its National Christian Conference in Boston, Mass., December 4-6. Among the speakers are to be Drs. Phillips Brooks, A. J. Gordon, Josiah Strong, J. M. Buckley, Moses D. Hoge, Howard Crosby, and Professors Francis L. Patton, Theodore W. Dwight, and R. T. Ely. Among the subjects for discussion are: The Progress of Christian Co-operation, The Needs of the Times, Our Debt and Duty to the Immigrant Population, Christianity and the State, the Gospel and the People. For further particulars address the Evangelical Alliance, 42 Bible House, New York.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's services at York City, Pa., continued last week with unabated interest. Twenty-four churches have united in the work. On Sunday over two thousand men and youths filled the Market House to hear the famous evangelist. Dr. Munhall's sermon from the words, "For all these things God will bring thee into judgment," was blessed to many there, who rose to ask for prayer. At the general service in the evening there was another overflowing congregation, and the number of inquirers was very large. Services are held every night except Saturday. The statement that Dr. Munhall stipulates for a definite sum in payment to himself and Professor Lowe, which has been extensively published, is false from beginning to end.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL SOWERS.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Then said He, Unto what is the kingdom of God like, and whereunto shall I resemble it? It is like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and cast into his garden; and it grew, and waxed a great tree; and the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it." Luke 13: 18, 19.

Cheer for Self-Denying Workers—I. A Very Simple Work—What the Nameless Man Did—took the Grain—Had a Garden—Brought Seed and Soil in Contact—Life in the Seed—An Act of Faith—II. What Came of It—Hope Fulfilled—It Grew—Became a Tree—The Tree Became a Shelter—The Way to Produce Music—The Honor of Sowing—Need of Sowing in Evil Times—A Good Investment.

I SHALL not attempt fully to explain this great little parable. A full exposition may be left for another occasion. The parable may be understood to relate to our Lord Himself, who is the living seed. You know also how His Church is the tree that springs from Him, and how greatly it grows and spreads its branches until it covers the earth. From the one man, Christ Jesus, despised and rejected of men, slain and buried, and so hidden away from among men—from Him, I say, there ariseth a multitude which no man can number. These spread themselves, like some tree which grows by the rivers of waters, and they yielded both gracious shelter and spiritual food. I called it a great little parable, and so it is: it has a world of teaching within the smallest compass. The parable is itself like a grain of mustard seed, but its meanings are as a great tree.

But at this time of the year, Sabbath-school teachers come together specially to pray for a blessing on their work; and pastors are invited to say a word to cheer them in their self-denying service. This request I would cheerfully fulfil; and therefore my discourse will not be a full explanation of the parable, but an adaptation of it to the cheering of those who are engaged in the admirable work of teaching the young the fear of the Lord. Never service more important; to overlook it would be a grave fault. We rejoice to encourage our friends.

I. First, notice

A Very Simple Work.

The work of teaching the gospel is as the casting of a grain of mustard seed into a garden. Note, first, what the nameless man did. "It is like a grain of mustard seed which a man took." He took it—that is to say, picked it out from the bulk. It was only a grain of mustard seed, but the man set it before his own mind as a distinct object to be dealt with. He was not sowing mustard over broad acres, but he was sowing "a grain of mustard seed" in his garden. It is well for the teacher to know what he is going to teach; to have that truth distinctly in his mind's eye, as the man had the grain of mustard seed between his fingers. Depend upon it, unless a truth is clearly seen and distinctly recognized by the teacher, little will come of it to the taught. It may be a very simple truth; but if a man takes it, understands it, grasps it, and loves it, he will do something with it.

Further in this little parable we notice that this man had a garden: "Like a grain of mustard seed, which a man took and cast into

His Garden."

Some Christian people have no garden—no personal sphere of service. They belong to the whole clan of Christians, and they pine to see the entire band go out to cultivate the whole world; but they do not come to personal particulars. It is delightful to be warmed up by missionary addresses, and to feel a zeal for the salvation of all the nations; but, after all, the net result of a general theoretic earnestness for all the world does not amount to much. As we should have no horticulture if men had no gardens, so we shall have no missionary work done unless each person has a mission. Where should this unnamed man sow his mustard seed but in his own garden? It was near him, and dear to him, and thither he went. Teach your own children, speak to your neighbors, seek the conversion of those whom God has entrusted to you.

Having a garden, and having this seed, the man sowed it: and simple as this is, it is the hinge of the instruction. You have a number of seeds in a pill-box. There they are: look at them! Take that box down this day twelve months, and the seeds will be just the same. Lay them by in that dry box for seven years, and nothing will happen. Truth is not to be kept to ourselves: it is to be published and advocated. There is an old proverb, "Truth is mighty, and will prevail." The proverb is true in a sense, but it needs to be taken with a grain of salt. Truth has been mighty, and has prevailed; but yet not without the men who gave it life and tongue. Not even the gospel itself, if it be not taught, will prevail. If revealed truth be laid on one side and kept in silence, it will not grow. Mark how, through the Dark Ages, the gospel lay asleep in old books in the libraries of monasteries, till Luther and his fellow reformers fetched it out and sowed it.

This man simply cast it into his garden. He did not wrap it round with gold leaf, or otherwise adorn it; but he put it into the ground.

The Naked Seed

came into contact with the naked soil. O teachers! do not try to make the gospel look fine; do not overlay it with your fine words or elaborate explanations. The gospel seed is to be put into the young heart just as it is. Get the truth concerning the Lord Jesus into the children's minds. Make them know, not what you can say about the truth, but what the truth itself says. It is wicked to take the gospel, and make a peg of it to hang our old clothes upon. The gospel is not a boat to be freighted with human thoughts, fine speculations, scraps of poetry, and pretty tales. Sow the very truth; not your reflections on the truth, not your embellishments of the truth, but the truth itself. This is to be brought into contact with the mind; for the truth is the seed, and the human mind is the soil for it to grow in.

These remarks of mine are very plain and trite; and yet everything depends upon the simple operation described. Nearly everything has been tried in preaching of late, except the plain and clear statement of the glad tidings and of the atoning sacrifice. People have talked about what the Church can do, and what the gospel can do: we have been informed as to the proofs of the gospel, or the doubts about it, and so forth; but when will they give us the gospel itself? Brethren, we must come to the point and teach the gospel, for this is the living and incorruptible seed which abideth forever.

That which is described in the parable was the man took the tiny seed and put it into his garden. It is a very common-place affair to sit down with a dozen children around you, and open your Bible, and tell them the well-worn tale of how Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners. It is a lowly business altogether; but yet to the mustard seed, and to the man with a garden, the sowing is the all-important matter. The mustard seed will never grow unless put into the soil: the owner of the garden will never have a crop of mustard unless he sows the seed. Dear Sunday-school teacher, do not become weary of your humble work, for none can measure its importance.

An Insignificant Business:

Let us consider what it was that the man sowed. We have seen that he sowed: What did he sow? It was one single seed, and that a very small one. This one seed, apparently so little, so insignificant, we continue to sow. They sneeringly say, "What can be the moral result of preaching such a gospel? Surely it would be better to discourse upon morals, social economics, and the sciences?" Ah, friends! if you can do any good in those ways, we will not hinder you, but our belief is that a hundred times more can be done with the gospel; for it is the power of God unto salvation unto every one that believeth. The gospel is not the enemy of any good thing; say, rather, it is the force by which good things are to be carried out. Whatsoever things are pure and honest and of good report, are all nurtured by that spirit which is begotten by the simple gospel of Christ.

But the seed, though very small, was

A Living Thing.

There is a great difference between a mustard seed and a piece of wax of the same size. Life slumbers in that seed. What life is, we cannot tell. Even if you take a microscope you cannot spy it out. It is a mystery; but it is essential to a seed. The gospel has a something in it not readily discoverable by the philosophical inquirer, if, indeed, he can perceive it at all. Take a maxim of Socrates or of Plato, and inquire whether a nation or a tribe has ever been transformed by it from barbarism to culture. A maxim of a philosopher may have measurably influenced a man in some right direction; but who has ever heard of a man's whole character being transformed by any observation of Confucius or Socrates? I confess I never have.

Truth to tell, a seed is a very comprehensive thing. Within the mustard seed what is to be found? Why, there is all in it that ever comes out of it. It must be so. Every branch, and every leaf, and every flower, and every seed that is to be, is, in its essence, all within the seed: it needs to be developed; but it is all there. And so, within the simple gospel, how much lies concentrated? Look at it! Within that truth lie regeneration, repentance, faith, holiness, zeal, consecration, perfection.

And for this reason it is so wonderful: it is a divine creation. Summon your chemists: bring them together with all their vessels and their fires. Select a jury of the greatest chemists now alive, analytical or otherwise, as you will. Learned sirs, will you kindly make us a mustard seed? You may take a mustard seed, and pound it and analyze it, and you may thus ascertain all its ingredients. So far, so good. Is not your work well begun? Now make a single mustard seed. Clever chemists prove their wisdom by saying at once, "No, we and wise thinkers will equally confess that they cannot make another gospel. My learned brethren are trying very hard to make a new gospel for this nineteenth century; but you teachers had better go on with the old one. I want you to see what a little affair the sowing seemed, as we answer the question, What was it to him? It was a very natural act; he sowed a seed. It is a most natural thing that we should teach others what we believe ourselves. I cannot make out how some professors can call themselves Christians, and yet never communicate the faith to others. That the young people of our churches should gather other young people around them, and tell them of Jesus, whom they love, is as natural as for a gardener to put seeds into his prepared ground.

Cannot Make a Mustard Seed,"

Still, it was an act of faith. It is always an act of faith to sow seed, because you have, for the time, to give it up, and receive nothing in return. The farmer takes his choice seed-corn, and throws it into the soil of his field. He might have made many a loaf of bread with it; but he casts it away. Only his faith saves him from being judged a maniac: he expects it to return to him fifty-fold. If you had never seen a harvest, you would think that a man burying good wheat under the clods had gone mad; and if you had never seen conversions, it might seem an absurd thing to be constantly teaching to boys and girls the story of the Man who was nailed to the tree. We preach and teach as a work of faith; and, remember, it is only as an act of faith that it will answer its purpose. The rule is, "According to thy faith, be it unto thee."

II. Secondly, let us inquire,

What Came of It?

First, "it grew." That was what the sower hoped would come of it: he placed the seed in the ground, hoping that it would grow. It is not reasonable to suppose that he would have sown it if he had not hoped that it would spring up. Dear teacher, do you always sow in hope, do you trust that the Word will live and grow? If you do not, I do not think your success is very probable. Expect the truth to take root, and expand and grow up. Teach divine truth with earnestness, and expect that the life within it will unveil its wonders.

But though the sower expected growth, he could not himself have made it grow. After he had placed the seed in the ground, he could water it, he could pray God to make the sun shine on it; but he could not directly produce growth. Only He that made the seed could cause it to grow. Growth is a continuance of that almighty act by which life is at first given. The putting of life into the seed is God's work, and the bringing forth of the life from the seed is God's work too. This is a matter within your hope, but far beyond your power.

To the sower this growth was very pleasing. How pleasant it is to see the seed of grace grow in children! An unsympathetic person cries, "Oh, I do not think anything of that child's emotions. It is merely a passing impression: he will soon forget it." The teacher does not think so. The cold critic says, "I don't think much of a child's weeping. Children's tears lie very near the surface." But the teacher is full of hope that he sees in these tears a real sorrow for sin, and an earnest seeking after the Lord. The questioner says, "It is nothing for a child to say that he gives his heart to Jesus. Youngsters soon think that they believe. They are so easily led." People talk thus because they do not love children, and live with the desire to save them. If you sympathize with children, you are pleased with every hopeful token, and are on the watch for every mark of divine life within them. If you are a florist, you will see more of the progress of your plants than if you are no gardener, and have no interest in such things. Think, then, of what my text says: "It grew."

Next, having started growing, it became a tree; Luke says, "It waxed a great tree." It was great in itself; but the greatness was seen mainly in comparison with the size of the seed.

The Growth was Great.

Here is the wonder: not that it became a tree, but that, being a mustard seed, it should become "a great tree." Do you see the point of the parable? I have already brought it before you. Listen! It was only a word spoken—"Dear boy, look to Jesus." Only such a word, and a soul was saved, its sin was forgiven, its whole being was changed, a new heir of heaven was born. Do you see the growth? A word produces salvation! A grain of mustard seed becomes a great tree! A little teaching brings eternal life. That is not all: the teacher, with many prayers and tears, took her girl home, and pleaded with her for Christ, and the girl was led to yield her heart to the dominion of Christ Jesus—a holy heavenly life came out of that pleading. See! she becomes a thoughtful girl, a loving wife, a gracious mother, a matron in Israel, such a one as Dorcas among the poor, or Hanrah with her Samuel. What a great result from a little cause!

A boy was about as wild as any roamer of our streets: a teacher knelt by his side, with his arm about the lad's neck. He pleaded with God for the boy, and with the boy for God. That boy was converted, and as a youth in business he was an example to the workroom; as a father, he was a guide to his household; as a man of God, he was a light to all around; as a preacher of righteousness, he adorned the doctrine of God his Saviour in all things. There is much more which I might easily picture; but you can work it out as well as I can. All that is to be desired may spring out of the simple talk of a humble Christian with a youth. A mustard seed becomes a great tree; a few words of holy admonition may produce a noble life.

This great tree became a shelter: "the fowls of the air lodged in the branches of it." Mustard in the East does grow very large indeed. The commonest kind of it may be found eight or ten feet high; but there is a kind which will grow almost like a forest tree, and there probably were some of these latter trees in the sheltered region wherein our Lord was speaking. A mustard which grew here and there in Palestine was of surprising dimensions. When the tree grew, the birds came to it. Here we have unexpected influences. Think of it. That man took a mustard seed which you could hardly see if I held it up. When he took the mustard seed, when he put it into his garden, had he any thought of bringing birds to that spot? Not he. You do not know all you are doing when you are teaching a child the way of salvation by Jesus Christ. When you are trying to bring a soul to Christ, your action has

Ten Thousand Hooks to it, and these may seize on innumerable things. There may seem no connection between teaching that boy and the reclaiming of cannibals in New Guinea; but I can see a very possible connection. Tribes in Central Africa may have their destiny shaped by your instruction of a tiny child. When John Pounds bribed an urchin with a hot potato to come and learn to read the Bible, I am sure John Pounds had no idea of all the Ragged-schools in London; but there is a clear line of cause and effect in the whole matter. A hot potato might be the coat of arms of the Ragged-school Union. No man can tell the end of his beginnings, the growth of his sowings. Go on doing good in little ways, and you shall one day wonder at the great results.

But what is that I hear? I see this mustard tree—it is a very wonderful tree; but I not only see, I hear! Music! music! The birds! the birds! It is early morning, the sun is scarcely up—what torrents of song! Is that

The Way to Produce Music?

Shall I sow mustard seed, and reap songs? I thought we must buy an organ, or purchase a violin; or by some wind or stringed instrument come at music; but here is a new plan altogether. Nebuchadnezzar had his flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of music; but all that mingled sound could not rival the melody of birds. I shall sow mustard seed now, and get music in God's own way. Friends, when you teach your children the gospel of the Lord Jesus, you are sowing the music of heaven.

Having said so much, I now close with these three practical observations. Are we not highly honored to be entrusted with such a marvellous thing as the gospel? If it be a seed comprehending so much within it, which will come to so much if it be properly used, blessed and happy are we to have such good news to proclaim!

Let us be encouraged to sow the good seed in evil times. If we do not see the gospel prospering elsewhere, let us not despair; if there were no more mustard seed in the world, and I had only one grain of it, I should be all the more anxious to sow it. You can produce any quantity if only one seed will grow. So now to-day there is not very much gospel about; the church has given it up; a great many preachers preach everything but the living truth. This is sad; but it is a strong reason why you and I should teach more gospel than ever. Don't you be afraid:

It has Life in it, and it will grow: only you bring it out, and let it grow. I am sometimes afraid that we may prepare our sermons and addresses too much, so as to make ourselves shine. If so, we are like the man who tried to grow potatoes—he never grew any, and he wondered much; "for," said he, "I very carefully boiled them for hours." So, it is very possible to extract all the life out of the gospel, and put so much of yourself into it that Christ will not bless it.

And, lastly, we are bound to do it. If so much will come out of so little, we are bound to go in for it. Nowadays people want ten per cent. for their money. Hosts of fools are readily caught by any scheme, or speculation, or limited liability company, that promises to give them immense dividends! I should like to make you wise by inviting you to an investment which is sure. Sow a mustard seed, and grow a tree. Talk of Christ, and save your soul: that soul saved will be a blessing for ages, and a joy to God throughout eternity. Was there ever such an investment as this? Let us go on with it. If on our simple word eternity is hung, let us speak with all our heart. Life, death, and hell, and worlds unknown, hang on the lips of the earnest teacher of the gospel of Jesus: let us never cease speaking while we have breath in our body. The Lord bless you! Amen, and Amen.

[The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editors, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of many sinners and the quickening of God's people. Dr. Talmage and Mr. Spurgeon especially request prayer every Sunday morning on behalf of their labors.]

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

An Unpromising Community.*

WE found the Tannese to be painted savages enveloped in all the superstition and wickedness of heathenism. All the men and women go in a state of half nudity. The older women wear grass skirts, and the young women and girls grass or leaf aprons like Eve in Eden. They are exceedingly ignorant, vicious, and bigoted, and almost void of natural affection. Instead of the inhabitants being improved by coming in contact with white men, they are rendered much worse, for they have learned all their vices, but none of their virtues—if any of the latter were possessed by the pioneer traders among these races. The sandalwood traders are, as a class, the most godless of men, whose cruelty and wickedness make us ashamed to own them as our countrymen. By them the poor, defenceless natives are oppressed and robbed on every hand; and if they offer the slightest resistance they are ruthlessly silenced by musket and revolver. Such treatment keeps the natives always burning under a desire for revenge, so that it is a wonder any white man is allowed to come among them.

Cheating the Missionary.

The novelty of our being among them soon passed away, and they began to show their avarice and deceitfulness in every possible way. The chiefs united, and refused to give us the half of the small piece of land which had been purchased on which to build our mission house, and when we attempted to fence in the part they had left to us, they "tabooed" it, that is, threatened our teachers and us with death if we proceeded further with the work. This they did by placing certain reeds stuck into the ground here and there around our house, which our Aneityumese servants at once knew the meaning of, and warned us of our danger; so we left off making the fence, that we might, if possible, avoid giving offence. They then divided the few bread-fruit and cocoa-nut trees on the ground amongst themselves, or demanded such payment for those trees as we could not give, and threatened revenge upon us if the trees were injured by any person. They became so unreasonable and offensive, and our dangers so increased as to make our residence among them extremely trying. At this time a vessel called, and I bought from the captain the payment they demanded. On receiving it they lifted the "taboo," and for a little season appeared to be friendly again. This was the third time they had been paid for that site. We knew we were being cheated, but to yield was the only way of saving our lives.

Champion Chiefs.

The inhabitants for miles around united in seeking our destruction, but God put it into even savage hearts to save us. Old Nowar, the chief under whom we lived, and Arkurat, the chief under him, set themselves to rescue us. Along with Monuman and Sirawaia, they opposed every plan in the public assembly for taking our lives. Some of their people also remained friend-

* From John G. Paton, Missionary to the New Hebrides. An Autobiography. A thrilling narrative of perils among the Heathen, of devoted labor and self-sacrifice. Pp. 375. Price $1.50. Published by Robert Carter & Brothers, 530 Broadway, New York.

Dr. Peters, recently Killed in Africa.

The Emperor of Morocco Entering Tangier. (See page 741.)

ly to us, and by the help of our Aneityumese teachers warned us of danger and protected our lives. Determined not to be baffled, a meeting of all our enemies on the island was summoned, and it was publicly resolved that a band of men be selected and enjoined to kill the whole of those friendly to the mission, and not only to murder the missionaries, but also a trader who was there, that no one might be left to give information to the white men, or bring punishment on the islanders. Frenzy of excitement prevailed, and the blood-fiend seemed to override the whole assembly; when, under an impulse that surely came from the Lord of pity, one great warrior chief who had hitherto kept silent rose, swung aloft a mighty club, and smashing it earthwards, cried aloud, "The man that kills Missi must first kill me—the men that kill the mission teachers must first kill me and my people, for we shall stand by them and defend them till death." Instantaneously another chief thundered forth the same declaration, and the great assembly broke up in dismay. All the more remarkable was this deliverance because these two chiefs lived nearly four miles inland, and were regarded as our enemies. It had happened that a brother of the chief who spoke first, having been wounded in battle, I had dressed his wounds and he recovered. But I do not put much value on that consideration; for it was clear that our dear Lord Jesus interposed directly on our behalf that day.

THE LATE DR. CARL PETERS.

THERE is now little room for doubt that another brilliant life has been sacrificed in Africa. The news of the death of Dr. Peters, mentioned in these columns last week, has been corroborated by intelligence received in London. The identification of the race that murdered him is not complete, but the crime is generally imputed to the Masai, the savage people whose hostility to all foreigners is well known. It is stated that Dr. Peters had reached Kororo, on the Tanu River, in his journey toward Wadelai, whither he was going ostensibly to rescue Emin Pasha.

The enterprise was believed to be simply a trading expedition, in the interest of the German East African Company. As such, it was opposed by the English from the outset. They complained to the German Government that it was a violation of the arrangement between the two Governments, which pledged Germany not to interfere with the trade north of the Victoria Nyanza. Prince Bismarck admitted the fact, and repudiated responsibility for Dr. Peters. Thereupon the English seized the ship containing Dr. Peters's supplies. The Germans protested, but Bismarck acquiesced in the seizure. Dr. Peters proceeded inland, starting from Vitu on July 26, and no more was heard from him until November 6, when news reached Zanzibar that he and all his party, with the exception of Lieutenant Tiedemann and one Somali carrier, had been massacred.

Dr. Peters was thirty-three years of age, a native of Neuhaus, on the Elbe. He was educated at Ilfeld, and subsequently studied at Gottingen, Tübingen, and Berlin. He spent three years in England, and on his return made an effort to stimulate German enterprise in the East African trade. He organized the German East African Company, for which he obtained a charter from the German Government. He made several journeys to Africa, and in one of them succeeded in obtaining a concession of trading privileges from the late Sultan of Zanzibar.

THE SISTERS' MISSION.

(See illustration on page 749.)

In an old-fashioned mansion in a densely populated Eastern city two girls sat reading, one summer afternoon. It was the beginning of a period to which both had long looked forward. The elder, Hester, had been living at home with her parents for a year past, but both she and her sister had felt that their happiness would not be complete until Celia too had finished her school-life and come home "for good." Now that time had arrived, and the past two weeks had been full of plans for the future. As they were thoughtful girls, they were anxious that their lives should not be frittered away, but should be spent in self-culture and in the acquirement of that most valuable kind of education for which school-life should be only the preparation.

They were largely left to their own devices in the matter, for Mr. and Mrs. Balfour, their parents, were somewhat embarrassed by the presence of the two grown girls in their home. They had loved and petted them in their childhood, and had taken a delight in making them happy with gifts of toys and picture books; but now it was not so easy to know what would make them happy. They had looked forward to the time when their two daughters would be at home with them, but when they saw them there, with their bright, intellectual faces, they suddenly realized a responsibility which they did not know how to discharge. If there had been a necessity for the girls to earn a livelihood for themselves their future might have been more easily arranged, but there was a sufficiency of money, though not an abundance. It was therefore open to the girls to drift into the frivolous young lady life in which dress and pleasure were the only important elements. But both of them had a wholesome contempt for such a life.

The book they were reading together that summer afternoon was the life of that noble lady whose heroic self-sacrifice in the hospitals of Scutari and the Crimea won the admiration of the whole civilized world. "What a noble life!" said Celia, who had been reading aloud while her sister sketched. "What a glorious opportunity she had! and how grandly she used it!" The talk drifted to other heroines—Clara Barton and the other ladies of the Christian Commission, the Sisters who succored the yellow fever sufferers, Elizabeth Fry, Mrs. Judson, and other heroic women.

"Theirs were higher lives than those we have laid out for ourselves," said Hester. "We have chosen the better, but not the best."

"Our design is the best open to us," contended Celia. "Such opportunities as they had are not open to us. If they were we would use them."

"Perhaps an opportunity may come some day, and our names may be quoted with those of the world's heroines by future generations. It would be worth living for."

"Yes," said Celia, "and worth dying for. I would willingly give a few years of life for an immortality of fame." "So would I," said Hester, "and the best thing we can do is to carry on our plans of self-culture, so that when the call does come we may be ready to respond to it with powers trained for effective service."

The prospect was so dazzling to the imagination, that the sisters fell into a silent meditation on it, which after it had lasted several minutes was broken by an exclamation from Celia, whose abstracted gaze was fixed on the large garden which their window overlooked. "Look, Hester," she cried, "look at that wretched little boy! He has climbed over the wall to steal the fruit. Oh you bad boy!"

"He is one of the children belonging to those families in the rear houses," said Hester; "I have seen him playing around instead of going to school. I wonder what his mother is thinking of! That boy ought to be sent to a reformatory, and all like him. They are training for criminals. If he does not learn better now, he will go on until he gets into the penitentiary. Let us go down and scare him."

The little urchin was too busily engaged with the fruit trees to notice the approach of the young ladies until they were near him. Then he turned and ran to the wall, and made a futile effort to escape by climbing. Then he crouched against the wall and looked in dismay at Hester who had followed him. "Oh, let me go this once," he cried, beginning to shed tears, "I'll never do it no more. I ain't took anything."

"You wicked boy," said Hester, "what is that in your pockets? Don't you know where boys who tell lies have to go?"

The boy did not know, and when his fear was allayed sufficiently to answer questions, it appeared that he knew very little about anything, and knew nothing about morality. He was troubled at being caught stealing, but seemed to have no shame for the act itself. He was fully alive to the possible consequences of detection, but seemed to have no perception of the wickedness of his conduct. The girls yielded eventually to his plea for mercy, but they were sadly conscious as they allowed him to escape that there was no penitence in him, nor any result from their lecture.

"What a pity it is such boys as that cannot be brought to Sunday-school," said Hester. "They ought to have some religious teaching."

"I suppose he would not like to come in those ragged clothes, and it is not likely he has any better," said Celia.

"No; that is the difficulty. I wonder no one opens a school specially for such boys."

The subject was dismissed, and the girls resumed their reading; but that night Hester spoke of it again. "That boy is a regular little heathen," she said, "and right at our own doors. We need not go to Africa or China to find work, with such as he around us. Why should not we make an effort?"

The more the sisters thought of it, the less reason there appeared to be against their undertaking it. In fact the call seemed to be imperative. But it was not the kind of work they had idealized. And there was no fame to be won in that sphere. This consideration led to an analysis of motive, and they realized that the desire for the immortality of fame of which both had been conscious was only a form of selfishness unworthy of the work and the worker. In severe self-abnegation they set themselves to this task thus thrust upon them, and found so much joy in the success that followed their labors in the cottages and in the little school, which they opened, that their hopes of fame were cheerfully relinquished. They learned, as all consecrated workers have learned, that in forgetfulness of self and in love for others lies the only way to true service in Christ's vineyard.

The Sisters Confronted with a Heathen.

THE STORY OF THE PIONEERS.

Their Perils, Pains, and Privations.

[THE history learned in our school-days, under compulsion, is apt to be forgotten when the school-house is left behind and the hard duties of life demand our most strenuous thought. Yet there are some passages in the history of our own country which it is a shame to forget. One passage especially ought to be well known and treasured in the memory of every man, woman, and child who lives under our glorious Constitution. It is that of the heroic struggle with savages, with severe disease, famine, and dangers of many kinds that was waged by the brave band of men who, loving God and liberty more than home and country, came to this country two centuries and a half ago, that in a new land they might live as their conscience dictated.]

Some deeply interesting incidents from that story will appear in this place during the next few weeks. They will be more elevating, while no less fascinating, than the effusions of the best writers of fiction.]

It was at the very close of Queen Elizabeth's long and prosperous reign, that a band of humble and little-noticed pioneers of religious liberty in England found the yoke of bondage too galling to be longer endured. With patience they had borne confiscations, imprisonments, mutilations, and cruel deaths, not only without murmuring, but with uncomplaining and even thankful submission. Henry Barrow, the son of a gentleman of good estate in Norfolk, had united with his old friend and fellow-student at Cambridge, Mr. John Greenwood, in holding secret assemblies for religious worship in Islington—then a quiet village, at some distance from the English capital.

Both Barrow and Greenwood were apprehended in consequence of these Islington meetings, and committed to the dungeons of Newgate; their crime was forming churches and conducting religious worship contrary to law; and to this was added the charge of impugning the Queen's prerogative of spiritual supremacy. They were condemned to the gallows. Conveyed to Tyburn, and with the rope round their necks, these brave confessors held fast to the faith and doctrines they had professed as the true teaching of the Holy Scriptures; but they declared their unshaken loyalty to the Queen, and their fidelity to the Government, expressing unfeigned sorrow if they had ever been betrayed into any expression of irreverence or undue freedom against those in authority over them. They prayed for the Queen, for their country, and for all who had borne a part in their sufferings. It was as if with their dying breath.

They were about to close their eyes on all earthly things, when suddenly a reprieve was announced. Her Majesty had interposed her royal prerogative of mercy, and they were led back to Newgate amid the shouts and acclamations of the populace. The bitterness of death was past. The captives wrote to Elizabeth, urging that their loyalty could no longer be doubted, since they had maintained it when they believed all hope was vain, and beseeching her, at the least, to interpose on their behalf, and mitigate the rigor of their imprisonment in the loathsome dungeons of Newgate.

But the royal reprieve was a heartless mockery. These Christian men who, with their last breath, as they believed, had prayed for the Queen of England, and called down the blessings of heaven on her throne and kingdom, were secretly led back on the morrow to the same spot where they had before so bravely faced death, and executed with the ignominy of felons.

In like manner the noble-hearted young Welshman, John Penry, was hurled to the scaffold. In closing the final protest, which he addressed to the Lord Treasurer, rather with the desire of vindicating his character than from any hope of mercy, he thus writes, "Subscribed with the heart and the hand which never devised or wrote anything to the discredit or defamation of my sovereign, Queen Elizabeth, I take it on my death as I hope to have a life after this; by me, John Penry." But the martyr, while bravely bowing his head to the cruel blow, could not forget the ties that bound him to life. He was sustained by the consciousness of innocence and the prospect of heaven; but his heart yearned over the young wife and infant children, whom he must leave desolate in their sorrow. Assured, from his own sad experience, that his brethren could entertain no hope of justice or liberty of conscience from the tribunals that had condemned him to death, he penned a letter "to the distressed and faithful congregation of Christ in London," which is characterized by the same simple and touching eloquence as his address to the Lord Treasurer, and by the love, strong in death, of a faithful heart.

In this he anticipates the distant refuge of the Pilgrim Fathers, urging them to forsake their country, and seek, in some foreign land, the liberty to worship God; and then he adds, "I humbly beseech you, not in any outward regard, as I shall answer before my God, that you would take my poor and desolate widow, and my mess of fatherless and friendless orphans, with you into exile, whithersoever you go, and you shall find, I doubt not, that the blessed promises of my God, made unto me and mine, will accompany them, and even the whole church for their sakes; for this also is the Lord's promise unto the holy seed."

The ties of country are strong, and the stroke that severs them is a harsh and cruel one, whatever be the necessity that drives the exile forth. Even the children of Israel, though their lives had been made bitter with cruel bondage, were loath to leave Goshen, wherein the patriarch had established their fathers, as in a chosen and fertile land. Their cry had already gone up to heaven, and yet it required the aggravation of still crueler oppressions ere the thousands of Israel went forth, with their little ones, their flocks and herds, and sought a home by the way of the wilderness beyond the sea. But the rulers of England would not let the sufferers rest. Imprisonments, with attendant miseries crueler than death itself, penalties, confiscations, and wrongs of every kind, at length filled up the cup of their sorrows. Their state in England had become unendurable, and the long-persecuted sufferers began very generally to look upon voluntary exile as their sole refuge.

But, in the estimation of England's rulers, even voluntary exile had become a crime. To live in England as Nonconformists was to live with the loathsome dungeon and the gallows ever in view; to leave it was at the risk of precipitating the fate which they attempted to avert. It is only a little more than two centuries since Englishmen were compelled to choose between such an alternative. "Even this course," says Dr. Vaughan, in a well-written article on The Pilgrim Fathers, "was beset with difficulty. They could escape only by secret means; to be detected was to fall into the snare they were so much concerned to avoid. But the thought of the religious freedom which might be enjoyed in Holland was so welcome, that for that object numbers became willing to bear the pains of separation from their native land, and to brave the dangers of attempting to withdraw from it.

"Many made that attempt with success, but some were less fortunate. An instance of the latter kind is recorded in the history of Robinson, a clergyman, who had embraced the principles of the Brownists, but who so far modified those principles on some points as to bring them more into the form of modern Congregationalism, and who, on that account, is generally regarded as the father of the English Independents. Robinson and a large company contracted with the master of a ship for a passage to Holland.

"They were to embark at Boston, in Lincolnshire, on a certain day, and from a point agreed upon. The captain was not punctual. At length however, the vessel arrived, and, under cover of the night, the men and women and children all reached the ship in safety. But the captain was a villain. He betrayed them to the officers of the port. The passengers and their goods were immediately removed from the vessel to several boats in waiting to receive them. All their property was turned over and examined, and not a little of it rifled. The persons of the men were searched, 'even to their shirts,' and the women were treated with indelicacy and rudeness. When these unhappy people reached the town, crowds assembled to gaze upon them, and many mocked and derided them. Nor was their condition improved when brought before the magistrates. Several were bound over to the assizes, and all were committed to prison. Some were released after the confinement of a few weeks, others after a longer period.

"This happened in 1602. In the following spring, Robinson and his friends resolved on making a second attempt of this nature. They made an arrangement for this purpose with a Dutch captain; and their plan now was, that the men should assemble on a large common, between Grimsby and Hull, a place chosen on account of its remoteness from any town; while the women, the children, and the property of these parties, were to be conveyed to that point of the coast in a barque. The men made their way to the place of rendezvous in small companies, by land. But the barque reached its destination a day before the ship. The swell of the sea was considerable, and as the females were suffering greatly from that cause, the sailors ran the barque into the shelter of a small creek.

"The next morning the ship arrived, but through some negligence on the part of the seamen, the vessel containing the women, their little ones, and the property, had run aground. The men stood in groups on the shore, and, that no time might be lost, the captain of the ship sent his boat to convey some of them on board. But by this time, so considerable a gathering of people in such a place, and in a manner so unusual, had attracted attention; information had been conveyed to persons of authority in the neighborhood; and as the boat which had taken the greater part of the men to the ship was proceeding again toward the shore, the captain saw a large company, armed with swords and muskets, and consisting of horse and foot, advancing toward the point where the barque was still ashore, and where the few remaining men had grouped together.

"Fearing the consequences of his illicit compact, the captain returned to the ship, hoisted sail, and was speedily at sea. Robinson—honest and able general as he was in every sense—had resolved to be the last to embark. He was a witness, accordingly, of the scene of distress and agony which ensued. The outburst of grief was not to be restrained. Some of the women wept aloud, others felt too deeply, or were too much bewildered, to indulge in utterance of any kind; while the children, partly from seeing what had happened, and partly from a vague impression that something dreadful had come, mingled their sobs and cries in the general lamentation.

"As the sail of that ship faded away upon the distant waters, the wives felt as if one stroke had reduced them all to widowhood, and every child that had reached the years of consciousness, felt as one who in a moment had become fatherless. But thus dark are the chapters in human affairs in which the good have often to become students, and from which they have commonly had to learn their special lessons. The ship soon encountered foul weather, and after being driven far along the coast of Norway, all hope of saving her being at one time abandoned, she at length safely reached Holland."

Such was the fate of those who were foremost in the guilt of seeking to escape from persecution. But even to the servile magistrates of King James, it seemed monstrous to punish and imprison wives and children for no other crime than that of seeking to accompany their husbands and fathers. They could not send them home, for they had no home left in England; and at length, after enduring much misery, they were left to go whither they pleased. Persecution had become generally odious by its excesses; and during the reaction which followed, Robinson and the remainder of his company succeeded in escaping from their native land, and, early in the year 1608, the English exiles effected a settlement at Leyden.

During eleven years the English exiles lived together in Leyden in peace and harmony. Their leader, John Robinson, was a man of devout piety, and of great learning and judgment. The fame of their virtues and worth attracted numbers from England, and won the respect of the people among whom they had sought a home. "The church under the care of Robinson," says Dr. Vaughan, "increased until it numbered more than three hundred members, consisting almost wholly of English exiles. Robinson himself was greatly respected by the clergy of Leyden, and by the professors in the university, and on more than one occasion the pastor of the Congregational Church in that city gave public proof that his piety, his amiableness, and his eminently practical understanding, were allied with sound scholarship, and with much intellectual vigor and acuteness. He succeeded also, in communicating much of his own well-regulated temper to his charge. We have good reason to believe that no church in Europe in that age exhibited more of the wise simplicity of a primitive church, or more of that correctness of habit by which we suppose the primitive churches to have been distinguished."

England had proved so cruel a step-mother that it might have been thought no difficult matter to wean these exiles from the strong love of their native land. But these superstitions of the heart, as they have been happily styled, are not to be subjected to the cold formulas of reason. Common sympathies had attracted the emigrants to Holland. In the long struggle with Spain that country had been the barrier of northern Europe against despotism and religious intolerance. England had often been her ally, and garrisoned her walled towns with the island Protestants; and when at length the Spanish influence was utterly overthrown in the Low Countries, an ecclesiastical discipline had been established which the English Nonconformists regarded with a favor they could not concede to the hierarchical constitution of the Church of England. There was much, therefore, in the circumstances of the period, to point out Holland as the fittest refuge for the English exiles. Nor were they disappointed. Hundreds found there the peace and liberty of conscience they were denied at home. But they felt themselves as strangers in a strange land, and sighed for old scenes, familiar and dear to them from many fond associations.

The annals of the Pilgrim Fathers naturally excite the liveliest interest among their American descendants and successors. With excusable pride emigrants who have hardly lost the provincial patois of some rural district of England or of Germany, boast of the fathers of New England as the root of their family tree; and even the calmer annalist overlooks the legitimate inferences from the evidence at command when treating of this favorite theme. Bancroft, the historian of the United States, strangely enough, describes these exiles for conscience' sake as "restless, from the consciousness of ability to act a more important part on the theatre of the world. The career of maritime discovery," he adds, "had been pursued with daring intrepidity, and rewarded with brilliant success. The voyages of Gosnold, and Smith, and Hudson; the enterprise of Raleigh, and Delaware, and Gorges; the compilations of Eden, and Willes, and Hakluyt, had filled the commercial world with wonder."

The reader may be pardoned if he smile at the historian when he describes the home-sick exiles of Leyden, as impatient to play their part in "the great drama of humanity!" as he has elsewhere styled it. The gentle English poetess has caught the source of their actions with truer inspiration, when she exclaims:

"What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine?
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?—
They sought a faith's pure shrine!"

The American historian assigns juster motives, however, for the final decision of the Pilgrims to abandon their foreign resting-place, and found a new home under the Government of their native land.

(To be continued.)

MY THREE-FOLD REST.

I.

Come unto Me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. xi., 28.

From sin and sins, dear Lord I rest—
Altar and Priest and Sacrifice Thou art;
By law and sin no more oppress,
I share in Thy beatitude a part.
Yesterdays are covered by Thy blood;
To-day my only shelter is Thy power;
To-morrow Thou wilt be as strong and good
As in the past most gracious hour.

II.

Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me: for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."—Matt. ix. 29.

Rest by serving at Thy will—
Thy yoke is easy and Thy burden light;
And peace grows deep and deeper still,
As my obedience proves Thy might.
Hold my powers alone for Thee—
Use them in loving errands of Thy grace;
And calm me, though I may not see Thy methods, as before Thy face.

III.

Here remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God."—Heb. iv., 9.

And yet the noblest rest remains
In sweet reserve for hope and love;
No path no place for sighs or pains,
'Tis kept a glad surprise above.
In rest untroubled and serene,
In Thy bright presence, spotless Lamb!
To me each day, by every scene
For robe and harp, for crown and palm.

—Stone.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.
I furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets (not two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of
1. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon,
in their fac-simile autograph, and also imperi-phograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-cents each. Postage stamps taken.

A Connecticut YANKEE in KING ARTHUR'S COURT.

This is Mark Twain's best and most original work. A keen and powerful satire on English nobility and royalty. A thoroughly American work. Illustrated by 360 fine engravings by Dan Beard!

AGENTS WANTED
An exclusive control of territory to be given.
TENS OF THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS given away as prizes to agents.
Send for circulars.
L. Webster & Co., 3 East 14th St., New York.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressing need, and can be mailed to the address of SHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

SEE
Our Elegant Cards & Scrap Pictures please the Children Over 100,000 sold this year. All praise them.
50 different pieces 10 cents.
100 " " 15 " " 500 " " 50 " " Beautiful Cards for one penny each and upward.
Address Art Dept., G. S. V. & Co. Clintonville, Conn.

PRETTY.

WEIGHTS AND WINGS.

By CHAS. F. DEEMS, D.D. Introduction by Bishop JOHN F. the family. Ele- Agents wanted tance no hin- cise territory. Send all descriptive circulars BUR B. KETCHAM, Pub., 13 Cooper Union, N. Y.

The Gospel of Common Sense,

As Contained in the Canonical Epistle of James,

By CHARLES F. DEEMS, D. D., L. L. D.,
Pastor of the Church of the Strangers, Editor of "Christian Thought," and Author of "Weights and Wings," "Sunshine for Dark Hours," etc., etc.

All the discussions in this volume were loosened out and inflamed for the pulpit, and delivered in a series of discourses. They were listened to by thousands of hearers in different parts of the country. Much interest was excited, and the many demands from those who heard had led to the publication of the volume.

The teachings of this admirable letter are so expounded as to be adapted to men's surroundings of the present day. It is valuable as presenting the Christian religion from the standpoint of common sense. No man is better prepared to produce such a book than Dr. Deems; every page bears the imprint of his devout spirit and gentlemanly taste.

Theodore L. Culyer, D. D., says: "The style of the book is easy and most readable. It ought to be read at every fireside in the land. May the Holy Spirit attend and bless the circulation of this capital volume."

President Francis L. Patton, D. D., LL. D., says: "I have been greatly interested in it and cordially commend it as a book that justifies its title, in its style as well as in its matter."

Cumberland Presbyterian says: "The book is full of food for earnest thought."

The Christian Intelligencer says: "The book is a wholesome tonic for nineteenth century Christians."

Journal and Messenger says: "Sound, sensible teaching is found everywhere in the book."

Wesleyan Christian Advocate says: "We most cordially recommend the book as one of great power and vigorous thought—just such a book as is now needed."

National Baptist says: "The volume is a commentary. The Sermons are full of sweetest evangelical thought."

Public Opinion says: "The plain words of the apostle are expounded in a plain and helpful way and make religion in its results to be clearly a thing of every day life."

One Volume, Cloth, 12mo., 320 Pages, Price $1.50.
Sent Postpaid on Receipt of Price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED!

"ARTISTIC HORSE-SHOEING."

By PROF. GEORGE E. RICH.

THIS is a practical and scientific treatise by a thorough mechanic who can turn a horse-shoe with the most expert, and is willing to impart to others the information he has acquired during a lifetime spent at the forge and in lecturing on the horse's foot and the proper methods of shoeing. His new book gives improved methods of shoeing, with special directions for shaping shoes to cure different diseases of the foot, and for the correction of faulty action.

The book is Filled with Illustrations

of different shaped shoes, each designed for a special purpose.

It is not too much to say that this book is literally

Worth Its Weight in Gold

to every man who shoes horses for a living. Every blacksmith or horse-shoer will find it profitable to send for one IMMEDIATELY.

The price is One Dollar, beautifully bound in Extra Cloth, with Ink Side Stamp.

Remit in any safe way. Address all orders to Address, J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

PLAYS!
DE WITT'S AMATEUR AND STANDARD PLAYS. DICKS' LONDON ACTING EDITION OF PLAYS. Complete Descriptive Catalogue of over 2000 Plays; Dialogues; Readings and Recitations; Charades; Tableaux; Pantomimes; Books of Games, Sports and Amusements; Athletics, Gymnastics, etc., etc., sent free on application to The DeWitt Publishing House, 33 Rose St., N. Y.

BAILEY'S REFLECTORS.

For Gas For Oil

COMPOUND light-spreading Silver-plated Corrugated Glass. A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price list free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO. 113 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

FREE samples of cloth the famous Plymouth Rock $3 Pants are cut from, including self-measurement blanks and linen tape-measure. If you mention this paper. Address Plymouth Rock Pants Co., 11 to 17 Eliot St., Boston, Mass.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTEY
ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

$50 OUTFIT ON 30 DAYS' TIME TO AGENTS
Guarantee $150 profits in four weeks or no pay, to travel or work at home. No competition. C. JARVIS & CO., Racine, Wis.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills. BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
ACT LIKE MAGIC ON A WEAK STOMACH.
25cts. a Box
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

"Demonology or Spiritualism," Ancient and Modern. "An effective weapon." "A sword of fire." "Only unanswerable work on the subject."—Startling disclosures.—History facts and data—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo. cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

RIDGE'S FOOD
The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

$3.75 A DAY And steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write at once. Franklin Co., Richmond, Va.

IF YOU WANT AN "OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE, OR BAGSTER BIBLE,
send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

Some Children Growing Too Fast

become listless, fretful, without energy, thin and weak. But you can fortify them and build them up, by the use of

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES Of Lime and Soda.

They will take it readily, for it is almost as palatable as milk. And it should be remembered that AS A PREVENTIVE OR CURE OF COUGHS OR COLDS, IN BOTH THE OLD AND YOUNG, IT IS UNEQUALLED. Avoid substitutions offered.

"A Perfect Remedy for Catarrh."

A learned professor in one of the largest and most famous colleges in America, recently told a gentleman that the Pillow-Inhaler had cured a nasal catarrh which he had had from birth, and that he owed his present healthful and rotund appearance to the Pillow-Inhaler.

Rev. James Chambers, pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church, New York City, writes: "I have used the Pillow-Inhaler for over two months and I hereby cheerfully testify to its effectiveness for throat disease and bronchitis. I would not be without it."

A pamphlet explaining all about the Pillow-Inhaler, and testimonials, sent free by addressing The Pillow-Inhaler Co., 1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

HOSPITAL REMEDIES

THE Favorite Prescriptions of the Brightest Medical Minds in the world, as used by them in the Hospitals of London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna.

ONE MEDICINE FOR ONE DISEASE.

No. 1—Cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, Rose Cold, Catarrhal Deafness.
No. 2—Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption. A Peerless Remedy.
No. 3—Rheumatism, Gout.
No. 4—Liver & Kidneys, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation, Bright's Disease.
No. 5—Fever and Ague, Dumb Ague, Malaria, Neuralgia.
No. 6—Female Weakness, Irregularities, Whites. A Golden Remedy.
No. 7—A Perfect Tonic, which gives Health, Form and Fulness, Clear Complexion, Good Blood and lots of it.
No. 8—Nervous Debility, Loss of Power, Impotence, an incomparable remedy.

Every bottle guaranteed to cure its special disease if CURABLE and to give permanent relief ALWAYS. Descriptive Circulars sent free on application. HOSPITAL REMEDY COMPANY, Toronto, Canada.

RELIABLE AGENTS WANTED.

RHEUMATISM.—A pamphlet telling in plain terms "What rheumatism really is," "The cause of the pain attending it," and "how sufferers can obtain relief," will be sent FREE to any sufferer by F. W. KIMBALL, 357 Washington Street, Boston, Mass.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

Has a Pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the intestines, just as a person does with the finger. With light pressure the Hernia is held securely day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free. EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

500 LOTS Given away to advertise our new towns. Send full name and address with 4c. postage and we will send you a deed to a lot 25x135 feet. MIDLAND TOWN CO., Kansas City, Mo.

Everywhere with Jesus—
Thus I find sweet rest;
Just the way He giveth
Is for me the best.
Brightest day without Him
Gives but clouded light;
Walking in His presence,
Even night is bright.

When I follow Jesus—
Pressing to His side,
Even ills are helpful
As a gracious tide,
If His goings lead me
Into pathways strait,
Yet His blessed presence
Brightens every state.

Everywhere with Jesus,
Counting all but dross,
To behold His glory—
To exalt His Cross;
Speaking forth His praises—
Telling men His grace,
Calling to His presence
All who long for peace.

—Rev. J. S. Haugh.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

TO THE READER.

If you are on the look-out for a particularly excellent religious book for either your own use or for a gift to a friend, we can recommend this one,

AT JESUS' FEET,

A Prayer, Promise and Poem for Every Day in the Year.

(Thoroughly Scriptural and Evangelical.) 12mo., 372 pages, neat cloth binding, gilt top and a silk marker. Price, by mail, $1.25, or five copies sent prepaid for $5.00.

"We believe this class of books have a blessed mission, and we think the reader will find this among the choicest of the many that are sending streams of sunshine through the world."

It makes a very acceptable Christmas Gift or New Year's Present.

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 & 3 Bible House, New York.

A. S. BARNES & CO., PUBLISHERS,
New York.

NEW AND STANDARD BOOKS.
PENTECOST'S BIBLE STUDIES.

Sunday-School Lesson Comments for 1890.

Cloth. Price.....$1.00

ABBOT ON MARK AND LUKE.

An Illustrated Commentary. Cloth, 1 vol.
Price..... 1.75

PATHFINDER PHYSIOLOGY.

A School and Family Series. Recommended by W. C. T. U.

CHILD'S HEALTH PRIMER..... .80
PHYSIOLOGY FOR YOUNG PEOPLE..... .50
HYGIENIC PHYSIOLOGY..... 1.00

HALE'S LIGHTS OF TWO CENTURIES.

Fifty Distinguished Men of the last Two Hundred Years. Illustrated. Price..... 1.75

GOODYEAR'S HISTORY OF ART.

A Condensed History of Sculpture, Painting, and Architecture. Illustrated. Price, cloth, 8.50

FAY'S THREE GERMANYS.

Glimpses into their History. By THEO. S. FAY, ex-U. S. Minister. Illustrated. 2 vols.
Cloth. Price..... 7.00

*For sale by all book-sellers, or sent postpaid on receipt of price, by the Publishers.

Christmas Booklets.

Our price-list is now ready and will be sent free on application, together with our various circulars descriptive of holiday books. In order to introduce our booklets, we will send a sample package for $1.00 post-paid, the regular price being $1.50.

WILBUR B. KETCHAM, Publisher,
13 Cooper Union, New York.

TRACTS Sound, clear, pointed Gospel Tracts always on hand at moderate prices, also booklets and books for Christians at the TRACT DEPOT, Orillia, Ont.

Sample packet and Catalogue sent to intending purchaser on receipt of stamp.

Please Read Carefully

if we could make the readers of the CHRISTIAN HERALD realize how good a periodical for home reading SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE is this advertisement would bring us 50,000 new subscribers. If one half who read these lines would send us 10 cents for a recent copy we could place SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE in 100,000 households, and once there its own merits would keep it a regular visitor. While it is one of the most expensive magazines to publish, its price is the lowest. Particularly valuable are its illustrations, which are always interesting in subject and of the very best in quality.

Will you do one of these three things?

SEND 10 CENTS

for a number and examine the magazine. We cannot afford to send any copies free—the cost is too great. Or for the holiday number, with its 70 illustrations and special gold cover. To those sending this amount we will also send one of our paper cutters of which 16,000 have already been sold. To get it you must especially ask for the paper cutter and mention this offer. Or better yet,

25 CENTS

Address: CHARLES SCRIBNER'S SONS, 743 BROADWAY, New York, N. Y.

The Christian Herald, $1.50
Scribner's Magazine, 3.00
4.50

For $3.50

A SAVING OF $1.00.

Accept this offer now, no such liberal arrangement was ever made before.

FOR 1890

there are many interesting groups of articles in hand. One series will be upon Homes and Home Building in the city, the suburb and the country. There will be an article upon what one may do through the "Building and Loan Associations" by describing how people of small means have built homes through these associations. With illustrations.

Other articles will treat of:

African Exploration, describing what is new in this great field.

American and Foreign humorist Artists, with nearly a hundred humorous drawings.

Floral Decoration of Ponds, by a well-known specialist. Superbly illustrated.

Bird Homes, by W. Hamilton Gibson, with many drawings by the author.

Electricity in the Household, Edison's chief electrician of A. E. Kennell.
Two New Serials, both of fascinat interest, with many illustrations.

How the Poor Live—See Holiday number, illustrated by photographs of actual scenes taken at night by flash-light.

Short Stories make a feature in the future as in the past.

Robert Louis Stevenson will be one of the contributors to the new volume.

A new department and additional $5 will begin in 1890, and much more which cannot be enumerated here.

BOYS SLEEPING IN THE STREETS AT NIGHT. From Flash-light Photograph. From "How the Poor Live."

Nothing is so good as a subscription for a present—it lasts a year.

THE Alfred Dolge
FELT SHOES
AND SLIPPERS.

Noiseless,
Warm, Durable.

A CHRISTMAS SUGGESTION.
THE WIFE (eagerly): "Cousin Belle's early Christmas present gives me an idea! What could be better than to send Alfred Dolge Felt Shoes or Slippers to all on our Christmas list. Nothing could give more comfort and pleasure."

PERFECT EASE
AND COMFORT.

Made in all Styles for Men,
Women, and Children.

Prevent Rheumatism and Cold Feet.
Send for Illustrated Price-List.
Mention Christian Herald.

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York.

New Xmas Cantatas, Services and Carols.

Christmas, Past and Present.—A new Cantata, by FANNY J. CROSBY and CARL FLORIO. Bright, Original, and not difficult Dialogues, Recitations, Solos, Duets and Choruses. Imparting a most beautiful and impressive lesson. Sure to give satisfaction. Price, 30 Cents.

Christmas Annual No. 20.—Contains an ample supply of new, original, bright, cheerful and appropriate carols by the best composers. 4 cents each, $3.00 per 100.

A full Catalogue of our other popular Cantatas, Services and Xmas Music sent on request.

76 East Ninth St. BIGLOW & MAIN, 81 Randolph St. Chicago.

Stepping
Heavenward

By Mrs. E. PRENTISS.
New edition in paper, with eight illustrations.

25 CENTS.

Sold by all booksellers, or sent by mail on receipt of price in postage stamps.

ANSON D. F. RANDOLPH & CO.,
38 West Twenty-third St., New York.

ABOUT GLOVES

When you are buying gloves remember that there is such a thing as a price that is too cheap. It is better to pay a fair price and get good gloves like

HUTCHINSON'S.

They are made from selected skins and are WARRANTED. If you want to know more about gloves in general, and Hutchinson's in particular, send stamp for his book "About Gloves," it will interest you. Established 1862.

Will send a good glove measure with book to those who mention this paper.

J. C. HUTCHINSON, Johnstown, N. Y.

OPIUM

Morphine Habit, (Opium Smoking), etc., easily cured. Book Free. Dr. J. C. Hoffman, Jefferson, Wisconsin.

you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289, 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

CHANCE FOR ALL

To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER OF 34 pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want.

STENOGRAPHY.

AND
TYPE-WRITING.
The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching; long established; hundreds of graduates holding responsible positions; success guaranteed. Also type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free. Write or call. VERMILYE'S COLLEGE.
816 Broadway, New York.

WANTED AGENTS for
The Christian's Legacy.
One reports the sale of 72 copies in a place of 738 people. Another has sold 102 copies in one church in Springfield, Mass., and is a stranger there. Circulars free. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St. New York.

GLOVE DEPARTMENT

We are now offering our new importation of

Vve. XAVIER JOUVIN

and Jouvin & Co. Gance and Su
Gloves for Ladies, Gentlemen, Children. Also other popular make including English Cape Tan, walking and driving.

We call special attention to our Gauntlet leather Gloves for Ladies, the newest shades.

Information about styles, colors and prices, will be sent on request.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK

NOW READY.

HEIMBURG'S NOVEL

Magdalen's Fortunes,
Lora, The Major's Daughter,
Two Daughters of one Race,
Gertrude's Marriage

4 vols, half Roxburgh, in box, $5.00. Fancy paper, $6.00.

This will make a handsome Christmas present. The novels are spirited, representing real people, their loves and sorrows, pure in tone, thorough elevating, told with grace and cleverness.

WORTHINGTON CO., 747 B'way, N. Y.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY ORGAN
$150 to $1500 Guaranteed 6 years.

PRICE $180 They Lead the World
We sell direct to families, and send for trial in your own home before you buy. Catalogue Free. Estab. 1859. Incor. 1877.
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, N. Y.

IF YOU WANT AN
"OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE OR BAGSTER BIBLE,

send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of styles, sample of type, and price, to
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1858, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 46. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y. WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 13, 1889. Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

H.R.H. THE DUKE OF SPARTA.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF THE DUKE OF SPARTA AND PRINCESS SOPHIE, and Report of the Wedding, IN THE ETERNAL CITY. Dr. Talmage's Sermon in Rome.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

DANIEL'S EIGHT NOTABLE DAYS OF PROPHETIC EVENTS. By Rev. M. Baxter.

The Mission at Lone Wolf's Camp—Two Instantaneous Answers to Prayer—Missionary Work in Brazil.

SOLOMON'S WISE CHOICE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

THE EYE AND THE LIGHT. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: An Inventor's Discouragements—Princeton in 1800—How Jefferson Looked.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE PROF. CHRISTLIEB, of Bonn University.

DR. SPENCER'S STENOGRAPHER. (Illust'd.)

PICTURE OF THE NEW CANTILEVER BRIDGE OVER THE FORTH.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. The Life Story of Mrs. Stenhouse. (Concluded.)

H.H.L. PRINCESS SOPHIE OF GERMANY.

The Greek Royal Wedding: The Duke of Sparta and Princess Sophie, and the Royal Family of Greece.

THE ROYAL GREEK WEDDING.

THE interesting ceremony in the ancient capital of Greece on October 27 has been mentioned in our news columns. We now give portraits of the bride and bridegroom, and a picture of a group of the Greek Royal family, comprising the King and Queen and their six children.

The Bride

was the Princess Sophie Dorothea Ulrica Alice, of Germany, third daughter and fifth child of the late Emperor Frederick, and sister of the reigning Emperor William. Her mother is the eldest daughter of the Queen of England. The Princess was born at Potsdam, June 14, 1870, and is therefore nineteen years of age. Not much is known of her character, as German newspapers do not concern themselves, as the press does in our own land, with the private lives of persons in exalted station. The few facts, however, which have become known indicate that the young lady is a worthy daughter of Frederick the Good and his brilliant and able wife. The description of her departure from the home of her girlhood shows that those who had been most intimately associated with her had learned to love her, and that their station in relation to hers had not excluded them from her kindly and even friendly interest.

Leaving Home.

It is stated that on leaving Potsdam for the capital, where, in the natural course of events, she will one day reign as a Queen, one of her last acts was to visit the Children's Home and say "good-bye" to the little inmates. Before setting out from her old home, the whole household were assembled, and the Princess shook hands with all, even to the humblest domestic, at the same time handing each a present. It is on the surface only a trivial incident, but when we recollect how haughty and arrogant royal personages often are, and the contempt they frequently show for the common people, the spectacle of a royal bride finding time in the midst of her preparations for her wedding to visit the little waifs in their refuge, and to bid a personal good-bye to the men and women who had waited upon her, implies that this was not the first time that she had manifested her interest in them. Then, too, before she left home she went with her mother and sisters to the mausoleum in which lie the remains of her beloved father, whose pure, noble life cannot but have exerted an ennobling influence over her own disposition. The visit must have been a sad one, for all there must have thought of the interest that loving father would have taken, had he been living, in the new relations into which his daughter was entering. Yet, as the Princess showed by visiting the mausoleum, that her father, though dead, was not forgotten, we may hope that his example and his teachings will still be potent influences on her future life.

The Bridegroom

was Prince Constantine, Duke of Sparta, the eldest son and heir of George I., King of Greece. He was born at Athens, July 21, 1868, and is therefore twenty-one years old. His father is the second son of the King of Denmark, who is also the father of the Princess of Wales and the Czarina of Russia. The Danish royal family furnishes a remarkable illustration of what may be termed the romance of history. "The family," says a prominent European journal, "but little more than a generation ago occupied a private and comparatively an obscure station. In the course of a generation it has given a Princess of Wales to England, an Empress to Russia, a King to Greece, and a daughter to the House of Orleans. Within the same period Denmark has engaged in an unequal struggle with the German Powers, and though it emerged defeated and despoiled, the King of Denmark has now lived to see his grandson betrothed to a sister of the German Emperor, whose own Imperial Crown was won in the conflicts which arose, more or less directly, out of the Danish war. What an epitome of history, ancient and modern, we have in the names and personages associated with this latest of royal weddings!"

The present King of Greece is forty-four years old. He was serving in the Danish navy when the Greek crown was offered to him. The kingdom was then still in its infancy. All the glory of ancient Greece had departed from it. For nearly four centuries it had been enslaved by the Sultans of Turkey, and in no part of their dominions had Mohammedan ignorance, intolerance, and corruption been felt more severely than in that classic land. At length (in 1820) the long-suffering people rose and shook off the hated yoke. They were aided by the sympathy of England, France, and Russia, who recommended to them a king when the independent kingdom was eventually established. He was Otho, the second son of the King of Bavaria. His difficulties were enormous, for under Turkish rule there had grown up among the Greeks themselves a lawless spirit, the product of long years of misrule. Otho labored zealously to bring order out of chaos. He was partially successful, but the vigor of his rule, and mistakes that in his position were inevitable, made him unpopular with the people, and in 1862 he was driven ignominiously from his kingdom.

Seeking a King.

Perhaps, had they been free to choose, the people would have established a republic, but they were under the tutelage of the great powers who had helped them to gain their independence, and none of those were likely at that time to look with any favor on republican institutions. The people were, however, left free to choose a king, subject to the approval of their powerful mentors. Their choice fell on Prince Alfred, now Duke of Edinburgh, the second son of the Queen of England. Happily for the Greek nation, their offer was declined, the English Government refusing to sanction the choice. The personal character which the Prince has since developed proves that no greater misfortune could have befallen the nation than to have him as its ruler. The next choice was Duke Ernest, of Saxe-Coburg Gotha, who also declined. The next year (1863) the crown was offered to the second son of the King of Denmark, who accepted it, and he has now reigned over the country for twenty-six years.

His reign has been comparatively tranquil, but since the year 1876, when active trouble broke out in the Balkan Peninsula, King George's position has been very difficult. As yet he has maintained it without going to war. His country gained a considerable addition of territory by the decision of the Conference which followed the Congress of Berlin, in July, 1878. In 1886, after the revolution at Philippopolis and the Servo-Bulgarian War, Greece, instigated by a rash and injudicious minister, M. Delyannis, was eager to declare war against Turkey, and was only stopped by the firm attitude of England.

The Wedding

was celebrated with unusual pomp and magnificence. Few cities have ever seen so many distinguished guests as were gathered together to witness it. Among them were the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Emperor William of Germany and the Empress Victoria, mother of the bride, and the King and Queen of Denmark, the eldest son and heir of the Czar of Russia, and a host of representatives of the royal families to which the young couple are related, besides diplomatic representatives from the United States, Turkey, and the leading European states.

The Greek capital was put in bridal array. Preparations were made of a most extensive and picturesque character. Numerous triumphal arches sprang up, and each of itself was a work of art. The largest of these was at the lower end of Constitution Place and Gardens, lying in a direct line between the Palace and Hermes Street. It was supported on large Corinthian pillars. The frame was of woodwork, but was covered with white plaster, giving an appearance of substantial solidity. There were classic decorations and designs on the upper portions, and the arch was hung with wreaths and flags of all nations. There were other arches also, the handsomest, perhaps, of which was in front of the Church of the Virgin, off Hermes Street; and about fifty yards higher up an arch was erected over each of the entrances and exits of the Piræus Athens Railway Station, by which all the most distinguished guests arrived. The square in front of the main entrance of the Cathedral where the ceremony took place was built round with seats for occupation on the wedding day.

The Ceremony

was conducted by Archbishop Germanos, Metropolitan of Athens, assisted by the Archbishops of Arta, Démétride, Larissa, Pharsale, Stagon, Chalkis, Phthiotide, Arkanian, Triakis, the six archbishops and five bishops of the Peloponnesus, one archbishop and four bishops of the Ægean Isles, and three archbishops and four bishops of the Ionian Isles. On the arrival of the royal party at the Cathedral, the Metropolitan met them at the door. The ceremony commenced at once, the Empress Frederick leading her daughter to the table, and the King of Greece his son. The King gave his hand to the Empress Frederick, and they both retired. The ceremony was of a most impressive character and lasted an hour and a quarter. It was the usual one prescribed by the ritual of the Greek Church, with one exception. Instead of the usual ceremony with the crown of orange blossoms, at the special request of the Queen of Greece, gold crowns, surmounted by a cross, were used. These were held over the head of the bride three times by Prince Henry of Prussia, Prince Albert Victor, and Prince George of Wales, and over the head of the bridegroom by the Czarewitch and Princes George and Nicholas of Greece. This ceremony was repeated when the bride and groom walked round the table three times.

At the moment the young couple were united a magnificent burst of red light poured through the colored windows of the cathedral, suffusing bride and groom, and producing a marvellous effect upon the brilliant uniforms and dresses.

The ceremony completed, the Princess Sophie kissed the King of Greece, the Queen of Greece, the Empress Frederick, the German Empress, and the Queen of Italy. She then kissed the Prince of Wales, the Princess of Wales, and the young princesses. The German Emperor kissed his mother heartily three times.

After the wedding the newly married couple gave a breakfast at their new home. In the afternoon the Duke of Sparta and Princess Sophie drove through the city in an open barouche amid the greatest enthusiasm. At night the whole city was illuminated and the entire population and many visitors paraded the streets cheering and shouting. The scene as the royal cortège drove through the streets of Athens was one of indescribable enthusiasm. Flowers were thrown into the bride's carriage, and huzzas of welcome rent the air. Empress Frederick was affected to tears by the warmth of her daughter's reception in her new home.

An Ancient Tradition.

All reports agree that the Greek populace is simply delirious with joy over the event, and that no such excited public welcome has been seen in a European capital before in our times. The splendor of the match from a political point of view might well arouse Hellenic enthusiasm, but the secret of the popular fervor lies in the old familiar tradition that the glories of the ancient Greek Empire would be revived when a ruler named Constantine should wed a bride named Sophia. The young heir to the Greek throne was avowedly named in deference to this tradition, and to the exuberant Athenian imagination there is nothing less than the hand of destiny in the fact that his German bride bears the name of Sophia.

Greece in Prophecy.

The very existence of a king of Greece at the present time is a remarkable fulfilment of prophecy, because the revival and distinct reappearance of Greece as a separate kingdom at the time of the end of this dispensation, when the last Antichrist shall arise, was distinctly predicted in Daniel 8, where Greece was prefigured as one of the four horns on the he-goat which sprang up in the place of the notable horn, Alexander the Great. The Grecian Empire of Alexander was parted after his death among his four commanders, and thus dismembered into four kingdoms, Greece, Egypt, Syria, and Thrace.

Four hundred years ago the Turks conquered and absorbed these four kingdoms into the vast Ottoman Empire. But they must be separated and reappear as four kingdoms within their ancient boundaries at the time of the end, because Daniel foretells them to be then re-existent. "In the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance [Antichrist] shall stand up," and shall perish at Christ's second advent. This Antichrist is represented as a little Horn springing out of one of those Four Horns, and consequently those Four Horns will re-exist in clearly-defined separate distinctness at the time of the end.

It was, therefore, a fulfilment of prophecy when Greece revolted from Turkey in 1820, and in 1827-8 secured its complete political independence, and convened a national parliament, and had Otho I. appointed its king.

Greece must before long have Epirus, Thessaly, and Macedonia added to its territories, because it possessed those countries when it was one of the four horn kingdoms after Alexander the Great's death. And this enlargement of Greece northward will probably be accomplished within a few years.

CHRISTIAN EQUANIMITY IN AN EARTHQUAKE.

THE terrible earthquakes in Japan, previously mentioned in our news columns, have, it appears, furnished evidence of the power of grace in the Christian converts. Mr. Sidney Gulick, the missionary of the American Board at Kumamoto, where the earthquakes did most damage, writes: "The city seems to have been very near, if not actually, the centre of the disturbance. The ground was rent in many places, the fissures in the city ranging from an inch to two feet in width; from some cracks sand and water were ejected.

"The earthquakes began with a severe shock a little before midnight, which demolished several houses, threw down considerable portions of the great castle walls, and left its mark on all the houses of the city. On that first night four persons were killed in the city, and twenty-four in the province, while many were more or less injured by falling tiles and timbers and by fright. During the following twenty-four hours there were more than fifty distinct shocks, none, however, of a severity equal to the first, though they did much damage to the already weakened buildings. During the succeeding week the shocks decreased in frequency, and confidence began to return to the people, who had been living in booths in the streets and public squares.

"At this juncture there came a fresh earthquake of great severity, also in the dead of night. For two nights and nearly two days the people fled like frightened sheep. They ran through the streets in the dead of night crying aloud and calling on Buddha to help them, repeating time without number their single vain prayer, 'Namu Amida Butsu, Namu Amida Butsu.' Parents lost their children, and children their parents; the sick were abandoned in their houses; and the lame and blind were left to care for themselves. What a scene that was, continued for nearly forty-eight hours, with the panic and terror kept at fever heat by the frequent shocks and thundering detonations of the rending rocks!"

"But this time of terror was just the time for the Christians to manifest the superiority of their faith, and they rose nobly to the emergency. Taking counsel together, they went to the city officials and offered to turn over two school buildings into hospitals. Their offer was eagerly accepted, and the officials promised to furnish the medicines and physicians needed. They also consulted together about other measures to be taken for the safety of the city and people. The coolness and wisdom of our Christian leaders inspired the officials with confidence, who then went about their work with coolness. The result was soon seen throughout the city: the panic began to subside, the sick, the lame, the blind, and the homeless were soon provided for; a few days later confidence was quite restored, stores were open, and the people had largely returned to their customary work."

WORK IN BRAZIL.

THE work of the Presbyterian missionaries in Brazil, though carried on under grave discouragements is making progress, and the missionaries are cheered by some remarkably hopeful circumstances. The Rev. A. L. Blackford, D. D., writing from Bahia to The Church, mentions the following among others: At our communion here on the 2d instant one young woman was received on profession of faith. Her mother was formerly a slave, but has been for a number of years a member of our church. The girl was brought up by a lady of means, who treated her very kindly and was strongly attached to her. About two years ago the lady made it a condition of remaining with her that the girl should give up reading a New Testament her mother had given her and should promise to continue a Roman Catholic. This she declined doing, and left a comfortable home to earn her own living in difficult and often trying circumstances, and she has ever since maintained a steady and correct deportment.

Some months since a soldier of the police force, who had learned of the gospel still further in the interior, went to reside in Bomfim. He is naturally intelligent and of a decided and active character, and through his influence a number of persons have become deeply interested in the truth. His name is Sant' Annas. Another police soldier, who had heard of the gospel from Sant' Annas, stationed at a town in a neighboring district and who is at work in a similar way. He has written me requesting books and tracts to be sent by mail. These soldiers may at any time be sent from one place to another. Sant' Annas in fourteen years' service has been over a good deal of the province.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Old Lady in the Gallery.—A Minister related that "a great meeting of Methodists was held on the death of John Wesley. They mourned the loss of their founder, and great fears were expressed lest Methodism would cease to be a power in the land. One old woman in the chapel gallery, unable to listen in silence any longer, shouted, 'Glory be to God, what you say is a lie! Though Mr. Wesley is dead, the Lord is living.' The meeting accepted her words as a message from God."

Fighting the Deadly Cobra.—Mr. Hutchieson says: "In India there is a small animal called the chechnuse, which is the deadly enemy of the cobra-di-capello. When the two meet, a fight inevitably ensues. Sometimes it happens that the snake stings the chechnuse. At once the animal retires and seeks a certain shrub, which it eats. This shrub counteracts the poison and renders it impervious to stings which it may sustain in the renewed fight; for it immediately returns to the conflict, and, re-attacking the cobra, never leaves it until it is killed. Christians, you have felt the sting of sin, but have come to Christ and received from Him the antidote. Should you not imitate the little chechnuse, and return to wage unceasing and exterminating war against your old enemy, the devil, that you may thus be instrumental in saving some of your fellows from his clutches?"

Christ Found in a Railway Train.—Mr. Duncan, a Scotch drummer, observes: "A few days ago, I was coming from Edinburgh to Glasgow, and as I stood in the station, I asked the Lord to direct me into a compartment in which I could do some work for Him. I seemed to be led into an empty carriage, and as I got in I said to myself, 'Well, Lord, thou knowest best.' Soon after I was seated an old man entered, and at once I thought this was he with whom the Lord intended me to deal; but just as the train was starting, a young man rushed up, and, jerking the door open, jumped in. When he was seated I recognized him as a young fellow whom I had seen at the hotel in Stranraer, and with whom I had been very anxious to speak regarding his soul, and I at once broached the subject, and found that although he was not a Christian he was ready to be led to Christ. We had a very good time of it. I showed him the way to salvation, and there and then in the carriage he embraced Christ as his Saviour. When we arrived at Glasgow we were both rejoicing, he in the possession of a newly found Saviour, I because I was used in leading him to Him."

A Nightly Visit to the Children.—Dr. George F. Pentecost says: "One of the last things that I do at night when I am at home is to visit my children as they lie asleep. I go into one room, and there lies my little girl slumbering peacefully. She does not know that I am there. I go gently over, and looking tenderly down upon my sleeping child I breathe a prayer over her, then, kissing her lightly, I slip from the room. She never knows of these nightly visits, nor how I yearn over her. When I leave her room, I go to that in which my little boy sleeps, and there the same scene is repeated. As I stand by his bedside and recall his day's behavior, I rejoice with thanks to God as I note good qualities opening, or become anxious as evil propensities make their appearance. Do you think the prayers of a father or mother are of no use to a son or daughter? I tell you a righteous parent's prayers form a circle of steel, against which many of Satan's sharpest, heaviest, and most envenomed javelins fall powerless. Next to the grace of God I have to thank the prayers of my righteous mother for keeping me straight."

A Clever Passenger on Board.—"A Young Scotch minister said to Dr. Jamieson, as he pointed to three or four hundred young ministers, 'Do you not sometimes think, Doctor, that the Church would not get on very well without us?' The Doctor smiled, and remarked, 'That reminds me of a certain passenger on board an emigrant ship. He was constantly going among the sailors, telling them how to do this thing and the other, and showing them generally that he knew much better how to manage a ship than they did. One day a storm was coming on, and the officious passenger was much concerned. He came up to the captain, and warned him that the ship and all on board would soon be at the bottom, as the sailors were thoroughly incompetent. The captain listened, and agreeing with him, said it was very unfortunate, especially just then, as he needed a man on whom he could implicitly rely. 'I could trust you,' said the captain, 'if you would do it.' 'I am at your service' was the reply. 'Thank you,' said the captain. 'You see this rope; now I want some one to hold that with all his might, and not let it slip while there is any danger.' The passenger was delighted, and readily accepted the task. Throughout the whole night he stood at his post, firmly believing he was serving the ship. It was only the next morning he heard that the rope had been of no use whatever, except to keep him out of the way!' Some of us imagine, like the young minister, that we are doing all the work and forwarding Christ's cause, when in reality we are either in the way of God's workers, or are standing idly by, doing nothing, while we flatter ourselves we are doing much."

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman (London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 71 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for November:

That Glorious Future. By Rev. J. L. Thompson.
Prophetic Diagrams.
General Signs of the Times and Those Relating to Israel.
By Rev. E. Guers, of Geneva.
Seven Proofs that Antichrist is Future.
H. I. H. Prince Victor Napoleon Bonaparte in Brussels.
The Coming of Christ. Address by an Evangelist of the Catholic Apostolic Church.
Remarkable Vision, July 14, 1889.
"Outidas" Gladstone.
Passing Events. Viewed from a Prophetic Standpoint.

IN THE ETERNAL CITY.

A Sermon by Dr. Talmage, Prepared for Delivery in Rome, Italy, on November 10, 1889.

"I must also see Rome." Acts 19:21.

Why Paul Wanted to See Rome—Objects Which Must Have Interested Him—A Journey in Search of Confirmation of Faith—Scenes in Which Apostles Were Martyred—Paul Bent on Sight-seeing—Christian Curiosity—Death an Embarkation on a Voyage of Discovery—Works Which Survive Life—We Build for Eternity—Associations With the Mightiest Intellect of the Ages—Paul's Education—The Future Triumph of Christianity—The Eternal Rendezvous.

HERE is Paul's itineracy. He was a travelling or circuit preacher. He had been mobbed and insulted, and the more good he did the worse the world treated him. But he went right on. Now he proposes to go to Jerusalem, and says, "After that I must also see Rome." Why did he want to visit this wonderful city in which I am to-day permitted to stand? "To preach the gospel," you answer. No doubt of it; but there were other reasons.

Why He Wanted to See Rome.

A man of Paul's intelligence and classic taste had fifty other reasons for wanting to see it. Your Colosseum was at that time in process of erection, and he wanted to see it. The Forum was even then an old structure, and the eloquent apostle wanted to see that building in which eloquence had so often thundered and wept. Over the Appian Way the triumphal processions had already marched for hundreds of years, and he wanted to see that. The Temple of Saturn was already an antiquity, and he wanted to see that. The architecture of the world-renowned city, he wanted to see that. The places associated with the triumphs, the cruelties, the disasters, the wars, the military genius, the poetic and the rhetorical fame of this great city, he wanted to see them. A man like Paul, so many-sided, so sympathetic, so emotional, so full of analogy, could not have been indifferent to the

Antiquities and Splendors

which move every rightly organized human being. And with what thrill of interest he walked these streets, those only who for the first time, like ourselves, enter Rome can imagine. If the inhabitants of all Christendom were gathered into one plain, and it were put to them which two cities they would above all others wish to see, the vast majority of them would vote Jerusalem and Rome. So we can understand something of the record of my text, and its surroundings, when it says, Paul purposed in the spirit when he had passed through Macedonia and Achaia to go to Jerusalem, saying: "After that I must also see Rome."

As some of you are aware, with my family and only for the purpose of what we can learn, and the good we can get, I am on the way to Palestine. Since leaving Brooklyn, N. Y., this is the first place we have stopped. Intermediate cities are attractive, but we have visited them in other years, and we hastened on, for I said, before starting, that while I was going to see Jerusalem, I must also see Rome. Why do I want to see it? Because I want, by visiting regions associated with the great apostle to the Gentiles, to have confirmed. There are those who will go through large expenditure to have their faith weakened. In my native land I have known persons of very limited means to pay fifty cents or a dollar to hear a lecturer prove that our Christian religion is a myth, a dream, a cheat, a lie. On the contrary, I will give all the thousands of dollars that this journey of my family will cost to have additional evidence that our Christian religion is an authenticated grandeur, a solemn, a joyous, a rapturous, a stupendous, a magnificent fact. So I want to see Rome. I want you to show me the places connected with apostolic ministry. I have heard that in your city, and amid its surroundings, apostles suffered and died for Christ's sake. My common sense tells me that people do not die for the sake of a falsehood. They may practice a deception for purposes of gain, but put the sword to their heart, or arrange the halter around their neck, or kindle the fire around their feet, and they would say, My life is worth more than anything I can gain by losing it. I hear you have in this city

My Faith in Christianity

Paul's Dungeon.

Show it to me. I must see Rome also. While I am interested in this city because of her rulers or her citizens, who are mighty in history for virtue or vice or talents; Romulus and Caligula and Cincinnatus and Vespasian and Coriolanus and Brutus, and a hundred others whose names are bright with an exceeding brightness, or black with the deepest dye; most of all am I interested in this city because the preacher of Mars' Hill, and the defier of Agrippa, and the hero of the shipwrecked vessel in the breakers of Melita, and the man who held, higher than any one that the world ever saw, the torch of Resurrection, lived and preached and was massacred here. Show me every place connected with his memory. I must also see Rome.

But my text suggest that in Paul there was the inquisitive and curious spirit. Had my text only meant that he wanted to preach here he would have said so. Indeed, in another place he declared: "I am ready to preach the gospel to you who are at Rome also." But my text suggests a sight-seeing. This man, who had been under Dr. Gamaliel, had no lack of phraseology, and was used to saying exactly what he meant, and he said, "I must also see Rome." There is such a thing as Christian Curiosity.

Paul had it, and some of us have it. About other people's business I have no curiosity. About all that can confirm my faith in the Christian religion, and the world's salvation, and the soul's future happiness, I am full of an all-absorbing all-compelling curiosity. Paul had a great curiosity about the next world, and so have we. I hope some day, by the grace of God, to go over and see for myself; but not now. No well man, no prospered man, I think, wants to go now. But the time will come, I think, when I shall go over. I want to see what they do there, and I want to see how they do it. I do not want to be looking through the gates ajar forever. I want them to swing wide open. There are ten thousand things I want explained—about you, about myself, about the government of this world, about God, about everything. We start in a plain path of what we know, and in a minute come up against a high wall of what we do not know. I wonder how it looks over there! Somebody tells me it is like a paved city—paved with gold; and another man tells me it is like a fountain, and it is like a tree, and it is like a triumphal procession; and the next man I meet tells me it is all figurative. I really want to know, after the body is resurrected, what they wear, and what they eat; and I have an immeasurable curiosity to know what it is, and how it is, and where it is. Columbus risked his life to find the American continent, and shall we shudder to go out on which shall reveal a vaster and more brilliant country? John Franklin risked his life to find a passage between icebergs; and shall we dread to find a passage to eternal summer? Men in Switzerland travel up the heights of the Matterhorn, with alpenstock and guides and rockets and ropes, and, getting half-way up, stumble and fall down in a horrible massacre. They just wanted to say they had been on the tops of those high peaks. And shall we fear to go out for the ascent of the eternal hills which start a thousand miles beyond where stop the highest peaks of the Alps, and when in that ascent there is no peril? A man doomed to die stepped on the scaffold, and said in joy: "Now, in ten minutes I will know the great secret." One minute after the vital functions ceased, the little child that died last night knew more than Paul himself before he died.

A Voyage of Discovery

Friends, the exit from this world—or death, if you please to call it—to the Christian is glorious explanation. It is demonstration. It is illumination. It is sunburst. It is the opening of all the windows. It is shutting up the catechism of doubt, and the unrolling of all the scrolls of positive and accurate information. Instead of standing at the foot of the ladder and looking up, it is standing at the top of the ladder and looking down. It is the last mystery taken out of botany and geology and astronomy and theology. Oh, will it not be grand to have all questions answered? The perpetually recurring interrogation point changed for the mark of exclamation. All riddles solved.

Who will Fear to Go out on that discovery, when all the questions are to be decided which we have been discussing all our lives? Who shall not clap his hands in the anticipation of that blessed country, if it be no better than through holy curiosity? As this Paul of my text did not suppress his curiosity, we need not suppress ours. Yes, I have an unlimited curiosity about all religious things, and as this city of Rome was so intimately connected with apostolic times, the incidents of which emphasize and explain and augment the Christian religion, you will not take it as an evidence of a prying spirit, but as the outbursting of a Christian curiosity when I say I must also see Rome.

Our desire to visit this city is also intensified by the fact that we want to be confirmed in the feeling that human

Life is Brief, But Work Lasts

for centuries; indeed, forever. Therefore, show us the antiquities of old Rome, about which we have been reading for a lifetime, but never seen. In our beloved America we have no antiquities. A church eighty years old overawes us with its age. We have in America some cathedrals hundreds and thousands of years old, but they are in Yellowstone Park, or Californian cañon, and their architecture and masonry were by the omnipotent God. We want to see the buildings, or ruins of old buildings, that were erected hundreds and thousands of years ago by human hands. They lived forty or seventy years, but the arches they lifted, the paintings they pencilled, the sculpture they chiselled, the roads they laid out, I understand, are yet to be seen, and we want you to show them to us. I can hardly wait until Monday morning. I must also see Rome. We want to be impressed with the fact that what men do on a small scale or large scale lasts a thousand years, lasts forever, that and that we do so in a very short space of time. God is the only old living presence. But it is an old age without any of the infirmities or limitations of old age. There is a passage of Scripture which speaks of the birth of the mountains, for there was a time when the Andes were born, and the Pyrenees were born, and the Sierra Nevada were born; but before the birth of those mountains, the Bible tells us, God was born, aye, was never born at all, because He always existed. (Psalm 90:2) "Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever Thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, Thou art God." How short is human life! what antiquity attaches to its worth! How everlasting is God! Show us the antiquities, the things that were old when America was discovered, old when Paul went up and down these streets sight-seeing, old when Christ was born. I must, I must also see Rome!

We Build for Eternity,

Another reason for our visit to this city is that we want to see the places where the mightiest intellects and the greatest natures wrought for our Christian religion. We have been told in America by some people of swollen heads that the Christian religion is a pusillanimous thing, good for children under seven years of age and small-brained people, but not for the intelligent and swarthy-minded. We have heard of your Constantine the mighty, who pointed his army to the cross, saying, "By this conquer!" If there be anything here connected with his reign, or his military history, show it to us.

The Mightiest Intellect of the Ages was the author of my text, and if for the Christian religion he was willing to labor and suffer and die, there must be something exalted and sublime and tremendous in it; and show me every place he visited, and show me, if you can, where he was tried, and which of your roads leads out to Ostia, that I may see where he went out to die. We expect, before we finish this journey, to see Lake Galilee, and the places where Simon Peter and Andrew fished; and perhaps we may drop a net or a hook and line into those waters ourselves, but when following the track of those lesser apostles I will learn quite another lesson. I want, while in this city of Rome, to study the religion of the brainiest of the apostles. I want to follow, as far as we can trace it, the track of this great intellect of my text, who wanted to see Rome also. He was a logician, he was a metaphysician, he was an all-conquering orator, he was a poet of the highest type. He had a nature that could swamp the leading men of his own day, and, hurled against the Sanhedrim, he made it tremble. He learned all he could get in the school of his native village, then he had gone to a higher school, and there had mastered the Greek and the Hebrew, and perfected himself in belles-lettres, until, in after years,

He Astounded the Athenians, and the Cretans, and the Corinthians, by quotations from their own authors. I have never found anything in Carlyle, or Goethe, or Herbert Spencer that could compare in strength or beauty with Paul's epistles. I do not think there is anything in the writings of Sir William Hamilton that shows such mental discipline as you find in Paul's argument about justification and resurrection. I have not found anything in Milton finer in the way of imagination than I can find in Paul's illustrations drawn from the amphitheatre. There was nothing in Robert Emmet pleading for his life, or in Edmund Burke arraigning Warren Hastings in Westminster Hall, that compared with the scene in the courtroom when, before robed officials, Paul bowed and began his speech, saying, "I think myself happy, King Agrippa, because I shall answer for myself this day." I repeat, that a religion that can capture a man like that must have some power in it.

It is time our wiseacres stopped talking as though all the brain of the world were opposed to Christianity. Where Paul leads, we can afford to follow. I am glad to know that Christ has, in the different ages of the world, had in his discipleship a Mozart and a Handel in music; a Raphael and a Reynolds in painting; an Angelo and a Canova in sculpture; a Rush and a Harvey in medicine; a Grotius and a Washington in statesmanship; a Blackstone, a Marshall, and a Kent in the law; and the time will come when all the observatories and universities, and philosophy will, through her telescope, behold the morning star of Jesus, and in her laboratory see that "all things work together for good," and with her geological hammer discern the "Rock of Ages." Oh, instead of cowering and shivering when the sceptic stands before us, and talks of religion as though it were a pusillanimous thing—instead of that, let us take out our New Testament and read the story of Paul at Rome, or come and see this city for ourselves, and learn that it could have been no weak gospel that actuated such a man, but that it is an all-conquering gospel—aye! for all ages the power of God and the wisdom of God unto salvation.

The Religion of Christ Will Conquer

Men, brethren, and fathers! I thank you for this opportunity of preaching the gospel to you that are of Rome also. The churches of America salute you. Upon you who are, like us, strangers in Rome, I pray the protecting and journeying care of God. Upon you who are resident here, I pray grace, mercy, and peace from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ. After tarrying here a few days we resume our journey for Palestine, and should we never meet again, either in Italy or America, or what is called the Holy Land, there is a holier land, and there we may meet, saved by the grace that in the same way saves Italian and American, and there, in that supernal clime, after embracing Him who, by His sufferings on the hill back of Jerusalem, made our heaven possible, and given salutation to our own kindred whose departure broke our hearts on earth, we shall, I think, seek out the travelling preacher and mighty hero of the text who marked out his journey through Macedonia and Achaia to Jerusalem, saying: "After I have been there, I must also see Rome."

THE LATE PROFESSOR CHRISTLIEB, OF BONN UNIVERSITY.

(See Portrait on Page 732.)

THE cause of evangelical Christianity has lost a distinguished and valiant champion by the death of Professor Christlieb (whose portrait appears on page 732), who filled the chair of Theology at the University of Bonn until September of this year, when he entered into rest. Both by tongue and pen he labored indefatigably to stem the tide of Rationalism, which is sapping the faith of Germany's most brilliant sons, and to lead young men to trust in Christ instead of in their own unaided reason. The value of such a man in our day cannot be overestimated. It is from the learned, the deep thinkers and able logicians, that the doubt and scepticism which are so prevalent in all lands proceed, and young men are in consequence apt to imagine that learning and faith cannot exist together. In Professor Christlieb they saw them combined, and they were reassured by their knowledge of his character. Like our own Dr. McCosh, he was a leader whom any young man might feel safe in following. God can raise up men like him to take his place, or we might be tempted to feel that his loss was irreparable.

Theodore Christlieb was born at Birkenfeld, in Würtemberg, March 7, 1833. He was, therefore, little more than fifty-six years old when he died. His father was pastor at Birkenfeld, and afterward Dean of the Church of Würtemberg at Ludwigsburg. At the age of eighteen he entered the University of Tübingen, in which he remained from 1851 to 1855. For a short time afterward he was engaged as private tutor to a nobleman's family at Montpellier, in France, and then entered the gospel ministry, discharging for ten years the duties of assistant pastor at Würtemberg; during this time he took the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. In 1858, by very special request, he went to London for the purpose of spending a short time in Christian work among the German young men who are employed there in large numbers as clerks and mechanics. He hired a room under a Congregational Church, but the work grew so rapidly and extensively under his hands that he was persuaded to remain, and a church was built for the congregation which he gathered around him. A German Young Men's Christian Association was also formed through his efforts. He stayed seven years in London, and during that time did much valuable work, especially by his course of lectures, in German, on the Evidences of Christianity.

In 1865 he returned to Germany and became pastor of Friedrichshafen, where he labored for three years. In 1868 he received the call to the position in which he became famous the world over as Professor of Theology at Bonn. This was congenial occupation, for there was no work he loved so well or for which he was so well fitted as that of leading young men to Christ and training them for Christian work. At the same time his power as a debater, his erudition, and his stalwart defence of the doctrines of the gospel, won for him the much-prized distinction of the D. D. degree of the University of Berlin.

In 1885, in conjunction with the Rev. E. Schrenk and other friends, Professor Christlieb founded the German Evangelization Society, in connection with which a training-school for evangelists was afterward opened at Bonn, called the Johanneum. Homiletical lectures were delivered gratuitously by Professor Christlieb, who made a practice of hearing the students preach, and then, by kind, critical suggestions, aided them in the preparation of their sermons. Additional rooms have recently been added to the Johanneum, in order to extend the accommodation for the reception of more students. To the influence of this institution is due, under God, in no small measure the reaction which has in some of the German Universities set in against the deadly Rationalism which formerly prevailed, and in favor of evangelical truth.

Besides this double work, he found time to prepare his valuable work on Modern Doubt and Christian Belief, which has been translated into English and extensively circulated here and in England. Professor Christlieb has also rendered noble service to the same cause by a paper read in 1873 before the Conference of the Evangelical Alliance in New York, on The Best Methods of Counteracting Modern Infidelity. In pamphlet form this paper has been published in English, French, German, Dutch, Swedish, Danish, Italian, and Greek, and has exercised a powerful influence by its thorough exposure of the hollowness of current unbelief, and by its admirable counsels as to the spirit and method by which it is to be met and refuted. Of late years Professor Christlieb's name has also been prominently before the public as the historian and advocate of Christian missions, by his work entitled Protestant Foreign Missions: Their Present State. Many other works have also issued from his pen during his thirty years of labor, all bearing on the same all-important subject.

BISHOP TAYLOR IN ENGLAND.

THE indefatigable and energetic Bishop Taylor is now paying a visit to England, and thus writes to one of its journals: "I have just arrived from the Congo. My principal business, on a hasty trip, to return to West Africa in a few weeks, is to complete arrangements with the builder of our steamer, to send a master builder from his yard to put her together, and set her afloat as quickly as possible. Happily, delays are not always failures, but often essential conditions to ultimate success. I believe it will be so in regard to our unexpected delays with the steamer."

"The teaching force of all the facts in the case bring us clearly to the conclusion that the planting of missions extensively in the great and populous countries of the upper Kassai and Sankura requires that we have a chain of missions, and a transport agency and facilities, extending from the sea to the centre of the continent, giving us, by the way, a neglected, densely populated region, belonging to the Congo State, on the north side of Lower Congo, 100 by 250 miles in extent. The older missions are working on the south side of the Congo, so that we shall in no way encroach on them. So, as a part of these foundation arrangements on the Lower Congo, essential to success on the Upper Congo waterways, we find that our steamer is needed, by twenty to one, more on the Lower Congo than upon the Upper. We shall build her at Vivi, to carry missionaries and mission goods from ship's side at Banana 100 miles up the river to Vivi."

"In connection with this we will build a steel launch, to be propelled by oars and sails, to carry up river cargoes through the middle passage of Congo, eighty-eight miles from Isangila to Manyanga. When this is developed, then we shall require a small steamer for the Kassai and the Sankura. We needed such a boat in 1886, when we had a force waiting at Stanley Pool, who would have met Dr. Summers, who entered by the Angola route, at Luluaburg, but we could not, on any of the five little steamers on the Upper Congo about the time of his arrival, get a passage for one missionary. Now there are a dozen little steamers on those waters, and we can get a passage to take up a successor to dear Dr. Summers and others also, to keep our promise to the Bashalange people and other nations beyond, till we can complete arrangements below, as aforesaid, for the planting of missions in those far interior countries on a broad scale."

SOLOMON'S WISE CHOICE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for November 24, 1 Kings 3; Golden Text, Prov. 8: 11.

Solomon's Unwise Marriage—Innovation in Worship—His Greatness God-Given—A Worker's Painful Experience—The National Convention—Personal Intercourse with God—The King's Gifts Accepted—His Humble View of Himself—His Desire for a Hearing Heart—All that it Implies—His Request Granted—A Definite Transaction—The Gift Tested.

AFTER the death of David, and after he had fulfilled the last direction given to him by his father, Solomon next turned his attention to taking a consort, and, apparently without God's direction, he married Pharaoh's daughter. This was, humanly speaking, a politic step, which would strengthen his kingdom in the eyes of the surrounding nations. But if he had sought a wife, as Abraham sought one for his son, from the hand of God, how much more blessed the life of Solomon might have been! Pharaoh's daughter may have been, and probably was, a very beautiful and gifted woman, but if she had been to him all that a godly wife should be to her husband, how would he have also loved many strange women?

At this time "Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David his father, only he sacrificed incense in high places." The very mention of this would infer a tendency to want of simplicity in worship, though now only latent, and like a dangerous germ in his life. He loved

The Lord, Only.

How often this may be said of some child of God! He is a Christian, only he is so conceited; she is a Christian, only she does so talk against others, etc., etc. Oh how many more there are of the damaged article Christianity than of the original, genuine type, when men "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus," when "none of them said of aught that he possessed that it was his own," and "great grace was upon them all." (Acts 4: 13, 32, 33.)

Solomon "was strengthened in his kingdom, and the Lord his God was with him and magnified him exceedingly." (II Chron. 1: 1.) His greatness was not imperilled, it was not intrinsic, but it was given of God. Let us never forget that wealth, position, talent, or any other earthly advantage is ours only by grace, and is given us only to "profit withal" (I Cor. 12: 7); all that we possess we have for the glory of God and for the good of men and not for ourselves.

A worker who had been much used of God for the conversion of souls, had never fully learned the capital lesson of Christianity, "He died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him which died for them and rose again." (II Cor. 5: 15.) God provided her with a comfortable home where she could live in ease and luxury, and she took for granted that after her faithful work for God she had a right to expect a quiet and enjoyable end of life. But God loved her better than she knew, and permitted the enemy to afflict her with dangerous and painful sickness. She could not understand God's dealings with her, and thought it hard that she, who had labored for Him, should experience what looked so much like punishment. What did it all mean? Just this: even in her work for God she had lived to herself, she had enjoyed being the instrument used, had eagerly drunk in the flattery of admirers, and, while in real earnest for souls, was not in any real sense "a living sacrifice" to God, and He was now calling her to see were all her plans, and how she had yet to learn to let Him make her plans, and take the reins of her life in His hands. For this He waited that He might heal her, and give her a far happier old age in unselfish service than she could have had in the gratification of her own tastes.

How Unlike Jesus

Then Solomon held his first great national assembly; he gathered the captains of thousands, and of hundreds, the judges, and every governor in all Israel, the chief of the fathers, and they went with him to the tabernacle of the Lord, which was pitched at Gibeon, and there Solomon, in the presence of assembled Israel, offered a thousand burnt offerings upon the brazen altar. It was a magnificent testimony of the honor in which he held his God; he meant all Israel to know that he was not ashamed of his God or of his worship. It was a good beginning, and God was pleased with it. But the whole of this zeal might have been manifested without any heart to heart intercourse between him and God: it is this latter which God prizes. "God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth;" "the Father seeketh such to worship Him" (John 4: 23, 24.) But this always begins by a revelation of God to our souls. Oh, it is indeed a new birth when first real, personal intercourse takes place between Him and us, and we know with "joy unspeakable and full of glory," that God is speaking to us. Solomon may have known this before, but at this time it is recorded. It was after the thousand burnt offerings had been offered by Solomon in Gibeon (II Chron. 1: 7), that "the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream . . . and God said, Ask what I shall give thee." Solomon had been giving to God. It is a wondrous grace that God will ever receive anything at our hands; and we know little of our true relation to God, if we are proud or self satisfied, when we are permitted to give Him anything. David has the right spirit when he says, "But who am I, or what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? For all things come of Thee, and of Thine own have we given thee." But although we cannot give to God anything but of His own, yet "God loveth a cheerful giver." (II Cor. 9: 7.) He marked the widow's mite (Mark 12: 42, 44): He said, "who-soever shall give you a cup of cold water to drink in my name, because ye belong to Christ, verily I say unto you, he shall not lose his reward." (Mark 9: 41.) Nevertheless, on God's side as well as on ours, "it is more blessed to give than to receive" (Acts 20: 35), and He loves a receiving spirit which will value His gifts as much as a cheerful giver who will count God worthy of anything and all which we can give Him. Ask what I shall give thee. Every promise of our God for spirit, soul, and body is spread out before us, and His spirit lights them up as He speaks these words to us.

"In That Night,"

"And Solomon said, Thou hast shewed unto thy servant David, my father, great mercy, according as he walked before thee in truth and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee." Solomon recognized that God's grace to his father was according to his walk with Him. "And thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day. And now, O Lord, my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David my father; and I am but a little child; I know not how to go out or come in." Oh, if Solomon had always remained a little child in his own eyes, he would have been safe from the many snares into which he fell afterwards. "Except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." (Matt. 18: 3.) The child spirit is the true preparation for blessing. "I know not" is the true preparation for being guided by God. "If any man thinketh that he knoweth anything, he knoweth nothing yet as he ought to know." (I Cor. 8: 2.) "And thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people, that cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude. Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding ('hearing,' margin) heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad; for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?"

A Hearing Heart.

Oh what a gift of God! A heart attentive to His voice, a heart which leans not to its own understanding, but is open to God's rebuke, to His caution as well as to His comfort. A hearing heart is never in a hurry, for if God can wait, so can His child. A hearing heart is never anxious, because it has learned to cast all its care on God, knowing that He careth for His child. A hearing heart is never self-conscious; the presence of God blots out its own presence. A hearing heart is never unkind, it lives so near to Him who is love, that it cannot but love as He loves. This hearing heart is, in the language of the gospel, simply a heart which abides in Christ. Solomon was simply yielding himself up to the direct and continual guidance of his God.

God was "pleased." Oh how glorious that God can be pleased with sinful man! But for the precious blood of Christ, it could not be. "And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life: neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies; but hast asked for thyself understanding to discern judgment; behold, I have done according to thy words; lo, a wise and an understanding heart, so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee." Solomon had the word of God for it, but there is no evidence that he felt himself any wiser than before; God was his guarantee that it was so. This was enough. It is thus God would have us take His promises, taking for granted that what He says must be in the very nature of things. "He spake, and it was done; He commanded, and it stood fast." (Ps. 33: 9.) Oh how much we miss of God's blessing because we do not take the Word of God in its simplicity, without some side evidence of feelings to endorse it!

I Have Given Thee

God's measure is not our measure; He always gives as much as we can contain, "Good measure, pressed down, shaken together, and running over." He said to Solomon, "And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches and honor; so that there shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days. And if thou wilt walk in my ways, as thy father David did walk, then will I lengthen thy days." It was like our God to give, and to give more abundantly in this manner. "Solomon awoke, and behold, it was a dream;" but it was no ordinary dream which comes simply "through the multitude of business" (Eccl. 5: 3), it was the Lord speaking in a dream (Num. 12: 6), and Solomon commemorated it by standing before the Ark of the Covenant in Jerusalem, as though to ratify the matter, and he offered burnt offerings and peace offerings, and "made a feast to all his servants." So real, so definite, was this transaction with God to him.

It was not long before his wisdom was put to the proof. All manner of causes came before him for judgment. On one occasion "two women that were harlots" came and "stood before him." The first woman stated that both of them had recently become mothers, that the other woman had overlaid her infant and it had died, and that while she herself still slept, the other woman, finding her own child dead, had risen up at midnight and changed the babes, she knowing nothing of it till the morning, when she awoke and found the other woman's child in the place of hers. The other woman denied the statement, and claimed the living child as hers. Thus they disputed before the king each claiming the living child, each repudiating the dead one. The king commanded that a sword should be brought, and the living child divided between them. "Then spake the woman whose the living child was unto the king (for her bowels yearned upon her son), and she said, O my lord, give her the living child, and in no wise slay it. But the other said, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it. Then the king answered and said, Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it, she is the mother thereof." It was God's wisdom given to the "hearing heart." And now was manifest that which God had spoken: "All Israel heard of the judgment which the king had judged, and they feared the king: for they saw that the wisdom of God was in him to do judgment."

THE MISSION AT LONE WOLF'S CAMP.

A LETTER just received from the Rev. W. F. Re Qua describes his journey to this remote Indian settlement. It is sixty-five miles from the nearest railroad point, and the same distance from the Government agency. The hopeful feature of the work is that it is undertaken at Lone Wolf's urgent request, and he is heartily in sympathy with it. On his arrival Mr. Re Qua found the logs ready cut and drawn to build the school-house, as Lone Wolf had promised. While it is being built Mr. Re Qua and his helpers will live in tents, though the weather is getting very cold. The brave missionary, however, is full of faith and hope. He is cheered by the welcome he has received, and the evident desire of the people to hear the gospel and to get some education. "If the dear readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD," says Mr. Re Qua, "could see the people out here, and the need for mission work, their hearts would be melted, and we should soon have all the funds we need."

What Mr. Re Qua needs just now is money to pay for the floors and windows which must be bought; a few barrels of clothing to make the poorest of the children decent, and some old school-books and lithograph pictures of simple objects to aid in teaching the school. These requests are by no means extravagant, and we shall be surprised if they are not speedily met. All clothing should be addressed to Rev. W. F. Re Qua, Vernon, Wilbarger County, Texas. Gifts of money and letters should be addressed to him at Post-Office, Quartz City, Greer County, Ind. Ter.

TWO INSTANTANEOUS ANSWERS TO PRAYER.

IN an article by Dr. E. K. Alden on "The Place Occupied in the Missionary Work by Prayer" in the Missionary Herald he quotes two notable cases reported by the senior missionary of the A. B. C. F. M. in Ceylon, who says:

"I may mention two most striking cases of answer to prayer. One was the case of young C— last year, during the time of prayer-meetings held by Mr. Chelliah Pilly at Nellore. There was a large gathering of Christians and heathen present, when one of the new converts proposed to pray for his friend Mr. C—, who was led astray from Christ by his own bad example and counsel and by giving him infidel books, etc. With unspeakable grief he knelt down in prayer to God to save this soul. About twenty to twenty-five, one after another, pastors, catechists, and other who were moved by the Spirit of God to pray, knelt down and poured out their hearts, wrestling with God fervently for the conversion of this soul, and singing appropriate songs at intervals which would inspire trust in the merits of Christ. The result was that this infidel was touched by the Spirit of God, and he began to sob and cry. His stubborn heart melted; and, as he afterwards confessed, some power which he could not withstand worked in him—the power of God. Thus we saw a proud heart which was opposed to all persuasions subdued, and he returned home with a childlike, Christian heart. It was curiosity that took him to the meeting there, but God gave him the gift of salvation in Christ Jesus. Thank God, that convert from that day forward lives a consistent Christian life, and he has been the means of leading his wife and others to Christ. He continues an earnest Christian. I can never forget this scene. The power of prayer was never so strongly felt in my heart, and by many others present, as on that day when God so miraculously saved this soul. The heathen marveled at this conversion."

"The second case was the conversion of one A—, who belonged to the family of priests who officiated in the Maruthady temple next to us. I never even dreamed that this young man will ever become a Christian, though I doubted not the power of God to convert him. This also happened during the occasion of a prayer-meeting held at Dr. Mills's house by Mr. Paul and myself. The people of the family were present, and joined in praying and singing, and the spirit of prayer began to blaze in every one as fire from heaven. All this occurred while this young man was standing in the veranda outside listening to the prayers, and filled with groans and grief, thinking that there are none who will take notice and pray for him. He was right in so thinking, as none of us cared to have him in the meeting, for we never expected he will ever be a Christian. Having closed the meeting, we came outside, and saw this young man with a sad face leaning against the wall. We took him, and prayed, and prayed one after another, interspersed with singing, asking him if he does believe the merits of Christ to save him, and persuaded him to surrender himself entirely to Christ. God touched his heart, and from that time forward he lives as a Christian, and works for the salvation of others. He has given up his caste, and his relatives have cast him out of their society. These trials he has borne with much Christian fortitude. This is another striking example of instantaneous answer to prayer."

DANIEL'S EIGHT NOTABLE DAYS OF PROPHETIC EVENTS.

By Rev. M. Baxter.

IT is remarkable that Daniel's Dates show that there are Eight Days of the year that will be days of extraordinary future prophetic events, and we give them here in order of the successive months in which they occur, and not in the order of the years in which they happen.

In the future Millennium of 1,000 years these Eight Days will be marked in Almanacks and Calendars, as Anniversary days of the great historical events mentioned below, just as in modern Almanacks, June 18 is set down as the anniversary of the Battle of Waterloo, and August 15 as the birthday of Napoleon I., and November 9, as Lord's Mayor's day in London, being the commencement of his year of office, etc.

These future Eight Great Prophetic Days are—January 26, February 25, March 5, April 4, April 12, April 21, August 14–15 (the Jewish day from afternoon to afternoon), and November 8. The particulars of these days are as follows:—

I. JANUARY 26, 1901, about 3 p. m., will be the end of time, times and half time, or 1,260 days or 42 months, which will be the political term of office for which the Imperial Antichrist Napoleon will, according to Daniel 7: 25; 12: 7; Revelation 12: 6, 14; 13: 5; 17: 12, 13, be elected by universal suffrage to reign as Roman Emperor over Ten Antichristian Kings of the Ten Kingdoms of Caesar's original Roman Empire, viz., France, Britain, Spain, Italy, Austria, Greece, Egypt, Syria, Turkey, and the Balkan states. The Ten Kings (who probably also may be Napoleons) will be elected by plebiscites to reign for the same term of 1,260 days, which will expire on January 26, 1901, as it will have commenced on the Jewish day, August 14–15, 1897.

Antichrist is to "change times and laws" (Dan. 7: 25), and we believe that just like the Mohammedan Antichrist, he will establish a new style of Calendar, slightly varying, however, from the Mohammedan lunar year system and consisting of precisely 360 days or 12 months of 30 days, i. e., three decays of ten days. And this Calendar may be expected to commence on the Jewish day corresponding with the Bonapartist Fête Day and birthday of Napoleon I., viz., Aug. 14–15, 1897, because according to Dan. 12: 12, it is to commence 1,335 days before April 11, the last day of this Age.

Hence three years and a half, or three times and a half, by the future new Napoleonic Calendar will reach from the Jewish day, August 14–15, 1897, to January 26, 1901.

II. The afternoon of FEBRUARY 25, 1901, will be the end of the 2,300 days and the 1,290 days, which are 30 days longer than the 1,260 days, and which, therefore, will end 30 days after January 26, 1901, viz., on February 25, 1901. These 1,290 days are stated in Daniel 12: 11 to be "The time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination of desolation set up" by the erection of Napoleon's Image in the holy place of the rebuilt temple at Jerusalem on Saturday, August 14, 1897, but it will be cast down by iconoclastic hands on Saturday, Feb.

25, 1901, and thus the sanctuary will be cleansed at the conjoint end of the 2,300 days and the 1,290 days at the distance of 45 days before April 11, 1901, the last day of this Age (Daniel 13: 14; 12: 11, 12). The 1,290 and 45 make up the 1,335.

III. The afternoon of Thursday, MARCH 5, 1896, will be the end of Daniel's 69 weeks of literal days, or 483 days, which commence on Thursday, November 8, 1894, with the renewal of sacrifices in a temple at Jerusalem, and also with "the going forth of a command to rebuild Jerusalem," as predicted in Daniel 9: 25. "From the going forth of the command to rebuild Jerusalem unto Messiah the Prince shall be seven weeks and threescore and two weeks," (i. e., 69 weeks of literal days in the literal day fulfilment), "And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be made a covenant."

These words, according to the best interpretation, imply that these future 69 weeks extend unto Messiah's Second Advent, when He will be made a covenant to His waiting people, by translating them to meet Him in the heavens, and therefore March 5, 1896, is thus indicated to be the day of this great event, as being the end of the 69 weeks, which will begin on November 8, 1894, because, according to Daniel 9: 24, they are "divided off" or "determined" from the commencing part of the 2,300 days which extend from Nov. 8, 1894, to Feb. 25, 1901.

IV. APRIL 4, 1901, which is Passover Day in that year, will be a notable day as being the day of Antichrist's future Covenant with the Jews for one week of seven literal days until April 11, 1901, in literal day fulfilment of Daniel 9: 27.

V. APRIL 11, 1901, is the foundation of the chronological position of all the rest of these Eight Prophetic Days. It is the retrospective terminus a quo of them. It is the last day of Passover Week in 1901, and is therefore the Last Day of this Age, because it is the Last day of Daniel's 2,345 years, which started on the last day of Passover Week in Nisan B. C. 445 (Artaxerxes' 20th year) with Artaxerxes' "command to Nehemiah to rebuild Jerusalem," according to Nehemiah 2 and the year-day fulfilment of Daniel's 69 weeks of years which extended from that command until Christ was made a Covenant at His crucifixion in Passover Week A. D. 39. The 2,300 years reached from Passover Week B. C. 445 to the last day of Passover Week (April 27) in 1856, when by the Crimean War treaty of Peace the cleansing of the sanctuary of the Holy Land began to run its predicted course during the final 45 years of this Age (the extension of the 1,335 beyond the 1,290) from the last day of Passover Week 1856 to the last day of Passover Week (April 11) 1901.

VI. APRIL 21, 1894, which is Passover Day in 1894, will be the great day of the Covenant between the Antichrist Napoleon and the Jews in Jerusalem for one week of seven years in the year-day fulfilment of Daniel 9: 27. He shall confirm a covenant with many of the Jews for one week (of seven years) even until the Consummation" or End of this Age, i. e., Passover Week of 1901, which itself will be the literal-day week of Antichrist's renewed Jewish Covenant for seven days.

VII. AUGUST 14–15 (the Jewish day from 3 p. m. August 14, to 3 p. m., Aug. 15), 1897, will be exactly at the distance of Daniel's 1,335 days (12: 12) before the Last Day of this Age, which strictly speaking is the Jewish Day from 3 p. m. April 10 to 3 p. m. April 11, 1901. Therefore August 14–15, 1897, will be the first day of the 1,260 days, and 1,290 days, and 1,332 days, and this will be the day of the setting up of Napoleon's image the abomination of desolation, and the first day of his Imperial reign for 1,260 days (Daniel 12: 7, 11, 12).

VIII. NOVEMBER 8, 1894, being exactly 2,345 literal days previous to April 11, 1901, will be, according to Daniel 8: 14, 9: 24–5, 12: 11, 12, the day of the renewal of the sacrifices in a rebuilt temple at Jerusalem, and also of "the command to rebuild Jerusalem," as further explained in some of the above remarks. The 2,345 days consist of the 2,300 days and the additional 45 days.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

NOTICE.

At the beginning of next year the "Christian Herald" will be enlarged by making the pages a little longer and wider than now, so that thirteen pages will contain a larger quantity of reading matter than fourteen of the present size. The price of the annual subscription will NOT be increased.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Preparations for a Thoroughly Rapid and accurate report of the census are being made. The work of collecting the material will require the services of 175 supervisors and 42,000 enumerators. The latter force will be employed only about six weeks. They will be required to report to the Washington office daily by postal cards which means, in short, forty-two thousand pieces of mail every twenty-four hours from this source alone. Superintendent Porter does not propose that the work of preparing the next census shall be delayed as that of the previous census was. A very considerable amount of the preliminary labor has already been performed. Mr. Porter believes that within three years from the time the enumerators are put in the field he will have all the data ready for distribution.

The Result of the Elections Last Week was eminently gratifying to the Democratic party, and has caused the Republicans not a little concern. Whether it indicates a change in public opinion is doubtful. In some cases local causes are reported, which are sufficient to account for the large Democratic majorities, and for the reversal of the Republican vote of last year. Besides this, there is the inevitable reaction of the year following a Presidential election, when candidates for office whose claims have not been recognized are discontented, and disinclined to work for the party ticket. The registration was generally light, especially so in New York State, which indicates that a large section of the voters refrained from expressing an opinion at all, and there is good reason for believing that the stay-at-homes were chiefly Republicans. In New York, Ohio, Iowa, and Virginia the figures are most significant. In New York Tammany scored a decisive victory. Only one candidate on its ticket was defeated. That was the candidate for Judge of the Court of General Sessions, who, with few personal claims on the support of Tammany voters, was opposed by an Irishman who has been a strenuous supporter of the Parnell movement. The citizens' ticket, of which so much was at first expected, proved to be merely a combination of the Republicans with the County Democracy, and as such, awakened no enthusiasm in either element, while Tammany, put on its mettle by the alliance of its foes, put forth all her energies. There is a great deal of grumbling and apprehension among the higher classes of the city, but as there were not so many votes cast by 300,000 as were cast last year, it is not difficult to fix any blame that may be due. In Ohio the redoubtable Foraker is defeated. No event causes so much surprise as this, because he and his friends were confident of victory. The fact, however, that he was running for his third term, and also that in the Chicago Convention last year his conduct was offensive to influential Republicans explains his defeat in some measure. Gains were also made in the Legislature, which encourage the Democrats to believe that they can elect a United States Senator to succeed Senator Payne. In Iowa the result was close, but there is little doubt that the entire Democratic State ticket is elected for the first time in thirty-five years. The Republicans believe the defeat is due to anti-Prohibition feeling, and to the offensive railroad record of the head of the ticket. In Virginia, in spite of all that could be done for Mahone in the Navy-Yard, Post-Office, and Custom-House, he was defeated. Charges of intimidation and illegal practices are freely made. These, it may be supposed, will be investigated, but the result, as it now stands, indicates that Mahone must have been deceived, or have deceived himself and the national administration.

One of the Most Important Results of the election is the practical test it furnished in Massachusetts of the Australian system of voting. It was tried and approved in all parts of the State. The objections made to the system when it was first advocated were that it was cumbrous, complicated, and liable to mislead ignorant voters, but after trial it was found that not over a dozen ballots in Boston were spoiled, and that the most illiterate voters easily understood what they had to do. A voter on entering the polling booth, instead of coming provided with the usual printed slips, received, after being identified, a paper on which was printed the name and politics of every candidate, with the office for which he was nominated. He took it to an enclosed desk and put a cross against the name of the candidates for whom he wished to vote. This he folded up, and as he passed out deposited it in the box in the usual way. As it was impossible to tell how he voted, bribers were chary of paying, as they could have no proof that he had "earned" his money, except his word, which in the case of a man who would sell his vote was not worth much. The experiment was watched with interest, and several persons from New York went to Boston to see the system in operation.

How the Proclamations Were Signed Which admitted the two Dakotas to Statehood, is told by a Washington correspondent. As there was sure to be a question of precedence and perhaps jealousy between the infant States, the President resolved that the question of priority should not be satisfied. He ordered the documents, which were exactly alike, to be covered down to the blanks left for his name. Then they were turned face down and rapidly changed about until nobody could tell "which was which." After this they were turned over, and the President wrote his name on each. The ink was allowed to dry without the use of blotting paper and then the documents were again turned down and again shuffled about. Then they were taken up and the coverings were removed, and Secretary Blaine telegraphed the Governors of North and South Dakota that the States had been admitted. One of them came into the Union ahead of the other the length of time it took the President to write his name. Which that one was no one knows. Another version has it that the President signed both proclamations at the same time, using a stylus, with carbonized paper between the sheets. On Nov. 8 the proclamation admitting Montana was signed.

The Irish Question is Again at Fever Heat. The attacks of Sir Henry James on the Parnellites in his speech before the Parnell Commission and the recriminations of the Irish members of Parliament are inflaming the passions of both sides. Sir Henry James, on November 6, reminded the Commission that it had evidence regarding the importation of arms into Ireland from men who were openly supporting Mr. Parnell, and who were members of associations that were in active sympathy with the objects of the League. He contended that if it was proven that crime was rife in many districts in Ireland where there was no distress, but where the League had roused the people against the authorities, the charges made by the Times against the League as the source of crime must be held to be proved. Mr. Molloy, one of the Irish members, made a counter charge on the same day at a political meeting. He said that the Parnellites had in their possession documentary evidence proving the complicity of Government officials in a conspiracy against the Irish, and that the publication of this evidence would cause a sensation even greater than that resulting from the commission revelations.

The Paris Exposition Was Closed on Wednesday, November 6, with a most brilliant fête. The number of persons present was estimated at 370,000. Since the Exposition has been open the total number of paying visitors has been 25,000,000, as compared with 12,000,000 in 1878 and 8,000,000 in 1867. The Eiffel Tower receipts alone have been $1,300,000.

The Prediction that a European War is Inevitable is made by Captain E. L. Zalinski, who has gone from this country to study the French war-explosive novelties in Paris. In an interview with the European correspondent of the New York Herald, he said that though a general war might be averted for two or even three years, it was inevitable. "Postpone it as they may," he said, "the crisis must come, and it will be terrible. I have just witnessed the German manoeuvres at Hanover, and I assure you that had those two army corps done in earnest what they made pretence of doing, of the 50,000 men who went into that ten days' action, there would not be 10,000 ready for service to-day. The rest would have been dead or wounded—to such a degree have modern improvements in life-destroying machinery added to the horrors of war."

The Massacre of Dr. Peters and His Party in Africa was reported last week. Dr. Peters was the leader of the German expedition which went to the relief of Emin Pasha. The English suspected that Emin's rescue was only the ostensible object of the expedition, and contended that the real object was to establish a chain of German trading-stations. The expedition had not the protection of the German Government, and Dr. Peters was notified that Stanley was doing all that could be done on Emin's behalf, but he proceeded in the direction of Wadelai. A cable message from Zanzibar now states that the Masuis or Somalis have massacred the whole party except one European named Tiedemann and one Somali, who were wounded, and who are now at Ngao. The latest known at Zanzibar about Dr. Peters, who started inland from Vitu, on July 26, was that he had reached Korkorro, a long distance up the Tanu River. The second column of the expedition, which left Vitu in September had not joined Dr. Peters's advance party when the massacre took place.

Another Letter from Mr. H. M. Stanley Has been received by the Emin Pasha Relief Committee. The explorer says: "I reached the Albert Nyanza from Bonalya for the third time in 140 days, and found out that Emin and Jephson had both been prisoners since the 18th of August, 1888, being the day after I made the discovery that Barttelot's caravan had been wrecked. The troops in the Equatorial Province had revolted and shaken off all allegiance. Shortly after, the Mahdists invaded the province in full force. After the first battle in May the stations yielded, and a panic struck the natives, who joined the invaders and assisted in the work of destruction. The invaders subsequently suffered reverses, and despatched a steamer to Khartoum for reinforcements. I found a letter waiting for me near the Albert Nyanza, exposing the dangerous position of the survivors, and urging the immediate necessity of my arrival before the end of December, as otherwise it would be too late. I arrived there on the 18th of January for the third time. From the 14th of February to the 8th of May I waited for the fugitives, and then left the Albert Nyanza homeward bound." Stanley leaves us to infer that Emin accompanies him, though it is strange that, if it is so, he does not state the fact.

The Proclamation of the President Appointing Thanksgiving Day for November 28 has been issued. Mr. Harrison says: "A highly favored people, mindful of their dependence on the bounty of Divine Providence, should seek fitting occasion to testify gratitude and ascribe praise to Him who is the author of their many blessings. It behooves us, then, to look back with thankful hearts over the past year, and bless God for His infinite mercy in vouchsafing to our land enduring peace, to our people freedom from pestilence and famine, to our husbandmen abundant harvests, and to them that labor a recompense of their toil. Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States of America, do earnestly recommend that Thursday, the 28th day of November, be set apart as a day of national thanksgiving and prayer, and that the people of our country, ceasing from the cares and labors of their working day, shall assemble in their respective places of worship and give thanks to God, who has prospered us on our way, and made our paths the paths of peace, beseeching Him to bless the day to our present and future good, making it truly one of thanksgiving for each reunited home circle as for the nation at large."

A Pitiable Scene in a Cathedral in New York was witnessed a few days ago. It was about noon, and there were about a score of persons in the Roman Catholic Cathedral on Fifth Avenue. The silence was broken by the entrance of an elderly woman, wearing widow's weeds, who advanced down the centre aisle carrying in one hand a large oil portrait and in the other a porcelain miniature. Walking rapidly to the chancel rail, she fell on her knees, threw back the veil from her face, and holding the two portraits above her head, gazed upward at a figure of Christ and prayed aloud for a blessing on them. So violent were her demonstrations that an officer of the cathedral remonstrated with her. She protested, and continued to cry for a blessing on her pictures, which she said were the portraits of her father and her husband, both of whom were in heaven, but came down to visit her every day. She was ejected from the building, but returned as far as the doorway, and there, kneeling on the threshold, again prayed for a blessing on her portraits. Her excited manner and wild talk aroused suspicions as to her sanity, so she was arrested, and was pronounced insane by a physician who examined her. To a thoughtful person the fact of her offering so foolish a prayer might have been evidence that her mind was unbalanced, were it not that foolish prayers are so common. Those men who ask God to bless work undertaken in His name, but really run for their own honor or profit, are as foolish, though they are not so afflicted, as this poor widow. (James 4: 3.)

A Journey Across the Continent for One Dollar was made recently by a Scotchman, who has written an account of his adventures. He formerly resided in San Francisco, where he made considerable money, but, on returning to Scotland, he engaged in speculation, and lost his fortune. He resolved to return to San Francisco, but had only enough money to reach New York. There he hunted up a Scotchman whom he knew, and from him obtained a ticket to Chicago. Thence a friendly engineer, whose accent showed him to be a fellow-countryman, took compassion on him, and let him ride on his engine to St. Louis, and shared his dinner with him too. Then he walked a considerable distance, getting food from kindly persons by the way. He had one dollar when he started from New York, and he used that to finish his journey to North Platte. There he entered a store which had a Scotch name over the door, and received food and a free pass to Julesburg. Thence another friendly engineer took him in a caboose 240 miles to Cheyenne. He walked and stole rides as far as Ogden, where he was imprisoned as a tramp. He thinks the rest and wholesome food did him good, so he was not sorry when the Mormons put him in prison again at Salt Lake City. On coming out of prison he was recognized by a Scotch merchant with whom he had formerly done business, and who took pity on him, gave him a suit of clothes and a ticket through to San Francisco. Thus he crossed the entire continent at the cost to himself of only one dollar. His success was due to the fact that he met Scotchmen, who were willing to help him because he, too, was a Scotchman. The incident teaches a lesson to Christians, who are sometimes indisposed to help a man in the journey of life, though he be a Christian, and though Christ Himself promised a special blessing to those who give help for that reason. (Mark 9: 41.)

The Mysterious Dwindling and Death of some fine shade trees has puzzled the arboriculturists in several sections of Brooklyn, N. Y. The trees have been growing for many years at the edge of the sidewalks and have been much admired. Without any apparent cause they have recently wilted, and some of them are quite dead. Several suggestions have been made, but the only one that meets the case is that of a scientific botanist who attributes it to the electric lights near the trees. They are swung from cross-arms on high poles and make the avenues all night long almost as light as day. He contends that trees need darkness as much as men need sleep, and in proof of his theory that the nearness of the electric lights is the cause of the drooping of the trees, points out that similar trees, not exposed to any other illumination than that of the sun and the dim gas-lights have not been affected in any way, and are bright and strong. It is not improbable that the failing spiritual life of some Christians may have an analogous origin. The uninterrupted light of worldly prosperity has often exerted a blighting influence which those have not felt who have been driven in the darkness of adversity to cling closely to Christ. (Ps. 119: 71.)

The Wonderful Mirage of the Silent City was witnessed in Alaska recently by Mr. L. B. French, who has returned to Chicago from a journey in that Territory. He thus describes the weird spectacle: "About 5 o'clock in the afternoon we suddenly perceived rising above the glacier over in the direction of Mount Fairweather what at first appeared to be a thin, misty cloud. It soon became clearer, and we distinctly saw a spectre city moving toward us. We could plainly see houses, well-defined streets, and trees. Here and there rose tall spires over huge buildings, which appeared to be ancient mosques or cathedrals. It was a large city, one which would contain at least 100,000 inhabitants. I have seen Milwaukee mirrored over Lake Michigan, and this city appeared considerably larger than that. It did not look like a modern city—more like an ancient European city. I noticed particularly the immense height of the spires. It was visible for nearly half an hour." The Indians who were with the party were terrified and ran away, but Mr. French and his friends remained and tried to photograph it. The day is coming when a real city will be so seen. Happy they who through faith in Christ will then behold it without terror and have the privilege of entering into it. (Rev. 21: 2, 3.)

A Ship's Officers Embarrassed by Their Own light is the subject of an anecdote related in connection with the International Maritime Conference, now in session in Washington, and considering the question of lights at sea. An American naval officer states that his ship was in a foreign port at the same time as a British man-of-war was there. On the night before the British ship sailed away, her officers were entertained on board the American vessel, and when they went back to their own ship they showed the effect of the liquor which had been consumed. After a short interval, the British ship was seen to be moving, but in a singularly erratic manner. Though the course out of the harbor was a straight one, the vessel tacked first to one side, then to the other, in a most sudden and delirious manner. The Americans could hear a number of orders shouted to the helmsman to port the helm, and then to heave it hard over the other way. Presently, after narrowly escaping running down several other ships, the Britisher got clear out of the harbor and sailed away. A few weeks later the same ships were again companions in another port, and then the trouble was explained. It appears that a ship anchored in harbor is required to hoist a light over her bows. This light should have been hauled in before the ship started, but the British officers in their befuddled condition forgot to have it done. They saw the light right ahead, and thought it was on some other ship, shifted their course to avoid it. But no matter which way they steered, the light was, of course, directly before them. After several frantic efforts to escape a collision with the ship carrying the light, some one on board perceived that the light was on their own vessel, and had the lantern taken down. Perhaps the erratic course of some modern preachers may be due to a similar cause. The light of their own unaided reason dazzles them, and until it is lowered they cannot be guided by "the light which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." (John 1: 9.)

BRIEF NOTES.

A gift of $100,000 has been made to Johns Hopkins University, by Mrs. Caroline Donovan, of Baltimore, Md., the widow of a merchant formerly doing business in New York.

Evangelist Frank L. Smith has commenced a series of services in the Baltimore, Md., Y. M. C. A. His two weeks' mission at Binghamton, N. Y., was much blessed. The Presbyterian and Methodist churches united in the effort, and large numbers made a profession of faith.

Rev. M. Baxter, aided by two evangelists, has distributed at the French exposition since its opening half a million (500,000) copies of the greater part of his Second Advent pamphlet, The Great Crisis Between 1890 and 1901, translated into French under the title of La Fin du Monde, in addition to other tracts, and 50,000 gospels in French.

Philip Phillips, the Singing Pilgrim, commenced a series of his illustrated entertainments of gospel singing and narratives of missionary travel on November 11, in the Union Tabernacle, Thirty-fifth Street, near Broadway, New York. Wherever he has gone, these entertainments have been much enjoyed and highly appreciated by Christian people.

The Westchester County (N. Y.) Sunday-School Convention will be held at Tarrytown on November 19, in the Second Reformed Church, commencing at 10:30 A. M. and continuing through the day. Prominent Sunday-school workers will attend and answer the inquiries in the Question Box. A county Sunday-school association is to be formed at this Convention.

Major George A. Hilton, the famous Gospel Temperance Evangelist, is laboring with much success in the West. His appointments for the next four weeks are, Modesto, Cal., November 17-20; Los Angeles, November 24-30; Pomona, Cal., December 8-12. Major Hilton's work is blessed because it does not end with total abstinence, but goes on to faith and trust in Christ.

The Conference on the Person and Ministry of the Holy Spirit, organized by the Rev. George C. Needham, commenced in Baltimore, Md., on October 29. Preliminary services were held on October 27 in several churches. Among the speakers at the Conference were Bishops Nicholson, and A. W. Wilson, Dr. L. W. Munhall, Rev. W. J. Erdman, of Asheville, N. C., Dr. Pitzer, of Washington, D. C., Dr. T. A. Hoyt, of Philadelphia, Rev. J. E. Grammar, of Baltimore, and Dr. J. H. Brooks, of St. Louis.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings at York City, Pa., have awakened an interest never before witnessed in that locality. Spiritually, too, they are among the most successful this eminent evangelist has held, which is saying a great deal. On Sunday, November 3, the Market House was crowded with 3,000 children. A local journal says that about 600 of them pledged themselves to Christ. At night Dr. Munhall and Professor Lowe had to divide their services. The Market House was filled directly the doors were opened, then the neighboring M. E. Church was thronged, and a large crowd remained outside for some time unable to get into either place.

Rev. Jacob Freshman and wife arrived in New York on November 7, from their journey in Europe and the Holy Land. It has been a journey of hard work and much blessing. Mr. Freshman preached and lectured on the work among the Jews in the European cities through which he passed, encouraging Christians to labor in this cause by his own experience in New York. He was enabled to establish a Hebrew Christian Mission in Jerusalem itself, of which he expects much fruit. He has returned with redoubled energy to resume his work among American Jews. Funds to aid him in the distribution of Christian literature and the maintenance of his mission may be addressed to Rev. Jacob Freshman, 17 St. Mark's Place, New York.

THE EYE AND THE LIGHT.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

The light of the body is the eye," etc. Luke II: 33-36.

The Light Raised by Crucifixion—For the Benefit of the Whole World—Light in the Soul—I. How it Enters—The Eye as Needful as the Lamp—How it May be Darkened—Men Who Are Saved From Headaches—II. How it is Perverted—By Abusing God's Forbearance—By Trusting in Ordinances—By Indifference About Creed—By Learning—Taking the Eye to Pieces to Analyze It—By Presumption—By Despair—III. How the Light Acts—Reveals Dirt—Illuminates the Faculties—A Boy Singing in a Coal-Mine.

IN this parable our Lord Jesus Christ is the light. Some saw His brightness, and were even dazzled by it. The malicious saw not His light, but even dared to impute His miracles to the Prince of darkness. Others professed to see so little in Him that they demanded a sign from heaven. Our Lord's constant answer was, to go shining on. He was meant to be observed; even as a lamp is intended to be seen. A lamp is not lighted to be placed in a cellar, nor to be hidden under a bushel: the lamp is lighted on purpose that all who come into the house may see the light. Even so, our Lord Jesus Christ could not be hid. In the narrow circle of the Holy Land He shone so clearly that Gentiles came to the brightness of His rising. Yet, to make Him seen to the ends of the earth, He must needs be Set on the Lamp-Stand.

He was lifted up by crucifixion; and anon He was further raised by resurrection: He was lifted up from earth to heaven at His ascension, and in another sense He was set on high by the descent of the Holy Ghost and the widespread ministry of His servants. Our Lord was thus taken from under the bushel of the obscurity which attached to His humble origin, brought away from the dark cellar of the despised Jewish nation, and set out in the open, where Greek and Roman, barbarian and Scythian, might rejoice in His light. It is our duty to keep His name and His truth ever before the world, waiting for the time when every eye shall see Him on the throne of His glory.

Our Lord would have all men behold the light of His gospel; for the text saith, "that they which come in may see the light." Whosoever comes into the church, or even into the world, should be met with this lamp; for this gospel is to be preached to every creature under heaven. The mighty deeds of His salvation were not done in a corner; they are for world-wide observation. He that hath eyes to see, let him see. If you do not see Jesus, it is not because He has hidden Himself in darkness, but because your eyes are blinded. The doctrines of our Lord Jesus Christ are not meant to be the monopoly of a few learned doctors; they are the common inheritance of those who labor and are heavy laden. As the morning breaks for all weary, watching eyes, so shines the light of the glorious gospel for all who sit in darkness and long for the light of God.

Beloved, the great thing to be desired is that the light which is so freely given forth by the Lord Jesus may become

Light Within Our Souls.

There He stands, as the lamp placed upon the lamp-stand, conspicuous to all; but we need that the light outside in the room may become light inside, within the soul. Nothing more truly needs light than our inner man. We are, by nature, as a lantern with the candle blown out. Whether we will believe it or not, by nature we are in thick Egyptian night. Well saith the apostle, "Ye were sometime darkness." Much is said about the light of conscience, but in many this is but a glimmering taper whose beams are "not light, but darkness visible." The light of nature is dimmed by so many surroundings, and has so little oil to sustain it, that it leads no man to eternal life, unless there be added to it light from above—the light of grace, the clear shining of the Holy Spirit.

Light is absolutely essential to spiritual life.

Ignorance is not the mother of devotion, but of superstition. Knowledge, grace, truth, are the nurses of true faith. The light of God is needful to the life of God. We must know Christ, we must be illuminated by His Holy Spirit, we must have fellowship with the Father's truth, or else we are dead as well as dark. Light within we must have, or the light outside will not benefit us. Upon that subject we will speak.

I. First, then, consider

How the Light Enters

the soul. Into the body the light enters through the eye. A man without an eye might as well be without the sun, so far as light is concerned. The eye is needful as the lamp, if a man is to see. The most brilliant light that ever has been invented, or ever can be discovered, will be of no use to the person who has no eye: hence it is true, "The light of the body is the eye." It is most important to attend to that which is the eye of the inner man; for in vain doth Christ Himself shine if His light cannot enter our souls. The condition of the eye of the mind is of the utmost importance: our light or our darkness will depend upon it. The battle of grace is with man's unwillingness to see those truths against which he is naturally at enmity. If a man wills to see the honest truth, and submits himself to the enlightenment of the Holy Ghost, he will not be left in darkness.

Many things darken the eye of the soul. One of the most common is prejudice. The man conceives that he has light already. His father, his grandfather, his great-grandfather, and previous generations, were brought up in a certain religion, and therefore it must be right. Whether the lamp gives light or not, is not the question: it is the family lamp, and he will have no other. He will not inquire: he is quite sure, and wants no evidence. When the light of God comes to him, he at once repels it.

Sloth, too, is a great blinder of the eye: it draws down the eyelid, and by the spirit of slumber. The man does not care what the gospel is, or is not. Like Pilate, he asks, "What is truth?" but he never waits for an answer. It is too much trouble to some people to think, to search the Scriptures, and to pray. They have no heart for a process so troublesome. "No," saith the worldling, "I have other fish to fry. I go my way to my farm, and to my merchandise. Let graceless bigots fight about creeds and the like; it matters not one jot what a man believes." Thus do many abide in the blackest darkness, because it is too much trouble to open the shutters.

Shuts Out the Light

The light is often shut out by gross error. I cannot go over the list of the favorite errors of the present hour, for that list has grown too long for one day's reading. Speciously taught in selected phrases, cunningly supported by a dreamy science, and adorned with certain great names, errors come to us nowadays as respectable forms of thought. Falsehoods of which we heard when we were children—but only heard of them as loathsome heresies, long ago decayed and thrown into the limbo of worthless and mischievous imaginations—these are now refashioned, freshened up with touches of bright color, and brought out as advanced ideas. When any of these are permitted to occupy the mind, as they so commonly do nowadays, the old gospel is no longer seen, because the eye is inflamed by the incoming of a foreign and irritating substance. Surely judicial blindness has happened to this generation: the chaff of their own folly has darkened their eyes, and Christ is hid from them.

One thing darkens the eye more than any other, and that is the love of sin. Nine times out of ten, allowed which darkens the eye. Men cannot see truth, because they love falsehood. The gospel is not seen, because it is too pure for their loose lives and lewd thoughts. Christ's holy example is too severe for the worldly; His Spirit is too pure for lovers of carnal pleasure. When sin, like a handful of mud, seals up the eye, you need not wonder that the man becomes an agnostic, a doubter, a caviller. To have a clear eye one must have a clean heart.

Sin is the Cataract

Self-seeking, in every form, is a sad cause of obscuring the light of the soul. Self-seeking, in the grosser form of avarice, makes men grope in the daytime. The glitter of

Gold is Injurious

to the eye. How could Judas see the beauty of Christ when he saw such value in the thirty pieces of silver? How can a man set store by a future heaven when a present fortune is heaven enough for him? Mammon repays its worshippers with blinded eyes. Self does the same when it appears as ambition, desire of honor and respect, or a wish to have a finger in one's own salvation. Self, in the form of magnifying the nobility of human nature, and all that is a very blinding thing.

Multitudes are kept in darkness through fear of men. They dare not see. They feel bound to think as the fashion goes—and there is a fashion of opinions as well as of coats and bonnets. If you resolve to hold fast the faith once delivered to the saints you will be regarded as antiquated. To many it would be great sin to be singular. They never think for themselves; in fact, they are mentally shiftless. They ask their way of a certain person supposed to be a deeper student than themselves: of him they inquire what they ought to believe, disbelieve, praise, or blame. I remember well a man who never knew whether he liked a sermon till he had asked a certain knowing old gentleman whether it was a good one or not: he had no home-grown judgment, he imported his ideas. His brains, for safe keeping, were placed in another person's head: this is a very convenient thing, and saves a good deal of headache; but it has its drawbacks. Let us never inquire, "Have any of the rulers believed?" Whether the rulers have or have not believed, let us follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, and rejoice in that pure light which flows from Him.

God save you, dear friends, from having your eye injured by any of the mischiefs I have mentioned. There are legions more of these blinding things: may grace guard you from them!

II. Secondly, let us consider

How the Light May be Perverted.

Some men might have light enough, but their eye is in such an evil condition that the light is turned into darkness. I suppose that in the natural world light could not actually become darkness; but in the spiritual kingdom it is certainly so: "When thine eye is evil, thy body also is full of darkness."

A man has heard the gospel of free grace and dying love, he has heard a message full of love concerning the forgiveness of sin, and pardon bought with blood, and freely given to him that believeth. The doctrine of justification by faith has been clearly explained to him. He believes firmly in these great evangelical truths, and calls them glorious and precious. But he draws an inference from this teaching which is ruinous to his soul. He considers that, after all, sin is of small consequence, and he may indulge in it freely, for God is merciful, and grace is infinite. At some time or other he will repent and believe in Jesus, and then he will be set right, however grossly he may have offended. God is gracious, and therefore he may be sinful; God freely forgives, and therefore he may recklessly offend. This is to turn light into darkness.

Let me set before you another form of this evil. A man perceives the great value of the means of grace, but he goes further and misuses them. Having been brought up religiously, he has a deep respect for the ministers of God's house, for the services of the sanctuary, and especially for the two ordinances which Christ has established in His Church—Baptism and the Supper of the Lord. He reverences the Sabbath and the inspired Word, and the Church and all its sacred ministries. But it may be that he proceeds from a due regard of these things to a superstitious trust in them, making of them what God has never made of them: thus his light becomes darkness.

I have known many go another way: they have said, "I care very little about the shape or form of religion. A sincere spirit is everything. The letter killeth, the spirit giveth life." Such a man professes to clutch at the soul of things, but I have seen him grow indifferent in creed and licentious in life. He believes everything to have some measure of truth in it; every evil practice to have some good point about it. This is a poisonous atmosphere for any man to breathe.

Blind Critics.

I have also seen this light turned to darkness, in the case of the student who has gathered great erudition and enrolled himself among the learned. He begins to criticise. Do not condemn him for that: he judges very properly at first, he criticises things that ought to be criticised; but he stops not there. Once having his critical faculty aroused, he is like a boy with a new knife; he must cut something or other. Nothing comes in his way more often than the Scriptures; and he must have a cut at them. He whittles at Genesis; he makes a gash in Deuteronomy; he halves Isaiah; he takes slices out of the Gospels, and cuts the Epistles into slivers. You see, he has so sharp a knife that he must use it. By-and-by, from a critic he advances to an irreverent fault-finder, and from that to an utter unbeliever, hard in the mouth and stiff in the neck. His light has blinded him. He has taken his own eye to pieces that he might study its anatomy, and henceforth the light will be of no more use to him.

We have seen the light turned to darkness in a further sense; hear and understand. There is a blessed light called the full assurance of faith: the more we have of it the better. But I have seen something very like to this holy confidence which has been before the Lord a very different matter. Assurance has been counterfeited by presumption. The man has taken for granted that he is a child of God when he is not, and he has appropriated privileges which are none of his. Dreadful is the case of the man who has presumed to hope for heaven while living an ungodly life; boasting of freedom from all fear, when he was destitute of all hope.

I have also seen the light turned to darkness in quite another manner. Sweet and soft is the light of holy fear: it is as the twilight of the evening. It is a light that comes from God, when a man is afraid to sin, when he fears lest he should grieve the Spirit of God, when he trembles lest in anything he should err from the teaching of his heavenly Father. But then this light may be corrupted into slavish dread, dependency and despair. Introspection, or looking within, may degenerate into a morbid habit; under its influence, the soul may refuse to look to Christ, and may enshroud itself in the gloom of remorse. Truth may be distorted till it takes a most alarming shape, and the soul in sullen despair, refuses to be comforted, refuses to believe in the Son of God.

III. I close by coming to the third and most important point:

How the Light Acts,

when it comes within. If the eye be right, single, and clear, there is no laborious work for that eye to do to obtain the light. When the sun is shining, if you wish for light you simply open your eyes, and you have light at once. If the Lord, in His great grace, has made your eye single, so that you desire only to know the truth, and to be yourself true, then without toil you will perceive truth, and the image thereof will readily appear before your mind. The light is willing enough to enter when the window of the soul allows its admission. When that light comes in, you will know it. No man passes from his natural darkness into heavenly light without being aware that a great change has taken place. Beloved, I will try to show you how the holy light acts when it enters our nature.

When it first comes in it reveals much that was before unperceived. If a room has been long shut up, and kept in darkness, the light has a startling effect. You may have hurried through that room with a candle, but you never stayed to look, and therefore did not notice the state of things. The room did not strike you as being very unpleasant, though it smelt a little stale and fusty; but now that you have put back the shutters and drawn up the blind, the light has made the mould and Dust Very Manifest.

That black festoon of spiders' webs; those insects which hurry out of the light; that all-en-crusting dust—these had been overlooked. The room cannot be suffered to remain in such a state. What a change is demanded! All hands are summoned to clean out the den, and turn it into a healthy chamber fit to be inhabited. The light of heaven reveals a thousand sins, and causes their removal. The first effect of the light of God in the soul is painfully unpleasant: it makes you loathe yourself, and almost wish that you had never been born. Things grow worse and worse to our consciousness as the light shines more and more.

The light is poured in upon the conscience, and now that poor, half-blinded thing issues edicts and gives forth verdicts which are according to the oracles of God. What a difference between a natural conscience and a conscience instructed by God and enlightened by His Word! There remains much more to be done in this direction than many of us suspect.

This same light, falling on the memory, awakens penitence for our faults, and gratitude for God's goodness. Shining on our thoughts, it makes them sparkle with the beauty of holiness; shining upon our emotions, it makes them flash and glow with love to God and heavenly things. A soul is a fine object when thus lit up!

Light on the Temper.

Brethren, we need the light to shine in upon our tempers. We know some Christian people who will not let you mention their tempers: they have taken out a license to be as surly as they like, on the ground of "it is their constitution." "No," they say, "I cannot help being passionate. My mother was a very quick-tempered woman, and I am naturally in that way. There's no help for it." Let the light in upon that unseemly thing. If what you say be true, write it down in black and white that you are an incorrigible vixen, and must be so all your life. Are you angry with me for suggesting it? I am only taking you at your word. Do not say, "I cannot help having a bad temper." Friend, you must help it. Pray God to help you to overcome it at once; for either you must kill it, or it will kill you. You cannot carry a bad temper into heaven. They will have none of your passions in the Father's house above.

Your desires, your hopes, your fears, your aspirations, should all be set in the light, and what a joy it will be when they all glitter in it! "No part dark"—what

A Wonderful Condition!

Some professors appear to have a little light in the upper rooms; they have notions in their heads, and ideas on their tongues! Alas! the first floor is dark, very dark. From their common conversation the light of God is absent. Enter at the door, and you cannot see your way into the passage, or up the stairs; the light is up aloft, but not in the dwelling-rooms. Oh, for light in the region of the heart!

This light, when it dwells in the heart, brings good cheer with it. Darkness is doleful, light brings delight. A poor boy who was put down in the coal-mine to close a door after the coal wagons had passed by, was forced to sit there all alone, hour after hour, in the dark. He was a gracious child; and when one said to him, "Are you not weary with sitting so long in the dark?" he said, "Yes, I do get tired; but sometimes the men give me a bit of candle, and when I get a light I sing." So do we. When we get a light we sing. Glory be to God, He is our light and our salvation, and therefore we sing.

This inner light will make us shine before others. It is the only shining we should seek. A clean lantern with a lighted candle in it makes no noise, and yet it wins attention: the darker the night, the more is it valued. There never was a time in which true inner light was more needed than now: may the Lord impart it to each one of us, and then we shall shine as lights in the world! The Lord God bring this light to you, and fill you with it; and unto His name shall be the glory! You have not to work for the light, you have only to receive it. Then shall your profiting be known unto all men when it is true profiting to your own character. God bless you, for Christ's sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

An Inventor's Discouragement.*

"WHEN I was building my first steamboat at New York," says Robert Fulton, "the project was viewed by the public either with indifference, or with contempt as a visionary scheme. My friends indeed were civil, but they were shy. They listened with patience to my explanations, but with a settled cast of incredulity upon their countenances. I felt the full force of the lamentation of the poet—

'Truths would you teach, or save a sinking land,
All fear, none aid you, and few understand.'

As I had occasion to pass daily to and from the building-yard while my boat was in progress, I have often loitered unknown near the idle groups of strangers gathering in little circles, and heard various inquiries as to the object of this new vehicle. The language was uniformly that of scorn, or sneer, or ridicule. The loud laugh often rose at my expense; the dry jest; the wise calculation of losses and expenditures; the dull but endless repetition of the Fulton Folly. Never did a single encouraging remark, a bright hope, or a warm wish cross my path."

Princeton in 1800.

Mr. Weld, a keen if not friendly critic, who visited Princeton in 1800, wrote: "A large college, held in much repute by the neighboring States. The number of students amounts to upwards of seventy; from their appearance, however, and the course of studies they seem to be engaged in, it better deserves the title of a grammar school than of a college. The library, which we were shown, is most wretched, consisting for the most part of old theological books, and even those not arranged with any regularity. An orrery, contrived by Mr. Rittenhouse, stands at one end of the apartment, but it is quite out of repair, as well as a few detached parts of a philosophical apparatus enclosed in the same glass case. At the opposite end of the room are two small cupboards which are shown as the museum. These contain a couple of small stuffed alligators and a few singular fishes, in a miserable state of preservation from their being repeatedly tossed about."

The Wealth of the Future.

"Look," cried the American of 1800, "at my wealth! See these solid mountains of salt and iron, of lead, copper, silver, and gold! See these magnificent cities scattered broadcast to the Pacific! See my cornfields rustling and waving in the summer breeze from ocean to ocean, so far that the sun itself is not high enough to mark where the distant mountains bound my golden seas! Look at this continent of mine, fairest of created worlds, as she lies turning up to the sun's never-failing caress her broad and exuberant breasts, overflowing with milk for her hundred million children! See how she glows with youth, health, and love!" Perhaps it was not altogether unnatural that the foreigner, on being asked to see what needed a century to produce, should have looked about him in bewilderment and indignation. "Gold! Cities! Cornfields! Continents! Nothing of the sort! I see nothing but tremendous wastes, where sickly men and women are dying of home-sickness or are scalped by savages! Mountain-ranges a thousand miles long, with no means of getting to them, and nothing in them when you get there! Swamps and forests choked with their own rotten ruins, nor hope of better for a thousand years!" Met in this spirit, the American, half perplexed and half defiant, retaliated by calling his antagonist a fool, and by mimicking his heavy tricks of manner. For himself he cared little, but his dream was his existence.

* From The History of the United States During the First Administration of Thomas Jefferson. By Henry Adams. A valuable work, ably written, covering an interesting period of our national life. 2 Vols.; Price $4; published by Charles Scribner's Sons.

The Late Professor Christlieb. (See page 725.)

Dr. Spencer and His Stenographer.

AN INFIDEL'S REMORSE.

DURING the progress of a revival, says a writer in Dr. A. J. Gordon's Watchword, a minister spoke to an aged man of hard, stern features who was evidently suffering acute anguish. The man said that he had been an infidel of a most intolerant type. It was his delight to scoff at the Bible; and again and again he bought copies of the sacred Scriptures to read certain portions to men and boys who gathered around him, and then to tear them to pieces with profane and obscene jesting.

He had given strict orders that no religious book or paper should be admitted into his house, and every member of his family was forbidden to listen to the preaching of God's word. At length his wife's health began to fail, and she had a sorrowful, wistful look, which he attributed to her illness, although she uttered no complaint, and expressed no concern about anything. A few months previous to the interview with the pastor, business had called him to the city where he was seen in the hall, and his little girl had accompanied him. One day as they were passing a book-store, she said: "Papa, before we left home mamma gave me some money, and asked me to buy her a hymn-book; please let me get it." "No," he replied with an oath, "I will have no nonsense about my house!"

Immediately on their return home he heard his wife say to their little girl, "Did you bring me the book?" The child replied: "No, mamma. I did not forget, but papa would not let me buy it." The mother made no reply, but in less than four weeks afterwards she was in her grave. "And now," exclaimed the man, in husky tones, and with a look of remorse and terror, "I murdered her; I murdered her by inches, for I found out after her death that my infidelity had broken her heart. She so longed for some one to speak to her about Jesus, but she dared not ask the privilege. I would not permit her to read His name even in a hymn-book, and she died and was buried without a prayer." He was overwhelmed with despair, and no words that the pastor could utter availed to relieve it.

Some time afterward the minister was preaching on the efficacy of Christ's blood, in the same town, when the wife-murderer entered the room and beckoned to him. He went and spoke to him. "That blood has cleansed even me" said the man. "Tell the people that it can save the vilest wretch that ever lived."

DR. SPENCER'S STENOGRAPHER.

(See Illustration.)

"I SHALL never live to finish my book," said Dr. Spencer, addressing his wife, as the aged couple sat at breakfast. "Every day the work seems to exhaust me more than it did the day before, and I do less. My brain seems as vigorous as it used to be, and the thoughts flow as easily, and I think more rapidly than ever, but the labor of putting them on paper is too great for me now, I am so weak."

"Poor dear!" said the sympathetic old lady; "it is very hard, after all the years you have given to it. Suppose you were to lay it aside for a few weeks and go to the mountains!"

"I cannot, I dare not. Life is so short now. I cannot bear the thought of leaving the book unfinished. I have nearly a whole volume to write yet, and the time is so short! Ah! if I had only had a good son I could have finished the book. All the material is at hand, and I could dictate, if I could only be relieved of the trouble of writing. Fred will have to answer for this heavy burden of mine, as well as for his other sins. God will hold him accountable."

Tears were in his wife's eyes as the old man spoke, with glittering eyes and vindictive emphasis. But the tears were not all sorrow. She was glad that even so her husband would speak of their son. It was more than two years since he had even mentioned him, and had forbidden her to do so. Fred had not been a good boy; even his mother, who loved him best, could not maintain that. He had been frivolous and wilful and dissipated; but he had sobered down after attaining his twentieth year, and had suddenly become serious, obedient, and respectful. Father and mother had rejoiced in the change, until one day they learned the cause of it. Fred was in love, and had realized that his love could never end in marriage unless he gave up his wicked ways and went to work in earnest. There would be no property to come to him from his father, and he would never be able to maintain a wife, except as he abandoned his habits and became industrious. Both father and mother hoped that he would eventually marry the daughter of a wealthy neighbor, which would relieve them of anxiety about his future; but with the perversity of such lads he had scouted the idea, and had fallen in love with a girl who, as he admitted, had not a dollar to her fortune. Then it was that his father quarrelled with him, called him a fool, and finally bade him either give up the girl or leave home and shift for himself. He chose the latter alternative, and from that time Dr. Spencer had regarded him as dead, and did not even care to know where he had settled, or how he was prospering.

"Don't you think a stenographer would be a help to you?" asked Mrs. Spencer, prudently ignoring the remarks about Fred. "If we were to send to the Phonographic Institute, they would send one whom we could pay by the day, and he would relieve you of the drudgery."

"A good idea!" exclaimed Dr. Spencer. "I wonder I did not think of it before! Send at once. It will be easy to dictate to him, and I can get refreshing naps while he transcribes his notes."

Mrs. Spencer lost no time in sending for a stenographer. Both she and her husband expected that a young man would be sent, and they were therefore surprised when a neatly dressed girl came, and, introducing herself as Amy Vincent, said she was the stenographer from the Institute. Dr. Spencer did not like it, but, as she had come, he suffered her to remain for that day; and, as she proved quick, intelligent, and accurate, he was more than satisfied that she should continue her services. The volume made rapid progress under the new arrangement. Still more rapidly did Amy Vincent rise in the esteem of her new friends. She did her work quietly, but as she grew more at her ease, Dr. Spencer was indebted now and again to her quick intelligence for a missing word.

One day—it was his son's birthday—Dr. Spencer, with a craving for sympathy, told her Fred's story, concluding with the question, "Now, was I not right in resenting his undutiful conduct?"

"The best of us must try our heavenly Father very much at times," was Amy's thoughtful, though Dr. Spencer thought rather evasive, answer.

"He tried me beyond the power of human endurance," he said. "He behaved badly at first, and when he did right, he did it from a wrong motive."

"That is very human," Amy said; "the most serious view of our case is that God perfectly comprehends all our motives."

"Do you defend Fred, then?" the old man asked, almost fiercely.

"I? No; why should I? It only seemed to me a common case in its essence."

No more was said at the time, but a few days later Dr. Spencer reverted to the subject. It was one of his bad days, as he called them, when even dictation was difficult to him, and he had to lie on the lounge instead of pacing the room, as was his usual custom, while Amy's pen kept time with his words.

"Do you think," he asked, "that God will deal with us as we deal with others?"

"Oh no; I hope not," Amy replied. "We hope for more forbearance and mercy, but Christ gave a solemn warning to us in His parable of the unmerciful servant, which implied that our conduct would be taken into account."

A little later in the day Dr. Spencer tried to write a letter, but, failing through weakness, requested Amy to write it. It was addressed to his son, whose address he found was known to Mrs. Spencer. It was very brief, but it was very clear. Fred was forgiven and invited to return.

The prospective family reunion was naturally felt to be one of the occasions on which a "stranger would intermeddle with the joy," and as there could be no work done on the book at such a time, Amy was to enjoy a vacation. But it was a brief one. Fred was not to be reconciled by halves. He was bidden bring the penniless girl whom he loved and introduce her to his parents. It was to Amy's house that he went on this mission, and it was Amy whom Dr. and Mrs. Spencer gladly received as their future daughter-in-law.

THE NEW FORTH BRIDGE.

(See illustration.)

ON October 22 an important triumph of engineering skill was formally declared achieved, and devoted to public use, in the bridge over the Scottish river Forth. The two large rivers, the Tay and the Forth, run from west to east, flowing into the German Ocean. Each of these has a long and wide firth, or estuary. To avoid these firths, land traffic coming from the north had to make a long detour, and cross the Tay at Perth and the Forth at Stirling. The alternative was to ferry goods and passengers across the Forth from Granton to Burntisland, and, before the Tay Bridge was built, again at Dundee. To secure a direct, unbroken line of communication it became necessary to bridge over the two firths; and this has now been successfully done.

The magnitude of the undertaking in the case of the Forth is realized when we learn that at that point where the bridge was needed the distance to be spanned was 8,296 feet in width, or over a mile and a half. A portion of this, about five-eighths of a mile, connects the bridge proper with the high ground on each side of the firth. The bridge itself is 5,349 feet 9 inches in length, which is about sixty feet over a mile. It consists of three mammoth cantilevers, as seen in the illustration. The Parliamentary sanction for the project was obtained in 1873, but it was not until 1882 that the projectors felt sufficiently assured that they had a practicable plan to begin the work. When it was begun, unforeseen difficulties had to be grappled with and overcome, so that seven years have been consumed in completing the work.

The New Bridge Over the Forth.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

The Life Story of Mrs. Stenhouse, For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 718.)

Freedom.

WHEN Mr. Stenhouse informed his wife that he was thinking of marrying Miss Zina Young, he doubtless anticipated a vigorous protest. He had not taken into account the effect of her past sufferings upon her. Women by thousands have endured unkindness, neglect, even blows, and their love for their brutal husbands has survived. But even they are aroused to fierce indignation and scorn if another woman supercedes them in their rightful place. Though Mrs. Stenhouse had striven to believe that her husband had been acting from a high sense of duty in his second marriage, the blow had been very heavy and her suffering acute. It had produced alienation and a dulled sensibility, as in one who has drunk the cup of humiliation to the dregs. Whatever the future might have in store for her, it could not occasion her so much misery as she had already endured. She, therefore, listened to the announcement without protest. What mattered it to her, now that she had been deposed from her place, whether two occupied it or only one?

Mr. Stenhouse explained, as he had done before, his motive for the step. His improved financial condition, his desire for a "kingdom," and his duty to support the leaders of the Church, were the three chief reasons on which he expatiated, but he might have spared himself the trouble of justifying himself. Mrs. Stenhouse made no attempt to dissuade him, knowing full well that even if she had had enough spirit left, or had felt sufficiently concerned to protest, it would have availed nothing.

Yet on consideration she realized that the proposed union was one of ill omen to her. The alliance with the daughter of the prophet could not but attach Mr. Stenhouse more closely to Mormonism, while it would introduce into the household a son who could be relied upon to report to Brigham Young whatever might be said or done in unguarded moments. It would crush out the small hope Mrs. Stenhouse had cherished that some day light would break on her husband's mind, and he would quit the Church, disgusted by the hypocrisy of its recognized leaders. Such a marriage as the one contemplated must enormously increase the reluctance Mr. Stenhouse would feel to sever himself from Mormonism, and at the same time increase the danger Mrs. Stenhouse would incur should she endeavor to prejudice him against the Church or its leaders.

Another influence, however, was destined to do that work, and to do it effectually, without the intervention of his wife. Mr. Stenhouse had the true journalistic instinct, which leads its possessor to make the acquaintance of all kinds and conditions of men, and to keep himself informed of the currents of thought outside his own particular circle. He had also found it necessary, in the interests of the Telegraph, to appoint correspondents in the Eastern States, who would send him early information of important events; for the success of his journal encouraged him to make it a first-class paper, abreast of the times. With this object he made an extended visit to the East, occupying several months. There was after his return a vigor and a clear-sighted penetration noticeable in his editorials on national questions, though in dealing with the affairs of the Territory and with religious questions he was still heartily loyal to Brother Young. Another influence which had its effect on Mr. Stenhouse proceeded from the visits of tourists passing through Utah, who naturally visited the editorial rooms of the Telegraph, and were frequently entertained at the hospitable home of Mr. Stenhouse. Though he could not agree with their strictures on Mormonism, and valiantly defended the faith which he had given the best twenty-five years of his life to propagate, the arguments with which he was assailed could not but penetrate so logical a mind. He could at least see how the Mormon policy and government appeared in the eyes of men on whom the glamor of Mormonism had not fallen. It is probable, too, that his guests, in opposing him, frequently gave form and words to doubts which troubled him, but which he suppressed as sinful.

It was not difficult in writing on questions of national import, in which his faith was not concerned, to write clearly, and take a bold stand for truth and justice and righteousness, but when he came to apply the principles which he had laid down to home affairs it was difficult to be consistent. It was Brigham Young's ambition to control the whole trade of the Territory, and concentrate it in the hands of his faithful followers. The rigid system of tithing in force made him a sharer in their prosperity, and he adopted measures in the spring of 1869 to increase it which were manifestly unjust to Gentile traders. This was an offence to Mr. Stenhouse, who had many Gentiles among his advertisers. About this time, too, Young assumed a more dictatorial tone, and manifested a disposition to interfere in the private affairs of the people. No free-born American can en-sume sumptuary control, yet Young was so foolish as to claim the right to say what ribbons a woman should wear, and how much a man should spend on his own dress and the furnishing of his home. His demands for contributions also became more frequent and importunate, and even the most enthusiastic Mormons grew restive under the growing conviction that their hard-earned property was not safe under his rule. He who aspires to control the property as well as the faith of a people had need of a character above suspicion, and against which no imputation of selfishness can be hurled. Knowing Brigham Young as intimately as Mr. Stenhouse did, the task of defending his measures became increasingly difficult and distasteful.

Young himself, as has been said, despised all learning, and doubtless had not the critical faculty for perceiving the logical tendency of the editor's public teaching; but he had others around him who could see it, and they called his attention to it. Young himself, also, was not slow to miss the direct, outspoken, unequivocal support of his policy which he wished and expected, and it was soon evident to close observers that Mr. Stenhouse was sinking in the Prophet's esteem.

Young, after a time, showed his hand more plainly, and adopted the tactics which had proved successful in other cases. Mr. Stenhouse was appointed to a mission. He was required to remove from Salt Lake City to Ogden. Mr. Stenhouse was to be permitted to continue publishing his paper while prosecuting his mission, but the removal to Ogden would rob it of its influence, would impair its value, and decrease its facilities for acquiring speedy and accurate information. Besides this, the people around Ogden were too poor to advertise or subscribe, and as Mr. Stenhouse would lose the bulk of the Salt Lake City patronage, with no compensatory return in Ogden, the removal would practically ruin him.

The love affair between Mr. Stenhouse and Zina Young seemed at the same time to suffer under a blight like that which had fallen on the paper. It had at its inception, some fifteen months before, been of the most ardent character. With the fanatical disposition to ascribe to God the impulses of their own passions, to which Mormons were prone, the lovers boldly declared that their marriage had been foreordained in heaven. The mother of the young lady was still more definite. She declared that it had been revealed to her in a vision that Mr. Stenhouse was to be her daughter's lord in the eternal world, raising her, through her close relations to the prophet, to a supremacy in his kingdom. So devoted a lover was Mr. Stenhouse, and so superior to less educated Mormons did he appear by his talents, his accomplishments, and the refined manners which his Eastern visits and associations had given him, that the bride-elect had not concealed her elation. When, therefore, an estrangement took place it was speedily observed. The cause was not known, but that there was a very perceptible change, from some cause, could be seen by all. Some attributed it to the indignation of the Prophet at the articles in the Telegraph, others to the arrogant manners of the lady, but Mr. Stenhouse held his peace.

The removal to Ogden was accomplished in due course, but at a ruinous cost. To transfer furniture and printing plant so long a distance involved, in itself, a frightful expenditure. Then premises had to be rented in Ogden, while the houses in Salt Lake City belonging to Mr. Stenhouse stood empty. There was no longer a steady income from the paper, and after a few months of struggle and privation, which recalled the old days of hardship in Europe, Mr. Stenhouse realized that he was face to face with ruin. He therefore went to Brigham Young, and appealed for permission to return, for without his consent Mr. Stenhouse dare not leave Ogden. He secured it with much difficulty, and set about reviving the paper in the city of its origin. It had, however, lost its old prestige. The Gentiles took it and read it with avidity, but the Mormons were shy. It was a mystery at first, but after a time Mr. Stenhouse learned from one of his former subscribers that certain Mormon teachers, acting on their own authority, but without doubt under Young's orders, had warned the people against taking the paper.

A painful experience lay before Mrs. Stenhouse on her return to Salt Lake City. She heard that Elder Shrewsbury, whose wife, Mary Burton, had been her dear and intimate friend in their young days, had come from southern Utah to live in Salt Lake City. To have her dear old friend near to her again was a real pleasure, the delight of which none could fully realize but they who have borne a heavy burden in solitude. Now, Mrs. Stenhouse felt, she would never want for a sympathetic ear in which to pour the story of her trials.

Her first visit showed her that Mary had more need of sympathy than she had. Elder Shrewsbury was now the husband of four wives besides Mary, and this in spite of the pledge he had given before Mary would consent to marry him. With Ellen, the second wife, she had grown friendly. The two women had been drawn together by a common sympathy as the Elder entered further into polygamy, but with the other three wives she would hold no association. She had one little daughter, whom she loved dearly, and who was her mother's inseparable companion. All the old brightness and merriment of Mary's girlhood was gone, and a settled melancholy oppressed her. Nothing, however, pained Mrs. Stenhouse so much as to see in her friend's cheek the hectic flush that marked her for a victim of pulmonary disease.

Almost every day Mrs. Stenhouse made time to visit her, for Mary herself was too apathetic and soon grew to weak to go out. She would sit for hours at her window looking into vacancy and shedding bitter tears over the wreck of her life. There Mrs. Stenhouse would find her and endeavor, though with little success, to cheer the drooping heart. Elder Shrewsbury was seldom with her. He had prospered, and had become portly in appearance and impressive of manner. Conscience could not have troubled him much; though, had it done its duty, he must have suffered as he saw the wife who had loved him so well, and who had toiled at his side through that terrible journey with the hand-cart company across the plains, sinking into the grave. But for Mormonism she might have been a happy wife, living to a good old age instead of dying in her prime, weary of a life of misery, hardship, and neglect. Poor Mary! the end was not far off. Early one morning a messenger called Mrs. Stenhouse, who, hurrying to her friend's house, was just in time to receive one loving grasp of the hand before Mary's spirit took its flight from the enfeebled frame.

Scarcely had Mrs. Stenhouse returned from the funeral of her old friend, when she was summoned to the sick-bed of her eldest son, who was living in San Francisco. Mr. Stenhouse was in as much anxiety as she was, and they set out westward together to nurse him. How ardently she wished, as they left Salt Lake City, that she might never again see the place where she had suffered such anguish! For the first time in many months she had her husband entirely to herself, for in the trouble that necessitated the journey, Belinda had no part, and was therefore left behind. During the journey there was a renewal of the old-time relations between the husband and wife. There was a common anxiety drawing them together and there was no interloper to remind them of their late estrangement.

They remained in San Francisco until their son was fully recovered, and then returned to Salt Lake City. The journey had an unexpected result. It appears that Mr. Stenhouse's second wife, Belinda, had felt aggrieved by the journey. She thought that Mr. Stenhouse should either not have gone, or should have taken her with him. The fancied slight had rankled until it grew into a serious grievance, which, as she was not delicate of feeling, she spoke of freely. She found ready listeners, now that Mr. Stenhouse was no longer in favor with Brigham Young and was much poorer than he had been. She took no decisive step during Mr. Stenhouse's absence, but on his return she was quick to perceive that his love for his first wife had been intensified by their journey together. Then her resentment took fire, and she applied to Brigham Young for a divorce. The papers were drawn up, her own signature affixed, and then they were served on Mr. Stenhouse at his office. There was no resistance on his part. He signed the papers cheerfully, and at once drove to his home, where he showed them to his first wife with the remark, "I am a free man again."

After this, Mr. Stenhouse's estrangement from the Church increased rapidly. Brigham Young had laid it down as a rule that whenever any man expressed a doubt as to the infallibility of Joseph Smith or his successors, he had taken the first step toward apostasy. Mr. Stenhouse had taken that step. He had been too closely associated with Young to think him infallible, and he had good reasons for regarding the founder of Mormonism as fallible also. Nevertheless, he abstained from hostile criticism of the Prophet in his paper, and though he occasionally deplored some details of his policy, he for the greater part kept silence when he could not approve.

The crisis, however, was precipitated by Young himself. A few of the more intelligent members of the Church combined to establish the Utah Magazine which should hold an independent attitude, and express public opinion whether it might agree with Brigham Young or not. It was to be a Mormon periodical, and to oppose Young's policy only when the editors believed he was acting inconsistently with Mormon principles. It must, however, inevitably excite Young's indignation, because it struck at the root of his power as a revealer of the will of God.

Mr. Stenhouse was not on the staff, but when the Magazine ventured to remind the Prophet that the people had some rights which the priesthood were bound to respect, he maintained silence. Young noticed that he failed to protest against this open expression of discontent, and when the editors of the Magazine were called upon to answer for their words Mr. Stenhouse was summoned to appear with them. At the inquiry the charge was changed for some reason. They were accused of absenting themselves from a meeting which was held every Saturday, and was called the "School of the Prophets." Of this they were undoubtedly guilty, and they could not raise inconvenient issues in defending themselves, as they might have done had the charge related to the Magazine. Young's sentence upon them was disfellowship. Mr. Stenhouse promptly wrote to the Bishop of his district, withdrawing entirely from the Church, and Brigham Young retaliated by "counseling" the people not to buy or read the Telegraph.

The result was a heavy loss to Mr. Stenhouse, for not only did his subscribers refuse to renew their subscriptions but many of those who were in his debt refused to pay, as no Mormon could then be compelled to keep his obligations to an apostate. Mr. Stenhouse was urged to make the paper a Gentile organ, and liberal promises of support were made to him. All the associations of the past twenty-five years, however, made such a course distasteful to him, so he sold the paper and quitted the Territory, to begin life again in the Eastern States as a journalist.

At first Mrs. Stenhouse assisted by opening a millinery business, but having delivered one lecture on Mormonism, she was solicited to deliver more, and ultimately she gave her time entirely to the work, with the gratification of knowing that she was the means of saving many from a fate like her own. Mr. Stenhouse prospered in his profession, and continued to labor in it until his death in 1882. Mrs. Stenhouse went on with her work until failing eyesight necessitated her retirement. Since that time she has resided with her son in California.

THE END.

ASPIRATION.

BY MRS. BESSIE H. TOBEY.

her, on Thy great heart of love depending,
We enter on the duties of the day.
Thou hast brought us hither on our way.

he calm night, our lives have found in slumber rest and renewing strength to resume our task;
in Thy care, from toil and cares that cumber,
we freedom than our weary hearts dared ask.

with endeavor earnest, and more holy,
we would live upward, seeking after Thee;
make us eager to climb high! yet, lowly,
remember all the striving there must be.

ve us longing, deep, intense and blessed!
at shall find sating but in things above;
e all desires in our hearts confessed,
for Thy favor, and Thy constant love!

let us have for earth, no wrong despising, er all its loves, and joys, and beauties rare, er, through these, let us find glad uprising,
where all scenes, diviner semblance wear.

God, to Heaven, the soul's supreme fruition,
Thee, and Jesus! Sanctified, redeemed—hall know all was but the glad transition, real and true, through things that only seemed!

JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, illustrate the above in leaflet form at twenty per hundred. A Sample Picket of 50 leaflets and (no two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10 cents. Postage stamps taken.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS
ON LABEL, AND GET THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN

HENRY WARD BEECHER'S
CHRISTIANITY. THE LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST. The publishers are now ready to send terms of subscription for second volume, the complete work.

IN THE PRESS.
AMERICAN CHRISTIAN RULERS;
and Men of Government; Biographical of men of Christian faith and experience.
The prominent positions in the National Government, and in the Judicial Department. Numerous authentic portraits, and a beautiful engraving of the great picture: "First Prayer Press."
FIELD & CO., 658 Broadway, New York.

MEXICO
Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
most pressing need-
and can be mailed to address of
W. H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
3 Bible House, New York.

STENOGRAPHY.
AND
TYPE-WRITING.
valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand personally (or by mail in your own words) Vermilye's rapid system of teaching;
published; hundreds of graduates holding able positions; success guaranteed. Also writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free.
call. VERMILYER'S COLLEGE,
85 Broadway, New York.

DOGE'S FOOD
The Most Reliable Food
For Infants and Invalids.
Not a medicine, but a specially
prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans.
Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co.
(on every label), Palmer, Mass.

RIGHT HAND Writing thoroughly taught
by mail or personally.
ons procured all pupils when competent.
circular. W. G. CHAFFEE, Oswego, N.Y.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS
This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you.
Our reduced prices
bring the best goods
within reach of all.
We are the only
manufacturers in
the U. S. selling
direct to consumers. You
take no risk. We warrant every
piece of goods as represented, or
money refunded.
See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the
U. S. Established
in 1838, with
over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the
CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS,
for richness of
color, superior
finish and wearing qualities, to
be unexcelled
by any make
of Black Silks in the world. We

offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains,
Satin, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida
Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and
we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see
for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON,
Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank,
Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Wil-
lantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

We send to all parts of the U. S. With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000
Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of
dress.

RECOLLECT THE GOODS all carrying charges PREPAID

HAVE YOU CATARRH?
ARE YOU GOING INTO CONSUMPTION?
Do You Have Asthma?

By means of the PILLOW-INHALER, sufferers in every part of the land have been cured of the above diseases,
and many who were for years afflicted are now strong and
well. The PILLOW-INHALER is apparently only a pillow,
but from liquid medicines
that are harmless (tar, carbolic acid, iodine, etc.) it gives off an atmosphere which you breathe all night (or about eight hours), whilst taking ordinary rest in sleep. There are no pipes or tubes, as the medicine is contained in concealed reservoirs, and the healing atmosphere arising from it envelops the head. It is perfectly simple in its workings, and can be used by a child with absolute safety. Medicine for the reservoirs goes with each INHALER, ready for use. The wonderful and simple power of the PILLOW-INHALER is in the long-continued application. You breathe the healing vapor continuously and at a time when ordinarily the cavities of the nose and bronchial tubes become engorged with mucus, and catarrh, throat and lung diseases make greatest progress.
From the very first night the passages are clearer and the inflammation is less. The cure is sure, and reasonably rapid.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

"Rev. Dr. J. T. DORRIS, of Boston, writes: 'I really think the PILLOW-INHALER is a very great hit, and the man who made it deserves the gratitude of all sufferers. I never slept more soundly, and my voice is better since using it.'"
Rev. J. R. DANFORTH, 2030 Wallace St., Philadelphia, says he received great benefit from the use of the PILLOW-INHALER
for Bronchitis troubles, and cordially recommends it.

Wm. C. CARTER, M. D., Norfolk, Va., a physician in regular practice, says: "I believe the PILLOW-INHALER to be the best thing for the relief and cure of Lung Troubles that I have ever seen or heard of."

Mr. R. D. McMANIGAL, of the firm of McManigal & Morley, Miners and Shippers, Logan, Ohio, writes: "I suffered fifteen years with Catarrh of the throat. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and after four months' use of it my throat is entirely cured."
Send for Descriptive Pamphlet and Testimonials.

THE PILLOW-INHALER CO.,
1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY
CHANCE FOR ALL
To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect
Tea, A TRIAL ORDER OF
3 1/2 pounds of Fine Tea, either
Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpow-
der, Young Hyson, Mixed, English
Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be-particular and state what kind of Tea
you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

The Famous Plymouth Rock Pants.
If you cannot reach one
of our branch stores, or
there is no local agent in
your town, write us at once (at Boston), and we will forward you, free, 30
samples of our latest novelties as well as quiet
patterns in men's cloth,
with self-measurement
blanks, the results of
which we guarantee to
be satisfactory or money refunded. Agents wanted in every town and
village in U. S., where we have none now, to take orders for our famous goods cut to order.
Our reputation secures
your first order and that
FIRST ORDER secures
you a steady customer
every time.

CUT TO ORDER: Pants, $3 to $5.25; Suits, $13.25 to $21; Overcoats, $10.25 to $20.
If you don't know who
we are, look in any commercial agency, or write
to any bank or business firm (except clothiers and tail-
ors) in any of these cities.
PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO.
ADDRESS ALL MAIL TO:
Headquarters: 11 to 17 Elliot Street,
Annex: 695 Washington Street,
And 18 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.
BRANCHES: 285 Broadway, New York; 943 Penn.
Avenue, Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago,
Ill.; 914 Main St., Richmond, Va.; 225 E. Baltimore
St., Baltimore, Md.; 110 Canal St., New Orleans;
104 Montgomery St., Montgomery, Ala.; 39 Whitehall
St., Atlanta, Ga.; Burnside Building, Worcester,
Mass.; Hotel Gilmore, Springfield, Mass.; 198 Westminster St., Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building, New Haven, Conn.

DO YOU WEAR PANTS
AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of Send for new books. Shots at Sundry Targets, by 12 large
$2.50 Quick sales. Big
pay. Also, Mother,
Home & Heaven,
400 best authors. E. B.
Treat, 192, 194, 196, 198
Curiosities of Bible $2.00 Mail E. B. TREAT, N. Y.

Stop that CHRONIC COUGH NOW!
For if you do not it may become consumption. For Consumption, Scrophulous, General Debility and Wasting Diseases, there is nothing like
SCOTT'S EMULSION
Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and HYPOPHOSPHITES
Of Lime and Soda.
It is almost as palatable as milk. Far better than other so-called Emulsions.
A wonderful flesh producer.
Scott's Emulsion
There are poor imitations. Get the genuine.

Music Sale
To reduce my stock of music I will send by mail post-paid, 68 pieces full sheet music size, including songs, dances, waltzes, quadrilles, with calls etc. by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Mozart, etc., for only 20 cts. I will also give you money back.
Read this: Mr. Hathaway:—Am very much pleased with the music sent me. It is worth to me the money.
R. J. Allen, Housick, N. H. WHITE WINGS—an 100 songs, words and music 10c. Address C. H.
Hathaway, 539 Wash. St., Boston Mass.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S EFFECTUAL
THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE PILLS WORTH A GUINEA A BOX
For Weak Stomach—Impaired Digestion—Disordered Liver.
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
PRICE 25 CENTS PER BOX.
Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.
B. F. ALLEN & CO., Sole Agents
FOR UNITED STATES, 365 & 367 CANAL ST., NEW YORK,
Who (if your druggist does not keep them) will mail Beecham's
Pills on receipt of price—but inquire first. (Please mention this paper.)

A LIGHT EQUAL TO GAS.
Everlasting Wick. The Great Invention of the Age. Requires no trimming as it will never burn out. Nothing but the oil burns, as the wick is made of "Mineral Wool," which cannot burn, and so there can be no escape of black smoke or soot to discolor the chimney, &c. Gives a white, clear, brilliant light. We guarantee satisfaction. Agents can make fortunes with it. Retail price, 10 cts. each. We will send 3 sample wicks for 10 cts. Small size wicks, 20 cts. per doz., $2.25 per gross. Medium size, 25 cts. per doz., $2.75 per gross. Large size, 30 cts. per doz., $3.25 per gross.
One gross, assorted sizes, $2.75. All postpaid.
Address, F. O. WEHOSKEY, Providence, R. I.

CATARRH HAY FEVER
CATARRH DEAFNESS
A NEW TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 295 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

TURKISH HAIR CROWER.
Wanted to grow a beautiful mouche on the crown of face or hair on ball heads, without injury, in 3 weeks, or money refunded.
Turkish secret. The only reliable article of the kind on the market. Beware of worthless imitations. One pkg., 25 cts.; 4 for 50 cts. THE MOUNT MAN'G CO., Station A., Boston, Mass.

OPIUM
Morphine Habit, (Opium Smoking),
etc., easily cured. Book Free. Dr.
J. C. Hoffman, Jefferson, Wisconsin.

THE KING'S SON;
OR,
A MEMOIR OF BILLY BRAY.
By F. W. BOURNE.
The New York Christian Advocate says: "Of Billy
Bray, the famous Methodist preacher of Cornwall, Eng., it may be truly said 'he yet speaketh,' although he has been dead more than twenty years. It is reported that at least six hundred persons are known to have been led to Christ by reading his biography.
These converts are found in all parts of the world, and come from almost every position in life. Noted infidels, eminent formalists, and cultivated scholars, as well as obscure and unlearned men, have been drawn into the kingdom of grace by this fascinating story.
The most noted preacher of the age frequently finds the striking illustrations which enrich his sermons in the Life of Billy Bray."
18mo., Cloth. 119 pp. Price, 50 Cents.
Sent post-paid on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

WILL YOU BE THERE, AND I?

"I beheld; and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number," stood before the throne, and before the Lamb."—Rev. vii. 9.

We know there's a bright and a glorious home,
Away in the heavens high,
Where all the redeemed shall with Jesus dwell:
Will you be there, and I?

In robes of white, o'er streets of gold,
Beneath a cloudless sky,
They walk in the light of their Father's love:
Will you be there, and I?

From every kingdom of earth they come,
To join the triumphal cry
Of "Worthy the Lamb that once was slain!"
Will you be there, and I.

If we take the loving Saviour now,
And follow Him faithfully—
When He gathers His children in that bright home,
Then you'll be there, and I!

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

A favorite book of Daily Bible Readings for young and old.

HID IN THE HEART.

Short Bible Readings for Every Day in the Year.

Selected and arranged by Mrs. E. H. RICHES.
400 pages. Bound in the following styles:

Cloth, white edges.....	50
Cloth extra, gilt edges.....	75
French morocco, limp, round corners.....	25
Venetian, round corners, padded.....	50
Persian calf, round corners, padded.....	75

This series of Bible Readings, arranged under a subject for each day of the year, is especially fitted for presentation to friends, Sunday School scholars, and others, to whom a helpful text-book would be an aid in their Christian course. Its popularity is so great, we have, in response to many inquiries, bound up copies in a variety of styles, suited to every purse. Copies will be forwarded promptly, post paid, on receipt of price. Address

THOMAS WHITTAKER,
2 and 3 Bible House, New York.

RECOGNITION AFTER DEATH

By the Rev. J. Aspenwall Hodge, D.D., 1.00

"This book will bring comfort to every reader who has been bereaved of a friend."—Journal of Commerce.

"The work treats of the method of recognition in a new and very convincing way. It will comfort many anxious hearts."—N. Y. Observer.

John G. Paton, Missionary to the New Hebrides. An Autobiography. 1.50

Rev. Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, author of the Crisis of Manhood, says: "I consider it unsurpassed in missionary biography. In the whole course of my extensive reading on these topics, a more stimulating, inspiring, and every way first class book has not fallen into my hands. Everybody ought to read it."

Modern Miracles, being Manifestations of God's Love and Power, by Leila Thompson, with a Preface by Rev. Alexander McLaren, D. D., 16mo. 75

"An admirable book, which we read with vast interest. Every soul saved is a miracle, and this record tells how the most hopeless may be won."—Methodist.

ROBERT CARTER & BROTHERS,
530 Broadway, New York.

*Any of the above sent by mail, postage pre-paid, on receipt of price.

IF YOU WANT AN
"OXFORD" TEACHER'S BIBLE, OR BAGSTER BIBLE,
send for complete Bible Catalogue giving full description of style, sample of type, and price, to

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

WANTED AGENTS FOR

The Christian's Legacy.
One reports the sale of 22 copies in a place of 700 people. Another has sold 102 copies in one church in Springfield, Mass., and is a stranger there. Circulars from W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St., New York.

GLOVES

DIRECT TO YOU.

PURCHASE FROM THE MANUFACTURER; get BETTER GLOVES and SAVE MONEY.

My gloves are made from selected skins, with the best skill, by the most experienced operators.

They are perfect in style and fit, the most serviceable gloves made, are warranted and if not as represented you can return them and receive back your money.

A splendid Holiday or complimentary present.

27 YEARS Before the Public

I offer my gloves for Ladies and Gentlemen, with assorted colors, real dog skin, kid, chevrete and fur gloves made to order if desired. SEND stamp for illustrated book "About Gloves."

giving full description, with prices of over fifty patterns, simple guide for self-measurement; thus enabling you to order by mail as safely as if measured in our store, and as perfect fit and satisfaction are guaranteed.

YOU TAKE NO RISKS.

Refer to Johnstown Bank, American Express Co., or Postmaster, all of Johnstown, or Com'l Agencies.

JOHN C. HUTCHINSON, Johnstown, N. Y.

SPECIAL NOTICE:

I send a good glove measure Free of charge with above book to those who mention this paper when writing.

FAMOUS PICTURES. "The Angelus," by Millet. Postpaid, $1.25. Let, in patent adjustable frame. Supt. N. Y. JULIET CARSON'S (Supt. N. Y.) FAMOUS BOOKS. School of Cookery new Family Cook Book, 288 pages, cloth $1.00 post-paid. Talmage's Sermons, 3.00 pages, cloth, $1.00. "Why are Satan and Sin Permitted," and 26 other Sermons. World's Cyclopaedia of Universal Knowledge, 790 pages with illustrations, $1.50 post-paid. A set of Dickens' Works in 15 volumes for $1.35 and 12 volumes Sir Walter Scott's Works for $1.50 post-paid. Agents wanted. Address DUNCAN MAC-GREGOR, 105 East 9th St., New York.

MISS HAVERGAL'S POEMS.

Author's Edition.

THE POETICAL WORKS

—OF—

FRANCES RIDLEY HAVERGAL.

The only complete, unabridged and authorized edition published in America

In one 12mo vol., 880 pages. Cloth extra $2.00
Cloth bevelled boards, full gilt edges..... 2.50

We quote the following from the Publishers' Weekly:

"It is in answer to many requests that the various poems, hymns, and songs of Frances Ridley Havergal are comprised in this library edition.

"The labor of love was undertaken by Miss Havergal's niece, who revised and arranged with much care this complete and final edition. The book in paper, print and binding is all that could be desired."

Sent by mail in neat box post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher & Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

We Sell DIRECT TO FAMILIES
PIANOS ORGANS
$150 to $1500 or $350 to $500.

Absolutely Perfect!

Sent for trial in your own home before you buy. Local Agents must sell inferior instruments or charge double what we ask. Catalogue free.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
255 East 21st St., N. Y.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,

It makes no difference where you see them advertised, or by whom or where they are published or sold, send your orders to me and I will attend to them promptly, send all books to you post-paid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

Scroll Sawyer.

On receipt of 15c. I will send, post paid, the pattern of this three-shelf Bracket, size 13x21, over 300 new and beautiful miniature designs for scroll-sawing, and try 40-page illustrated Catalogue of Scroll Saws, Lathes, Fancy Woods, Mechanics' Tools, Small Locks, Fancy Hinges, Catches, Clock Move-ments, etc., or send 6c. for Catalogue and Miniature Designs. Bargains in POCKET KNIVES. Great inducements in way of Premiums. A. H. POMEROY, Division H, 216-220 Asylum Street, HARTFORD, CONN.

LORD'S PRAYER illustrated and the COMMANDMENTS and BEATITUDES combined, size 16x22, chromed in 11 colors and gold. Over $3,000 made by one agent. Sample copy 25c. (cells for 50c.) One Million been sold to agents at $15 per 100. For 30 days from date of this paper, to introduce other goods we offer these pictures at $3.50 for 50 copies. 100 for $6.50. Agents are earning money. Terms for other goods. A. E. PRAIT & CO., 173 Park Row, New York

"Demonology or Spiritualism, Ancient and Modern."—An effective weapon. "A sword of fire."—Only unanswerable work on the subject. "Startling disclosures—History, facts and data."—Scores saved already. Whole communities rescued. Every family, preacher and christian worker needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to $1. Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

THE Alfred Dolge FELT SHOES AND SLIPPERS.

Noiseless, Warm, Durable.

DANIEL CREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York

Just Published. One of the best Books for Christian Workers.

GOLD FROM OPHIR

A NEW BOOK OF BIBLE READINGS, ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

By J. E. WOLFE, Evangelist.

With introduction by DR. JAMES H. BROOKES. In addition to original readings by the author, there are many articles and readings by

REV. JAMES INGLIS, REV. A. B. MACKAY, DR. W. S. PLUMMER, PASTOR F. B. MEYER, B.A., REV. G. S. BOWES, DR. JAMES H. BROOKES, J. N. DABBY, DR. EDELSHEIM, DR. L. W. MUNHALL, PASTOR A. J. GORDON, DR. HORATIUS BONAR, PROF. G. W. MOREHEAD, DR. ANDERSON, REV. C. H. SPURGEON, THOMAS NEWBERRY, LADY DENT, REV. W. P. MACKAY, DR. NATHANIEL WEST, REV. E. P. MARVIN, PROF. BLAIRIE, MR. & MRS. G. C. NEEDHAM, DR. G. F. PENTECOST, GEORGE MULLER, REV. W. F. CRAFTS, REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD, GEORGE SOLTAU, DR. H. M. PARSONS, W. FLINT JONES, LORD RADSTOCK, F. E. MARSH, REV. W. J. ERDMAN, ALF. SANDHAM, DR. ALEX. WHYTE, C. RUSSELL HURDITCH, and many others.

The book is also enhanced in value by a very full Index.

"The best book of Bible Readings out."—HON. D. N. ROBB, U. S. Commissioner.

"These Bible Readings, these nuggets of gold, are arranged under the heads, Ruin, Redemption, Retention, and Resurrection. The Readings are brief, lively, full of the marrow of the gospel. This book is helpfully suggestive to our catechists, and to inexperienced preachers. Eminent writers in the 'olden' Scriptural and practical."—Presbyterian Witness.

"One of the best books I have ever seen. Every Pastor, every Evangelist, yea, every Christian Worker have a copy."—EVANGELIST BISCOFF.

"It is excellent in matter, material and make up."—REV. E. P. MARVIN.

Royal Octavo, 308 pages, strongly bound in cloth, $1.25. Mailed free on receipt of price.

Address, J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York

NEW ENLARGED EDITION.

Encouragements to Faith.

207 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

The Rev. ANDREW MUNRAY, in his popular work "Abide in Christ," has mentioned this book as one specially to be recommended for young, weak, or doubting Christians.

Here is a warm hand and a loving heart tendered you, in the name of the Lord, from one who harbors no doubts, and who gladly help you to break away from them. This book has greatly helped many Christians to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord Jesus; we earnestly hope that in no more may be benefited by it."—Primer.

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be precisely such a one as a Christian would desire to put into the hands of any young man or woman troubled with doubts concerning the religious life. It has reference to the experience of the soul rather than the mind, and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortation having its motive in love to cultivate faith in God."—Boston Advertiser.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

"FURLEY & BUTTRUM" UNDERWEAR.

We have complete lines, all weights and sizes, of this justly celebrated English Natural Wool, Merino, and Silk-and-Wool Health Underwear, for Ladies, Gentlemen, and Children.

Knowing the great care taken in the selection of the material and the manufacture of these goods, cannot too highly recommend them to our customers.

In ordering by mail give the size and weight desired.

James McCreery & Co.

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St., NEW YORK.

PERFECT EASE AND COMFORT

Made in all Styles for Women, and Children

TRADE MARK
ALFRED DOLGE'S Celebrated Felt Slippers

Prevent Rheumatism Cold Feet.

Send for Illustrated Price List. Mention Christian Herald.

DANIEL CREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York

Just Published. One of the best Books for Christian Workers.

GOLD FROM OPHIR

A NEW BOOK OF BIBLE READINGS, ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

By J. E. WOLFE, Evangelist.

With introduction by DR. JAMES H. BROOKES. In addition to original readings by the author, there are many articles and readings by

REV. JAMES INGLIS, REV. A. B. MACKAY, DR. W. S. PLUMMER, PASTOR F. B. MEYER, B.A., REV. G. S. BOWES, DR. JAMES H. BROOKES, J. N. DABBY, DR. EDELSHEIM, DR. L. W. MUNHALL, PASTOR A. J. GORDON, DR. HORATIUS BONAR, PROF. G. W. MOREHEAD, DR. ANDERSON, REV. C. H. SPURGEON, THOMAS NEWBERRY, LADY DENT, REV. W. P. MACKAY, DR. NATHANIEL WEST, REV. E. P. MARVIN, PROF. BLAIRIE, MR. & MRS. G. C. NEEDHAM, DR. G. F. PENTECOST, GEORGE MULLER, REV. W. F. CRAFTS, REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD, GEORGE SOLTAU, DR. H. M. PARSONS, W. FLINT JONES, LORD RADSTOCK, F. E. MARSH, REV. W. J. ERDMAN, ALF. SANDHAM, DR. ALEX. WHYTE, C. RUSSELL HURDITCH, and many others.

The book is also enhanced in value by a very full Index.

"The best book of Bible Readings out."—HON. D. N. ROBB, U. S. Commissioner.

"These Bible Readings, these nuggets of gold, are arranged under the heads, Ruin, Redemption, Retention, and Resurrection. The Readings are brief, lively, full of the marrow of the gospel. This book is helpfully suggestive to our catechists, and to inexperienced preachers. Eminent writers in the 'olden' Scriptural and practical."—Presbyterian Witness.

"One of the best books I have ever seen. Every Pastor, every Evangelist, yea, every Christian Worker have a copy."—EVANGELIST BISCOFF.

"It is excellent in matter, material and make up."—REV. E. P. MARVIN.

Royal Octavo, 308 pages, strongly bound in cloth, $1.25. Mailed free on receipt of price.

Address, J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York

NEW ENLARGED EDITION.

Encouragements to Faith.

207 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

The Rev. ANDREW MUNRAY, in his popular work "Abide in Christ," has mentioned this book as one specially to be recommended for young, weak, or doubting Christians.

Here is a warm hand and a loving heart tendered you, in the name of the Lord, from one who harbors no doubts, and who gladly help you to break away from them. This book has greatly helped many Christians to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord Jesus; we earnestly hope that in no more may be benefited by it."—Primer.

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be precisely such a one as a Christian would desire to put into the hands of any young man or woman troubled with doubts concerning the religious life. It has reference to the experience of the soul rather than the mind, and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortation having its motive in love to cultivate faith in God."—Boston Advertiser.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

"THE WORD FOR THE DAY"

Text, Hymn and Prayer for every day in the year. Compiled by A. J. A. R.

"The word for the day" has been compiled to enable every-day needs not fictitious mental ones. Its thoughts are very well selected, its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for devotion is admirable."—New York Evangelist.

"The word for the day" is one of those strong to a true Christian life.

16mo, Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00; America, $1.75; Claf, lex., $2.50.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 45. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT AND LIFE OF THE LATE ROBERT BAXTER, ESQ., The Christian Lawyer.
GOOD-BYE. A Farewell Sermon by Dr. Talmage.
ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.
PRINCE NAPOLEON'S TWO SONS.

THE NEW BROOKLYN TABERNACLE. Dr. Talmage's Address at the Breaking of Ground.
The Blind Made to See—A Prayer for Half a Dollar.
COMING EARTHQUAKE ON MOUNT OLIVET.
DAVID'S LAST WORDS. By Mrs. M. Baxter.
PICTURE OF THE CITY OF KHARTOUM.
PORTRAIT OF THE LATE MRS. ROBT. BAXTER.

PREPARATION FOR SERVICE. A New Sermon by Rev. O. H. Spurgeon.
Gems from New Books: Our Heathen Ancestors—Human Sacrifices.
ERNEST WYNDHAM'S RESOLVE. (Illustrated.)
ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. The Life Story of Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)

The Late Robert Baxter, Esq., the Christian Lawyer—Born August 14, 1802—Died Oct. 8, 1889.

THE LATE ROBERT BAXTER, ESQ.,
 Born in 1802—His Early Life—Settles at Doncaster in 1824—Marriage—His Work Among the Poor—His Study of Prophecy—His Connection with the Church of Rev. E. Irving—His Withdrawal and "Narrative of Facts"—His courage During the Cholera Visitation of 1832—Removes to London in 1845—His Fame as a Lawyer—His Evangelic, Temperance, and Philanthropic Work—His Last Illness, and Death.

It is related of a godless English nobleman, whose dissolute life involved him in frequent litigation, that he went early one morning to visit his lawyer at his private residence. He needed professional assistance immediately, and, knowing that the lawyer would not be at his office before 10 o'clock, he drove out to the suburb where the lawyer lived, and sent in his card. "I will take it to Mr. ——— presently," said the servant; "he is having family prayer." "What," said the dissolute scapegrace, "a lawyer at prayer! I should not have been more surprised to hear that the devil was at prayer." He only gave expression to an impression which was prevalent at the time among a class who had learned to dislike lawyers as their natural enemies because through the lawyers they had been punished for their misdeeds, and compelled to fulfil their obligations. That men so astute, so vigorous of mind, should be conscientious Christians seemed astonishing, yet a larger proportion of the legal profession than such men have any idea of are sincere followers of Christ. All honor to them, and the more honor because in their profession they are assailed by stronger and more subtle temptations than come to men in other professions. An excellent specimen of

A Christian Lawyer

was the eminent jurist whose portrait appears on the first page. He was the head of one of the most prominent firms of lawyers in London, yet in spite of the enormous extent of the business of the firm, their many and varied contests, Mr. Baxter maintained a conscience void of offence, and made time out of his busy days for earnest and diligent study of God's Word, for communion with his Saviour, and for much religious and philanthropic labor. During his long and brilliant career of eighty-seven years no man, whether client or antagonist, could justly charge him with unfair dealing or conduct inconsistent with his Christian profession; and when he died, October 8, it was with the general regret of a large circle of Christian friends, and to the heavy loss of many religious societies, to which he had been a valued and generous friend.

The Family

from which Mr. Robert Baxter sprang was an ancient Leicestershire family, one of the best-known members of which was Richard Baxter, the author of The Saint's Rest. For nearly two centuries the family seat has been maintained at Stoke Golding, in Leicestershire, while another branch settled at Atherstone, in Warwickshire. How so long a life as Mr. Baxter's connects us with history that to this generation seems far distant, is realized from the fact that his father, Mr. Dudley Baxter, a magistrate of Stoke Golding, has a patriotic record as the colonel of a regiment which he raised and equipped to help defend his country against the hostile designs of the first Napoleon. Robert Baxter was born August 14, 1802.* His early years were passed at Stoke Golding, and he was articled at a solicitor's office at Atherstone, and entered on the roll at Lincoln's Inn in 1823. He soon gained a reputation for talent and energy. At the age of twenty-one he received the Offer of a Lawyer's Business

at Doncaster, where he settled in 1824. In 1825 he married Miss Paget, youngest daughter of Mr. Thomas Bradley Paget, a banker of Tamworth. Her earnest Christian spirit and life of prayer were greatly blessed in the quickening of

* It is a coincidence worthy of note to a prophetic student as Mr. Baxter was, that his birthday—August 14—is a day of note in prophecy, being the day of the future commencement, in 1870, of Daniel's three prophetic dates the 1,260, 1,290, and 1,335 days, and the day on which Antichrist's Image is to be set up in the Jewish temple. (Daniel 12: 7, 11, 12.)

his soul, so that his zeal and energy in the work of God were increased by this union. Mrs. Baxter was a lovely and gifted woman, as well as a devoted Christian. But while her large family of ten children were yet very young, she was called away, and Mr. Baxter left a widower in 1837. He never married again. She entered fully into his prophetic views respecting the speedy second advent of Christ. Her portrait at the age of about twenty-five is on page 716.

Mr. Baxter was one of the first to establish in the Deanery of Doncaster auxiliaries of the Church Missionary and Bible and other religious societies, and to commence a system of district visiting among the poor—labors which at that time were new to the public mind, and provoked much criticism.

In 1829 his attention was drawn to the subject of Scripture prophecy, which at that time was taken up by a large number of earnest men in the churches of England and Scotland, including the Rev. Hugh M'Neile (the late Dean of Ripon), the celebrated Joseph Wolff, the equally eminent Henry Drummond, and the Rev. Edward Irving, and both by personal intercourse and by writing in the great prophetic periodical of that day, the Morning Watch, Mr. Baxter joined earnestly in their investigation respecting

The Speedy Arrival of the Second Advent.

Mr. Irving was then in the zenith of his fame, attracting immense congregations by his eloquence, and drawing round him a devoted band of earnest and godly men and women, who were engrossed in the expectation of the restoration of miraculous gifts to the Church. In the autumn of 1831 their excitement was raised to the highest pitch by the news of miraculous cures among a kindred congregation of Presbyterians in Scotland, and by the appearance of utterances of wonderful power, which seemed to coincide with the gifts of tongues and prophecy recorded of the Apostolic Age. After a brief trial, Mr. Irving acknowledged these utterances as inspirations from above, and adopted them.

Mr. Baxter, after occasionally attending Mr. Irving's services in 1830 and 1831, joined his church as a member in January, 1832. The power with which he spoke, and his great ability, gave him at once an important place in the congregation, and made him one of the most notable of their leaders. He continued among them until April, 1832, when the failure of important predictions, unanimously proclaimed by those who were supposed to have the "gift of tongues," and in which he himself had taken part, convinced him that "the tongues" were a delusion. He at once publicly declared that he had been mistaken, and endeavored to convince Mr. Irving, who was then on his trial before the Presbytery of the Scotch Church.

Failing in this object, he published a Narrative of Facts, which had a considerable effect. The experience which he gained while under especially while himself speaking "in the power," as he describes it, is given with wonderful wisdom in this little book. He says in one part: "Satan can imitate what he cannot perform, and as an angel of light, he can come before us in all the array of faith and love, meekness and wisdom, prayer and patience. He can work a confident persuasion, which we may mistake for faith; produce excitement of feeling, which we may mistake for love to God; allure into a pride of humility, which we may mistake for meekness; foster imaginations and high thoughts, which may appear to us true wisdom; constrain us toward continual supplication after somewhat we have set our hearts upon, without submission to the will of God, which we may mistake for devoted and faithful prayer; and buoy up our expectations and flatter our obstinacy, which we may mistake for patience. Moreover, those who have known the teaching of the Holy Spirit and have tasted the powers of the world to come, when they fall under delusion, devote what they have learned of God to the service of the enemy.

The Irvingite Delusion,

"Whenever God sees fit, for chastisement, to suffer His own people to be deluded, they bring into their delusion all they have learned of the Spirit of God, and truth and holiness are continually displayed in their discourse and conduct though mixed up and contaminated by their delusion. Those who are Really God's People

are, notwithstanding their delusion, still worked upon by the Spirit of God; and as the Spirit of truth continues to bear witness in them, they will never be at peace or satisfied in their delusion, but be tired and troubled. Under this trial and trouble God may carry on His gracious work in their hearts, notwithstanding the hindrance of their delusion, and thus it may be that the genuine fruits of the Spirit of God may be manifested, even in the midst of the fearful working of a system of false worship."

Part of this book was republished in Mrs. Olphant's Life of Edward Irving. Some of his companions, including several clergymen of the Church of England, followed Mr. Baxter in his withdrawal from Irvingite communion, while others remain in it. Among the latter the most noted was Mr. Henry Drummond, M. P., who for many years afterwards continued to sit and speak in Parliament, and who lived and died the chief prophet and pillar of the Irvingite "Catholic Apostolic" Church. His son-in-law the Duke of Northumberland, is now a leading member of that Church.

It should be understood that Mr. Baxter always agreed in the main with the Rev. Edward Irving's expositions of Revelation as to the taking place probably before or about the end of this nineteenth century. His chief, and almost his only, subject of divergence from the teaching of that remarkable man was regarding the "speaking with unknown tongues," which he could not believe in.

Pre-Millennial Second Advent of Christ

Mr. Baxter continued his business at Doncaster as a lawyer from 1832 to 1845, at the same time actively assisting in parochial and religious undertakings. In the terrible visitation of Asiatic cholera in the autumn of 1832, which struck down hundreds of the inhabitants, he devoted a good deal of time to organizing a system of house to house visitation, and with devoted courage chose for himself the Marshgate district, where the disease raged in its most virulent form. He spent days and nights in finding out and relieving those who were struck with the disease, and was himself attacked by it.

In 1845 he removed from Doncaster to London, and commenced the career of parliamentary solicitor, and was instrumental in carrying the Great Northern Railway bill through Parliament in spite of immense opposition. This made him famous as a lawyer. After his successful promotion of the Great Northern bill, he was for more than thirty years chiefly occupied in parliamentary and railway business, at the head of the large firm of Baxter, Rose & Norton, and, since its dissolution in 1875, at the head of the firm of Baxter & Co.

In 1868, in the general election to Parliament Mr. Baxter was Conservative candidate for the representation of Hull, and again in 1870 for the city of Londonderry, but without success.

Although he was by profession an evangelic member of the Church of England, his union with the whole body of Christ in His member was far more manifest in his life. He would often attend the Church of England service in the morning, and preach in a hall or in a mission chapel in the evening. Possessed of great power of organization, he was foremost, both in Doncaster and London, in promoting systematic at a time when such a work was subject to much opposition. In order to further the education of the working classes, he in 1835 collected an analyzed, from every parish from the great county of York, containing two millions of people, the state of the schools and number of scholars.

District Visiting of the Poor

As an earnest total abstainer, he took especial interest in promoting the cause of temperance, and was treasurer to the Church of England Temperance Society. As a public speaker at religious meetings at Exeter Hall and other places in London, Mr. Baxter's voice was frequently being heard. In conjunction with Lord Radstock he founded, in 1865, the Evangelization Society, of Surrey Street, London, which, under the energetic secretaryship of Captain W. E. Smith, now has an annual income of about $50,000. He has also been an active promoter of Miss Daniel's Soldiers' Homes at Aldershot, Chatham, Colchester, and Plymouth.

It was His Great Joy to Preach to the soldiers of the love of Jesus. Some who have died in Egypt and elsewhere owed their conversion in some measure to his preaching. During his autumn holiday it was his wont to drive out from Doncaster or Stoke Golding to various places in the neighborhood and hold meetings in some hall or chapel, and often souls were won at these services.

He likewise was from the first a zealous friend of the Midnight Meeting Society, of which he was treasurer. Its first meeting was held nearly thirty years ago in St. James's Restaurant, when about 250 unhappy wanderers were welcomed to a tea-meeting, and addressed by the late Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel and others. He was also a member of the committee of the Religious Tract Society. He was President of the Christian Community, an association of numerous unremunerated Christian workers who preach the gospel in almshouses, lodging-houses, mission halls, refuges, and the open air. Another very useful society—the London Open-Air Mission—from its commencement had his co-operation as a member of its Committee, and for many years he co-operated with the late Earl of Shaftesbury in promoting the Ragged School movement. The poor and needy have throughout his long life frequently found in him sympathy and help. During

The Last Four Years of His Life

he was unable to give as much attention personally to business or to travel as before on account of his health. Up to the age of eighty-three, that is to say, the year 1885, he continued to go to some Mission Hall of the Evangelization Society every Saturday, and to preach twice on the Sunday.

During his last illness, which only continued for two days, he was very peaceful. Although there was considerable labor in his breathing, yet his face wore no marks of pain, and, although unable to speak, a smile of recognition would pass over his features as a familiar hymn was sung at his bedside, or a well-known text repeated. He was like a shock of corn fully ripe.

He leaves two sons, the Rev. M. Baxter, his second son, editor of the London Christian Herald and the Prophetic News, whose lectures on prophecy in this country two years ago attracted much attention; and Mr. Frank Baxter, his third son, a lawyer; also four daughters, nearly twenty grandchildren, and four great-grandchildren.

He was buried in Marylebone Cemetery, Finchley, on October 12, the service being conducted by the Rev. M. Baxter and Rev. H. Disney, his son-in-law.

Robert Baxter's Vade Mecum.

A London evening paper publishes the following: "An Old Solicitor" writes: 'Your reference to the death of that eminent solicitor, Mr. Robert Baxter, calls to mind a characteristic anecdote in which he was the chief actor. He was attending a Committee of the House of Lords on railway business, and a witness having been called for examination, a Testament upon which to administer the oath to the witness was searched for, but, owing to the temporary absence of the committee clerk, could not be found, and the proceedings were likely to be at a standstill, when Mr. Sergeant Merryweather told the Committee he thought, his friend Mr. Baxter could help them, and who, upon an intimation, at once produced a Testament from his pocket for the use of the Committee; and although the room contained numerous other persons, I could venture to say that not one of them had a Testament with them.'

COMING EARTHQUAKE AT MT. OLIVET.

It is noteworthy that an earthquake took place in Japan about September 11, in describing which a correspondent of the London Times of October 18 uses the following words: "It was a volcanic convulsion, a mountain being completely split in two, and half of it moved to some distance from the other part. Owing to this, the course of the river has been completely blocked up in places, forming lakes, of which the largest is stated to be twelve miles long."

Undesignedly this language is nearly the same as is used in Zechariah 14:4, respecting a very similar future earthquake at Christ's descent on Mt. Olivet at the battle of Armageddon, on the Last Day of this Age (which is indicated by Daniel's dates to be April 11, the last day of Passover Week in 1901); "The Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north and half of it toward the south."

It is stated on good authority that a complete, although at present dry, watercourse runs all the way from Jerusalem to the Dead Sea; and Mt. Olivet is the only barrier that blocks it up. So that when Zechariah's predicted earthquake shall form a great valley through the midst of Mt. Olivet, the waters which are foretold in Ezekiel 47 to burst forth and flow eastward from under the re-built temple at Jerusalem, will have an unobstructed waterway from that holy city to the Dead Sea, which is to be healed and to become tenanted with "a great multitude of fish, and fishers shall spread forth their nets," and trees shall grow on the banks of the river, and "the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine." (Ezek. 47:12.)

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

An Eye Always on the Prisoner.—The Rev. Dr. Brown says: "General Lafayette, the commander of the French auxiliaries in the American war of Independence, and one of the heroes of the French Revolution, has related how at one time he was confined in prison, and in the door of his cell there was a little hole, just large enough to permit the eye of a man, when placed at it, to command a view of the whole cell. At that door a sentry was constantly placed, his eye at the hole, following the prisoner's every movement; wherever he turned, whatever he did, the eye was upon him. Sentries came and went, but night and day he felt that an eye was upon him. Lafayette was a man of great mental power, and not likely to be easily scared with superstitious fancies, yet he tells us that that eye, constantly glaring upon him was horrible, unbearable, almost maddening. If it be so to have the eye of a man upon us, what must it be to have the eye of God resting upon us, not only now, but on that great day when we are called before Him to answer for our deeds in the flesh!"

Sobbing Heard Through a Wall.—Mr. C. Lazenby, an evangelist of Mr. Spurgeon's church, relates: "Some five years ago I was preaching in the South London Palace, London Road. One night, among the audience were some personal friends of mine—a mother and two daughters; also a near relative, a poor fellow who had been afflicted with paralysis. One result of his affliction was, that he could not whisper, but always talked very loudly. Under the preaching of the Word that night, one of the daughters was deeply impressed. I had some conversation with her but she did not seem to grasp the truth. They left, accompanied by my poor friend, who, being very anxious for the salvation of this dear girl, went home with the sisters, telling them all the way about the Saviour he loved so well. When he arrived at their home he continued to urge this young woman to decide for Christ, and eventually she did so. The most wonderful part of the story is this: While telling them of Jesus, and praying with them, which, owing to his affliction, he did very loudly, they were rather startled by hearing some one sobbing in an adjoining room. Upon going to see what was the cause of this sobbing, and who it was, they found it was a young woman, a niece of the landlady of the house, who, having heard through the wall all this poor brother had said about Jesus and His love, was thereby brought to see herself a poor, lost sinner. She was pointed by him to the sinner's Saviour, and was led there and then to trust in Jesus for salvation."

"A Self-Conceited Infidel Once Said to Me," says Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost, "I do not know how you can believe the Bible, Dr. Pentecost." 'I suppose not,' I replied, 'or you would believe it also.' 'Why, it is so abundantly contradictory that on the face of it I do not see how you can credit it. There is the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, for instance, the chapter which tells of all the saints. A fine lot of saints they were, to be sure, Noah, Abram, Jacob, Jephthah, David, and the rest of them! A prime lot of saints, if these be the best you have!' 'Well, my friend,' I said, 'I never expect much sense from an atheist, and there is very little sense in what you have just said. You do not know what the Bible teaches. It is a book which shows that the grace of God is able to take men like those you have mentioned, weak and sinful though they be, and make them saints. In the previous chapter to the one you have referred to, God says, 'Their sins and their iniquities I will remember no more.' God forgives the sins of those who seek Him, then they stand forth covered with Christ's righteousness, saints and heroes of faith."

The Miller and His Business Lies.—Dr. Geo. F. Pentecost said: "I was sitting in the office of a miller, who had a most extensive business. Two men entered, and as my friend talked with them I could see that he was fencing with them, and trying to keep both from talking business. Ultimately he made engagements to meet them at different places. When they had left I said to him, 'What was wrong, that you were manoeuvring with those two men?' 'Well,' said the miller, 'You see the one wanted to sell me 20,000 bushels of wheat, and the other wanted to buy 10,000 barrels of flour.' 'What of that? Could you not conduct business with the one in presence of the other?' I inquired. 'Oh no,' he answered; 'don't you see that I must make sellers imagine that wheat is bound to go down, and equally I must lead the buyer to think that flour is bound to go up, or he would wish to buy it cheaper?' These are business lies. If you speak to a merchant about them, he will tell you that it is impossible to conduct business without them; and affirm that if you are going in for these strict notions you must keep out of business. Very well, but let me say that if you do go in for these notions you are likely to be kept out of heaven."

The "Open Sesame" of a Son's Letter.—Mr. Stevenson relates that "Two friends left this country to seek their fortune abroad. They settled in a distant land and prospered, but by and by one of them was seized with a longing to revisit his native land. He had no friends to visit, but he wished once more to look upon the familiar haunts of his boyhood. He tried to persuade his friend to accompany him. His constant companion until then, however, would not leave the land of his adoption, but wrote a letter of introduction to his father. Provided with that letter the young man set sail for Britain. As soon as he disembarked, he went to his friend's father, and sent in his name, but was refused an interview. The young man tried every means to get an interview, but it was of no use. As a last resource he said, 'Will you please tell him that I have a letter from his son?' 'What! a letter from my son?' exclaimed the merchant; 'send him up at once.' And while he remained in that part of the country he was the honored guest of his friend's father. He owed his hospitable treatment not to his own merits or efforts, but because he came in the son's name. Similarly we cannot find acceptance with God by any merits or efforts of our own, but if we come in the name of Jesus, His well-beloved Son, He will receive, and bring us into His own glorious home."

GOOD-BYE.

A Sermon by Dr. Talmage Dictated on the Eve of his departure to the Holy Land on October 29.

"And they accompanied him unto the ship." Acts 20:38.

A Religious Journey—Paul an old Sailor—The Perils of Ancient Navigation—The Anchors they Carried—Their Plumb-Lines—Paul's Departure—The Church a Dry-Dock—The First Need of a Vessel—Love for the Helm—Three Mountain Surges—The Canvas of Faith—Prayer for a Halliard—Rules for the Voyage—Look Out for Icebergs—Keep the Colors Flying—The Best School for Christians—Parting Words.

To the more than twenty-five million people, in many countries, to whom my sermons come week by week, in English tongue and by translation, through the kindness of the newspaper press, I address these words. I dictate them to a stenographer on the eve of my departure for the Holy Land, Palestine. When you read this sermon I will be mid-Atlantic. I go to be gone a few weeks on

A Religious Journey.

I go because I want, for myself and hearers and readers, to see Bethlehem and Nazareth and Jerusalem and Calvary, and all the other places connected with the Saviour's life and death, and so reinforce myself for sermons. I go, also, because I am writing the Life of Christ, and can be more accurate and graphic when I have been an eye-witness of the sacred places. Pray for my successful journeying and my safe return.

I wish, on the eve of departure, to pronounce a loving benediction upon all my friends, in high places and low, upon congregations to whom my sermons are read in absence of pastors, upon groups gathered out on prairies and in mining districts, upon all sick and invalid and aged ones who cannot attend churches, but to whom I have long administered through the printed page. My next sermon will be addressed to you from Rome, Italy, for I feel like Paul when he said: "So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the gospel to you that are at Rome also."

The fact is that Paul was ever moving about, on land or sea. He was not from occupation, but from frequency of travel. I think he could have taken a vessel across the Mediterranean as well as some of the ship-captains. The sailors never scoffed at him for being a "land-lubber." If Paul's advice had been taken, the crew would never have gone ashore at Melita. When the vessel went scudding under bare poles, Paul was the only self-possessed man on board, and, turning to the excited crew and despairing passengers, he exclaims, in a voice that sounds above the thunder of the tempest and the wrath of the sea, "Be of good cheer."

An Old Sailor—

The men who now go to sea with maps and charts and modern compass, warned by buoy and lighthouse, know nothing of the perils of Ancient Navigation.

Horace said that the man who first ventured on the sea must have had a heart bound with oak and triple brass. People then ventured only from headland to headland, and from island to island, and not until long after spread their sail for a voyage across the sea. Before starting, the weather was watched, and, the vessel having been hauled up on the shore, the mariners placed their shoulders against the stern of the ship and heaved it off, they at the last moment leaping into it. Vessels were then chiefly ships of burden—the transit of passengers being the exception; for the world was not then migratory, as in our day, when the first desire of a man in one place seems to be to get into another place. The ship from which Jonah was thrown overboard, and that in which Paul was carried prisoner, went out chiefly with the idea of taking a cargo.

As now, so then, vessels were accustomed to carry a flag. In those times it was inscribed with the name of a heathen deity. A vessel bound for Syracuse had on it the inscription "Castor and Pollux." The ships were provided with anchors. Anchors were of two kinds—those that were dropped into the sea, and those that were thrown up on the rocks to hold the vessel fast. This last kind was what Paul alluded to when he said: "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the veil." That was what the sailors call a "hook anchor."

Winter Voyages.

The rocks and sand-bars, shoals and headlands, not being mapped out, vessels carried a plumb-line. They would drop it and find the water fifty fathoms, and drop it again and find it forty fathoms, and drop it again and find it thirty fathoms, thus discovering their near approach to the shore. In the spring, summer, and autumn the Mediterranean sea was white with the wings of ships, but at the first winter blast they hid themselves to the nearest harbor, although now the world's commerce prospers in January as well as in June, and in mid-winter, all over the wide and stormy deep, there float palaces of light, trampling the billows under foot, and showering the sparks of terrible furnaces on the wild wind; and the Christian passenger, tippeted and shawled, sits under the shelter of the smoke-stack, looking off upon the phosphorescent deep, on which is written, in scrolls of foam and fire, "Thy way, O God, is in the sea, and thy path in the great waters!"

It is in those days of early navigation that I see a group of men, women, and children on the beach of the Mediterranean.

Paul is About to Leave the congregation to whom he had preached, and they are come down to see him off. It is a solemn thing to part. There are so many traps that wait for a man's feet! The solid ground may break through, and the sea—how many dark mysteries it hides in its bosom! A few counsels, a hasty good-bye, a last look, and the ropes rattle, and the sails are hoisted, and the planks are hauled in, and Paul is gone. I expect to sail over some of the same waters over which Paul sailed, but before going I want to urge you all to embark for heaven.

The Church is the dry-dock where souls are to be fitted out for heaven. In making a vessel for this voyage, is sound timber. The floor timbers ought to be of solid stuff. For the want of it, vessels that looked able to run their jibbooms into the eye of any tempest, when caught in a storm have been crushed like a wafer. The truths of God's word are what I mean by floor timbers. Away with your lighter material! Nothing but oaks, hewn in the forest of divine truth, are stanch enough for this craft.

The First Need

You must have Love for a helm, to guide and turn the craft. Neither Pride nor Ambition nor Avarice will do for a rudder. Love, not only in the heart, but flashing in the eye and tingling in the hand—Love married to Work, which many look upon as so homely a bride—Love, not like brooks, which foam and rattle, yet do nothing, but Love like a river, that runs up the steps of mill-wheels, and works in the harness of factory bands—Love that will not pass by on the other side, but visits the man who fell among thieves near Jericho, not merely saying, "Poor fellow, you are dreadfully hurt!" but like the good Samaritan, pours in oil and wine, and pays his board at the tavern. There must also be a prow, to cut and override the billow. That is Christian perseverance. There are

Three Mountain Surges

that sometimes dash against a soul in a minute—the world, the flesh, and the devil; and that is a well-built prow that can bound over them. For lack of this, many have put back, and never started again. It is the broadside wave that so often sweeps the deck, and fills the hatches; but that which strikes in front is harmless. Meet troubles courageously, and you surmount them. Stand on the prow, and as you wipe off the spray of the split surge, cry out with the apostle, "None of these things move me." Let all your fears stay aft. The right must conquer. Know that Moses in an ark of bulrushes can run down a war-steamer.

Have a good strong anchor. "Which hope we have as an anchor." By this strong cable and windlass hold on to your anchor. "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father." Do not use the anchor wrongfully. Do not always stay in the same latitude and longitude. You will never ride up the harbor of eternal rest if you all the way drag your anchor.

But you must have sails. Vessels are not fit for the sea until they have the flying jib, the foresail, the topgallant, the skysail, the gaffsail and other canvas.

Faith is Our Canvas.

Hoist it, and the winds of heaven will drive you ahead. Sails made out of any other canvas than faith will be slit to tatters by the first northeaster.

Strong faith never lost a battle. It will crush foes, blast rocks, quench lightnings, thresh mountains. It is a shield to the warrior, a crank to the most ponderous wheel, a lever to pry up pyramids, a drum whose beat gives strength to the step of the heavenly soldiery, and sails to waft ships laden with priceless pearls from the harbor of earth to the harbor of heaven.

But you are not yet equipped. You must have what seamen call the running rigging. This comprises the ship's braces, halliards, clew-lines, and such like. Without these the yards could not be braced, the sails lifted, nor the canvas in anywise managed. We have prayer for the running rigging. Unless you understand this tackling you are not a spiritual seaman. By pulling on these ropes, you hoist the sails of faith and turn them every whither. The prow of courage will not cut the wave, nor the sail of faith spread and flap its wing, unless you have strong

Prayer for a Halliard

One more arrangement, and you will be ready for the sea. You must have a compass—which is the Bible. Look at it every day, and always sail by it, as its needle points toward the Star of Bethlehem. Through fog and darkness and storm it works faithfully. Search the Scriptures—"Box the compass."

Let me give you two or three

Rules for the Voyage.

Allow your appetites and passions only an under-deck passage. Do not allow them ever to come up on the promenade deck. Mortify your members which are upon the earth. Never allow your lower nature anything better than a steerage passage. Let watchfulness walk the decks as an armed sentinel, and shoot down with great promptness anything like a mutiny of riotous appetites.

Be sure to look out of the fore-castle for icebergs. These are cold Christians floating about in the Church. The frigid-zone professors will sink you. Steer clear of icebergs! Keep a log-book during all the voyage—an account of how many furlongs you make a day. The merchant keeps a day-book as well as a ledger. You ought to know every night, as well as every year, how things are going. When the express train stops at the depot, you hear a hammer sounding on all the wheels, thus testing the safety of the rail-train. Bound as we are with more than express speed toward a great eternity, ought we not often to try the work of self-examination? Be sure to Keep Your Colors Up!

You know the ships of England, Russia, France, and Spain by the ensigns they carry. Sometimes it is a lion, sometimes an eagle, sometimes a star, sometimes a crown. Let it ever be known who you are, and for what port you are bound. Let "Christian" be written on the very front, with a figure of a cross, crown, and a dove; and from the masthead let float the streamers of Immanuel. Then the pirate vessels of temptation will pass you unharmed as they say: "There goes a Christian, bound for the port of heaven. We will not disturb her, for she has too many guns aboard." Run up your flag on this pulley: "I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God, and the wisdom of God unto salvation."

When driven back, or laboring under great stress of weather—now changing from starboard tack to larboard, and then from larboard to starboard—look above the topgallants, and your heart shall beat like a war-drum, as the streamers float on the wind. The sign of the cross will make you patient, and the crown will make you glad.

Before you gain port you will smell the land breezes of heaven, and Christ, the Pilot, will meet you as you come into the Narrows of Death, and fasten to you, and say, "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee." Are you ready for such a voyage? Make up your minds. The gang-planks are lifting! The bell rings!

All Aboard for Heaven!

This world is not your rest. The chaffinch is the silliest bird in all the earth for trying to make its nest on the rocking billow. Oh now I wish that, as I embark for the Holy Land in the East, all to whom I preach, by tongue or type, would embark for heaven! What you all most need is God, and you need Him now. Some of you I leave in trouble. Things are going very rough with you. You have had a hard struggle with poverty, or sickness, or persecution, or bereavement. Light after light has gone out, and it is so dark that you can hardly see any blessing left. May that Jesus who comforted the widow of Nain, and raised the deceased to life, with His gentle hand of sympathy wipe away your tears! All is well.

When David was fleeing through the wilderness, pursued by his own son, he was being prepared to become the sweet singer of Israel. The pit and the dungeon were the best schools at which Joseph ever graduated. The hurricane that upset the tent and killed Job's children prepared the man of Uz to write the magnificent poem that has astounded the ages. There is no way to get the wheat out of the straw but to thresh it. There is no way out to burn it. Look at the people who have always had it their own way. They are proud, discontented, useless, and unhappy. If you want to find cheerful folks, go among those who have been purified by the fire. After Rossini had rendered "William Tell" the five hundredth time, a company of musicians came under his window in Paris and serenaded him. They put upon his brow a golden crown of laurel leaves. But amidst all the applause and enthusiasm, Rossini turned to a friend and said: "I would give all this brilliant scene for a few days of youth and love." Contrast the melancholy feeling of Rossini, who had everything that this world could give him, to the joyful experience of Isaac Watts, whose misfortunes were innumerable, when he says:

To Purify the Gold

The Hill of Zion yields
A thousand sacred sweets
Before we reach the heavenly fields
Or walk the golden streets.

Then let our songs abound,
And every tear be dry;
We're marching through Immanuel's ground,
To fairer worlds on high.

It is Prosperity that Kills and trouble that saves. While the Israelites were on the march, amidst great privations and hardships, they behaved well. After awhile they prayed for meat, and the sky darkened with a large flock of quails, and these quails fell in great multitudes all about them; and the Israelites ate and ate, and stuffed themselves until they died. Oh my friends, it is not hardship or trial or starvation that injures the soul, but abundant supply. It is not the vulture of trouble that eats up the Christian's life; it is the quails! it is the quails!

I cannot leave you until once more I confess my faith in the Saviour whom I have preached. He is my all in all. I owe more to the grace of God than most men. With this ardent temperament, if I had gone overboard I would have gone to the very depths. You know I can do nothing by halves.

Oh to grace how great a debtor
Daily I'm constrained to be!

I think all will be well. Do not be worried about me. I know that my Redeemer liveth, and if any fatality should befall me, I think I should go straight. I have been most unworthy, and would be sorry to think that any one of my friends had been as unworthy a Christian as myself. But God has helped a great many through, and I hope He will help me through. It is a long account of shortcomings, but if He is going to rub any of it out, I think He will rub it all out.

And now give us (for I go not alone) your benediction. When you send letters to a friend in a distant land, you say via such a city, or via such a steamer. When you send your good wishes to us, send them via the throne of God. We shall not travel out of the reach of your prayers.

There is a scene where spirits dwell,
Where friend holds intercourse with friend;
Though sundered far, by faith we meet
Around one common mercy-seat.

And now may the blessing of God come down upon your bodies and upon your souls, your fathers and mothers, your companions, your children, your brothers and sisters, and your friends! May you be blessed in your business, and in your pleasures, in your joys and in your sorrows, in the house, and by the way! And if during our separation an arrow from the unseen world should strike any of us, may it only hasten on the raptures that God has prepared for those who love Him! I utter not the word farewell; it is too sad, too formal, a word for me to speak or write. But, considering that I have your hand tightly clasped in both of mine, I utter a kind, an affectionate, and a cheerful good-bye!

A FRENCH REPROBATE SAVED.

The following incident is related in the American McAll Record, by Mrs. M. T. Astley, of the McAll Mission in Versailles, France:

Seeing a portly, pleasant-looking man passing by one night, I handed him a "feuille" [leaflet] and asked him to walk in. He did so, and for upwards of six months was so regular in his attendance, that he had been known to leave his meal unfinished in order to be in time. I had great hopes of him, but from some cause unknown to me he came less and less often, and at last ceased altogether. His wife, a poor sickly looking thing, could come rarely on account of the children. I used to go to them from time to time, but could not find out the reason of the change. One day, however, it oozed out that the husband had taken to drink, which, when all was told, was not the biggest of his sins, though it was no doubt the source of them. This suffering soul poured out her heart into mine, and a wretched heart it was.

What could I say to her? How comfort her? Only by showing her Jesus. She knew herself unworthy of heaven, and when I read from the Word how Jesus had suffered in her stead, she just believed it, and will ever believe it. I never saw such simple faith, such wonderful joy. A short time before, as she was holding her baby, her husband took her by the neck and thrust her head through a large pane of glass! Her life was a torture.

"But I have nothing in my heart but pardon and love for him now," said she to me. "A short while ago I was more than once on the point of putting an end to myself, but I could not do it now, madame. No, I am ready to bear all that my Lord thinks fit to send me, for He gives me patience. When I remember that He has suffered for all my sins, I don't know what to do sometimes for joy, and though I don't know how to pray to Him properly, I am continually talking to Him, for I am sure He is with me."

Early in November we agreed to pray for the conversion of her husband; she said that he let her talk to him now and then, and was not quite so bad. I asked the Lord for his soul. The eldest child fell ill, then the baby boy, the only thing his father seemed to love. He grew worse, and but little hope remained. The wife and I kept on praying. On Saturday night week I called, and they almost dragged me in. The baby was chattering away on his father's knee, and the father beaming. "And shall we not give thanks?" said I, and we did so. I also asked that the man might be touched. "Oh, he is touched already!" was the answer. And this is what he said: "On going to work yesterday morning I was broken-hearted. In my despair I asked God to have mercy, and in pity to save my child, who was so dear to me. I deserved nothing, I knew. I was on the street at the time, and I hardly knew how the day went on. The evening came, and found me lifting the latch, expecting the worst, when my wife cried out, 'Peter, Peter, the little one is saved!' For a moment I could hardly take it in, and then I saw that God had answered my prayer, and bowing my head in my hands I thanked Him, and asked Him for Christ's sake to pardon all my sins, and I believe He did so then and there. I intend, by His help, to lead a new life." The following Sunday his boon companions came to have a night with him, but he thanked them and declined, saying he was going to the Conférence; wouldn't they come with him? What a change!

REMARKABLE CONVERSIONS IN TURKEY.

MENTION has been made in these columns of the wonderful work of grace which is going on at Aintab in Turkey, under the ministrations of the missionaries of the American Board. From fuller details published in the Missionary Herald from a letter by Mr. Christie, one of those missionaries, it appears that no less than 588 persons have been converted. He says:

"The revival continues with ever-deepening interest and power. Multitudes come every night to hear the simple truths of salvation; their hungry interest in what is said is remarkable; the presence of the divine Spirit gives a freshness and force to the simplest and most common truths of the gospel; the great congregations listen as if they could never hear enough. Every forenoon, in all the three churches inquiry meetings are held, when the pastors and their helpers talk with individuals for four hours or more each day.

"Some very remarkable conversions have occurred: one, a notorious gambler; another, a victim of strong drink. This intemperate man had been awakened to a sense of his sin, and had begun the struggle with the enemy. The conflict within was so fierce that he fled from his house one morning early, and spent the whole day without food, wandering up and down among the tombs to the south of the city. On our way to the evening meeting we encountered him there, and he told us of his desperate condition; we took him with us to the church, where he listened to a rousing discourse on 'Quench not the Spirit,' and at its close he rose for prayers, and he is now rejoicing in the liberty wherewith Christ maketh free. A few weeks ago two young men, with a number of others, had been carousing nearly all night; on the way home a drunken brawl ensued, when one of them stabbed the other, and it was of God's mercy that the wound was not fatal. Both of these men are now converts, and are to unite with the First Church next Sabbath. This very day we have talked with four young men (among the twenty-two who came to open their hearts to Pastor Mardiros and myself) who have been well known as 'hard cases,' utterly indifferent to religion, but who are now, we believe, entirely changed in heart and life.

"I could give incident after incident of a similar sort. It is estimated that perhaps 200 Gregorians have been converted who, for various reasons, will not at this time join any of our churches; they will nearly all come to us in time, however, as they cannot long remain contented with the senseless mummeries of the old Church."

THE NEW TABERNACLE.

THE ceremony of breaking ground for Dr. Talmage's new Tabernacle, to be erected in Clinton and Greene avenues, Brooklyn, took place on October 28, and attracted a large number of spectators. The exercises consisted of singing, prayer, reading the Scriptures, and addresses. Dr. Talmage presided, and among the ministers who participated were the Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott, the Rev. Dr. Ingersoll, the Rev. John D. Wells, and the Rev. Dr. Terhune.

Treasurer John Wood said it would be one of the largest and most imposing churches in the world. The regular seating capacity would be more than 5,000, and by throwing open the Sunday-school rooms there would be accommodation for 2,000 more. The insurance companies affected by the late fire have settled with the trustees for $115,000, which will about pay for the ground for the new building. Before turning the sod Dr. Talmage said: That begins right which begins with God. That begins wrong which begins without Him. From first cut of spade till last ring of trowel, from deepest foundation stone to highest pinnacle, from this hour when, standing under the cloudy rafters, and amid the illumined walls of the world, to the hour when the people shall gather for dedication service under the roof of the new Brooklyn Tabernacle, we want to put all under the Divine direction.

God's First Temple,

In the beginning of life, in the beginning of families, in the beginning of nations, in the beginning of churches. They who wait until the corner-stone of a church is laid, wait until the church architecture is fixed, and the designs are determined, and the employees engaged, and to ask God to decide things then, would be to ask a miracle. That may be the reason why so many auditoriums are a defiance of acoustics, and so many buildings are unsympathetic.

God could not answer the belated prayers and make the church what it ought to be without demolition of all that had been done. It is useless to ask the Lord to make the church a blessing to the people, if already lack of ventilation has decreed asphyxia, and disturbing echoes are waiting in the new corridors ready to spring out upon sermon and psalm, and the modes of ingress and egress are a provocation. In the beginning, and while yet no architectural plans are adopted, and no craftsmen are engaged, and all is yet undetermined, let us implore divine guidance.

Brooklyn Tabernacle Now Moves On.

Like the Israelites of old, we are led by a pillar of fire by night, and I remember that pillar conducted them to the Promised Land. We put our church here, because it is as near as we can get to the centre of our congregation. We were central when we planted our former church where it was, but Brooklyn has moved on and moved up and moved out, and so great and grand are the prospects of our beloved city that the church now on the utmost city limits will, after a while, be far this side of the centre, and the tides of our municipal life will meet the incoming tides of ocean.

We also plant our new church here because it is a street of gardens and umbrageous trees. The only time that God is represented as walking on earth at all, He is said to have walked "in the garden in the cool of the day." The world started with a garden and will close with a garden. All up and down the Bible the Church is compared to a garden. In the garden of Gethsemane Christ wept, and He appeared to Mary Magdalene in the costume of a gardener, and our Lord's tomb was in the garden of Joseph of Arimathea. What more appropriate place could we find for our church than a street of gardens?

As we break the ground to-day for a new church let me state

What This Church Will Stand For.

Evangelism, liberty of conscience, Christian patriotism, charity, righteousness toward God, and honesty toward man. May it be a great place for the cure of heartaches! May its windows look into the next world as well as this! May all the children baptized here become the sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty! May all the marital oaths taken at these altars be kept until death does them part! May there be a revival of pure religion here which shall roll on without interruption until Christ descends through the wide-opening heavens! May the Lord God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob and Joshua and Paul and John Knox and John Wesley and Hugh Latimer and Bishop McIlvaine take possession of this ground and all that shall be built upon it!

We have but one regret in breaking ground on this spot, and that is, that this grand and beautiful tree on my left must be cut down to make room. The tree seems sad and its leaves are a little tremulous, and there are voices within us which become recitative, saying, "Woodman, spare that tree!" What America greatly needs to-day is, not more trees cut down, but more trees planted. He who needlessly slays a tree is an assassin. The kingdom of God is to be a kingdom of trees: "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree." And "all the trees of the wood are to clap their hands." And in Revelation the angel cries out, "Hurt not the trees!" There must be some good reason for laying the axe to the root of such a pillared glory, or it would not be done at all. But perhaps we may atone for the deed by putting here what Isaiah calls "the trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord."

And now I proceed to the ceremony of breaking ground for a new House of God. (Here a spade, of which the iron part was gilded and the handle covered with blue plush was handed by an elder of the church to Dr. Talmage, who with a turn on the spade removed a portion of the sod.) In the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost! The work is begun. Now let the building rise! Blessed be the Lord God of Israel from everlasting to everlasting, and let the whole earth be filled with His glory! Amen and Amen!

THE BLIND MADE TO SEE.

THE following incident is published by the New York Sun of October 29: Miss Annie Ryder, who lives with her mother and stepfather at 189 Mercer Street, Jersey City, says she has been cured by prayer of blindness. She is twenty years old. Following is her own story, which is corroborated by her mother: Eighteen years ago she had small-pox, which left her almost totally blind. Her parents consulted eminent oculists, who all declared that the case was hopeless. Dr. Knapp, of New York, told her parents they would waste money in trying to do anything for her. Her eyes remained in the same condition for sixteen years, and during that time she had to be led by a companion when she went out-doors. Two years ago a friend of the family advised her to visit the Mount Zion Sanctuary, in Greenville, where Sister Annetta Jackson and Brother Hancox were conducting services. A friend led her to the church, and she asked the prayers of the congregation that her sight might be restored. From the time of her visit the darkness gradually disappeared as she continued to pray for more light.

On last Thursday [October 24], however, her eyes became affected with a cold, and her sight failed again. She told her mother to go to the faith cure church in Grove Street, where Pastor Hancox conducts services daily, and ask again for prayers. Her mother went to the church a little before 9 o'clock, and at her request the congregation prayed fervently. Miss Ryder says that at 9 o'clock the same morning she herself sank down on her knees in the house, and prayed that her sight might be restored. When she had finished she could see the sun shine once more. Her mother returned to the house, and found her daughter pacing the room and giving thanks for the cure. Mrs. Ryder says it was about 9 o'clock when the faith-cure congregation joined in prayer.

When a Sun reporter called at the house last evening Miss Ryder was preparing to go, unaccompanied, to the church. She said she could see well, and that she had no doubt her faith had brought about a miracle. She said she was going to travel the country through, to give testimony of what God had done for her.

PRINCE JEROME NAPOLEON'S TWO SONS.

IN connection with the strong expectations which have been set forth ever since 1873, as to the probability of Prince Jerome Napoleon becoming the Great Napoleon of the coming crisis, it is of interest to observe what is said about his two sons. A European weekly journal said on October 9, in describing Prince Victor Napoleon, the eldest son, who is about 27 years of age, and who lives in exile in Brussels, in Belgium:

"This young Prince is said to unite the dogged perseverance of the House of Savoy to the strong faith and vivid imagination of the Bonapartes, and that ever since he became the acknowledged representative of the Napoleon family by the political testament of his cousin he has devoted all his energies to thoroughly fit himself for the exalted position which he implicitly believes will one day be assigned him by the plébiscite of the French people. Prince Victor Napoleon's dark eyes, olive complexion, and well-knit figure would remind you strongly of Robert Lefèvre's picture of Napoleon I., if it were not for the heavy black moustache and unpretending suit of grey tweed, which savour essentially of the present. He regards the memorials of triumphs and vicissitudes of his ancestor as powerful incentives to labor for the future; and it would be difficult to name a work on French finance, politics, or military history which cannot be found on his book-shelves. The Bonapartes have always been artillerymen, and the models of shells below King Jerome's cuirass, in his house, are the solitary souvenirs of his grandson, Prince Victor's, brief service as a volunteer at Orleans."

The London Standard of October 14 said: "The report that the second son of Prince Jerome Napoleon, Prince Louis Napoleon (who is about twenty-five years of age), intends to enter the Russian Army is, to say the least, premature. Prince Louis is at present serving as captain in a cavalry regiment in the Italian Army. He is with his father in Switzerland, but is expected at Monza, together with his mother, the Princess Clotilde, about the end of October."

A PRAYER FOR HALF A DOLLAR.

AN interesting incident is related by a writer in The Silver Cross, the excellent organ of the King's Daughters. She says that a well-educated lady, once wealthy, had fallen into adversity, and was living with her husband in a poor neighborhood. She was an invalid, and had to deny herself every luxury, that the small sum her husband was able to earn might cover expenses and keep them out of debt. One day when heavily burdened with pain and sorrow a visitor came and left with her for an hour a book full of such choice consolation and directions to Bible promises that the cloud lifted, and she once more recovered faith and joy. The visitor called again for the book, expressing at the same time her regret that as it was not her own she could not leave it with the afflicted lady for a longer time. The sufferer yearned for the treasure, that she might read it through and gain help for the bearing of her daily struggle. But the cost of the book was fifty cents, and as already every cent of income was needed for necessities there was no hope of obtaining such a sum. But the book had taught her the power of prayer, and she prayed that in some way the money might come. No answer came for several days, but she continued praying. At length, one day, the physician who visited her laid half a dollar on the table as he entered, saying he had picked it up on the door-step, and supposed her husband must have dropped it as he went out to his work. The lady had good reason for doubting that theory, and when her husband returned he peedily disposed of such an idea. Inquiries were made of the only persons who had been to the house that day, but none of them had lost the half-dollar, and then the lady thanked God that in that way He had answered her prayer.

DAVID'S LAST WORDS.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for November 17, 11 Samuel 22:1-23:7; Golden Text, 11 Samuel 23:5.

Two Triumphal Songs—Deliverance From Outward and Inward Enemies—David's Conception of God—How He Fell—Through Leaving his Fortress—David's Experience in Prayer—Was a Business Matter with Him—Regarded Answers as a Natural Thing—A Deliverance by Storm and Earthquake—A Wrong Inference—Driven Back to God—On Safe Ground Again—A Revelation of the Future Dispensation—How God Deals with Human Thorns.

IN these two chapters, 11 Sam. 22 and 23, we have two songs: both are songs of deliverance, the one commemorating David's deliverance from "all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul"—his outward foes; the others commemorating his deliverance from his inward foes, this being David's last utterance as a poet.

In the first of these songs, the Lord has the prominent place. He begins with His name, "The Lord is my Rock, and my Fortress, and my Deliverer." He is beneath him, to stand upon; around him, as a fortress; between him and his foes; and more than that, an active Deliverer. No wonder David knew himself safe. "The God of my Rock; in Him will I trust; He is my Shield, and the horn of my salvation, my high Tower and my Refuge, my Saviour; thou avest me from violence. . . I will call upon the Lord, who is worthy to be praised; so shall I be saved from mine enemies." How was it possible that a man who could write thus, whose confidence in God was so absolute, who saw God around him, and himself hemmed in by God on all sides—how was it possible that such a one could use deceit with Achish, king of Gath. How could such a one fall into the grievous sins which afterwards stained his life? The explanation is simple: God never puts any of his children into a state or position where they are beyond the reach of temptation. He did not ease to be David's fortress when David fell, but the King had left his fortress, and outside of it he was fortified by God no more.

"He That Dwelleth

in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty." (Ps. 91:1.) Christ is all to us which God's word says He is, while we abide in Him. When David acted without God, he found himself undefended. When he made his own wisdom his ground of action, he was leaving his Rock, and no wonder his steps slipped. Persevering faith is a momentary-moment necessity with each of us: it becomes a habit little by little. David next tells his experience in prayer, "In my distress I called upon the Lord, and cried to my God." The Psalmist does not stop here. Prayer was a real business matter with David, and no mere discharging of conscientious duty. He knew the ground he stood on, he knew how far he might go, he prayed to a God whom he knew personally, and he looked for a certain result. He records, not as a marvellous answer to prayer, but as the most natural thing for him to expect.

"He did Hear my Voice out of His temple, and my cry did enter into His ears." How did he know God heard him? Because something happened immediately. David counted that God was so true a Father that He would sooner move heaven and earth than leave the cry of His distressed child unheard, and he was not disappointed. When this occasion was, we know not, but it must have been at a time when David was in great danger, and God used both earthquake and thunder-storm against his enemies. "Then the earth shook and trembled; the foundations of heaven moved and shook, because he was wroth. . . . He bowed the heavens also, and came down . . . and He rode upon a cherub, and did fly: and He was seen upon the wings of the wind (seen by David's eye of faith). . . . The Lord thundered from heaven, and the Most High uttered His voice;" and it was all for His child's deliverance. "The waves of death" had compassed him, "and the floods of ungodly men" had made him afraid. (ver. 5.) And now he sings, "He sent out arrows, and scattered them; lightning, and discomfited them. . . . He sent from above, he took me; He drew me out of many waters: He delivered me from my strong enemy, and from them that hated me: for they were too strong for me. . . . He brought me forth also into a large place: He delivered me, because he delighted in me."

Up to this point the Psalmist's eye is fully upon the Lord; he sees Him in everything, and everything in relation to Him. Then comes the danger, which is such a danger to God's children, the danger of being pleased with himself, and his own spiritual state, and he accounts the gracious dealings of the Lord as due to him in some measure, because of his faithfulness. He talks of his righteousness, of the cleanness of his hands, of how he has kept the ways of the Lord, and has not departed from His statutes and judgments, "I was also upright before Him, and have kept myself from mine iniquity. Therefore the Lord hath recompensed me according to my righteousness; according to my cleanness in His eyesight." One cannot but detect danger in these words and those which follow.

It is so true, that only the merciful understand God's mercy, only the pure His purity, only the upright, His uprightness; but it is evident, in his own eyes, it is David who is still the merciful, upright, and pure man. Perhaps it was this very self-consciousness which first opened the door to the enemy.

Then comes a change; he owns that God is his strength, "By thee I have run through a troop; by my God have I leaped over a wall," and in doing so his eye seems to rest on God again, and himself is comparatively in the shadow. "As for God, His way is perfect; the word of the Lord is tried, He is a Buckler to all them that trust in Him." Now he is attributing all to God. "God is my Strength and my Tower; and He maketh my way perfect;" not as before, "I have kept the ways of the Lord." Now it is "He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places; teacheth my hands to war; so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms. . . . Thy gentleness hath made me great." There is every difference between exulting in our own purity or faithfulness or zeal, and thinking that by these things we lay God under an obligation to us, and exulting in God's faithfulness and power, and rejoicing that by Him we overcome. In the former we get the glory; in the latter, God has the glory.

On Safe Ground Again,

David continues his song of triumph over his enemies, but attributes now all his conquests to God. "Thou hast girded me with strength. . . . Thou hast also given me the necks of mine enemies. . . . Thou also hast delivered me from the strivings of my people" (this latter was indeed a deliverance). He closes his psalm with the glorious words, "The Lord liveth," etc. God was no mere idea to David, no distant, awful, unknown Being: He was real, true, and Knew a Living God.

"The Lord liveth. . . . Therefore I will give thanks unto Thee, O Lord, among the heathen, and I will sing praises unto Thy name. He is the tower of salvation for his King; and sheweth mercy to his anointed, unto David and to his seed forevermore." In all this song, there is much of the knowledge of God, much of blessed experience; . . . David is not yet fully broken; the bitter, terrible experience of his sin and its consequences was used of God to cut away from David all self-dependence, all self-exultation. In his last words there is a wonderful mellowness; they are the utterances of a heart melted, broken by grace. He calls himself "David, the son of Jesse;" he does not forget his origin, and he speaks of it now instead of recounting the mighty deeds which he had done, and the purity, faithfulness, and integrity in which he had formerly taken such pride. It is a subdued, conquered king who now calls himself "the son of Jesse." "The man who was raised up on high," and therefore had been low down. He says nothing about being the "man after God's own heart," and "chosen from among his brethren;" God's condescension to him fills his thoughts, and he feels that through His grace only he is the anointed of the God of Jacob and the "sweet Psalmist of Israel." And having so named himself, he again wonders that God could use such an instrument. "The spirit of the Lord spake by me," as though to say; "nothing but this constitutes me the sweet Psalmist of Israel;" "and His word was on my tongue. The God of Israel said, The Rock of Israel spake to me." It would seem as though, in this, his last prophetic utterance, David saw in some way the three Persons of the Trinity, a revelation of the Godhead in advance of the dispensation in which he lived—God, the Rock, the Spirit; God, the Father, Jesus, the Rock of Ages; the Spirit, the Holy Comforter. And this was given to the fallible but humbled David, the man who, sinner as he had been, took God's part against himself and his sin, and, when once he saw it, was true to God at all costs. On earth he could never undo the past; but the precious blood of Christ, surely beforehand, cleansed David from all sin, and God manifested Himself unto him as He does not unto the world. (John 14: 21, 22.)

What, then, is the message thus vouchsafed to David by the Godhead thus manifested? David saw his life as it should have been, and as it should be in the life of his great antitype, Jesus, the Son of David. The Revised Version gives it, "Then shall be one that ruleth over men,

A Righteous One

that ruleth in the fear of God." And Young translates what follows: "And as the light of morning he riseth, a morning sun—no clouds! By the shining, by the rain, tender grass of the earth." Such will be the coming reign of Jesus—"A Morning Sun," as well as, "the bright Morning Star;" "no clouds; ruling uninterceptedly in the fear of God."

Jesus said to His disciples, "I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." (John 16: 12.) Toward the end of life, God may say things which would have brought us to utter despair when we first knew Him and were full of expectations from ourselves. God showed David the perfect pattern, and instead of asserting his righteousness, integrity, faithfulness, etc., he says, "Verily my house is not so with God." (R. V.) It was a plain, unvarnished admission of failure. But there was no depression, no discouragement with it; he turns from himself to his God and says, "Yet He hath made with me an everlasting covenant,

Ordered in All Things and Sure;

for this is all my salvation and all my desire, although He made it not to grow." In his old age, looking back on God's goodness and wondrous deliverances, seeing his life from the verge of an endless eternity, David does not fall back on one thing in his past, present, or future, but on God's covenant; neither purity, faithfulness, uprightness, nor aught else is sure ground now, but the covenant of God, "ordered in all things and sure;" that and that alone he can trust.

Perhaps the thought struck him, "How is it that I am not cast away like the wicked? I have committed their sins; why am I rescued, and they lost?" And again a revelation from God explains the matter: "But the sons of Belial shall be all of them as thorns thrust away, because they cannot be taken with hand." God stretches out His hands in love and mercy, but those who will not be taken with hands must be utterly burned with fire. David had let God conquer him. There is hope for any man who will let God win him, or, if he is astray, win him back. But those who resist God are hopeless. "The man who shall touch them must be fenced with iron." Thus David's last words glorified God, while they left him in the dust.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

NOTICE.

At the beginning of next year the "Christian Herald" will be enlarged by making the pages a little longer and wider than now, so that thirteen pages will contain a larger quantity of reading matter than fourteen of the present size. The price of the annual subscription will NOT be increased.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Pension Agents will Have Greater Difficulties under General Raum than they found in dealing with the Bureau under the charge of Corporal Tanner. The new Commissioner requires the section of the law authorizing a grant or relating to be quoted in the form, and the circumstances justifying the payment to be fully stated. He has also issued instructions to heads of divisions in the Pension Office directing that all claims involving large sums of money, after they have been prepared for special adjudication, are not to be passed upon. They are to be brought to his department, and he proposes to give them his personal consideration before the pension certificate will be issued. This change will not delay the final adjudication of the claim, as the Commissioner intends to give the preference to business of this character and examine the cases as soon as brought before him. He does not intend to make a re-examination of the cases, but in connection with the official familiar with the cases he will go over them so as to know what they are, and the principle upon which they have been decided. This is as it should be. The nation is as desirous that no proper and just claim should be neglected as it is that no unjust claims should be allowed.

A Decision on the Electric Light Question in the Supreme Court of New York on October 29 deserves the attention of all large cities. They may profitably take warning by the dilemma in which New York is placed, and which this decision renders only more embarrassing. For about three weeks the principal thoroughfares of the city have been so dark at night that highway robberies and sandbag assaults have been perpetrated with impunity. In Broadway between Fourteenth Street and the Battery the drivers of vehicles have had to exercise the utmost care to avoid collisions. Persons on one sidewalk could not see persons on the opposite sidewalk. The reason was that the gas lamps had been removed to give place to the electric light, and the electric light was not used while a dispute was pending in the Supreme Court. The decision rendered last week exposes the tricks of the politicians. After the lineman was killed and almost consumed in mid-air by a badly insulated wire on October 11, the public insisted that the wires should be better protected or put underground. The Electric Light Company, in defending themselves in the court, stated that the Board of Electrical control would not allow them to build subways, and were slow in building them themselves, and would not allow them to hang new wires. They were therefore obliged to use defective wires or discontinue the light. The Supreme Court finds that this plea is valid, yet that the law permits the Board of Electrical Control to exercise this power. The situation in which New York finds itself is an illustration of the result of placing power in the hands of selfish politicians.

The Postmaster-General has Yielded to the protests of the telegraph companies in the matter of rates for Government telegrams. On October 31 he issued a general order, raising the compensation to ten times the sum fixed by him last July, and abandoning his position on the subject of distance. One cent, instead of one mill a word, is to be paid for messages of ten words for distances of 400 miles and under. Between 400 and 1,000 miles the price is to be fifteen cents for ten words. Over 1,000 miles the rate is twenty cents. These rates are to be maintained until June 30, 1890. Future rates are to be fixed by a board consisting of five persons, of whom two are to be appointed by the telegraph companies, two by the Post-Office Department, and the fifth by the other four members of the board. Mr. Wanamaker must have felt the backdown to be somewhat humiliating, and probably wishes he had more fully considered the matter before fixing the one-mill rate. The nation shares that feeling. It expects its statesmen to have more dignity than to offer lower prices than they intend to pay. Some classes of tradesmen still follow the practice, but they are not the highest.

A Startling Statement on the Divorce Question was made at the recent meeting of the National Reform Association in Philadelphia by Judge Thayer, of Pennsylvania. He said: "I have granted many decrees of divorce that I did not think should be granted, simply because by my official oath I am bound to administer the laws as they are upon the statute-books. In many and many a case I have felt that this thing was being done by agreement, and that people who were bound together by the laws of God were sundering themselves by a trick. I am bound, and every judge is bound, hand and foot in this matter. No judge can say no, nor has he any opportunity to protest against it." If this evil flourishes in Pennsylvania, which has by no means the worst record among the States in the matter of divorce, how much greater must it be in those States where the laws are more lax! Other evils also proceed from the diversity of the laws. These are now so generally recognized that Congress would now have the approval of a majority of the people if it undertook to legislate on the subject for the whole country.

A Notable Speech of Thanks by King Mataafa, of the Samoan Islands, was made when the United States Consul-General distributed to him and his men the presents which Congress voted in recognition of the generous assistance afforded by the King and his people to our shipwrecked sailors at the time the Trenton and Vandalia were destroyed in Apia Harbor. Mataafa showed his modesty and his regard for Christian principles by saying, in reply to Mr. Blacklock's address: "We return our grateful thanks, through you, to the great American people whom you represent. When we assisted your sailors we considered that we were only doing the duty of human beings toward our brothers. We have been taught that the Saviour came into the world to save everybody, and we were only following His teachings in a small way." Evidently to characterize such a man as Mataafa as a savage, as was done lately, is a gross injustice.

The Emperor of Germany Set Out for a Visit to the Sultan of Turkey on October 31. A Turkish journal says that the visit is a happy event for Turkey, and that it shows that Germany approves the Sultan's wise policy of neutrality. Outside observers have good reason to doubt whether this construction can justly be placed on the visit. Recent events suggest that the true explanation is rather a desire to consolidate the hereditary enemies of Russia with the enemies of France in a powerful league of mutual defence which shall form a cordon to prevent Russia uniting her forces with those of France in the event of war. That view is supported by the fact that before the Emperor's departure there were long conferences at the German foreign office between Bismarck and the Turkish Ambassador at Berlin. Rumors are also current that a new international conference to revise the arrangements made by the Berlin conference of 1878 is to be called, at which the Balkan question and the English occupation of Egypt are to be discussed, with the view of removing causes of mutual distrust between the allies, and inducing more cordial relations.

The Speech of Mr. Davitt Before the Parnell commission was concluded on October 31. Sir James Hannen, the President of the Commission, complimented him on the force and ability of his arguments, and thanked him for having given to the commission the assistance which was withheld by others on the Parnellite side. In the course of his speech Mr. Davitt defended boycotting, which he declared was not advocated as a means of personal injury or intimidation, but as embodying the popular sense of refusing to associate with those acting against the public interest. Mr. Davitt denounced the charge that Mr. Patrick Egan, treasurer of the Land League, paid money to assist in the Phoenix Park murders, or that Mr. Biggar or others advanced money belonging to the League to pay for the committal of outrages.

The Tide of Liberal Triumphs at the Polls in England has been checked at Brighton. Though the Conservative candidate was weak, and was opposed by Sir Robert Peel—an effective speaker of popular manners, who was, moreover, personally aided by Mr. Gladstone's presence and active support—the Conservative candidate was elected by a majority of 2,507. A member of Parliament, writing to the New York Herald on the subject, contends that the election was a more reliable test of public opinion on the Irish question than were the recent Gladstonian victories. He makes, however, some significant comments, which are worthy of notice apart from politics. Referring to the victorious candidate, he says: "There was one thing which helped him greatly—he had a character. Sir Robert Peel now knows better than he did before the value of character in English public life."

Mr. Gladstone Paid a Glowing Tribute to the United States in the course of a recent address to the workmen of Chester. He urged all English workmen to study the history of the American Revolution. He claimed that it was by and from England that a love of freedom was sown in America. England now in return reaped advantages from the American vindication of those principles of freedom which animated the Revolution. The system of government in America combined that love of freedom, respect for law, and desire for order which formed the surest elements of national excellence and greatness. It was no extravagance to say that, although there were only two millions of people in the thirteen States at the time of the Revolution, the group of statesmen that proceeded from them were a match for any in the whole history of the world, and were superior to those of any one epoch.

A Renewal of the Trouble in Samoa is Reported from Sydney, New South Wales. It appears that a pitched battle was fought on the Island of Savaii, about October 15, between the forces of Malietoa and Tamasese. The report states that a large number of men were slain, but the result of the battle was still in doubt when the despatch left. The news excites unpleasant suspicions. It indicates that Tamasese has received help from the Germans. He had but a small following, as was proved when Mataafa was elected to succeed Malietoa. He had no ammunition except what he could get without paying for it from the Germans. Being without funds and without native support he was able to hire soldiers, and arm them in such numbers as to cope with Malietoa's forces. The question therefore arises whether the representatives of Germany at the Samoan Islands, being aware of Bismarck's objection to Mataafa's elevation, have not disregarded the pledges given by Germany at the Berlin conference.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $20.54. They are from: Des Moines, Iowa, $5; Stamford, Conn., $1; Newark, N. J., $1; Lakeville, Cal., 54 cts; Nichols, N. Y., $1; Lancaster, Pa., $3; Camden, N. Y., $1; San Francisco, Cal., $3; Pilot, Va., $2; Kalkaska, Mich., $1; Titusville, Pa., $2. These contributions are very welcome, as we have just now a very large number of applications on hand, both from ministers who have not yet had the paper, and from others who have had it and learned its value in their work, but whose terms have expired. Our friends who are supporting this fund may be assured that their gifts are highly appreciated, and are being much blessed to the beneficiaries and their congregations.

A Scared Burglar Alarmed a Family in Chicago on October 28. He secured an entrance into an aristocratic mansion in Bellevue Place while the family were at dinner, and began stealthily collecting the valuables in the bedrooms. He tied them up in a bundle ready to carry away, when he appears to have thought he might profitably extend his exploration to the parlor on the same floor. At the end of the passage between the rooms is a large mirror, which is built into the wall. As the burglar turned into the passage he would see his own reflection like a man walking to meet him. In the dim light he did not recognize himself, and instinctively drew his revolver. As the man in the mirror would do the same, the burglar would see that there was no time to lose, and he fired two shots quickly, shattering the mirror to pieces. The family down-stairs heard the reports and the crash of the glass, and the men of the family armed themselves and ran up-stairs. They found the broken mirror and an open window, through which they saw a flying figure in the distance. The burglar made good his escape, but he left his plunder behind him. Analogous terror comes upon men under conviction of sin when they see themselves in the light of God's holy law. They not only see their own hideous deformity, but they see themselves as their own enemies, and are alarmed. Happy are they then, if, instead of condemning the law they fly to Christ for pardon and renovation. (Rom. 7:7, 8.)

A New Use was Found for the National flag at a public school celebration in the West some time ago. A public man in New York who takes a deep interest in education says that while staying in a Western city he was invited to attend a celebration at a school and distribute some prizes. He wished to excite patriotic feelings in the minds of the children, and led up to the subject of his address by pointing to the Stars and Stripes, festooned on the opposite wall. "What is that?" he asked. "The National flag," was the reply. "And why do we hang it there?" was the next question. There was silence for a moment, and then a bright little girl answered, "To hide the stain on the wall." The answer was not the one he expected, nor the one he wanted. He thought the child would have said that it was put there as a sign of patriotic sentiment, an emblem of which they were proud. Ministers and Christian workers are often pained by discovering that the profession of religion is worn for the same purpose—to hide the stains on moral character. It frequently serves the purpose so far as men are concerned, but it does not deceive God, who expects the heart and life of those who profess Christ's name to be purified through His blood. (1 John 3: 3.)

A Disinherited Daughter Explained Her poverty to a friend connected with the Chicago Tribune recently. She said that when her father was informed last December that he could not recover from his illness, he sent for a lawyer, and had his family gathered around his bed while he gave instructions for his will. He explained his motives for each clause, and the lawyer drew the will up, and it was signed there and then. The daughter in question was not present, but without learning the provisions of the will she agreed to abide by them and avoid litigation, as did the other members of the family. The old gentleman was very wealthy, and there was a considerable portion for each of his children, varying according to the testator's opinion of their needs and merits. This daughter's share was one of the largest, but it was contingent on her renouncing her lover, a young theological student. When the will was read after her father's death, and she heard of the family council, she inquired what reasons her father had assigned for attaching such a condition to her inheritance. She was told that he had made no objection to the lover except on the ground that he was poor, and that excited his contempt. "Then," she said, "I must choose between my lover and my fortune?" "That is it," said the lawyer. The choice was soon made, and when the student has graduated, and is able to support a wife, he will marry his portionless bride. The Christian in business has often to make a similar choice between Christ and a fortune. Happy is he who is enabled to choose the better part. (Matt. 10:38, 39.)

A Bedroom to Cost $27,000 Has Been Partially constructed for a millionaire resident of New York. The details came into publicity by a lawsuit with the architect, which was tried before the Court of Appeals last week. The architect, in the course of his testimony, said that his orders were to construct a palatial chamber, with a carved frieze, and windows with Venetian stained glass, with allegorical pictures. The bathroom adjoining it was to be domed and finished in hand-painted embossed leather, with windows of opalescent jeweled glass. Incidentally there was to be a closet with a tiled floor, and a shoe-box of polished slate in one corner. In the wall was to be built a cabinet wardrobe, with wall ornaments of hammered brass and antique bronze. The whole would require an expenditure of $27,000. Whether these sumptuous surroundings would have conducted to the main purpose of the room—that of its occupant enjoying refreshing sleep in it—may be doubted. They would serve to remind him of his vast wealth, but if they also reminded him of the contrast between that room and the close quarters in which the poor and the sick were tossing, and of those who have no home, he might have twinges of conscience that would keep him awake. David, who had had a very varied experience in his resting-places, tells us under what circumstances he could best sleep. (Ps. 3:5.)

A Disappointed Politician has Become a political outcast in Minnesota this year. Mr. Wanamaker recently appointed a Republican postmaster in his city, and soon after being inducted into office this man waited upon him and asked for promotion. He said that he had been a clerk in the office for eight years. Being asked how he retained his position under the late postmaster, who had the character of being particular as to the politics of his subordinates, he replied that he had represented himself as a Democrat. "Are you, then, a Democrat or a Republican?" asked the new postmaster. "Oh, a Republican, certainly," was the reply; "but I should have lost my position if I had not professed to be a Democrat under Mr. —." "You may go to the cashier and get your pay," said the postmaster; "I do not want men around me who are ready to abjure their party to make money." The clerk is now, therefore, politically homeless. After his confession the Democrats will not welcome him, and it appears that the Republicans have no use for him. There is reason to fear that many professors of religion will suffer by similar duplicity when Christ comes. Their conduct shows that they are among those who do not love Him more than houses and lands. (Matt. 19:29.)

The Discovery of a New Rock in the Atlantic was announced last week. It is called Lamb's Rock, and it lies twenty-two miles off Cape St. Mary's, on the southern coast of Newfoundland, and, though covered by thirty-three feet of water, is right in the track of vessels making for the mouth of the St. Lawrence. When a heavy sea breaks, such a rock must form a serious danger to navigation. Up to two years ago its existence was not suspected in official circles. "This discovery does not form a valuable addition to the American continent," says the journal announcing it. "But a rock covered by the sea is to the sailor often of infinitely greater importance than an island above it. For, while it is not easy to run against the land, even in the dark, it requires a great deal of caution to avoid splitting a vessel on a bank over which it cannot float." There is reason to believe that the existence of the rock has been known for some time to one or more fishermen, who did not disclose their knowledge because the rock was a favorite haunt of codfish, and so long as the secret was kept they made a profit by their knowledge. To give warning of the obstruction might save some ship from destruction, but it would spoil business, so the warning was not given. Recent disclosures of immorality in New York and another city show that even men professing Christianity are acting in the same way as to the hidden dangers by which the souls of young men are wrecked for time and eternity. The punishment for such silence is clearly revealed in God's Word. (Ezek. 33:6.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The retail liquor traffic is now prohibited in seventy-nine municipalities of the province of Manitoba.

Thirty-three missionaries have been sent out by the American Baptist Missionary Union this fall, of whom twenty-three are newly appointed.

Mrs. Louis (née Miss Ada Leigh) is now in Canada with her husband, the Bishop of Ontario. She has received acordial welcome from Christian friends there.

The Rev. A. B. Simpson holds a service in the Gospel Tabernacle, Eighth Avenue and Forty-fourth Street, New York, every evening at 8 o'clock during the winter.

The American Baptist Education Society reports that one-half of the $400,000 needed to secure John D. Rockefeller's gift of $600,000 for a Baptist university in Chicago has been secured.

It has been determined to open in Springfield, Mass., an industrial and technological school in connection with the School for Christian Workers, of which the Rev. David A. Reed is the head.

Rev. M. Baxter and Mrs. Baxter have been giving Second Advent and Gospel addresses in Worthing, England. The New Assembly rooms were crowded by a large audience to hear them.

The sum of $20,000 has been given to Johns Hopkins University by Eugene Levering, of Baltimore, to be spent in the erection of a Y. M. C. A. building to include a library, reading-room, and chapel.

A Chinese guild is to be established at No. 23 St. Mark's Place, New York, where the 500 pupils in the twenty-five Sunday-schools in this city may find entertainment and instruction during the week.

The work of revising the German Bible is progressing. The statement is made that not only has the Old Testament been revised very thoroughly, but the revised version of the New Testament, which had been previously completed, has been again corrected.

There are now twenty-seven vessels engaged in missionary work in different parts of the world under the auspices of sixteen societies; of these missionary vessels, sixteen are running on the coasts or rivers of Africa, and six among the islands of the Pacific Ocean.

In compliance with a request from a worthy member of a Wesleyan church in England, we ask if any of our readers happen to know anything about the death of a man calling himself Reynold Lukey, who came to this country from England. His relatives lost track of him, and have heard indirectly of his death.

A statement is made by Rev. Mr. Noyes, of Canton, that $200,000,000 are spent annually in China on ancestral worship alone. He found that the ratio of gifts to income, in the case of several families about which he inquired, ranged from one-fifth to one-third, and that in no case were the gifts so small as a tithe.

Dr. Justin D. Fulton is holding meetings in Hamilton, Ont. The Arcade Hall, in which they are held, is densely thronged. In a letter just received from the Doctor, he says: "We have a daily morning prayer-meeting at the James Street Baptist Church. It looks as if a revival work was going to sweep over Canada. Pray for it, lovers of Christ in all lands!"

Mr. E. P. Telford commenced a series of services in Grace M. E. Church, Troy, on November 3. On their conclusion he goes to Gloversville, N. Y., to the First M. E. Church, which has a membership of over 1,100. He asks for prayer for God's blessing on these meetings. The services at Dover, N. H., have been greatly blessed. Crowds of hearers and many unsaved persons rescued.

PREPARATION FOR SERVICE.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And Jesus saith unto them, Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." Matt. 4: 19.

Fishermen Made Apostles — Usefulness a sign of Following Christ — I. Something for the Christian to Do — How to Become an Efficient Preacher — The Great Training-School — Separation Demanded — Abiding With Christ — The Vaudois Method — Obeying Christ — Teach What He Taught — Imitate His Holiness — II. Something for the Lord to Do — Preparation of Experience — By Distinct Monitions — By the Holy Spirit — III. The Instructive Figure — The Fisherman — Trustful — Diligent — Watchful.

WHEN Christ calls us by His grace, we ought not only to remember what we are, but we ought also to think of what He can make us. It is, "Follow Me, and I will make you." We should repent of what we have been, but rejoice in what we may be. It is not, "Follow Me, because of what you are already," It is not, "Follow Me, because you may make something of your selves," but, "Follow Me, because of what I will make you." Verily, I might say of each one of us as soon as we are converted, "It doth not yet appear what we shall be." It did not seem a likely thing that lowly fishermen would develop into apostles; that men so handy with the net would be quite as much at home in preaching sermons and in instructing converts. One would have said, "How can these things be? You cannot make founders of churches out of peasants of Galilee." That is exactly what Christ did. Oh, you who see in yourselves at present nothing that is desirable, come you and follow Christ for the sake of what He can make out of you. Do you not hear His sweet voice calling to you, and saying, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men?"

Note, next, that we are not made all that we shall be, nor all that we ought to desire to be, when we ourselves are fished for and caught. This is what the grace of God does for us at first; but it is not all. We are like the fishes, making sin to be our element; and the good Lord comes, and with the gospel net He takes us, and He delivers us from the life and love of sin. But He has not wrought for us all that He can do, nor all that we should wish Him to do, when He has done this; for it is another and a higher miracle to make us who were —to make the saved ones saviours—to make the convert into a converter—the receiver of the gospel into an impartor of that same gospel to other people. I think I may say to every person whom I am addressing—If you are saved yourself, the work is but half done until you are employed to bring others to Christ. You are as yet but half formed in the image of your Lord. You have not attained to the full development of the Christ-life in you unless you have commenced in some feeble way to tell to others of the grace of God; and I trust that you will find no rest to the sole of your foot till you have been the means of leading many to that blessed Saviour who is your confidence and your hope. His word is—Follow Me, not merely that you may be saved, nor even that you may be sanctified, but, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men."

Fish to Become Fishers

I. First, then, I will take it for granted that every believer here wants to be useful. If he does not, I take leave to question whether he can be a true believer in Christ. Well, then, if you want to be really useful, here is to that end: "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." What is the way to become an efficient preacher? "Young man," says one, "go to college." "Young man," says Christ, "follow Me, and I will make you a fisher of men." How is a person to be useful? "Attend a training-class," says one. Quite right; but there is a surer answer than that—Follow Jesus, and He will make you fishers of men. The great training-school for Christian workers has Christ at its head; and He is at its head, not only as a tutor, but as a leader: we are not only to learn of Him in study, but to follow him in action. "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men." The direction is very distinct and plain, and I believe that it is exclusive, so that no man can become a fisherman by any other process.

Something for You to Do

I understand this, first, in this sense: be separate unto Christ. These men were to leave their pursuits; they were to leave their companions; they were, in fact, to quit the world, that their one business might be, in their Master's name, to be fishers of men. We are not all called to leave our daily business, or to quit our families. That might be rather running away from the fishery than working at it in God's name. But we are called most distinctly to come out from among the ungodly, and to be separate, and not to touch the unclean thing. We cannot be fishers of men if we remain among men in the same element with them. Fish will not be fishers. The sinner will not convert the sinner. The ungodly man will not convert the ungodly man; and, what is more to the point, the worldly Christian will not convert the world. Nowadays we hear professors pleading that they may do this, and they may do that—things which their Puritan forefathers would rather have died at the stake than have tolerated. They plead that they may live like worldlings, and my sad answer to them, when they crave for this liberty, is, "Do it if you dare. It may not do you much hurt, for you are so bad already. Your cravings show how rotten your hearts are. If you have a hungering after such dog's meat, go, dogs, and eat the garbage!"

Worldly Amusements

are fit food for mere pretenders and hypocrites." Come, ye children of God, you must stand out with your Lord outside the camp. Jesus calls to you to-day, and says, "Follow Me." Was Jesus found at the theatre? Did He frequent the sports at the race-course? Was Jesus seen, think you, in any of the amusements of the Herodian court? Not He. He was "holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners." In one sense, no one mixed with sinners so completely as He did when, like a physician, He went among them healing His patients; but in another sense there was a gulf fixed between the men of the world and the Saviour, which He never essayed to cross, and which they could not cross to defile Him.

A second meaning of our text is very obviously this: abide with Christ, and then you will be made fishers of men. These disciples whom Christ called were to come and live with Him. They were every day to be associated with Him. Many of them fulfilled that word, "Where thou dwellest, I will dwell;" they were with Him in His afflictions and persecutions. They witnessed his secret agonies; they saw His many tears; they marked the passion and the compassion of His soul, and thus they caught His spirit, and so they learned to be fishers of men.

At Jesus' feet we must learn the art and mystery of soul-winning: to live with Christ is the best education for usefulness. It is a great boon to any man to be associated with a Christian minister whose heart is on fire. The best training for a young man is that which were wont to give, when each old man had a young man with him, who walked with him whenever he went up the mountain-side to preach, and lived in the house with him, and marked his prayers and saw his daily piety. This was a fine instruction. Was it not? But it will not compare with that of the apostles who lived with Jesus himself, and were His daily companions. And now to-day His bodily presence is not among us; but His spiritual power is perhaps more fully known to us than it was to those apostles in those two or three years of the Lord's corporeal presence. This is the surest method of learning how to do good. Live with Jesus and He will make you fishers of men.

The Vaudois Pastors

A third meaning, however, must be given to this "Follow me," and it is this: "Obey me, and then you shall know what to do to save men." We must not talk about our fellowship with Christ, or our being separated from the world unto Him, unless we make Him our Master and Lord in everything. Failure in obedience may lead to failure in success. Each one of us, if he would wish to see his child saved, or his Sunday-school class blessed, or his congregation converted, must take care that, bearing the vessels of the Lord, he is himself clean. Anything we do that grieves the Spirit of God must take away from us some part of our power for good.

Again, I think there is a great lesson in my text to those who preach their own thoughts instead of preaching the thoughts of Christ. These disciples were to follow Christ that they might listen to Him, hear what He had to say, drink in His teaching, and then go and them. Their Lord says, "What I tell you in darkness, speak ye in light; and what ye hear in the ear, that preach ye upon the housetops." If they will be faithful reporters of Christ's message, He will make them "fishers of men." But you know the boastful method nowadays is this: "I am not going to preach this old, old gospel, this musty Puritan doctrine. I will sit down in my study, and burn the midnight oil, and invent a new theory; then I will come out with my brand-new thought and blaze away with it."

Teach What He Had Taught

Many are not following Christ, but following themselves; and of them the Lord may well say, "Thou shalt see whose word shall stand, mine or theirs." Others are wickedly prudent, and judge that certain truths which are evidently God's word had better be kept back. You must not be rough, but must prophesy smooth things. To talk about the punishment of sin, to speak of eternal punishment, why, these are unfashionable doctrines. It may be that they are taught in the Word of God, but they do not suit the genius of the age. We must pare them down. Brothers in Christ, I will have no share in this. Will you? O my soul, come not thou into their secret! Certain things not taught in the Bible our enlightened age has discovered. Mark you, in proportion as the modern theology is preached, the vice of this generation increases. To a great degree I attribute to the laxity of the doctrine preached by its teachers. The Lord's directions make Himself our leader and example. It is, "Follow me, follow me. Preach my gospel. Preach what I preached. Teach what I taught, and keep to that." I close this head of discourse by saying we shall not be fishers of men unless we follow Christ in one other respect; and that is, by endeavoring, in all points, to imitate His holiness. Our power lies in this word, "Follow me." Be Jesus-like. In all things endeavor to think and speak and act as Jesus did, and He will make you fishers of men. This will require self-denial. We must daily take up the cross. This may require willingness to give up our reputation—readiness to be thought fools, idiots, and the like, as men are apt to call those who are keeping close to their Master. There must be the cheerful resigning of everything that looks like honor and personal glory, in order that we may be wholly Christ's, and glorify His name. We must live His life and be ready to die His death, if need be. O brothers, sisters, if we do this and follow Jesus, putting our feet into the prints of His feet, He will make us fishers of men.

The Looseness of the Age

II. But secondly, and briefly, there isSomething for the Lord to do.

If we follow Christ He will make us fishers of men by all our experience. I am sure that the man who is really consecrated to bless others will be helped in this by all that he feels, especially by his afflictions. I often feel very grateful to God that I have undergone fearful depression of spirits. I know the borders of despair, and the horrible brink of that gulf of darkness into which my feet have almost gone; but hundreds of times I have been able to give a helpful grip to brethren and sisters who have come into that same condition; which grip I could never have given if I had not known their deep despondency. So I believe that the darkest and most dreadful experience of a child of God will help him to be a fisher of men if he will but follow Christ. Keep close to your Lord, and He will make every step a blessing to you. If God in providence should make you rich, He will fit you to speak to those ignorant and wicked rich who so much abound in this city, and so often are the cause of its worst sin. And if the Lord is pleased to let you be very poor you can go down and talk to those wicked and ignorant poor people who so often are the cause of sin in this city, and so greatly need the gospel.

Further than that, if you will follow Him He will make you fishers of men by

Distinct Monitions

in your own heart. There are many monitions from God's Spirit which are not noticed by Christians when they are in a callous condition; but when the heart is right with God, and living in communion with God, we feel a sacred sensitiveness, so that we do not need the Lord to shout, but His faintest whisper is heard. Nay, He need not even whisper. "Thou shalt guide me with thine eye." Oh, how many mulish Christians there are who must be held in with bit and bridle, and receive a cut of the whip every now and then! But the Christian who follows his Lord shall be tenderly guided. Every opportunity of usefulness shall be a call to you. If you are ready, the door shall open before you, and you shall hear a voice behind you saying, "This is the way; walk ye in it." If you have the grace to run in the right way, you shall never be long without an intimation as to what the right way is. That right way shall lead you to river or sea, where you can cast your net.

Then, too, I believe that the Lord meant by this that He would give His followers the Holy Ghost. They were to follow Him, and then, when they had seen Him ascend into the holy place of the Most High, they were to tarry at Jerusalem for a little while, and the Spirit would come upon them and clothe them with a mysterious power. This word was spoken to Peter and Andrew; and you know how it was fulfilled to Peter. What a host of fish he brought to land the first time he cast the net in the power of the Holy Ghost!

III. The last point you might work out in full for yourselves in your private meditations with much profit. We have here a figure full of instruction. I will give you but two or three thoughts which you can use. "I will make you fishers of men." You have been fishers of fish; if you follow me, I will make you fishers of men. A fisher is a person who is very dependent, and

Needs to be Trustful.

He cannot see the fish. One who fishes in the sea must go and cast in the net, as it were, at a peradventure. Fishing is an act of faith. I have often seen in the Mediterranean men go with their boats and enclose acres of sea with vast nets; and yet, when they have drawn the net to shore, they have not had as much result as I could put in my hand. A few wretched silvery nothings have made up the whole take. Yet they have gone again and cast the great net several times a day, hopefully expecting something to come of it. Nobody is so dependent upon God as the minister of God. Oh, this fishing from the Tabernacle pulpit! What a work of faith! I cannot tell that a soul will be brought to God by it. I cannot judge whether my sermon will be suitable to the persons who are here, except that I do believe that God will guide me in the casting of the net. I expect Him to work salvation, and I depend upon Him for it. It is good to be a fool when Christ is made unto you wisdom. It is a blessed thing to be weak if Christ becomes more fully your strength.

A fisherman who gets his living by it is a diligent and persevering man. The fishers are up at dawn. At daybreak our fishermen off the Doggerbank are fishing, and they continue fishing till late in the afternoon. As long as hands can work men will fish. May the Lord Jesus make us hard-working, persevering, unwearied fishers of men!

The fisherman in his own craft is intelligent and watchful. It looks very easy, I dare say, to be a fisherman, but you would find that it was

No Child's Play

if you were to take a real part in it. There is an art in it, from the mending of the net right on to the pulling it to shore. How diligent the fisherman is to prevent the fish leaping out of the net! I heard a great noise one night in the sea, as if some huge drum were being beaten by a giant; and I looked out, and I saw that the fishermen of Mentone were beating the water to drive the fish into the net, or to keep them from leaping out when they had once encompassed them with it. Ah, yes! and you and I will often have to be watching the corners of the gospel net lest sinners who are almost caught should make their escape. They are very crafty, these fish, and they use this craftiness in endeavoring to avoid salvation. We shall have to be always at our business, and to exercise all our wits, and more than our own wits, if we are to be successful fishers of men.

The fisherman is a daring man. He tempts the boisterous sea. A little brine in his face does not hurt him; he has been wet through a thousand times, it is nothing to him. He never expected when he became a deep-sea fisherman that he was going to sleep in the lap of ease. So the true minister of Christ who fishes for souls will never mind a little risk. He will be bound to do or say many a thing that is very unpopular; and some Christian people may even judge his utterances to be too severe. He must do and say that which is for the good of souls. It is not his to entertain a question as to what others will think of his doctrine, or of him; but in the name of the Almighty God he must feel, "If the sea roar and the fullness thereof, still at my Master's command I will let down the net."

Success Assured.

Now, in the last place, the man whom Christ makes a fisher of men is successful. "But," says one, "I have always heard that Christ's ministers are to be faithful, but that they cannot be sure of being successful." Yes, I have heard that saying, and one way I know it is true, but another way I have my doubts about it. He that is faithful is, in God's way and in God's judgment, successful, more or less. For instance, here is a brother who says that he is faithful. Of course, I must believe him, yet I never heard of a sinner being saved under him. Indeed, I should think that the safest place for a person to be in if he did not want to be saved would be under this gentleman's ministry, because he does not preach anything that is likely to arouse, impress, or convince anybody. This brother is "faithful," so he says. Well, if any person in the world said to you, "I am a fisherman, but I have never caught anything," you would wonder how he could be called a fisherman. Go thou with the fire of God in thy hand, and fling it among the stubble, and

The Stubble Will Burn.

Be thou sure of that. Go thou and scatter the good seed; it may not all fall in fruitful places, but some of it will. Be thou sure of that. Do but shine, and some eye or other will be lightened.

Perhaps I speak to an attentive hearer who is not converted at all. Friend, I have the same thing to say to you. You also may follow Christ, and then He can use you, even you. I do not know but that He has brought you to this place that you may be saved, and that in after years He may make you speak for His name and glory. Remember how He called Saul of Tarsus, and made him the apostle of the Gentiles. Reclaimed poachers make the best gamekeepers; and saved sinners make the ablest preachers. Oh that you would run away from your old master to-night, without giving him a minute's notice; for if you give him any notice, he will hold you. Hasten to Jesus, and say, "Here is a poor runaway slave! My Lord, I bear the fetters still upon my wrists. Wilt Thou set me free, and make me Thine own?" Remember, it is written, "Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out." Never runaway slave came to Christ in the middle of the night without His taking him in; and He never gave one up to his old master. If Jesus make you free, you shall be free indeed. Flee away to Jesus, then, on a sudden. May His good Spirit help you, and He will by-and-by make you a winner of others to His praise! God bless you. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Our Heathen Ancestors.*

It is somewhat difficult for the present generation of English people living in Great Britain and other countries to realize that, no more than eight centuries ago, many of their forefathers believed and practiced the rites we are going to describe, and, so slow was the march of Christianity that six or seven hundred years ago the provinces of northeastern Prussia, Vindland, Pomerania, etc., whose inhabitants are among the finest in Europe, were still heathen. It is certain that Odin and some of the Azars were deified and worshipped in all the countries of the North, and with the lapse of time their fame increased. There were three principal sacrifices a year, at which the people assembled in the chief temples. The first of these, which took place on winter nights in the month of Goi, was a sacrifice for a good winter. The 14th of October, which was the ancient month of Goi, is still called winter night, or the first night of winter. The second was held at midwinter, or in the beginning of the month of Thor (middle of January), to ensure a good year and peace, and lasted three days; at this feast it was customary to make vows to some of the gods, especially Frey at Yule-eve. It seems to have been the greatest and most important of all, and many animals were slaughtered at it. This sacrifice plainly shows that the blessing of peace was appreciated by this warlike race. . . . The third, called Sigr-blót, for luck and victory, occurred at the beginning of spring, about the middle of April, being fixed at that time of the year because warfare and most Viking expeditions took place in the summer. It was in honor of Odin, to whom alone sacrifices were made for victory.

Human Sacrifices.

The custom of sacrificing the beloved child of a chief was considered, as it well might be, the highest atonement that could be offered, and is one of such antiquity that its birth is lost in the dim light of past ages. The most thrilling account in the Viking sagas of sacrifice of children is that of the sacrifice, by Hakon Jarl, of his own son: "Hakon Jarl said: 'I think I see that the battle begins to turn against us; and I dislike to fight against these men; for I believe that none are their equals, and I see that it will fare ill unless we hit upon some plan; you must stay here with the host, for it is imprudent for all the chiefs to leave it if the Jomsvikings attack, as we may at any moment expect. I will go ashore with some men and see what can be done.' The Jarl went ashore, north to the island. He entered a glade in the forest sank down on both his knees and prayed. He looked northward, and spake what he thought was most to the purpose; and in his prayers he called upon his fully trusted Thorgerd Hordatroll, but she turned a deaf ear to his prayer and he thought that she must have become angry with him. He offered to sacrifice several things, but she would not accept them. The Jarl considered his case most hopeless if he could not please her; he began to increase the offer, and at last included all his men except himself and his sons

* From The Viking Age. By Paul B. Du Chaillu. The eminent author of The Land of the Midnight Sun has in these two beautifully illustrated volumes given the result of further explorations in relation to the same subject, directing his attention in this instance to the ancient relics and literature of the people. Starting with the inquiry why the spread of the English-speaking people and of their language far exceeds that of all the other European nations combined, he has searched into the story of the origin of the nation with most interesting results. While the book contains a vast mine of information of inestimable value to the student, the reader who seeks only amusement will find it of absorbing interest. A large number of engravings of coins, tools, weapons, etc., enrich its pages. Pp. 1,153. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

Mrs. Robert Baxter. (See page 706.)

The City of Khartoum in the Soudan.

Eirik and Svein. He had a son Erling, who was seven winters old and a very promising youth. Thorgerd accepted his offer, and chose Erling his son. When the Jarl found that his prayers and vows were heard, he thought matters were better, and thereupon gave the boy to Skopti Kark, his thrall, who put him to death in Hakon's usual way as taught by him." From this passage we see that it was the custom of Hakon Jarl to offer human sacrifices, but the manner in which he made them is not told.

THE CITY OF KHARTOUM.

(See Illustration.)

A FEW days ago a cable message was published in the daily press reporting an interview with Dr. Fricke, who was in Khartoum at the time of General Gordon's death, and witnessed the capture of the city by the Mahdi's soldiers. It appears, from the meagre statements given, that Dr. Fricke is now travelling in Africa as a merchant. He represents himself as a Mohammedan convert, and states that in that character his life was spared when Khartoum was captured, and he was allowed to depart unmolested. He asserts that General Gordon was slain before the city fell. He describes him as going out as usual to inspect his soldiers, when suddenly and without the slightest warning a company of them set upon him and speared him to death. Gordon, Dr. Fricke says, was a strange compound of obstinacy and nobility of character, with unbounded confidence in himself, and his moral power over the people. He had a contempt for danger, and when, two days before his death, his friends warned him of his increasing peril, and urged him to depart while the way was yet open, he firmly and almost scornfully refused.

It is easy to understand a Mohammedan giving such a sketch of the character of the noble general. From what we know of Gordon from other sources, the conduct Dr. Fricke describes is precisely what we should expect of him. It is when Dr. Fricke attempts to analyze his character that he errs. Gordon's confidence was not in himself, but in God. Believing himself to be in the path of duty, to be in the place where God had placed him, he was content to remain, trusting that if God had need of him in the world He would protect him, and he was willing to die at his post if God had so appointed. Expressions used by Gordon at other crises of his life indicate that he would welcome death whenever it came, in the firm conviction that it could not come without the consent of his heavenly Father, and that for him it would mean the entrance into the glorious presence of his Lord.

The city of Khartoum, in which the tragedy took place, is the chief city of the Soudan, and stands at the junction of the Blue and White Nile. It is a centre of commerce, the market to which traders in ivory, ostrich feathers, and other commodities come to exchange their commodities. Since the troubles caused by the Mahdi's revolt against the Viceroy of Egypt commenced, the trade of the city has almost collapsed. Traders were timid at bringing property into a city which might at any time be sacked by one or other parties to the conflict.

Khartoum itself is described by a recent traveler as a city of some forty thousand inhabitants, being "a mass of dirty gray houses, overtopped by a single minaret, having in front a sterile, sandy plain without trees or bushes. The entrance is by a long, narrow street, stretching from east to west, and terminating in the market. This street is dirty in the extreme, and bordered by mud houses, whose doors are their only openings to the street. In other parts of the town there is no semblance of regularity; the houses are of all sizes and shapes, and the streets mere labyrinths. Here and there are open spaces, large enough for gardens, and even for cornfields. There are also numerous hollow flats, in which during the rainy season water collects and stagnates, rendering the place very unhealthy. The street above mentioned is the best in Khartoum; it contains the Governor's residence and many spacious mansions, belonging to Turks, Copts, and Arabs. All the other houses are of a miserable description, consisting of sun-dried clay, cemented with cow-dung.

ERNEST WYNDHAM'S RESOLVE.

(See illustration on page 717.)

A LADY clad in fashionable mourning alighted, one afternoon, at the little station of Eastnor-by-the-Sea, and made her way to the only hotel which the secluded place boasted. The season was over and the hotel was almost empty, but the lady was not there for pleasure or intending to remain. Her visit was one of business, except so far as affection was its motive force. At the hotel she asked for Mr. Ernest Wyndham, and the card she sent up by the bell-boy was inscribed Miss Violet Wyndham. In a few minutes a big, almost boyish looking gentleman came bounding down the stairs, and seizing her by both hands, kissed her affectionately.

"I could not wait, Ernest," she said, "I had to come the moment we read your dreadful letter. I want to reason with you. Let us go somewhere alone to talk it over."

"There is no quiet place in the hotel," said the gentleman, whose resemblance to her proclaimed the relationship of brother and sister,

"but the beach is deserted. I was just setting out to see a sick man whose acquaintance I have made while I have been here. Let us walk there, and we can talk as we go."

"Now tell me," said the lady, as they passed from the hotel grounds to the crisp sand from which the tide had retreated, "now tell me what you mean. You surely cannot be in earnest in this fanatical idea. Why should you sacrifice yourself and your prospects to go and preach to the savages in Africa? There are plenty of men to do that who can do it better than you, and who would not have to leave so much behind. Tell me why you want to go."

"Why should I not go, Violet?"

"The one question is the same as the other. You have duties at home. You have been educated for your profession. Papa is expecting you to take his practice after a time. Oh! there are a hundred reasons."

"None that are worth considering, my dear sister, in comparison with the call to labor. Brother Edgar will make a better lawyer than I, and will be of more service to father. My education will serve me in the work. No; none of your reasons are of any weight. I am young and strong, and I can go without being a burden on the Missionary Society. It seems to me that every one of my circumstances tells on that side. Believe me, I have not decided hastily. I knew it would be painful to you all, and I have weighed the matter carefully and prayerfully. I came down here to be alone and thoroughly consider it, away from any disturbing influence, and I believe God has shown me my duty."

"O Ernest, do not speak in that final way! Come home and talk with papa and mamma about it. It all seems so sudden and so unexpected. You seemed the last of all men to have these fanatical notions. What has put them into your head?"

"I suppose the idea does seem fanatical to you, but to me it seems an imperative and practical duty. I will tell you how it was presented to me. Since I have been away from home, religion has been a very different thing with me from what it was before. I was never really converted. I was led to see that simple church-membership and strict morality were not sufficient. They were a very inadequate expression of Christ's conception of His followers' duties. 'Ye must be born again.' That was His description, and I knew I had experienced no change so vital as that. I sought it, and God heard my prayer. He opened my eyes. I saw and lived. I cannot tell you how changed everything became. My ambition to make a name and a large fortune by my profession seemed poor and sordid in a being who would live through all eternity. I went among the poor and ignorant and tried to tell them of Christ's love, and God blessed me with such joy as I had never experienced. Think of it! Conceive of what it means to be the means of saving an immortal soul from eternal death! O Violet, I must give my life to it! There is no pursuit like that."

"But why not continue as you are doing? Why expatriate yourself? I cannot understand your feelings. It seems to me that there is an abundance of preachers, and you might very well leave the work to them, and as for missionaries, why not give a part of your income to a Missionary Society, and they would send trained men. Come, Ernest, you have become morbid; just be reasonable and give up this exalted spirit of self-sacrifice, and settle down to the career for which you were intended."

The brother and sister had been so engrossed in their conversation that they had not noticed the gathering clouds. At that moment, however, there came a blinding flash of lightning. Violet stopped and held up her hand in terror. "Oh! what shall we do?" she cried. "Is there no place where we can shelter? I cannot bear that awful light. It unnerves me."

"Yes," said her brother; "there is a cottage behind those rocks. We can reach it in ten minutes, and I would like you to go there."

They hurried on, and were soon at the cottage door. It was opened at Mr. Wyndham's knock, and a woman said, "I'm glad you've come, sir; he's almost gone, and he's been asking for you."

"Violet," Ernest said, "I want you to see this young man," and he led her into an inner room, where a young man lay, evidently near death. He smiled as he recognized Wyndham, and said, in a whisper, "Almost there, my friend, very near."

Wyndham laid his hand on the clammy brow, and said, "Is it light, Robert?"

"Yes, all the way."

"And you are not sorry to go?"

"No. What matters it? Life is very small now. Forever with the Lord. Now I stand on the shore, only one thing is important, and I have that. You will not draw back, Wyndham?"

"Never! the Lord helping me."

"Good and faithful servant, enter thou—" The voice trailed off into an unintelligible murmur, and they saw that he had passed within the veil.

"I am glad I was here," said Wyndham. "I have seen a great deal of him lately, and we loved each other. Look at that face, Violet, and tell me what life can offer compared with such peace as his. He has passed the line that lies before all of us; how will we feel when we come there? No, he was right, there is only one thing important after all."

Violet sank into a chair and covered her face with her hands. To her it seemed an awful moment. The lightning flashed and the thunder pealed, while there before her lay the serene face of the dead. She realized that life was not all pleasure and gaiety; that her brother was right when he resolved to devote his life to the better part. "I will say no more, Ernest," she said. "Do as your conscience directs; eternity is nearer to us than I dreamed."

Ernest Wyndham's Walk with His Sister.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.
The Life Story of Mrs. Stenhouse,
For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 702.)

A Daughter's Sacrifice.

MUCH has been said and written of the better side of Mormonism. Newspaper correspondents have gone to Utah to investigate the subject, and have sent back glowing reports of the peace and harmony in which polygamous families live. Mormon men, and especially Mormon women, can understand these reports. Curiosity, or a desire to visit a man so prominent as Brigham Young, always prompted the journalist to see him soon after his arrival, and every Mormon understood the advantages to be gained by gratifying his wish. Once introduced to the prophet, the visitor must be a very sceptical man if he did not find himself taking a more favorable view of the system than he had held before. Young would dwell on the immorality of Eastern cities, and contend that thousands of men there were practically polygamists, while the law left them free to desert the women who held the relations of wives to them without the name. He would represent the system as a boon to women, and as the only means of repressing vice. None but those who have actually lived in it can know the horrors of the dreadful system.

At this period Mr. Stenhouse was placed in a situation extremely trying to a man of integrity, conscientious and sincere in his own life. He had preached the new revelation in Europe when he was on the brink of starvation, and he they could not be, and he believed that the revelations were genuine, while they knew them to be false; and thus there was in his utterances, whether by tongue or pen, that true ring of honest conviction which does more than the best logic or eloquence to convince others.

The problem that Brigham Young and his immediate counsellors had to solve in dealing with Mr. Stenhouse was a difficult one, and the difficulty was increased by his being in personal contact with them. He was their dupe, and they had to prevent his being undeceived. To a man less high principled they might have made an open confession, with the probability that he would join them in their villainous policy rather than stultify his past life by admitting that he had been mistaken. But they must have soon perceived that Mr. Stenhouse was not one whom they could thus use. There was only one course open to them, and that was to continue keep him in the dark, and trust to their own tact and his strong faith to hold him loyal to them, even when his conscience and judgment protested. To walk by faith, not by sight, to believe where he could not understand, must be the rule enjoined upon him, and he must be restrained, as far as could safely be done, from obeying the apostolic precept: "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world." (1 John 4:1.) That this was the course determined upon, there can now be no doubt.

He had no suspicion at that time that he was entering upon the great crisis of his life. Later events, however, proved that the time of testing was then beginning, all unknown to the enthusiastic Mormon disciple. It was to end in his complete disillusion, and his emancipation from the bonds which the cunning heads of the had continued to devote all his time and labor to the Mormon cause, though, by deserting it and concentrating his energies on his own interests he might soon have been an independent if not a wealthy man. He had obeyed counsel, and travelled to America. In New York, while employed on the Herald, he had proved his value and his power as a journalist. He might have remained there, and risen to a high place in the newspaper circle of that city; but again he obeyed counsel, which this time required him to remove to Utah. There, in poverty and in hardship, he remained true to the faith which had cost him so many sacrifices. In spite of his better judgment, he had yielded to counsel in marrying a second wife, being still convinced that Brigham Young was the divinely appointed representative of God on earth, and that the revelations the Mormon prophet put forth from time to time were genuine communications from God.

Up to this time none could doubt the sincerity of his faith, for he had proved it by sacrificing his own interests on every occasion when they were in conflict with his faith. A man so firm, so intrepid, so devoted, was of priceless value to the Mormon leaders. He could defend the Church and make converts better than they could themselves, because he was sincere, which

Church had woven around him. How that enlightenment came, and how at last he and those dependent upon him, who had suffered with him through all those long years, finally escaped from the tyranny and despotism of the Mormon authorities, must be told by the pen of another, who is thoroughly acquainted with all the facts, and is not hampered by the compunctions which necessarily embarrass a prominent actor in scenes which cannot be recalled without poignant suffering.

The prophet's first provision for Mr. Stenhouse was the appointment of postmaster of Salt Lake City, but an article in the Deseret News from his pen showed that his talents might be more suitably and profitably employed in journalism. Accordingly, Mr. Stenhouse was enrolled among the regular writers on that journal; and after a time, as he became familiar with the condition of the Territory, he decided to start a journal of his own. This was to be a small daily, to be called the Telegraph. The plan was laid before Brigham Young, and as he was always quick to see any advantages to himself which might result from the enterprise of another, he gave it his approval, and "counselled" the people to support the new journal. Mr. Stenhouse brought to it the skill of a trained journalist, and made it bright and newsy, treating the topics of the day in an intelligent, crisp, vigorous style. The Telegraph was a success from the first number.

Here was the temptation which few men could resist. The Telegraph brought in a large income. For the first time since Mr. Stenhouse avowed himself a Mormon, he was a prosperous man. He was soon able to purchase the house in which he lived, the city building in which his paper was printed, and a very eligible building site near Brigham Young's residence, which, after spending $3,000 upon it, he settled on the wife who had shared his poverty, and who had been faithful to him through so many years. But the foundation and corner-stone of his fortunes was the confidence of the Mormon Church. His subscribers were Mormons, and his passport to their favor until his own merit could secure it was the endorsement of Brigham Young. The Mormon leaders doubtless perceived that the time would come when he would have to decide whether he would endorse their policy and retain his prosperity, or condemn it and fall into poverty. Nor would that be the only element of the struggle. There was another, which only a newspaper man can fully realize. It lay in the birth and growth of the Telegraph. A paper which springs into life under a man's hands is almost as dear as a child to him. He watches its growth, toils for its benefit, puts his best thought into it, rejoices in its prosperity, and suffers by its adversity. It is almost like a living creature to him, dear and cherished beyond power of description. To deliberately do anything that must injure the Telegraph after its inception would cost Mr. Stenhouse a pang more acute than the coarser nature of Brigham Young could understand. Yes; another very strong bond now bound the successful journalist to the Mormon Church.

Looking back to that sad time in England when Mrs. Stenhouse endured poverty, while her young husband was preaching Mormonism in Europe, and to that later time when sickness and hunger held sway in the little household in Switzerland, the present prosperity seemed a welcome change for the better. But with what a bitter mixture was the cup of prosperity alloyed! At every meal the young and blooming second wife sat at the table. No sad experience had furrowed her brow, no hard toil had hardened her hands, even the daily care of the household had not fallen upon her. And she was a rival in the husband's affections. Oh! it was not a fair contest. Fresh and bright, her young spirits unweighted with painful memories, her physical powers unwearied by the domestic duties that the mistress of the household must perform, she could welcome the joint husband on his return from his office with placid face and girlish gaiety. The elder wife, weary with her duties, sick at heart with her sorrows, could not but feel herself at a disadvantage in comparison, and when the meal was over would gladly withdraw from the scene. She felt almost like an interloper in the home. She was like one who had come clad in mourning garments among the gaily attired guests of a wedding party.

With her children she tried to shake off her depression, but it could seldom be done. In imagination she saw them growing up to suffer as she had suffered. She could not explain to them the strange family arrangement, and they, with that keen perception of what subjects are painful to those they love, mercifully forbore to question her. What mother could tell her children of their father's alienated affection, and make them understand that he was doing a bitter and a cruel thing from a right motive?

Especially with her eldest daughter, Clara, was this difficulty insurmountable. Mrs. Stenhouse had trained her in the strong virtuous principles of her own early creed. All of Mormonism that she had imbibed was the brighter side by which her mother had been attracted. But she was now fifteen years old, and the budding womanhood of her nature, ripening in such fearful surroundings, must soon be conscious of the evil around and — awful thought! — before her. How could the mother with her own repugnance to the hateful plural-wife doctrines prepare her own child for the surrender of herself!

The subject was delayed from day to day, but at last delay became no longer kind or even possible. One day Mr. Stenhouse took his wife aside, and told her that he had been out driving with Joseph A. Young, the eldest son of the prophet, who had formally proposed to marry Clara. That child! To marry her! Mrs. Stenhouse looked at her husband in amazement. Probably Mr. Stenhouse had expected some such outburst. He explained that he had objected to the offer on the score of Clara's youth, but, as Mrs. Stenhouse realized, he could not have urged his objection with much force or consistency, as his own wife, Belinda, was but little older. But there was no such inconsistency to embarrass his wife, and she expressed in unequivocal terms her resolve not to sanction such a marriage.

Mr. Stenhouse had had some experience of his wife's yielding nature, and he rightly judged that her discretion, and her realization of the circumstances of their position would induce a change of mind. When she reflected on the proposal, she was driven to see how hopeless her opposition must be. The suitor, backed by his father's power, supreme throughout Utah, could not be rejected. Besides, Mr. Stenhouse was alive to the honor of his daughter becoming the daughter-in-law of the prophet, and was evidently secretly in favor of the match. To persist in her refusal was clearly useless. It would bring upon her the enmity of Young himself, who could devise innumerable modes of punishing her; it would make her unpopular in Mormon society, and it would not prevent the marriage. That was the fatal weakness of the situation. All that could have come upon herself the mother would have borne cheerfully for her daughter's sake, if by bearing it she could have saved Clara. But when failure was inevitable the useless struggle, with all that it involved, would add to the calamity, and might add further bitterness to Clara's lot. The situation was clear before Mrs. Stenhouse's mind. Dreadfully, sadly clear! She could do nothing but yield. She could only hope to gain time.

The suitor did not long delay presenting himself in person and urging his suit. To do him justice, he showed more modesty and consideration than might have been expected in one who had so strong a case. He listened respectfully to Mrs. Stenhouse's objections, and admitted the justice of her position. He promised to wait for the marriage as long as she wished, but begged that he might speak to Clara at once, and, if possible, obtain her promise to marry him. That permission was, of course, given, and Clara at once became the betrothed wife of Joseph A. Young.

The very reasonable request for delay in the marriage of a girl of fifteen, to which the prospective bridegroom acceded, was, however, speedily negated by Brigham Young himself. He sent for Mr. Stenhouse and protested against putting off the marriage, and finally, on Mr. Stenhouse demurring, "counselled" him to have it performed at once. This was only another instance of the despotic power with which Brigham Young ruled. No consideration, not even the natural feelings of a parent, were allowed to stand in the way of his decisions. In this case it appears particularly unreasonable to hurry on the ceremony, as Joseph A. Young had three wives already. This, to Mrs. Stenhouse, was the climax of her humiliation, and many were the bitter tears she shed over the fate of her beloved daughter. She did not fully realize the intensity of her repugnance to the match until the day was actually fixed for the wedding. Then she discovered that her heart had secretly, and almost unconsciously, cherished the hope that something might occur in the interval she had gained to avert the marriage altogether.

On the day appointed Mr. and Mrs. Stenhouse with Clara repaired to the Endowment House, where they found Joseph A. Young awaiting them. He had brought his first wife, Mary, with him, and both were clad in their Temple robes. They were ushered into the little side-room where marriages are performed. There they found Brigham Young, seated in a crimson velvet arm-chair, which was placed at the end of the long altar, also draped in crimson. Mary Young knelt at it, and Clara knelt by her side, and Joseph A. Young opposite to them. Brigham Young asked the usual questions. The bridegroom having declared himself willing to take Clara Stenhouse to be his lawful wedded wife for time and all eternity, his first wife signified her acquiescence by placing Clara's hand in his. Clara then answered the same question in the affirmative, and Brigham pronounced them man and wife.

With what feelings Mrs. Stenhouse returned to her home may be imagined. With her grief over her own daughter's fate was mixed some natural sympathy for the women among whom she was gone to live. The ardor with which Joseph A. Young had wooed, and his evidently sincere love for his girl-wife, were signs from which a wife who had suffered herself could draw her own conclusions. For a time, at least, Clara would hold the supreme place in her husband's affections, and they whom she would supersede must suffer. It is not surprising that, as she thought over all the misery inflicted by the plural-wife doctrine, she that day cast from her heart the last vestige of faith in it as a divine revelation.

Up to that day she had struggled to believe, and had blamed herself for her hardness of heart when doubts would force themselves upon her. But now the system stood out before her, in its revolting, hideous depravity, as the device of men as crafty as they were sensual. She no longer struggled to believe it a revelation from God, but was convinced that the man who had promulgated it as such was guilty of blasphemy. This conviction, of course, she held silently. Not even to her husband would it have been safe to declare it. He was apparently as loyal to the doctrine as ever, and at this time he quietly informed her that he was thinking of taking another wife—one of the numerous daughters of the Prophet.

(To be concluded.)

The Great Crisis from 1889 to 1901. By Rev. M. Baxter. This is a 32-page pamphlet containing a résumé of his larger works, with diagrams and tables of prophetic dates. It has been specially prepared for distribution at meetings, lectures, etc., and is of a convenient size for sending in envelopes through the mails. Persons desiring to arouse the attention of their friends and the public to the momentous character of the period on which we are entering will find this a valuable means of assistance. Price Fourteen Cents per dozen, including postage. Address Manager, 71 Bible House, New York.

THE LOVING "NO."

"It requires a great deal of love to say 'No,'" said one, speaking of a young person under her charge who was difficult to manage. "It is so much easier to let her have her own way; if I cared nothing for her I should certainly spare myself the effort of crossing her will."

How very true! What an illustration of our relations with the heavenly Father! What proofs of His love we have in His firm denial of many things we ignorantly wish for! It requires a great deal of love to say "No," and yet we so misunderstand Him as to say He loves us not because He will not suffer us to have our own way. "I cannot understand how God can be a God of love and allow such teen disappointments to come upon his children. I would not so afflict a child of mine," so says one looking at short range through human eyes. "I know thoughts that I think toward you, thoughts of good and not of evil, to bring you to an expected end; for as many as I love I rebuke and chasten." So says Infinite Love from the stand-point of Omnipotence.

The least successful and the least happy people, as a rule, are those who have been allowed their own way when children. The fruits of wholesome parental discipline are always manifest in the self-reliance and self-control of mature years. The body reaps the benefit in healthy functions, and the spirit meets in a masterful way the crosses and losses of life, when somebody who has had our early training in hand has loved us wisely and well enough to say "No."

We believe this doctrine in regard to the rearing of children, or if we do not accept it as a theory, facts looking us square in the face every day compel an assent to its truth. Why do we then understand it in our relationship with the heavenly Father? "No good thing will He withhold." So it must be that what He does withhold is not good. And He loves us so truly and tenderly that not for all our crying and impatience and misunderstanding of Himself will He change the loving "No," which in the end will be far more for our good than the "Yes" for which we plead.

How thankful we shall be in the glad hereafter, when we know as we are known, that our Father has loved us too well to give us some things we have ardently longed for. Doubtless many a mother will be filled with unspeakable joy that the little one went home to heaven on that sad day when, through her tears, she could not see the smile of God. There are many high and blessed anticipations as we look toward the better country, and among them is none more charming than the prospect of seeing for ourselves that all things have really worked together for good, and that there is no reason for evermore why we should shed a tear.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets (sorted (no two alike), will be sent, post-paid, for 10 cts., or 100 for 25 cts. Postage stamps taken.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

CATALOGUE

of Popular Books on Calisthenics, Dialogues, Recitations, Mock Trials, Business, Rules of Order, Amateur Theatricals, Debates, Trade Manuals, Etc. FREE.

EXCELSIOR PUBLISHING HOUSE,
29 & 31 Beekman St., New York, N. Y.

BECHAN'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills.
BECHAN'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

"The Angelus," The Vesper Hour,

Millet's Famous Painting, bought for $110,600. To be exhibited in New York, and other American cities, winter of 1899-90. The above outline indicates the religious sentiment and marvelous beauty of the picture. Our Typographic is two-thirds size of the original. On plate paper, 19x24 (mailed in tube), price, $1. On extra paper Proofs India tint, $2. Agents wanted. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, New York.

HENRY WARD BEECHER'S

celebrated work "THE LIFE OF JESUS THE CHRIST." The publishers are now ready to forward terms of subscription for second volume, or for the complete work.

IN THE PRESS.

AMERICAN CHRISTIAN RULERS;

or, Religion and Men of Government; Biographical Sketches of men of Christian faith and experience, who have held prominent positions in the National and State Governments, and in the Judicial Department. Numerous authentic portraits, and a beautiful wood engraving of the great picture: "First Prayer in Congress."

BROMFIELD & CO., 658 Broadway, New York.

STENOGRAPHY.

AND

TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching: long established; hundreds of graduates holding responsible positions; success guaranteed. Also type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free. Write or call. VERMILY'S COLLEGE, 816 Broadway, New York.

Twenty-Seventh Edition now Ready.

THE KING'S SON;

OR,

A MEMOIR OF BILLY BRAY.

By F. W. BOURNE.

The New York Christian Advocate says: "Of Billy Bray, the famous Methodist preacher of Cornwall, Eng., it may be truly said 'he yet speaketh,' although he has been dead more than twenty years. It is reported that at least six hundred persons are known to have been led to Christ by reading his biography. These converts are found in all parts of the world, and come from almost every position in life. Noted infidels, eminent formalists, and cultivated scholars, as well as obscure and unlearned men, have been drawn into the kingdom of grace by this fascinating story. The most noted preacher of the age frequently finds the striking illustrations which enrich his sermons in the Life of Billy Bray."

18mo., Cloth. 119 pp. Price, 50 Cents.
Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

GOD IN BUSINESS.

A REMARKABLE RECORD OF DIVINE HELPS AND DELIVERANCES TO CHRISTIAN BUSINESS MEN.

This book is a record of God's dealings with His people in business. The author begins with personal testimony. Then follows the experience of more than 100 of God's people who desire to acknowledge that they were helped by Him in business. * * * The incidents here recorded are of such a wonderful character that it is not an easy matter to lay down the book until every page is perused. A short sketch of the life of John S. Creed, of Brooklyn, is a most wonderful record of divine guidance and help. Here then is testimony that there is a God-force waiting to be used in all prayer and faith for all our affairs. It is a truth that all God's people need more and more to study. —Presbyterian Messenger (London).

This is a well intended book, and one moreover, that is built on such a foundation that it is impossible to shake it. * * * If young business men will read they may learn from it a lesson that may prove of great commercial value. —Methodist Times (London).

Bound in Cloth. Price, 85 Cents.
* * * Sent post paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

SAFE INVESTMENT

FARRAND & VOTEY
—ORGANS—
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

OUTFIT ON 30 DAYS' TIME TO AGENTS Guarantee $150 profits in four weeks or no pay, to travel or work at home. No competition.
C. JARVIS & CO., Racine, Wis.

Six Remarkable Books.

By REV. ANDREW MURRAY.

1. "ABIDE IN CHRIST."—Thoughts on the Blessed Life of Fellowship with the Son of God. Forty fourth Thousand. 16mo. cloth. Price $1.00.
"The stamp of experimental knowledge is clearly seen from the beginning to the end of the book. It cannot fail to stimulate, to cheer, and to qualify for higher service." —Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
2. "LIKE CHRIST."—Thoughts on the Blessed Life of Conformity to the Son of God. Twentieth Thousand. 16mo. cloth. Price $1.00.
"Richly experimental, and no reader can close it without having gained a clearer conception of the fact that there is no beauty or blessedness like that of a Christian life." —Christian Leader.
3. "WITH CHRIST IN THE SCHOOL OF PRAYER."—Thoughts on our Training for the Ministry of Intercession. Fourteenth Thousand. 16mo. cloth. Price $1.00.
"It is under the impression that the place and power of prayer in the Christian life is too little understood that this book has been written. I feel sure that as long as we look on prayer chiefly as the means of maintaining our own Christian life, we shall not know fully what it is meant to be. But when we learn to regard it as the highest part of the work intrusted to us, the root and strength of all other work, we shall see that there is nothing that we so need to study and practice as the art of praying aright. Christ teaches us to pray, not only by example, by instruction by command, by promise, but by showing us HIMSELF, the ever-living Intercessor, as our Life." —Extract from the Preface.
4. "THE CHILDREN FOR CHRIST."—Thoughts for Christian Parents on the Consecration of the Home Life. 16mo. cloth. Price $1.25.
"The author seems to have had a divine vocation in writing this book, and thousands of parents ought to derive blessings from it for their children." —Evangelist.
5. "HOLY IN CHRIST."—Thoughts on the Calling of God's Children to be Holy as He is Holy. 16mo. cloth. Price $1.00.
"There is not a word in Scripture more distinctly Divine in its origin and meaning than the word Holy. There is not a word that leads us higher into the mystery of Deity, nor deeper into the privileges of God's children, and yet, it is a word that many a Christian has never studied or understood. In writing this book my object has been to discover in what sense God used the word, that so it may mean to us what it means to Him. I have sought to trace the word through the most important passages of Holy Scripture where it occurs, there to learn what God's holiness is, what ours is to be, and what the way by which we attain it. I have been specially anxious to point out how many and various the elements are that go to make up true holiness as the Divine expression of the Christian life in all its fullness and perfection. I have also striven continually to keep in mind the wonderful simplicity and simplicity there is in it, as centered in the person of Jesus. There is such a thing as a Pentecost still to the disciples of Jesus; but it comes to him who has forsaken all to follow Jesus only, and in following fully has allowed the Master to reprove and instruct him." —From the Introduction.
6. "THE SPIRIT OF CHRIST."—Thoughts on the In-dwelling of the Holy Spirit in the Believer and the Church. 16mo. cloth. Price $1.25.
No one can read Dr. Murray's works without being brought into a closer personal fellowship and communion with our blessed Lord. The reader will see that this is the aim of all his writings. He says: "There are tens of thousands of God's dear children whose surroundings are not favorable to the growth of the spiritual life. There is many an hour of earnest longing to live more according to the will of God, but the prospect of its being really possible to walk and please God, worthy of the Lord to all well-pleasing has hardly dawned upon them. To the best part of their birthright as God's children, to the most precious gift of the Father's love in Christ, the gift of the Holy Spirit to dwell in them, and to lead them, they are practically strangers."
"I would, if I might, show them what it is that has hitherto hindered that Spirit from doing His blessed work, and how divinely simple the path is by which each upright soul can enter into the joy of all that He has been given to work within us, even the full revelation of the presence of the Indwelling Jesus."

Either of the above books sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

Mr. Spurgeon's New Book.

WITH A PAGE OF PRECIOUS PROMISES FOR EVERY DAY OF THE YEAR.

THE CHEQUE BOOK of the BANK OF FAITH. BEING PRECIOUS PROMISES ARRANGED FOR DAILY USE. With Brief Experimental Comments. Nearly 400 pages. 12mo. Price $1.50.

In Mr. Spurgeon's Preface he says: "I believe all the promises of God, but many of them I have personally tried and proved. I have seen that they are true, for they have been fulfilled to me. I commenced these daily portions when I was wading in the Surf of Controversy. Since then I have been cast into 'waters to swim,' which, but for God's upholding hand, would have proved waters to drown in. The waters rolled in continually, wave upon wave. I do not mention this in exact symmetry, but simply to let the reader see that I am no dry-land sailor. I know the roll of the billows, and the rush of the winds. Never were the promises of Jehovah so precious to me as at this hour."

N. Y. Christian Intelligencer: "When it is stated that this well-named book contains a SCRIPTURE PROMISE FOR EACH DAY IN THE YEAR, commented on, in his best vein, by the prince of practical and experimental preachers, enough has been said to commend as first in its class. It is most admirably adapted for daily reading either in the family or the closet, and wherever used will be found spiritually stimulative."

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

Mr. Spurgeon's New Book.

WITH A PAGE OF PRECIOUS PROMISES FOR EVERY DAY OF THE YEAR.

THE CHEQUE BOOK of the BANK OF FAITH. BEING PRECIOUS PROMISES ARRANGED FOR DAILY USE. With Brief Experimental Comments. Nearly 400 pages. 12mo. Price $1.50.

In Mr. Spurgeon's Preface he says: "I believe all the promises of God, but many of them I have personally tried and proved. I have seen that they are true, for they have been fulfilled to me. I commenced these daily portions when I was wading in the Surf of Controversy. Since then I have been cast into 'waters to swim,' which, but for God's upholding hand, would have proved waters to drown in. The waters rolled in continually, wave upon wave. I do not mention this in exact symmetry, but simply to let the reader see that I am no dry-land sailor. I know the roll of the billows, and the rush of the winds. Never were the promises of Jehovah so precious to me as at this hour."

N. Y. Christian Intelligencer: "When it is stated that this well-named book contains a SCRIPTURE PROMISE FOR EACH DAY IN THE YEAR, commented on, in his best vein, by the prince of practical and experimental preachers, enough has been said to commend as first in its class. It is most admirably adapted for daily reading either in the family or the closet, and wherever used will be found spiritually stimulative."

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

GAIN ONE POUND A Day.

A GAIN OF A POUND A DAY IN THE CASE OF A MAN WHO HAS BECOME "ALL RUN DOWN," AND HAS BEGUN TO TAKE THAT REMARKABLE FLESH PRODUCER,

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL WITH Hypophosphites of Lime & Soda IS NOTHING UNUSUAL. THIS FEAT HAS BEEN PERFORMED OVER AND OVER AGAIN. PALATABLE AS MILK. ENDORSED BY PHYSICIANS. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. AVOID SUBSTITUTIONS AND IMITATIONS.

HOSPITAL REMEDIES

THE Favorite Prescriptions of the Brightest Medical Minds in the world, as used by them in the Hospitals of London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna.

ONE MEDICINE FOR ONE DISEASE.

- No. 1—Cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, Rose Cold, Catarrhal Deafness.
- No. 2—Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption. A Peerless Remedy.
- No. 3—Rheumatism, Gout.
- No. 4—Liver & Kidneys, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation, Bright's Disease.
- No. 5—Fever and Ague, Dumb Ague, Malaria, Neuralgia.
- No. 6—Female Weakness, Irregularities, Whites. A Golden Remedy.
- No. 7—A Perfect Tonic, which gives Health, Form and Fullness, Clear Complexion, Good Blood and lots of it.
- No. 8—Nervous Debility, Loss of Power, Impotence, an incomparable remedy.

Every bottle guaranteed to cure its special disease if CUREABLE and to give permanent relief ALWAYS. Descriptive Circulars sent free on application. HOSPITAL REMEDY COMPANY, Toronto, Canada.

RELIABLE AGENTS WANTED.

"A Perfect Remedy for Catarrh."

A learned professor in one of the largest and most famous colleges in America, recently told a gentleman that the Pillow-Inhaler had cured a nasal catarrh which he had had from birth, and that he owed his present healthful and rotund appearance to the Pillow-Inhaler.

Rev. James Chambers, pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church, New York City, writes: "I have used the Pillow-Inhaler for over two months and I hereby cheerfully testify to its effectiveness for throat disease and bronchitis. I would not be without it."

A pamphlet explaining all about the Pillow-Inhaler, and testimonials, sent free by addressing The Pillow-Inhaler Co., 1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY. Beecham's Pills

For Bilious and Nervous Disorders. "Worth a Guinea a Box"—but sold for 25 cents, BY ALL DRUGGISTS.

ON 30 DAYS' TRIAL.

THIS NEW ELASTIC TRUSS

has a pad different from all others, is cup shape, with Self-adjusting Ball in center, adapts itself to all positions of the body, while the ball in the cup presses back the Intestines just as a person lies down, and holds the bowels in position day and night, and a radical cure certain. It is easy, durable and cheap. Sent by mail. Circulars free.

EGGLESTON TRUSS CO., Chicago, Ill.

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
*Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans.
Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co.
(on every label), Palmer, Mass.*

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 44. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF DR. W. S. RAINSFORD AND DR. MORGAN DIX, AND PICTURE OF ST. GEORGE'S CHURCH, NEW YORK.

WHAT TROUBLE IS FOR. Dr. Talmage's Sermon last Sunday.

THE KINGDOM. By Rev. A. C. Tris. (Concluded.)

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Preacher Recognized in Africa—The Watcher for Montezuma—A French Confessor Left, etc.

PORTRAIT OF THE LATE LUIS I., KING OF PORTUGAL, DIED OCT. 19.

DR. SOUTHEY'S NEIGHBOR. (With Illustration.)

THE WITHERED FIG-TREE. A New Sermon by Rev. O. H. Spurgeon.

DAVID'S GRIEF FOR ABSALOM. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

PICTURES OF A MISSION AT A CHINESE FAIR. ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS. An Autobiographical Story by Mrs. Stenhouse. (Continued.)

Rev. W. S. Rainsford, D. D. and Rev. Morgan Dix D. D.—St. George's Church, New York, the Meeting place of the Protestant Episcopal Convention.

THE CONVENTION OF THE PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.

UNUSUAL interest attaches to the assemblage of Bishops and delegates of the Protestant Episcopal Church now in session in New York. It is interesting because it is the centennial of the first convention of the Church in the United States, and also, and chiefly, on account of the important questions which this convention has the power to decide. We therefore give on the first page this week, a picture of the church in which the convention is holding its sessions, and portraits of its esteemed rector, Rev. W. S. Rainsford, D.D., and of Rev. Morgan Dix, S.T.D., President of the House of Deputies, and rector of old Trinity Church, New York. The convention opened on October 2, when its members appropriately joined in the holy communion, and Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal on Dec. 13, 1888, preached the opening sermon. The imposing spectacle of sixty-five bishops and over four hundred clergymen and delegates assembled together attracted a large congregation, which filled the spacious edifice to overflowing.

Bishop Whipple

in the course of his sermon sketched in graphic words the history of the Church in the United States, and dwelt on the contrast between the convention gathered before him and that of a hundred years ago. Then the House of Bishops consisted of only two Bishops, Seabury and White, Bishop Provost being absent. "They met," he said, "to show the world that the charter of the Church is perpetual, and that the Church has the power to adapt herself to all the conditions of human society. They met to consolidate the scattered fragments of the Church in the thirteen colonies into a national Church, and secure for themselves and children catholic faith and worship in the Book of Common Prayer. They builded wiser than they knew. They secured for the Church self-government, free from all secular control. They preserved the traditions of the past, and yet every feature of executive, legislative, and judicial administration was in harmony with the Constitution of the republic." The Bishop then went on to speak of the problems before this convention, and reminded his hearers that the assaults on the foundations of the Christian religion and the social problems of the day demanded more earnest attention than any question of names, canons, and rubrics. Finally he said, in most impressive tones: "We are living in the eventide of the world, when all things point toward the second coming of our King." God has placed the English-speaking people in the forefront of the nations. They number one-tenth of the human family, and I believe God calls them to do the work of the last time. The wealth of the world is largely in Christian hands. There never have been such opportunities for Christian work. Never such a harvest awaited the husbandman."

REV. W. S. RAINSFORD, D. D.

AT the end of the year 1882 there were none but sad and pathetic features in the condition of the venerable church of St. George, in Stuyvesant Square, New York. There was a beautiful church edifice, but the people said that it was too far down-town to be prosperous in these days. A grand work had been done there in past days under Dr. Milnor and the elder Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, but many of those who used to attend were dead, and their descendants lived up-town. A few scattered families still came to the old church for association's sake, and a few dwellers in the neighborhood dropped in occasionally, but altogether the congregation looked very small in the spacious building. And there was no life in it. The Sunday-school and other work had dwindled away, and it looked as if the parish work of St. George's was dying of atrophy. Besides, the flock was without a shepherd. All through that year strangers had occupied the pulpit temporarily one or two Sundays each, as the vestry secured their services. It was a sad and a depressing time.

It was in January, 1883, that the change came. The vestry offered the church to a young clergyman, then senior assistant in St. James's Cathedral, Toronto, the Rev. W. S. Rainsford. Mr. Rainsford was at that time thirty-three years of age, having been born in Ireland in 1850. He had studied at St. John's College, Cambridge, where his chief distinction was won in the athletic sports of the University, in which his magnificent physique had placed him in the front rank. After taking orders at the close of his university career he accepted a curacy at St. Giles's, Norwich, England. But he was attracted by this country, and in 1875 came to New York and became an assistant of Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., at the Church of Holy Trinity, where he obtained an insight into the multifarious methods of helping the poor and prosecuting aggressive Christian work which the energetic young rector had initiated. Thence he went to several districts of the United States and Canada, engaging in mission work, finally settling in Toronto, where the Rev. Dr. Gazette, the venerable Dean of St. James's Cathedral, knew how to utilize the abounding energy and heartfelt sympathies of the young clergyman in the Cathedral work. He continued there, taking sole charge of the work—the Dean's health having failed—until came to him. Some one said at that time that Mr. Rainsford was being asked "to galvanize a dead horse." There certainly was nothing in the invitation, as to income, position, or ease, to attract him. And in the opinion of worldly men Mr. Rainsford made matters worse by the stipulation he made to his acceptance. He insisted that all the seats in the church should be free. This concession was made, although the vestry were surprised at the young clergyman's boldness, and Mr. Rainsford came. That was in January, 1883.

The Invitation From St. George's

The presence of the new rector was speedily felt. The choir was enlarged, and brought down nearer to the congregation, the services were made bright and responsive, and the preacher's thrilling extemporaneous sermons were full of love and tenderness and power. The seats at St. George's speedily began to fill up. People came down-town to hear the new clergyman, and were affected by the vigorous, bracing, spiritual atmosphere which pervaded the place. Every one who was willing to work was enlisted, and Mr. Rainsford seemed to communicate to each recruit a portion of his own energy. "Churches must do more for the young," he said, "than they have yet done. Children must not only be brought into the Sunday-school, but must be built into the church, and made to feel that the church is their home." On this spirit the Sunday-school was remodelled, and in a year it contained 1,400 children. Other were organized. A boys' club was started in the basement of the church, and street gamins, dirty and ragged, were invited to come and be entertained. The boys came, broke the windows, stole the books, and made the place like a pandemonium, but not for long. It was impossible to resist Mr. Rainsford's manly firmness and kindness, and the uniform good-nature which no provocation could disturb. Peace and quietness and good behavior soon reigned, and there is no place now more highly valued and appreciated than the boys' club. In another room, not far from the church, a company of factory girls, and girls employed in stores, was gathered, and Mr. Rainsford had a corps of young ladies, who were highly educated, refined, and intelligent, ready to meet them, to teach them what each might need to learn, to advise with them, encourage them, and help them in their difficulties, and lead them to Christ.

Departments of Christian Work

The Avenue A Mission

is, however, one of the most astonishing triumphs. A number of young men who had never engaged in church work were recruited. They were of good family and occupying high social station, but they appeared to be in earnest, and

Mr. Rainsford gave them an entirely new work. There was no place in the parish where Christian influence and labor were more needed than in Avenue A. Mr. Rainsford hired a saloon there for a Sunday-school and Sunday afternoon services. The young missionaries soon learned that the days of persecution for Christ's sake had not ceased. They were assailed by the toughs of the neighborhood with opprobrious epithets, were warned to abandon their work, and on their persisting, they were pelted with mud and nameless abominations as they went to and from their place of meeting. It is worth a visit to the east side now to see the change that has been wrought. The young men have now a whole house, known as Jefferson Hall, for their work, with a reading-room, lecture-room, and other apparatus of mission work, all heartily appreciated and well attended, and the place and the workers, instead of opprobrium, are recognized as a blessing to the neighborhood.

In addition to these agencies Dr. Rainsford has now a variety of other works in operation, all tending in the same direction—that of making the poor, the afflicted, and those to whom life is hard, understand that God loves them, and that Christian men and women love them for His sake. He has spent himself in this great work of helping intelligently and effectively those who need help, believing that in no better way can he preach the gospel of Jesus to the people. The wealthy and the lazy have a hard time under Mr. Rainsford's ministry, as they had under that of Christ. They hear of the iniquity of selfishness, of the sin of idleness, and of the imperative need for each and every follower of Christ to be up and doing in the Master's service.

Mr. Rainsford has been happy in the choice of like-minded helpers. Dr. Henry Wilson has given himself heartily to the work, and other assistants have labored zealously in the various departments. Nor have abundant financial means been lacking. Recently no less a sum than $200,000 was given by one family to erect and equip a building to be the centre and headquarters of the numerous St. George's societies. This building, which is called the Memorial Hall, stands just west of the rectory on Sixteenth Street, and has proved a valuable aid in philanthropic and Christian work.

REV. MORGAN DIX, S. T. D.

THE unanimity with which Dr. Dix was elected President of the House of Deputies in the convention was an enviable mark of distinction. No other name was put in nomination, and it was even proposed to dispense with the customary ballot. The rules, however, were observed, but it was only a form; the vote for Dr. Dix was unanimous. In a house in which there are so many different schools of thought and methods of clerical work, it was a rare testimony to the personal esteem in which Dr. Dix is held by his brethren, that even those who differ from him most radically should have voted for him to preside over their deliberations.

Dr. Morgan Dix is in his sixty-second year, having been born in New York on November 1, 1827. He is the son of the late General John A. Dix, who was Governor of New York in 1861, and whose name acquired national fame by his famous order to shoot down any man who attempted to haul down the Stars and Stripes. The same decision of character, and the same to his conception of duty, characterize his son, Dr. Dix. It is but a short time ago that all aristocratic New York was up in arms against him because he dared to strip the mask from the polite and decorous social life of the day, and declare that it was rotten at the core. Few men, and especially few holding a position so prominent in aristocratic society as he, would have dared to arraign wealthy and influential people as he did. It was an act worthy the son of so intrepid a father, and we believe that even the men and women who raised so loud an outcry over the onslaught secretly respected the man who had the courage to do his duty, no matter who might be hurt.

Inflexible Fidelity

During Dr. Dix's early boyhood the family resided at Albany, N. Y., his father being then Secretary of State. In 1842, owing to the failure of his mother's health, they removed to Madeira for the winter, and afterward traveled through Spain and Italy, returning to New York in 1844. The next year the young man entered the Sophomore class of Columbia College, and graduated in 1848. He commenced the study of law under his father, but the

Call to the Service

of Christ in the Church appeared to him so definite that he gave up the study almost at the outset, and entered the General Theological Seminary to prepare for a life of Christian labor. He graduated in 1852, and in September of that year received deacon's orders in St. John's Chapel, New York. His first sphere of labor was in Philadelphia, as assistant to Dr. Joseph Wilmer, rector of St. Mark's Church. He was anxious, however, to visit European seats of learning, and after a period of service in Philadelphia, and taking priest's orders at the hands of Bishop Alonzo Potter, he went to England and Germany, spending a year and a half in hard study. On his return in 1855 he was invited to become assistant rector of Trinity Church, New York, the oldest Protestant Episcopal Church in the city, dating back, so far as its site goes, to 1697. Dr. William Berrian was then rector, who, dying in 1862, was succeeded by Dr. Dix.

An indefatigable worker is Dr. Dix, as any conscientious man who undertakes the charge of Trinity parish must be. Practically his duties are episcopal in their nature, for he has the oversight of seven churches, with eighteen clergymen. Still, he has found time not only for those duties and the special duties of his own Church, but for among the poor of his parish, and for efficient service on boards of Christian and philanthropic societies. He is President of the Standing Committee of the diocese. He is also a trustee of Columbia College, ex-officio trustee of the Sailors' Snug Harbor, ex-officio trustee of Leake and Watts' Orphan Asylum, a trustee of the General Theological Seminary, and chairman of its Standing Committee, a trustee of the House of Mercy, a trustee of the Society for Promoting Religion and Learning, a trustee of the Church Orphan Home, Vice-President of the New York Protestant Episcopal Public School, and Vice-President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Personal Pastoral Work

Literary Work.

The list of works which he has produced is also long and interesting. These publications embrace: Commentary on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans (1864); Commentary on the Epistles to the Galatians and Colossians (1865); Lectures on Pantheism (1865); Lectures on the Two Estates, the Wedded in the Lord, and the Single for the Kingdom of Heaven's Sake (1872), and a new edition in 1884; Sermons, Doctrinal and Practical (1878), two American and two English editions; Lectures on First Prayer-Book of Edward VI. (1881), a fourth edition in 1885; Lectures on the Calling of a Christian Woman (1883); six editions of this work have been published in America, and it has been reprinted in England; and the Memoirs of John A. Dix, 2 vols., 8vo.

A PREACHER RECOGNIZED IN AFRICA.

AN incident is related by Bishop William Taylor in his African News (published by T. B. Welch & Son, Vineland, N. J.), which shows in startling contrast the social results of missionary work among the heathen. The Bishop says: This (Sunday) morning I preached in the open air on the Ten Commandments. Saco interpreted, and we had quiet, attentive hearers. This is a purely heathen town, like all the other towns on the Kru coast. In the evening Amanda Smith preached, and Tom Nimly interpreted. After the discourse, which was very impressive, Nimly and Saco gave each their testimony for Jesus, and exhorted the people to abandon their idolatry, and all their bad 'fash,' and let Jesus Christ take all the bad out of them, and wash them clean. At the close a woman, with a child strapped on her back, pressed her way through the crowd to Nimly, and put her arms around him, and held him firmly for some time. He also embraced her affectionately, and they walked away together. She was his sister, whom he had not seen for many years. How astonished she must have been to see her big brother proclaiming good news from God. She lives many miles from here, at a town called Crow-bar, and was not aware that Tom was in Setta Kru till she came near the crowd and saw him preaching. When we see this almost nude heathen woman and child in the arms of such a man, now 'clothed and in his right mind,' we weep, and sing: 'A better day is coming: a morning promised long.'

THE WATCHER FOR MONTEZUMA.

IN an address by Dr. A. P. Cobb he mentioned the following incident: A friend who had recently returned from New Mexico told me one morning that, on rising early for a day's hunt, he saw, dimly outlined against the gray sky, the form of a man. Fearing some sinister designs, he quickly called the attention of his friend, a resident of that region. His fears were at once dispelled. "The man you see," said he, "is indeed a watcher, but he is placed there for no hostile purpose. He is not a spy upon our actions. He is a descendant of the ancient Aztecs, the memory of whose glory still lingers in the darkened minds of this degraded people. They recall the golden age of Montezuma, whom they call their heaven-descended king, and cherish with fond hearts the tradition that he will come again to restore their ancient glory. This man is a sentinel placed on that height to watch for Montezuma, who is to come some morning at the exact moment when the sun first kisses these lofty peaks." It was a pathetic sight, showing how the people cling to their cherished hope through their generations. If such a people could but be led to believe in Christ, with how much better hope might they watch for Him who, unto them that look for Him, will "appear the second time without sin unto salvation." (Heb. 9:28.)

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

A Jewess's Triumphant Death.—A Bible-seller lately repeated his experience when a city missionary. He had been led to call upon a Jewess who was near death. One day, entering her kitchen, her eye had caught sight of some lines on a piece of waste paper covering some butter. Curiosity prompted her to read the words. They were: "Not all the blood of beasts On Jewish altars slain, Could give the guilty conscience peace, Or wash away the stain." The verse arrested her thought; she could neither dismiss it nor forget it. After a time she remembered she had a copy of the Bible in a box; she searched for it and found it, began to read it, and read on till she could say, 'I have found the Messiah, which is, being interpreted, the Christ, the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world.' She avowed her faith, was cast off by her friends, and discarded by her husband, who divorced her. Going to India, he married again and died. She was reduced in fortune, but held fast her faith in the Crucified. "All this," said the Bible-seller, "I knew; and as I stood by her bedside, she did not renounce her faith in her crucified Lord, but died triumphing in Him as her great reward."

A Business Man's Difficulty Overcome.—Mr. W. A. Campbell remarks: "I remember not long ago speaking to a gentleman about his soul. He was forty-five years of age, and held a high position socially and commercially. He had a very large business, employing hundreds of men, and had the reputation of being a shrewd, hard-headed unimpeachable business man. After we had spoken a few minutes we went into a room by ourselves, and there I urged him to accept Christ. He complained that to him Christ seemed so far off, he could not realize that He was near to hear and save. He was completely broken down, and wept like a child, yet he could not come to a decision, and when, on leaving him, I said, 'Do you not see it now?' he could only reply with a mournful shake of his head. A few days afterward we again met, and when I asked how it was with his soul, he answered, joyfully, 'Thank God, I have passed from death unto life.' He had at length realized that Christ was near to help and succor, and threw himself on His mercy, pleading His precious promise, 'Whosoever cometh unto Me I will in nowise cast out,' and found Him to be his own most real and precious Saviour."

An Unconscious Man Speaks in Welsh.—The Rev. Dr. Brown relates: "A short time ago a man was taken to one of the accident hospitals in London. He had fallen from a great height, and was severely injured, rendering him quite unconscious, in which condition he remained for several days. During all that time he spoke a language which none of those who attended him could understand. Linguist after linguist was brought to his bedside, but not one could make out the language which he spoke, until at length one discovered that it was Welsh. The injured man recovered, and the Welsh vanished. This was a very curious and interesting psychological question for the doctors. They found, that although the man had lost all knowledge of Welsh, he had lived in Wales when he was a boy, and had been able in his early days to speak the language of that country. Scientists have laid it down as a fact that everything in the past is recoverable in the future; and it will be so in the day of judgment; then our every thought, word, and deed, many of which we have long since forgotten, will suddenly be recalled to us, and stand out in letters of fire as witnesses against us, unless we obtain forgiveness from God, for the sake of Jesus who died for us, and paid the penalty of our sin."

An Aged Woman's Decision.—"Some Years ago, at an evangelistic meeting in one of the largest towns in the United States, I saw in the after-meeting an aged woman sitting at the end of one of the pews. As I walked up the passage I stopped, and said, 'Well, ma'am, have you got salvation?' 'No, sir, indeed, I cannot say that.' 'Why can't you say so? Don't you believe the Bible?' I inquired of her. 'Aye, that I do; I read it every day, and study it too, but I cannot just say that I have got salvation,' she answered, sadly. 'Look at this text,' I said, "He that believeth hath everlasting life." You believe, don't you? She was silent. As last I said, 'I'll have nothing more to do with a person who treats God as a liar, as you do when you refuse to believe His Word. She made no reply, but sat still until almost every one was gone, then slowly rose and left the building. Next night, there she was in the same place. I affected not to see her, and in the after-meeting walked about, apparently not noticing her, but all the time I was watching to see what she would do. At length, when there were but few people left, and I was standing near her, she said to me, timidly, 'Sir, are you not going to speak to me at all?' Turning towards her, I said, 'Well, what do you want?' 'Please sir, I am not going to make God a liar any longer.' I shook her cordially by the hand, and told her I was so glad to hear it. But the mistake of that old woman is the mistake of many. They know the Bible. They assert they believe it, but when asked if they are assured of their salvation, they shake their heads despondingly, and say they cannot be sure."

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 71 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for October:

The Seven Seals. By William Kelly.

St. James's Prophecy in Acts 15:16, 17.

The Future Imperial Church and its Divine Head.

Jerusalem to be Trodden Down by Antichrist.

The 144,000. By the Late Rev. R. A. Pardon.

Seven Proofs that Antichrist is Future.

Only Twelve Years to live.

The Right Position for the Believer at the Present Time.

The French Elections.

THE NEW BROOKLYN TABERNACLE.

THE trustees of Dr. Talmage's church have decided not to build a new church edifice on the old site. They have secured land on Greene and Clinton avenues, the vendors taking the land on Schermerhorn Street now covered by the ruins of the burned Tabernacle as part of the purchase-money. Before commencing his sermon in the Academy of Music last Sunday Dr. Talmage made the following statement:

A mistaken notion has gone abroad that the insurance on our destroyed church is enough to rebuild. The repetition of disasters left us in debt. We have practically built three churches since I came to Brooklyn. First, the original Tabernacle. Soon after that we made an enlargement that cost almost as much as a church. A few years after it all burned. Then we put up the building recently destroyed, and reared it in a time when the whole country was in its worst financial distress. It was these repeated disasters that left us in debt. My congregation have done magnificently, but any church would be in debt after so many calamities. Now for the first time we are out of debt. But we need at least one hundred thousand dollars to build a church large enough, and we call on people of all creeds and all lands to help. Before I help dedicate a new church we must have every dollar of it paid. I will never again be pastor of a church in debt. It has crippled us in all our movements, and I shall never again wear the shackles. I have for the last sixteen years preached to about five thousand people sitting and standing, twice a Sabbath, but everybody knows that we need a place that will hold eight thousand. I shall not be surprised if some man of wealth shall say: "Here are a hundred thousand dollars if you will put up a memorial structure, and call it after the name of my departed father or child, whose memory I want put before all nations." And so it would be done.

WHAT TROUBLE IS FOR.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday, October 27, 1889.

"God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes." Rev. 7: 17.

The Tears of the Bible—Trouble Somewhere Always—Why the World has so Much of It—I. To make Men Willing to Leave It—No One Ready to Go—When Revelation is Preferred to Genesis—Revelation a Prospectus—II. To Inculcate Dependence on God—Prometheus Cured by a Wound—A Child Driver Resigning the Reins—Prayers on a Train and a Foundering Steamer—III. To Capacitate for Sympathy—A Grandmother's Consolation—A Herb Doctor's Prescription—Welcome of Christian Victors.

RIDING across a Western prairie, wild-flowers up to the hub of the carriage wheel, and while a long distance from any shelter, there came a sudden shower, and while the rain was falling in torrents, the sun was shining as brightly as I ever saw it shine; and I thought, What a beautiful spectacle this is! So are not midnight storm, but rain on panned prairies in God's sweet and golden sunlight. You remember that bottle which David labeled as containing tears, and Mary's tears, and Paul's tears, and Christ's tears, and the harvest of joy that is to spring from the sowing of tears. God mixes them. God rounds them. God shows them where to fall. God exhales them. A census is taken of them, and there is a record as to the moment when they are born, and as to the place of their grave.

The Tears of the Bible

Tears of bad men are not kept. Alexander, in his sorrow, had the hair clipped from his horses and mules, and made a great ado about his grief; but in all the vases of heaven there is not one of Alexander's tears. I speak of the tears of the good. Alas! me! they are falling all the time. In summer, you sometimes hear the growling thunder, and you see there is a storm miles away; but you know from the drift of the clouds that it will not come anywhere near you. So, though it may be all bright around about us, there is a shower of trouble somewhere all the time. Tears! Tears!

What is the use of them, anyhow? Why not substitute laughter? Why not make this a world where all the people are well, and eternal strangers to pain and aches? What is the use of an eastern storm when we might have a perpetual nor'wester? Why, when a family is put together, not have them all stay, or if they must be transplanted to make other homes, then have them all live?—the family record telling a story of marriages and births, but of no deaths. Why not have the harvests chase each other without fatiguing toil? Why the hard pillow, the hard crust, the hard struggle? It is easy enough to explain a smile, or a success, or a congratulation; but, come now, and bring all your dictionaries and all your philosophies and all your religions, and help me explain a tear. A chemist will tell you that it is made up of salt and lime and other component parts; but he misses the chief ingredients—the acid of a soured life, the viperine sting of a bitter memory, the fragments of a broken heart. I will tell you what a tear is; it is agony in solution. Hear, then, while I discourse of the uses of trouble.

First—It is the design of trouble to keep this world from being too attractive. Something must be done

To Make Us Willing to Quit

this existence. If it were not for trouble this world would be a good enough heaven for me. You and I would be willing to take a lease of this life for a hundred million years if there were no trouble. The earth cushioned and upholstered and pillared and chandeliered with such expense, no story of other worlds could enchant us. We would say: "Let well enough alone. If you want to die and have your body disintegrated in the dust, and your soul go out on a celestial adventure, then you can go, but this world is good enough for me!" You might as well go to a man who has just entered the Louvre at Paris, and tell him to hasten off to the picture-galleries of Venice or Florence. "Why," he would say, "What is the use of my going there? There are Rembrandts and Rubens and Raphaels here that I haven't looked at yet."

No Man Wants to go out of this world, or out of any house, until he has a better house. To cure this wish to stay here, God must somehow create a disgust for our surroundings. How shall He do it? He cannot afford to deface His horizon, or to tear off a fiery panel from the sunset, or to subtract an anther from the water-lily, or to banish the pungent aroma from the mignonette, or to drag the robes of the morning in mire. You cannot expect a Christopher Wren to mar his own St. Paul's cathedral, or a Michael Angelo to dash out his own "Last Judgment," or a Handel to discord his "Israel in Egypt," and you cannot expect God to spoil the architecture and music of His own world. How, then, are we to be made willing to leave? Here is where trouble comes in. After a man has had a good deal of trouble he says: "Well, I am ready to go. If there is a house somewhere whose roof doesn't leak, I would like to live there. If there is an atmosphere somewhere that does not distress the lungs, I would like to breathe it. If there is a society somewhere where there is no tittle-tattle, I would like to live there. If there is a home circle somewhere where I can find my lost friends, I would like to go there." He used to read the first part of the Bible chiefly, now he reads the last part of the Bible chiefly. Why has he Changed Genesis for Revelation?

Ah! he used to be anxious chiefly to know how this world was made, and all about its geological construction. Now he is chiefly anxious to know how the next world was made, and how it looks, and who live there, and how they dress. He reads Revelation ten times now where he reads Genesis once. The old story, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," does not thrill him half as much as the other story, "I saw a new heaven and a new earth." The old man's hand trembles as he turns over this apocalyptic leaf, and he has to take out his handkerchief to wipe his spectacles. That book of Revelation is a prospectus now of the country into which he is to soon immigrate; the country in which he has lots already laid out, and avenues opened, and mansions built.

Yet there are people here to whom this world is brighter than heaven. Well, dear souls, I do not blame you. It is natural. But after a while you will be ready to go. It was not until Job had been worn out with bereavements and care-buncles and a pest of a wife that he wanted to see God. It was not until the prodigal got tired of living among the hogs that he wanted to go to his Father's house. It is the ministry of trouble to make this world worth less and heaven worth more.

Again, it is the use of trouble

To Make Us Feel Our Dependence

upon God. King Alphonso said that if he had been present at the creation he could have made a better world than this. What a pity he was not present! I do not know what God will do when some men die. Men think that they can do anything until God shows them they can do nothing at all. We lay our great plans, and we like to execute them. It looks big. God comes and takes us down. As Prometheus was assaulted by his enemy, when the lance struck him it opened a great swelling that had threatened his death, and he got well. So it is the arrow of trouble that lets out great swellings of pride. We never feel our dependence upon God until we get trouble. I was riding with my little child along the road, and she asked if she might drive. I said, "Certainly."

I handed over the reins to her, and I had to admire the glee with which she drove. But after a while we met a team and we had to turn out. The road was narrow, and it was sheer down or on both sides. She handed the reins over to me, and said, "I think you had better take charge of the horse." So we are all children, and on this road of life

We Like to Drive.

It gives one such an appearance of superiority and power. It looks big. But after a while we meet some obstacle, and we have to turn out and the road is narrow, and it is sheer down or both sides; and then we are willing that God should take the reins and drive. Ah! my friends, we get upset so often because we do not hand over the reins soon enough.

After a man has had trouble, prayer is with him a taking hold of the arm of God and crying out for help. I have heard on two or three occasions that I remember. Once, on the Cincinnati express train, going at forty miles the hour, the train jumped the track and we were near a chasm eighty feet deep; and the men who, a few minutes before, had been swearing and blaspheming God, began to pull and jerk at the bell rope, and got up on the backs of the seats, and cried out, "O God, save us!" There was another time, about eight hundred miles out at sea, on a foundering steamer after the last lifeboat had been split finer than kindling-wood. They prayed then. Why is it you so often hear people, in reciting the last experience of some friend, say, "He made the most beautiful prayer I ever heard"? What makes it beautiful? It is the earnestness of it. Oh! I tell you, a man is in earnest when his stripped and naked soul wades out in the soundless, shoreless, bottomless ocean of eternity.

Earnest Prayers

It is trouble, my friends, that makes us feel our dependence upon God. We do not know our own weakness or God's strength until the last plank breaks. It is contemptible in us when there is nothing else to take hold of, that we catch hold of God only. A man is unfortunate in business. He has to raise a great deal of money, and raise it quickly. He borrows on word and note all he can borrow. After a while he puts a mortgage on his house. After a while he puts a second mortgage on his house. Then he puts a lien on his furniture. Then he makes over his life insurance. Then he assigns all his property. Then he goes to his father-in-law and asks for help!

Well, having failed everywhere, completely failed, he gets down on his knees and says: "O Lord, I have tried everybody and everything, now help me out of this financial trouble." He instead of the first resort. There are men who have paid ten cents on a dollar who could have paid a hundred cents on a dollar if they had gone to God in time. Why, you do not know who the Lord is! He is not an autocrat seated far up in a palace, from which He emerges once a year, preceded by heralds swinging swords to clear the way. No. But a father willing, at our call, to stand by us in every crisis and predicament of life. I tell you what some of you business men make me think of. A young man goes off from home to earn his fortune. He goes with his mother's consent and benediction. She has large wealth, but he wants to make his own fortune. He goes far away, falls sick, gets out of money. He sends for the hotel-keeper where he is staying, asking for lenience; and the answer he gets is, "If you don't pay up Saturday night you'll be removed to the hospital." The young man sends to a comrade in the same building. No help. He writes to a banker who was a friend of his deceased father. No relief. He writes to an old schoolmate, but gets no help. Saturday night comes, and he is moved to the hospital.

Makes God the Last Resort

Getting there, he is frenzied with grief; and he borrows a sheet of paper and a postage-stamp, and he sits down, and he writes home, saying: "Dear mother, I am sick unto death. Come." It is ten minutes of 10 o'clock when she gets the letter. At 10 o'clock the train starts. She is five minutes from the depot. She gets there in time to have five minutes to spare. She wonders why a train that can go thirty miles an hour cannot go sixty miles an hour. She rushes into the hospital. She says: "My son, what does all this mean? Why didn't you send for me? You sent to everybody but me. You knew I could and would help you."

Is This the Reward

I get for my kindness to you always?" She bundles him up, takes him home, and gets him well very soon. Now, some of you treat God just as that young man treated his mother. When you get into a financial perplexity, you call on the banker, you call on the broker, you call on your creditors, you call on your lawyer for legal counsel; you call upon everybody, and when you cannot get any help, then you go to God. You say: "O Lord I come to Thee. Help me now out of my perplexity." And the Lord comes, though it is the eleventh hour. He says: "Why did you not send for me before? As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you." It is to throw us back upon God that we have this ministry of tears.

Again, it is the use of trouble to capacitate us for the office of sympathy. The priests, under the old dispensation, were set apart by having water sprinkled upon their hands, feet, and head; and by the sprinkling of tears people are now set apart to the office of sympathy. When we are in prosperity we like to have a great many young people around us, and we laugh when they laugh, and we romp when they romp, and we sing when they sing; but when we have trouble we like plenty of old folks around. Why? They know how to talk. Take an aged mother, seventy years of age, and she is almost omnipotent in comfort. Why? She has been through it all. At 7 o'clock in the morning she goes over to comfort a young mother who has just lost her babe. Grandmother

Knows all About that Trouble.

Fifty years ago she felt it. At 12 o'clock of that day she goes over to comfort a widowed soul. She knows all about that. She has been walking in that dark valley twenty years. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon some one knocks at the door, wanting bread. She knows all about that. Two or three times in her life she came to her last loaf. At 10 o'clock that night she goes over to sit up with some one severely sick. She knows all about it. She knows all about fevers and pleurisies and broken bones. She has been doctoring all her life, spreading plasters and pouring out bitter drops and shaking up hot pillows and contriving things to tempt a poor appetite. Doctors Abernethy and Rush and Hosack and Harvey were great doctors, but the greatest doctor the world ever saw is an old Christian woman. Dear me! Do we not remember her about the room when we were sick in our boyhood? Was there any one who could ever so touch a sore without hurting it?

Where did Paul get the ink with which to write his comforting epistle? Where did David get the ink to write his comforting Psalms? Where did John get the ink to write his comforting Revelation? They got it out of their own tears. When a man has gone through the curriculum, and has taken a course of dungeons and imprisonments and shipwrecks, he is qualified for the work of sympathy.

When I began to preach, my sermons on the subject of trouble were all poetic and in semi-blank verse; but God knocked the blank verse out of me long ago, and I have found out that I cannot comfort people except as I myself have been troubled. God make me the son of consolation to the people! I would rather be the means of soothing one perturbed spirit to-day than to play a tune that would set all the sons of mirth reeling in the dance. I am

An Herb Doctor.

I put into the caldron the Root out of dry ground, without form or comeliness. Then I put in the Rose of Sharon and the Lily of the Valley. Then I put into the caldron some of the leaves from the Tree of Life, and the Branch that was thrown into the wilderness Marah. Then I pour in the tears of Bethany and Golgotha; then I stir them up. Then I kindle under the caldron a fire made out of the wood of the cross, and one drop of that potion will cure the worst sickness that ever afflicted a human soul. Mary and Martha shall receive their Lazarus from the tomb. The damsel shall rise. And on the darkness shall break the morning, and God will wipe all tears from their eyes.

You know on a well-spread table the food becomes more delicate at the last. I have fed you to-day with the bread of consolation. Let the table now be cleared, and let us set on the chalice of heaven. Let the King's cup bearers come in. "Oh," says some critic in the audience, "the Bible contradicts itself. It intimates again and again that there are to be no tears in heaven, and if there be no tears in heaven, how is it possible that God will wipe any away?" I answer, have you never seen a child crying one moment and laughing the next; and while she was laughing, you saw the tears still on her face? And perhaps you stopped her in the very midst of her resumed glee, and wiped off those delayed tears. So, I think, after the heavenly raptures have come upon us, there may be the mark of some earthly grief, and while those tears are glittering in the light of the jasper sea, God will wipe them away. How well He can do that!

Jesus had enough trial to make Him sympathetic with all trial. The shortest verse in the Bible tells the story: "Jesus wept." The scar on the back of either hand, the scar on the arch of either foot, the row of scars along the line of the hair, will keep all heaven thinking. Oh,

That Great Weeper

is just the one to silence all earthly trouble, wipe out all stains of earthly grief. Gentle! Why, His step is softer than the step of the dew. It will not be a tyrant bidding you to hush up your crying. It will be a Father who will take you on His left arm, His face gleaming into yours, while with the soft tips of the fingers of the right hand He shall wipe away all tears from your eyes. I have noticed when the children get hurt, and their mother is away from home, they always come to me for comfort and sympathy; but I have noticed that when the children get hurt, and their mother is at home, they go right past me and to her; I am of no account.

So, when the soul comes up into heaven out of the wounds of this life, it will not stop to look for Paul or Moses or David or John. These did very well once, but now the soul shall rush past, crying: "Where is Jesus? Where is Jesus?" Dear Lord, what

A Magnificent Thing to Die

if thou shalt thus wipe away our tears! Methinks it will take us some time to get used to heaven; the fruits of God without one speck; the fresh pastures without one nettle; the orchestra without one snapped string; the river of gladness without one torn bank; the solferinos and the saffron of sunrise and sunset swallowed up in the eternal day that beams from God's face.

Why should I wish to linger in the wild,

When thou art waiting, Father, to receive thy child?

Sirs, if we could get any appreciation of what God has in reserve for us, it would make us so homesick we would be unfit for our every-day work. Professor Leonard, formerly of Iowa University, put in my hands a meteoric stone, a stone thrown off from some other world to this. How suggestive it was to me! And I have to tell you the best representations we have of heaven are only aërolites flung off from that world which rolls on, bearing the multitudes of the redeemed. We analyze these aërolites, and find them crystallizations of tears. No wonder, flung off from heaven! "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

Have you any appreciation of the good and glorious times your friends are having in heaven? How different it is when they get news there of a Christian's death from what it is here! It is the difference between embarkation and coming into port. Everything depends upon which side of the river you stand when you hear of a Christian's death. If you stand on this side of the river, you mourn that they go. If you stand on the other side of the river, you rejoice that they come. Oh, the difference between a funeral on earth and

A Jubilee in Heaven

—between requiem here and triumphal there—parting here and reunion there! Together! Have you thought of it? They are together. Not one of your departed friends in one land and another in another land; but together, in different rooms of the same house—the house of many mansions. Together!

I never appreciated that thought so much as when we laid away in her last slumber my sister Sarah. Standing there in the village cemetery, I looked around and said: "There is father, there is mother, there is grandfather, there is grandmother, there are whole circles of kindred," and I thought to myself, "Together in the grave—together in glory." I am so impressed with the thought that I do not think it is any fanaticism when some one is going from this world to the next if you make them the bearer of dispatches to your friends who are gone, saying: "Give my love to my parents, give my love to my children, give my love to my old comrades who are in glory, and tell them I am trying to fight the good fight of faith, and I will join them after a while."

I believe the message will be delivered; and I believe it will increase the gladness of those who are before the throne. Together are they,

All Their Tears Gone.

My friends, take this good-cheer home with you. These tears of bereavement that course your cheek, and of persecution, and of trial, are not always to be there. The motherly hand of God will wipe them all away. What is the use, on the way to such a consummation—what is the use of fretting about anything? Oh, what an exhilaration it ought to be in Christian work! See you the pinnacles against the sky? It is the city of our God, and we are approaching it. Oh, let us be busy in the days that remain for us!

I put this balsam on the wounds of your heart. Rejoice at the thought of what your departed friends have got rid of, and that you have a prospect of so soon making your own escape. Bear cheerfully the ministry of tears, and exult at the thought that soon it is to be ended.

There we shall march up the heavenly street,
And ground our arms at Jesus' feet.

DAVID'S GRIEF FOR ABSALOM.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for November 10, II Samuel 18: 18-33; Golden Text, Prov. 17: 25.

The Joy or Woe Children May Cause—David at War With His Son—His Injunction to the Three Generals—Absalom Carrying His Own Gallows—His End Appointed—A General Without Compunction—Absalom's Monument—The Bearers of Grievous Tidings—The Weak and the Bold Messenger—David's Emotion—His Pathetic Lament—Selfish Sorrow—Joab's Cutting Reproof—Grief Suppressed in Duty.

"A FOOLISH son is a grief to his father, and a bitterness to her that bare him." (Prov. 17: 25.) This is a truth three thousand years old, yet terribly new in the experience of every parent whose heart is wrung with grief by the sins of his children. No earthly suffering is so poignant as that which is caused by our children; no earthly joy so great as the joy which comes through them, no temptation to pride is so strong as to be proud of one's children; no humiliation deeper than that which they bring to us.

David was now placed in a position that he would rather have died than occupy: he was at war with his own son. He divided his force into three companies, and placed them under the leadership of his two nephews, Joab and Abishai, joined with the devoted Ittai, the Gittite, who had left all for his sake. David's first thought was to go forth in person to the battle, but the united people would not hear of it, and said, "Thou shalt not go forth, for if we flee away they will not care for us, neither if half of us die, will they care for us, but now thou art worth ten thousand of us; therefore, now, it is better that thou succour us out of the city." The King was in no mood to contend with them; his heart was busy with his bitter disappointment in his unfaithful but beloved son. He said, "What seemeth you best I will do." But he was not callous; one hope filled his heart, that Absalom's life might be spared, and that he might yet repent. Standing by the gate-side in Mahanaim as the hosts defiled slowly through the gate by hundreds and by thousands, David watched for the three generals, and said to each one in succession,

"Deal Gently, for My Sake, with the young man, even with Absalom, and all the people heard when the king gave all the captains charge concerning Absalom." Every one knew the king's mind, every one knew how he loved his son; it was an unwonted thing with David to ask anything for his own sake, but under the law he could not say, "Deal gently, for God's sake, with a sinner;" the law knows no mercy.

The armies joined battle in the wood of Ephraim, and as was so often the case with His people of old, God gave victory to the weaker side. "The people of Israel were slain before the servants of David, . . . the wood devoured more people that day than the sword devoured." God's judgment upon Absalom was a singular and marked one. In addition to his rare beauty, his hair was so luxuriant that it made him remarkable wherever he went. (II Sam. 14: 25, 26.) This very attraction, of which no doubt he was very proud, formed the gallows on which he was executed for his unnatural sin of rebellion against his indulgent and godly father. In going forth to meet the servants of David, he rode upon a mule "under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his head caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth, and the mule that was under him went away."

It was no Accident;

God so ordered it. What were Absalom's thoughts as he hung there no one knows. Whether at last repentance laid hold of him, and he saw his black sin as it was, or whether he died in enmity with his father and his God, will never be known this side of the judgment-day.

A certain man saw it happen, and told Joab. "And behold thou sawest him," said the general, "and why didst thou not smite him there to the ground, and I would have given thee ten shekels of silver and a girdle." And the man replied that a thousand shekels would not have tempted him to slay Absalom, because of the King's charge concerning him. Joab was not so much a man of words as of deeds—firm, energetic, decided. Possessing, as he did, a power over the King which no other had, he took the law into his own hands, and dismissing the man with the characteristic words, "I may not tarry thus with thee, he took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive in the midst of the oak;" and his ten young men finished the work. Thus the unnatural son died without leaving any clue as to a change in his wicked heart.

The civil war was immediately at an end. Joab knew it would be so as soon as Absalom was off the scene; therefore his prompt, decided action. He blew a trumpet, and at once gave orders that the people should not pursue after Israel, "Joab held back the people." The object of the expedition was to quell the rebellion; now the rebel was dead, the rebellion could not live, why then continue the fight? But Joab would not allow Absalom to be buried with princely honors; his corpse was cast into a great pit in the wood, and a very great heap of stones was laid upon it. Absalom had three sons, who must have died in infancy, and so he had reared up a pillar, "which is in the king's dale." This, and the heap of stones, and the history of his sinful rebellion, are all that were left on earth of Absalom. "O Lord, the Hope of Israel,

All That Forsake Thee Shall be Ashamed, and they that depart from Thee shall be written in the earth, because they have forsaken the Lord, the fountain of living waters." (Jer. 17: 13.) Ahimaaz and Jonathan, the two sons of Zadok the priest, had been singled out by David to act as messengers, and bring him tidings of all that happened in the camp of the rebels (II Sam. 15: 27); now Ahimaaz very naturally petitioned Joab, "Let me now run, and bear the King tidings how the Lord hath avenged him of his enemies." Joab knew his man, and said, "Thou shalt not bear tidings this day, but thou shalt bear tidings another day; but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, because the King's son is dead." Joab knew that Ahimaaz would not have the courage to tell the King the real truth. Joab was never for half-measures; he meant David to know that Absalom was dead. "Then said Joab to Cush, Go tell the king what thou hast seen." He could depend upon Cush not mincing matters. But Ahimaaz implored leave to run after Cush, and obtaining leave, outran the other.

No posts or telegraph wires bore messages in those days; all had to be told by special messenger. A watchman stood on the post of observation above the gate, and espying Ahimaaz, he told the King there was a man running alone, and David rightly divined, "There is tidings in his mouth." Then the watchman reported a second runner, "and the King said, He also bringeth tidings." Ahimaaz was the first to reach the city, and he said to the King, "All is well (or 'Peace'), and he fell down to the earth upon his face before the King and said, Blessed be the Lord thy God which hath delivered up the men which lifted up their hand against my lord the King." David's first question was that which lay most upon his heart. "Is the young man Absalom safe?" Joab had rightly estimated the character of his messengers. Ahimaaz had not the courage to say all he knew; he answered that when he left the camp there was a great tumult, but he knew not what it was. Ahimaaz thought to save himself and the King by this lie. We may always leave the consequences with God when we do what is right in His sight. If Ahimaaz had

Only Trusted God

he would have been truthful in his statement; as it was, he justified Joab's opinion of him, left the king in the same suspense as before, and had a lie to account for before God. It was not long before Cush came and said, "Tidings, my lord the King, for the Lord hath avenged thee this day of all them that rose up against thee." The tale was told in these words, but David must inquire particularly, and he asked of Cush the same question, "Is the young man Absalom safe?" And Cush answered, "The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is." The truth was out; David's last hope for his son was gone; Absalom was dead.

And the king was much moved, and went up to the chambers over the gate and wept, and as he went, thus he said: "O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" In time and in eternity he would never more see Absalom; such was the crushing grief which overwhelmed the King. "I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own family." Oh how terribly the word of God had come true. If only he could have had some ray of hope that this misguided young man had repented, that, at any rate there had been on his part some contrition, some remorse—but there was none; it was utter blank despair. And then there would come the bitter reflection that had it not been for his own sin things would not have come to this pass, and may be, yes probably, he saw himself more guilty than his son, and counted himself the murderer of that idol of his heart. But we may be as much as in anything else. "The sorrow of the world worketh death." (II Cor. 7: 10.) The sorrow of the world is made up of self-pity, remorse, and despair. "Godly sorrow worketh repentance unto salvation." A sorrow in which we consider ourselves, and how our troubles press upon us, in which we grieve for the past which we cannot recall, and therefore grieve to no purpose, is after all only selfishness. All which is gained by it is a little temporary relief and satisfaction to ourselves, which, however, reacts and throws into deeper grief afterward. Godly sorrow is a sorrow which considers God, which sees His justice and love in permitting us to be tried, which recognizes that he loves our children and cares for our circumstances or whatsoever troubles us, and that He in very faithfulness afflicts us. Godly sorrow bows to the stroke and justifies God, instead of misunderstanding and murmuring against Him.

Selfish in Sorrow

David was selfish in his sorrow he forgot all in his bitter grief, and in his thoughts of Absalom. "It was told Joab, Behold the King weepeth and mourneth for Absalom." If any one could arouse David, it was he. Meanwhile things were all out of course. Prayers had been made for victory, victory had been given by God: but the victory, instead of bringing forth praise from king and people "was turned into mourning unto all the people, for the people heard say that day how the King was grieved for his son." Some of them had lost sons too, and better ones than Absalom, but they had given their lives for the King, and now, instead of shewing gratitude he was yielding to his selfish grief. It was discouraging to the people who had sacrificed a good deal to take up David's cause; and they "gat them by stealth that day unto the city as people being ashamed steal away when they flee in battle." No smile from the King, no word of cheer, no message; only the loud sob and bitter cry, "O my son Absalom! O Absalom my son, my son."

Joab's strong sense of what was right and becoming in a king had often stood David in good stead in former times, and he did not mince matters now; he broke in upon the King's agony of grief with a stern, startling reproach; he said, "Thou hast shamed, this day, the faces of all thy servants which this day have saved thy life . . . in that thou lovest thine enemies and hatest thy friends, for thou hast declared this day that thou regardest neither princes nor servants; for this day I perceive that if Absalom had lived, and all we had died this day, then it had pleased thee well." It was a blunt way of putting it, but it was no exaggeration; and David, teachable soul, that he was, saw the justice of it; for David was never so foolish and conceited as to be

Above Reproof.

Jeab saw that the word had gone home, and he pursued the advantage gained, and said, "Now, therefore, arise, go forth, and speak comfortably unto thy servants; for I swear by the Lord, if thou go not forth, there will not tarry one with thee this night, and that will be worse unto thee than all the evil that befell thee from thy youth until now." David arose; once aroused, he knew how to cast his burden upon the Lord, and with his breaking heart leaning on the strong one he went and "sat in the gate." Sorrow loves solitude, but David indulged in selfish sorrow no more.

The report spread rapidly, "Behold the King doth sit in the gate," and the crowds soon began to gather, a reaction began to take place; the King felt again that he had a people to care for, and the people felt they had a King to care for them; self lost the day, and things began to right themselves.

A FRENCH CONFESSOR LEFT.

A SUGGESTIVE incident occurred recently in the Cathedral at Notre Dame, Paris. A Christian visitor, who was distributing gospels and religious literature in the French capital, entered the Cathedral and saw a number of ladies waiting their turn to enter the confessional, where a priest sat behind curtains. He says: I noticed a lady dressed in deep mourning sitting near the confessional, preparing for confession. She was weeping. I ventured to pass her, and in passing, laid a small book on the ledge in front of her. It was a copy of the Gospel of St. John, printed in French, and marked at chapter 16:24: "Hitherto have ye asked nothing in My name; ask, and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." Not a word was spoken. As I passed the box I saw that the priest was there. A penitent was kneeling on one side, others were waiting. I walked round the chapels, and returned by the central aisle. The lady was reading the book. She was evidently interested. I could not ask of any person her name, but this I know, that some time after, she closed the book, kissed it, and raised her hands in prayer. Then rose and left the building without going into the confessional. This was the best sight I saw amid all the grandeur of Notre Dame, and will be the one I shall longest remember.

PERSECUTED PERSIAN CONVERTS.

THE Rev. S. G. Wilson, who is laboring at Tabriz, in Persia, sends to the Church a pathetic account of the difficulties which are obstructing his work there. He says: "During the past winter an article was published in the Akhbar, the most widely read newspaper in the Persian language, describing the work of missions in Persia among Mohammedans, declaring that the preachers were occupying every city and proclaiming the gospel everywhere, and calling for its prohibition. To us the work seems small; to them a cause of anxiety, and it has led to an effort to check it by violence. One of the converts was singled out for attack. After suffering several times he fled from his village, intending to escape to Russia. He became the gardener of Rev. Mr. Easton, the independent missionary. On Friday he was caught by the servants of the landlord, reviled and beaten and led through the streets. At the shops the people were informed that he was a Protestant and would be delivered to the ameer to be beheaded. 'He is an Armenian,' 'He has denied Mohammed,' and like words incited the hatred of the bystanders. At the police station he was beaten and severely tortured. He was bound in irons and left for the night in the filth of the stable. He says: 'Had it not been for the divine strength and the comfort of Jesus, I could not have endured.' The next morning he was brought before the police officer, who demanded a fine equivalent to five months' wages. His brother was sent for, who was willing enough that he should be beaten for denying Mohammed; but finally he was released on payment of a fine, with the command to leave the missionary within three days on threat of death.

"The next day we held the usual Sabbath service, but afterwards found policemen at the church door ready to arrest all Mohammedans. The events of the previous days made the number present small. Three men and one woman were arrested. The woman is a poor widow, faithful to her Christian vows. She was soon released from custody as being only a woman.

"Another person present was a mollah from a neighboring city, acquainted with the truth and an applicant for baptism. In sight of us all he was cruelly beaten with a long club. It made our hearts ache. Our indignation burned within us, but we were powerless to help. The persecuted man bore it meekly, but received double cruelty because he was a mollah. The police said, 'You, who should teach others, do you lead them astray?' A number of times in past years I have seen attendants at worship arrested, but always decently. But those cruel blows, how they reached our own souls! One missionary said, 'I had rather be beaten myself than see him suffer.' The three men were kept in vile imprisonment for twenty-four hours, and after suffering many indignities were fined."

THE KINGDOM.

By Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kans.

(Continued from page 679.)

THE words of Christ (Luke 22:29, 30.) teach us: That the twelve apostles will sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel, and that they will not judge by proxy. The judges, the throne and the tribes make all together a unit in Christ's kingdom, and if so, then the idea so prevalent in Great Britain at the present time, "That the Anglo-Saxons and Jutes are the true descendants of the ten lost tribes of Israel, and that the English nation is the favored people of Israel, and of the prophecies," cannot be sustained because the whole Anglo-Saxon race of Britain, America, and Oceania could not be represented in Jerusalem but by proxy, destroying in toto the very idea of a kingdom, and of a union, as the words of Christ imply.

Distinction Between the Church and the Kingdom.

I. In its appointments. When the glorious Lord was about to ascend to heaven, He commissioned His apostles as His ambassadors and representatives, saying, "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations . . . teaching them to observe all, whatever I commanded you" Matt. 28:19, 20; "beginning at Jerusalem," Luke 24:47; and since that day "the ecclesia," the church, has obeyed this injunction. The preaching of the gospel "to all the nations" is a distinct mark of the Church of God through all ages. In the passage Luke 22:29 the appointment is not of preaching especially, but of reigning and judging. It is not a state of suffering, Acts 14:22, but of exaltation and glory. (Eph. 1:10.)

II. In its boundaries. The first appointment has a relation to the whole world. (Mark 15:16.) "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." That word enjoins "a going to all the nations." In the appointment of Luke 22:29, we find, "a resting, a reigning, a sitting on thrones, judging especially the twelve tribes of Israel," re-united in the land of promise, in Jerusalem and Zion. (Isa. 24:23; Rev. 7:4-8; Rev. 14:1.)

III. In its unity. The first appointment was to gather the Church, as the members of Christ's body in unity, without any pre-eminence or distinction, constituting a glorious and a waiting Church, for the "parousia" appearing of the Bridegroom in glory. (Eph. 3:4-7.) In the prophecy under consideration, it is a covenant union, and an appointment by pre-eminence of persons, occupying a station and nearness to Christ on earth. It is not a challenge brought to the world as the first appointment was, to lay hold on all the nations; it is, in the fullest sense of the word, a consummation and a triumph over all the tribes of Israel and of the nations, and a grand manifestation of the completion of unity between the Father and the Son in the reign and judgment concerning Israel and the nations. Rev. 2:26; 1 Cor. 6:2, 3; 1 Cor. 15:23, 24. It is the heavenly kingdom established on earth. (Dan. 2:44; Dan. 7:26, 27.)

The Ecclesia and the Kingdom.

Some readers may suppose that the "two different appointments" implies a separation between the Church and the kingdom, but this is not the case. From the beginning of the world the Church has been in existence (Gen. 3:26); and this will remain an indisputable fact to the end of the ages to come. "The called forth," the elect Church, will always remain as the two olive-trees (Zech. 4:3, 14) of the Lord before the Lord of the whole earth, and as the lamp ordained. (Ps. 132:17.) It is impossible to separate those two. This subject is worthy the undivided attention of the whole Church of God. In Acts 15:15-18 is given a plain description of its diversity in unity.

To Sit at My Table.

These words seem to be a paradox, and quite visionary. No wonder that Marcion, according to Epiphanius's testimony, left out the whole of this verse, and that at the present time multitudes of believers spiritualize these words as meaning "something else," insisting that they are inconsistent with the spiritual state of glorified beings in heaven. We admit that such is the case, but we call attention to an obvious fact: That our Lord did not speak of disembodied spirits, but of living and resurrected persons,—of His apostles, in the ages to come, in the Palingenesia (see Matt. 19:27-30). We also observe that the text does not say, as we have it in the authorized version, "That ye may sit," but it is, "Ye shall sit (Matt. 19:28), a sure promise to be fulfilled.

But the most disputed question about this prophecy is: "May Christ, and His glorified apostles indeed eat and drink at His table, in His kingdom?" A question which is so vital that it brings before our minds some extremely erroneous visionary pictures found in the Sibylline books. The voluptuous promises made by Mohammed, of the heavenly revelry; and, also, of the heretical opinions and anarchical hierarchy of the Anabaptists—and yet this question, seen in the light of the Bible, must be answered in the affirmative.

Reading the connection of the chapter, Luke 22, we find in verses 16 and 18 expressions of "eating and drinking" in a future period, and also of the eating of the Passover lamb, and the institution of the Holy Communion. We have in Luke 24:42, 43, the surest evidences that our risen and glorified Lord and Saviour after His resurrection "did eat and drink." (Acts 10:44; John 21:5-13.) We have the same testimony of risen Saints. (Matt. 12:1, 2.) "Lazarus, which had been dead, whom Jesus raised from the dead . . . was one of them that sat at the table." So in Mark 5:43: "And commanded that something should be given herto eat."

We find also in Gen. 18:1-15, that not only angels, but also "the Angel Jehovah" were partakers of the hospitality of Abraham; "and they did eat," verse 8. In Gen. 19:3, that angels were entertained by Lot in Sodom. We cannot understand many of those things which are revealed unto us; one thing ought to satisfy us, that "The covering cast over all the people, and the vail that is spread over all the nations" (Isa. 25:7), will one day be removed.

The Twelve Tribes of Israel.

That the whole house of Israel, the Jews, will return to the land of their fathers, and that the Ten lost tribes of Israel shall dwell again in the old homestead of Canaan, is so plainly predicted in Ezek. 34:13; 36:10, 35; 39:24; Hos. 3:4, 5, and other places, that it is beyond dispute; and, already, we can plainly see the fulfilment of the prophecy. (Ezek. 37:1-10.) "The vision of the dry bones," in the recent immigration of the Jews to Jerusalem, and of the Yemen Jews to Palestine and to the Holy City. Let our daily prayers ascend before God, in behalf of Israel's outcasts, the hope of the world, and the heirs of the kingdom to come.

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

NOTICE.

At the beginning of next year the "Christian Herald" will be enlarged by making the pages a little longer and wider than now, so that thirteen pages will contain a larger quantity of reading matter than fourteen of the present size. The price of the annual subscription will NOT be increased.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A National Bankruptcy Bill is to be One of the measures which Congress will endeavor to pass during its approaching session. Since the repeal in 1878 of the bill of 1867, there has been nothing but confusion, injustice, and loss. Each State has administered its own law, and it has generally operated to the prejudice of creditors in other States. The result has been a timidity on the part of wholesale dealers, which has restricted trade and embarrassed men with small capital. A carefully prepared measure known as the Torrey bill has been approved by numerous commercial bodies in various parts of the country, and will be presented at Washington with a strong backing.

The Appointment of Commissioner Tanner's successor is a surprise to the party managers. The President has selected General Green R. Raum for the office, and the General has accepted it. He is sixty years of age, and is a native of Illinois. He was a war Democrat in 1861, and entered the Union army as Major of the Fifty-sixth Illinois Regiment, and was promoted Lieutenant-Colonel, Colonel, and brevet Brigadier-General. He was made Brigadier-General of Volunteers February 15, 1865, which commission he resigned May 6. He was elected to Congress, and served from March, 1867, until March, 1869. He was appointed Commissioner of Internal Revenue August 2, 1876, and retained the office until May 31, 1883. He has been practicing law in Washington, and is a prominent Grand Army man. He was not recommended by the Senators from Illinois, but it is understood that they will vote for his confirmation. He is fully alive to the delicacy of his position, but believes that no difficulty can arise, as he is determined to execute the law as he finds it, and not to make new rules.

The Proposal to Make the Pope Arbitrator in the dispute between the United States and England on the Behring Sea question finds favor in influential quarters. Mr. Blaine is believed to strongly approve of it, as does also the British Minister at Washington. The Washington correspondent of the New York Herald, who has interviewed officials in the Department of State and in the British Embassy, reports that whenever the question becomes advanced to the arbitration stage, it is certain that the matter of jointly soliciting His Holiness the Pope to serve as arbitrator will be seriously considered. He would almost certainly be the preferred choice of the high parties, if they could be sure that the request would be agreeable to him. If by reason of uncertainty on this point it should be decided not to ask Leo XIII. to serve, the choice is expected to be among the Kings of Belgium, Sweden, and Denmark, and the President of the Swiss Confederation. When it is remembered that the Pope asked certain New England priests, who waited upon him in Rome, if they came by way of the Isthmus of Panama, the conclusion must be drawn that the arbitrator is to be chosen as we choose our jurymen, because of his super-eminent ignorance of the matter in question.

A Definition of the Degree of Insanity Which absolves criminals from legal responsibility for their acts was given by a New York judge in a trial for murder last week. As is usual when there is no other defence, the counsel for the prisoner had set up the insanity plea, and called a number of medical experts to support his plea. Judge Moore in charging the jury swept their technicalities aside with the direction: "If you believe that the defendant at the time he stabbed the deceased knew the nature and quality of the act he was doing, and knew it was wrong to do it, you must adjudge him a sane man." He added that the test of criminal responsibility is fixed by statute, and jurors are expected to follow it, "no matter what doctors may say about any other kinds of insanity." An impression has been prevalent for a long time past that the acceptance of the insanity plea by our courts has meant nothing more than that the murderer had wealth or influence. It will tend to produce a greater respect for the courts in the public mind if Judge Moore's definition is accepted as a standard test by other judges.

An Important Annual Report on the Condition of the Indians has been sent to the Interior Department by Mr. Leo Bennett, of Muskogee, Indian Territory. It sheds a flood of light on the crimes in the Territory for which the Indians have often been held responsible. Mr. Bennett says: "For years the Indian Territory has been a harbor and asylum against civil and criminal process for a horde of violators of the law. There are 35,000 people living in the limits of this Agency who have no legal or moral right to remain in the country. They are fugitives from the States, outlaws of every class, murderers, thieves, whiskey peddlers, and gamblers. Their influence is corrupting, their touch is polluting, and their example is demoralizing. To their malevolent influence may be directly traced much of the crime in this country. Some means of suppressing this great and growing evil should be conferred upon our United States courts."

Complaints Against Mormon Settlers are made by Governor Wolfley, of Arizona, in his annual report issued last week. He says that about eight thousand of them have come into the Territory and, "morally and politically, they are unwelcome and a dangerous element. Arizona had a law disfranchising all who practiced, taught, or encouraged polygamy. The first legislative act signed by the former governor was the repeal of that act. I request and urge that Congress repeal the repealing act and re-establish the Territorial law. Politically, the Mormons seem to have adopted the plan of sending colonies, or 'stakes' to the surrounding Territories in sufficient numbers to form a balance of power between the two political parties. They are willing to trade with either, but remain true only so long as the interests of the Church are best served. The Church is their law, and all other law is subservient to the orders of the Church." The governor is astute enough to perceive, what many Congressmen forget, that something more than industry and enterprise are needed to make a man a good citizen, and he tries, though probably unavailing, to put the Government on its guard.

The Trial of the Five Men Accused of the murder of Dr. Cronin, the Irish Nationalist, began in Chicago on October 24. The twelfth jurymen was secured on October 22. Seven weeks were consumed in getting a jury, and over one thousand men were examined before twelve were found acceptable to the court and the counsel on both sides. Ten of the men chosen are of pure American stock; the other two are of English parentage. The State is believed to be in possession of conclusive proofs of the guilt of all the five men, and of one other not now in custody. Sullivan is also said to be implicated by watching outside the cottage while the crime was committed. An important link in the evidence was supplied only two weeks ago by the evidence of two men who saw Dr. Cronin enter the cottage on the night of the murder. The trial will be jealously watched by the whole country. Illinois justice is really on its trial in that court. The power of the Clan-na-Gael is known to so thoroughly permeate official circles that any remissness of duty on the part of the prosecution will excite suspicion.

The Parnell Commission Resumed its Inquiry on October 24. Michael Davitt appeared before it and made a long speech. Its chief point was the assertion, which he said he should be able to prove, that the London Times was aware that the Parnell letters were forgeries before Piggott was put on the stand, and that he had confessed to the Times's manager that he was the forger. He said that the League had received funds from all parts of the world, but not from members of revolutionary societies. He read letters from Germans, Frenchmen, Americans, and Englishmen, enclosing funds and urging him to continue to fight on the land question.

The German Reichstag was Formally Opened on October 22 by a speech from the throne. The Emperor was apologetic on the subject of money, as, in spite of his assurances of peace, he is asking for an increased sum to be spent on the army and navy. He announced his need for the co-operation of the Reichstag in order to develop the efficiency of the army, and its readiness for action in accordance with whatever circumstances may arise, and thereby impart to the efforts of the Emperor and his exalted allies for the preservation of peace the weight which is their due in the council of nations. A bill would be submitted by the Government amending the military law to provide for a fresh distribution of the army, intended to readjust, in the interest of the training and conduct of the army, the inequalities of organization which have arisen through strengthening the army and the displacement of troops from time to time.

A Strangely Assorted Royal Family Party was gathered last week in Athens, the capital of Greece, to witness a marriage. The bride is the sister of the Emperor of Germany, and the bridegroom the son of the King of Greece. Former intermarriages of European royalties invest this union with extensive interest. The bride is a grand-daughter of the Queen of England, and the bridegroom's father being a brother of the Princess of Wales and the Empress of Russia, the uncles and aunts of both the bride and bridegroom form an illustrious company. No fewer than ninety-nine royal personages were present at the ceremony, including one Emperor, Emperor William of Germany, brother of the bride; two Empresses, the Empress Frederick, the bride's mother, and Augusta Victoria, her sister-in-law; two Kings, Christian of Denmark, grandfather of the bridegroom, and the King of Greece, his father; with the heirs apparent to the crowns of Russia and England, and a host of lesser princes. How little cordiality there must be among such persons can be imagined, but there seems to have been no lack of magnificence.

A Startling Challenge was Made to Christian philanthropists in London, at a recent meeting, which was called to protest against the licensing of a resort for vicious persons of both sexes. Mr. John Burns, who was the leader of the dockyard strike, and whose portrait appeared in this journal on September 18, referred to the enormous number of women in London who were living immoral lives. Previous speakers had deplored the fact, and advocated measures for suppressing them. Mr. Burns said that it could be done. He could speak for them, for they were drawn from the rank of society to which he belonged. He would pledge himself that if any one would provide work for those women at the rate of eight cents an hour sixty thousand would gladly accept it, and quit their vicious lives.

Miss Mary Henry, of the Womans National Christian Temperance Union, requests us to call the attention of our readers to the approaching annual convention of the Union, to be held in Battery D, Chicago, November 8-12. This will be the sixteenth of those annual meetings, and will be of more than usual interest. Reports will be presented of more than forty distinct lines of evangelistic, reformatory, and social purity work which, during the past year, has been undertaken by the Union. Among the speakers will be Dean Alfred A. Wright, Dr. Rankin, Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, Mrs. Clara Hoffman, and Miss Frances E. Willard. Delegates are expected from every State and Territory. The organization now numbers over 200,000 members.

How to Get Elephants on Shipboard was a problem that exercised the employees of Barnum's circus in New York last week. The circus is going to England, and the Anchor line steamer Furnessia was engaged for the passage. All the beasts, birds, and reptiles except the elephants were put on board, and then the thirteen elephants were brought to the dock. Trouble was expected with them, especially with the famous female elephant named Babe, whose high temper and eccentricities have made her dreaded in the menagerie. She was kept back until last. Don, a ten-year-old elephant, was the first to make the trip from the dock to the steamer's deck. Though usually docile, he objected to go on board. The coaxing of his keepers had no effect upon him, and punishment seemed to make him more obstinate. He smashed boxes and ripped up bales on the pier with a violence that terrified all who saw him. Finally steam-power was applied to him, and he was fairly drawn up the gang-plank by a stout cable. His behavior increased the fear of trouble with Babe. But there was no trouble. A keeper led the little elephant, Columbia, who is Babe's daughter, up the gang-plank, and Babe, the evil disposed beast, followed without hesitation. Her strong affection for her offspring proved a more potent influence with her than any that her keepers could have exerted. Men are like her in that respect. Many who are deaf to the terrors of the law, and reckless of the threatenings of future punishment, have been melted by the story of God's love manifested in Christ. (Hos. 11:4.)

A Man Gave His Blood to Save the Life of a stranger, in Bellevue Hospital, New York, on October 20. Early that morning a patient was brought into the hospital who had been found in an almost dying condition in a hotel. He and a companion had gone to bed leaving the gas turned on but not lighted. One of them seems to have accidentally given the gas-tapa turn after extinguishing the gas. In the morning both men were believed to be dead, but a surgeon who was summoned thought that one of them had a little life left in him, and sent him with all speed to Bellevue. When he arrived he was unconscious, and rapidly approaching death. No pulse was discernible and his breathing was scarcely noticeable. Stimulants produced no effect. As a last resource Dr. Cummings determined to try transfusion of healthy blood into his veins. William Vanderlieth, a young German, who was in the hospital at the time, being treated for an injured foot, asked if nothing else would save the man from death, and being told there was no other hope, offered to give his blood for the purpose. He was laid in the bed with his strong left arm near the limp right arm of the dying man. The surgeon opened a vein in the arm of the latter and let out a quantity of blood. Then he inserted a tube the other end of which connected with a vein in the arm of the German. For fifteen minutes the blood flowed from the strong man into the body of the dying one. The effect was marvellous; the feeble pulse became nearly normal, a flush had come on the pallid face, and the man was breathing regularly. The tube was then removed, and he opened his eyes and spoke. The German was very pale and weak, but revived after a rest and a meal. The other man rallied rapidly, and was pronounced out of danger. He owes his life to the German stranger whose blood saved him from the grave. What should his gratitude be! But what ought to be the gratitude and love of men to Him who gave His blood to purchase for them, not a few years more of earthly existence, but everlasting life. (1 Pet. 1:18, 19.)

The Impatience of an Heir has Resulted in the loss of his inheritance at Watertown, N. Y. Several years ago an aged farmer of great wealth took into his home one of his grandsons, whose father was dead. The father had been the old man's favorite son, and all the affection he had given to him was lavished on the orphan boy. As time went on the old farmer grew more and more attached to him, and finally made a will bequeathing to him all his property, to the exclusion of all other heirs. The young brute no sooner learned that the will had been signed than he began to long for his grandfather's death. He dwelt so much on the delights of possession that his impatience grew uncontrollable, and he poisoned his grandfather. His crime was discovered, and he was tried and convicted. By the exertions of his counsel his neck was saved from the rope, and he was sent to the Elmira Reformatory. The other heirs brought suit for the estate, but the circuit court decided against them. Last week, however, the Court of Appeals had the case in hand, and reversed the decision of the lower court. The decision in effect was that, though there was no law to prevent a criminal profiting by his crime, it was against public policy to allow such a criminal as this to do so, and the estate was, therefore, to be divided among the other heirs. The young man now learns, as every sinner learns sooner or later, that sin is loss, and he who commits it is a fool. (Jer. 17:11.)

The Announcement of a Romantic Marriage was made in Dubuque, Iowa, on October 22. Some time ago a German gentleman residing in that city, having worked his way into a comfortable position, returned to Germany to marry a lady to whom he was engaged before leaving that country. He came back to Dubuque bringing his wife with him. Among the friends of the couple was a young physician who was very popular in the city, being handsome, talented and rich. Many young ladies had been enamored with him, but he seemed determined on being a bachelor. One day when visiting the newly married couple he picked up a photograph of a lady and inquired whose portrait it was. The bride told him it was the portrait of her sister. He declared that she was the wife for him if he could win her. His friends thought he was joking, but in a few days he surprised them by coming to ask for a letter of introduction to the lady. He had arranged his affairs for a long absence, and was just setting out to offer his hand to the lady whom he had never seen, and about whom he knew nothing. The letter was given, and the doctor started. Last week a cable message was received saying that the couple had just been married in Dresden. It is not often that so intense a love is inspired by a picture, but apparently the physician found the original worthy of it. So is it with those who love Christ. He, whom having not seen they love, becomes more precious to them as they know Him better. (1 Pet. 1:8.)

The Humiliation of the Heir of a Chicago millionaire is described in a press dispatch from Harvard University. The young man entered the university as a Freshman this year, and engaged the most expensive suite of rooms in Beck Hall, which he furnished in the most sumptuous manner. An inordinately large sum was spent on the fittings, and it was perceived that the youth was desirous of making a display of his wealth. In a short time he became infected with the ambition to enter the most select of the secret societies of Harvard. He supposed that his money would secure his admission, but he soon learned that to that circle wealth was not a key. He was informed that before he could be received he must undergo a personal test, and must pledge himself to obey any order decreed by the society in his case. He accepted, and was ordered to black boots and sell papers for one week in the public square of Cambridge. Then there was a struggle between his pride and his ambition. Eventually the latter triumphed. Every day for a week, after leaving the recitation-room, he went to his palatial suite of rooms, exchanged his good clothes for an old suit, daubed some blacking on his face and hands as a partial protection against the scrutiny of passers-by, and carried out the stern decree of his order. He blacked the boots of the professors, and sold them papers without revealing his identity, and sauntered along the street with his kit over his shoulder and his papers under his arm like the street gamins. Every day his humiliation was duly recorded to his credit by the society's officer, and at the end of the week he was duly received into the order. His blacking kit now occupies a place of honor in his rooms. It is much to be wished that a young man who had the courage so to humiliate himself to gain a merely local distinction had been more wisely led, and had sought by becoming as a little child to enter the kingdom of Christ. (Luke 18:17)

BRIEF NOTES.

An effort is being made to get Mr. Moody to hold services in Richmond, Va., this winter. If he consents, all the churches will unite in the movement.

The Rev. Dr. Thomas Frederick Davies was consecrated as Bishop of Eastern Michigan in Philadelphia on October 18. Bishop Potter preached the sermon.

Seventy-eight missionaries were sent out at one time last month from England by the Church Missionary Society to foreign fields. Many of the party were ladies.

The Rev. Thomas Spurgeon, one of the twin sons of Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, who has been pastor of a church in Australia, has returned to England owing to ill health.

Rev. H. A. Schaffner, and Rev. Philip Reiting, of Cleveland, O., have been holding evangelistic meetings among the Bohemians at Glencoe and Silver Lake, Minn.

The keeper of the morgue in New York City states that four-fifths of the five thousand bodies that reach the city dead-house every year are sent there by drunkenness.

The Rev. B. Fay Mills is expected to hold special services in New York, beginning November 24, when he will preach in the Thirteenth Street Presbyterian Church.

The Bowery Mission and Young Men's Home, No. 36 Bowery, New York, makes an appeal for second-hand clothing of all kinds. If notice is sent to the Superintendent he will call for such gifts.

The Hartford Theological Seminary has a lady in the class of this year. She is the wife of a member of the Senior class, and has entered upon a course of thorough preparation for foreign missionary service.

Rev. L. T. Chamberlain, D. D., of Brooklyn, and Rev. Josiah Strong, D. D., will hold conventions in the principal cities of New England during the month of November, in the interest of the Evangelical Alliance.

The next national meeting of the Evangelical Alliance will be held at Boston, Mass., December 4 to 6. A programme of wide scope has been prepared. The invitation to attend is extended to all who are interested.

President Harrison, writing recently to the Sunday Observance Congress held in Paris, said: "Experience and observation have convinced me that everyone who works with hands and head needs the rest which the Sabbath alone can give."

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions passed a resolution at the recent annual meeting, heartily thanking Mr. Oscar Strauss, the Jewish ex-Minister to Turkey "for his efficient services in defence of the rights and liberties" of their missionaries.

Country girls coming to New York to look for situations as clerks or domestic servants are warned against conversing with stylishly dressed women on the cars, who, under pretence of needing servants, persuade girls to go with them to their homes, which are dens of vice.

Mr. E. P. Telford commences services in Troy, N. Y., November 1. His meetings at Dover, N. H., were so successful, and so deep an interest was aroused, that he consented to extend his stay there one week longer than was arranged. New seekers were at the altar every night, and the audiences grew to great proportions.

Postmaster-General Wanamaker has decided to resign the Superintendence of the Bethany Sunday-school in Philadelphia, which he has held for many years. The journey from Washington to Philadelphia every Saturday and the return on Monday has proved too serious an interruption of his duties. Many persons wish that if it was really necessary to decide between the two offices, he had chosen to resign the Postmaster-Generalship, as he has proved himself a most efficient Sunday-school Superintendent.

THE WITHERED FIG-TREE.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"Let no fruit grow on thee henceforward forever, and presently the fig-tree withered away," etc. Matt. 21: 17-20.

A Miracle and a Parable Combined—An Apt Simile of the Jewish State—A Nation with Leaves, but no Fruit—Profession Without Righteousness—I. Forward but Fruitless Profession—Fruit Precedes Leaves on the Fig-tree—Christians Better than the Best—Overleap Ordinary Growth—A Tendency to Fanaticism or Scepticism—Not an Encouragement of Censoriousness—Judges Keeping to their Own Court—II. Trees to be Inspected by Jesus—Will Look for Fruit—Has a Right to Expect It—III. The Result to the Fruitless Professor—The Tree Condemned—To Continue in its State—The Twelve Dry Rods.

THIS is a miracle and a parable. We have books upon the miracles, we have an equal number of volumes upon the parables; into which of these volumes shall we place this story? I would answer, put it in both. It is a singular miracle, and it is a striking parable. It is an acted parable, in which our Lord gives us an object-lesson. He gets truth before men's eyes in this instance, that the lesson may make a deeper impression upon the mind and heart. I would lay great stress upon the remark that for, if you do not look upon it in that light, you may misunderstand it. We are not of those who come to the Word of God with the cool impertinence of the critic, thinking ourselves wiser than the Book, and, therefore, able to judge it. We believe that the Holy Spirit is greater than man's spirit, and that our Lord and Master was a better judge of what is right and good than any of us can be. Our place is at His feet: we are not cavillers, but followers.

This is a Parable;

Flippant persons have spoken of the story before us in a very foolish manner. They have represented it as though our Lord, being hungered, thought only of his necessity, and, expecting to be refreshed by a few green figs, went up to the tree in error. Finding no fruit upon the tree, it being a season when He had no right to expect that there would be any, He was vexed, and uttered a malediction against a tree as though it had been a responsible agent. This view of the case results from the folly of the observer; it is not the truth. Our Lord desired to teach His disciples concerning the doom of Jerusalem.

The blighted fig-tree was a singularly apt Simile of the Jewish State.

The nation had promised great things to God. When all the other nations were like trees without leaves, making no profession of allegiance to the true God, the Jewish nation was covered with the leafage of abundant religious profession. Scribes, pharisees, priests, and elders of the people were all sticklers for the letter of the law, and boasters of being worshippers of the one God, and strict observers of all His laws. Their constant cry was, "The temple of the Lord, The Temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, are these." "We have Abraham to our father," was frequently on their lips. They were a fig-tree in full leaf. But there was no fruit upon them; for the people were neither holy nor just nor true, nor faithful towards God, nor loving to their neighbor. Christ did not destroy the religious organization of the Jews: He left them as they were; but they withered away from the root, till the Roman came, and with the axes of his legions cleared away the fruitless trunk.

What a lesson is this to nations! Nations may make a profession, a loud profession, of religion, and yet may fail to exhibit that righteousness which exalteth a nation. Nations may be adorned with all the leafage of civilization, and art, and progress, and religion; but if there be no inner life of godliness, and no fruit unto righteousness, they will stand for a while, and then wither away.

What a lesson this is to churches! There have been churches which have stood prominent in numbers and in influence; but faith and love and holiness have not been maintained, and the Holy Ghost has left them to the vain show of a fruitless profession; and there stand those churches, with the trunk of organization, and widely extended branches, but they are dead.

This is the lesson of the text; but I do not want you to consider it only in the gross, in its relation to nations and churches; but my heart's desire is that we may learn the lesson in detail, and take it home each one to his own heart.

I. First, then, there are cases of forward, but Fruitless, Profession.

The cases to which we refer are not so very rare. They far excel their fellow-men. Their promise is very loud, and their exterior very impressive. They look like fruitful trees; you expect many baskets of the best figs from them. They impress us by their talk, they overpower us by their manners. See the man, he is strong in faith, even to presumption; he is joyous in hope, even to levity; he is loving in spirit, even to utter indifference about truth! How very glib he is in talk! How deep he is in theological speculation! How fervent he is in urging on forward movements! Yet he has never entered the kingdom by the new birth. He has never been taught of God. The gospel has come to him in word only. He is a stranger to the work of the Holy Ghost. Are there not such persons?

Such persons seem to defy the seasons. It was not the time of figs, yet was this fig-tree covered with those leaves which usually betokened ripe figs. I suppose you all know what I have often seen for myself—the fig-tree puts forth its fruit before its leaves. Early in the year you see green knobs put forth at the end and points of the branches, and these, as they swell, turn out to be green figs. The leaves come forward afterwards, and by the time the tree is fully covered with leaves, the figs are ready for eating. When a fig-tree is in full leaf, you expect to find figs upon it; and if you do not, it will bear no figs for that season. This tree put forth leaves abundantly before its season, and therein excelled all other fig-trees. Yes, but it was a freak of nature, and not a healthy result of true growth. Such freaks of nature occur in forests and in vineyards; and their like may be met with in the moral and spiritual world. Certain men and women seem far in advance of those round about them, and astonish us by their special virtues. They are more excellent than the most excellent—at least in appearance. They are so zealous that they are not chilled by the surrounding world: their great souls create a summer for themselves. The backwardness of saints and the wickedness of sinners do not hinder them; they are too vigorous to be affected by their surroundings. They are very superior persons, covered with virtues, as this fig-tree with leaves.

Better Than the Best;

Observe that they overleap the ordinary rules of growth. As I have told you, the rule is, first the fig, and afterwards the fig leaves; but we have seen persons who make a profession before they have produced the slightest fruit to justify it. I like to see our young friends, when they believe in Christ, proving their faith by holiness at home, by godliness abroad, and then coming forward and confessing their faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. That looks to be the sober and normal way of proceeding, for a man first to be, and then to profess to be; first to be lighted, and then to shine; first to repent and believe, and then to confess his repentance and his faith in the Scriptural way, by baptism into Christ. But these people think it unnecessary to attend to the trifle of heart-work—they dare to

Omit the Most Vital Part of the matter. They attend a revival meeting, and they declare themselves saved, though they have not been renewed in heart, and possess neither repentance nor faith. They come forward to avow a mere emotion. They have nothing better than a resolve; but they flourish it as if it were the deed itself. Quick as thought, the convert sets up to be a teacher. Without test or trial of his brand-new virtues, he holds himself forth as an example to others. Now, I do not object to the rapidity of the conversion: on the contrary, I admire it, if it be true; but I cannot judge till I see the fruit in the life.

Is there not a tendency, especially in these days, when men are either sceptical or fanatical, to cultivate a mushroom godliness, which comes up in a night and perishes in a night? Will it not be ruinous if conviction of sin is slighted, repentance slurred, faith imitated, the new birth counterfeited, and godliness feigned? Beloved, this will never do. We must have figs before leaves, acts before declarations, faith before baptism, union to Christ before union with the Church. You cannot leap over the processes of nature, neither may you omit the processes of grace, lest haply your foliage without fruit become a curse without cure.

These people usually catch the eye of others. According to Mark, our Lord saw this tree "afar off." The other trees were not in leaf, and consequently, when he began to go up the hill toward Jerusalem, he saw this one tree quite a long way before he reached it. A fig-tree dressed in its vesture of lovely green would be and would be observable at a distance. It stood, also, near the track from Bethany to the city gate. It stood where every wayfarer would observe it, and probably speak with wonder of its singular leafage for the season. Persons whose religion is false are frequently prominent because they have not grace enough to be modest and retiring. They seek the highest room, aspire to office, and push themselves into leadership. They do not walk in secret with God, they have little concern about private godliness, and so they are all the more eager to be seen of men. This is both their weakness and their peril.

A Striking Object,

Such people not only catch the eye, but they often attract the company of good men. Who blames us for drawing near to a tree which is in leaf long before its fellows? Is it not right to cultivate the acquaintance of the eminently good? Whenever we see any standing out prominently, and making what should we think of them? I answer, do not judge them; do not fall into habitual mistrust. Your Lord did not stand at a distance, and say, "That tree is worthless." No, He went up to it with His disciples and carefully inspected it. These prominent persons may be wonders of divine grace: let us hope and pray that they may be. Unless we are forced to see with bitter regret that there are no marks of grace, no evidences of faith, let us hope for the best, and be glad at the sight of God's grace. Self-suspicion will be healthy; suspicion of others may be cruel. We are not judges; and even if we are, we had better keep to our own court, and sit on our own judgment-seat, dispensing the law within our own selves.

A Bold Profession,

But when we take the text and lay it home to our own hearts, we need not be so gentle with it as in the cases of others. We have, many of us, for long years been like this fig-tree, as to prominence and profession. And in this matter, so far, there is nothing of which to be ashamed. Yet it is evidently to ourselves that the parable speaks; for we have stood in open avowal and distinct service by the wayside, and we have been seen "afar off." Certain of us have made a very bold profession, and we are not ashamed to repeat that profession before men and angels. Hence the inquiry: Are we truthful in it? What if we should turn out to be contending for a faith in which we have no share? What if there should be talk, and no work; doctrine, and no practice? What if we are without holiness? Then we shall never see the Lord.

II. It is time that we remembered the solemn truth of our second head: these will be Inspected by King Jesus.

He will draw nigh to them, and when He comes up to them He will look for fruit. He searches our character through and through to see whether there is any real faith, any true love, any living hope, any joy which is the fruit of the Spirit, any patience, any self-denial, any fervor in prayer, any walking with God, any indwelling of the Holy Spirit; and if He does not see these things, He is not satisfied with chapel-going, church-going, prayer-meetings, communions, sermons, Bible readings; for all these may be no more than leafage. If our Lord does not see the fruit of the Spirit upon us, He is not satisfied with us, and His inspection will lead to severe measures. Notice that what Jesus looks for is not your words, not your resolves, not your avowals, but your sincerity, your inward faith, your being indeed wrought upon by the Spirit of God to bring forth fruits meet for His kingdom.

Fruit Demanded.

Our Lord has a right to expect fruit when He looks for it. When He went up to that fig-tree He had a right to expect fruit; because the fruit, according to nature, comes before the leaf. If, then, the leaf has come, there should be fruit. True, it was not the time of figs; but then, if it was not the time of figs, it certainly was not the season for leaves, for the figs are first. This tree, by putting forth leaves, which are the signs and tokens of ripe figs, virtually advertised itself as bearing fruit. Christ may not expect fruit of men who acknowledge the world and its changing ages as their supreme guide; but He may well look for it from the believer in His own Word.

And mark here, that when Christ comes to a soul He surveys it with keen discernment. He is not mocked. It is not possible to deceive Him. I have thought that to be a fig which turned out to be only a leaf; but our Lord makes no such mistake. Neither will He overlook the little figs just breaking forth. He knows the fruit of the Spirit in whatever stage it may be. He never mistakes fluent expression for hearty possession, nor real grace for mere emotion. Beloved, you are in good hands as to the trial of your condition when the Lord Jesus comes to deal with you. Your fellow-men are quick in their judgments, and they may be either censorious or partial; but the King gives forth a righteous sentence. He knows just where we are, and what we are; and He judges not after the appearance, but according to truth.

III. I come, thirdly, to consider the truth, that the result of

The Coming of Christ

to the forward, but fruitless, professor will be very terrible. The searcher finds nothing but leaves where fruit might have been expected. Nothing but leaves means nothing but lies. Is that a harsh expression? If I profess faith, and have no faith, is not that a lie? If I profess repentance, and have not repented, is not that a lie? If I unite with the people of the living God, and yet have no fear of God in my heart, is not that a lie? If there is nothing but leaves, there is nothing but lies, and the Saviour sees that it is so. All the verdure of green leaf to Him without fruit is but so much deceit. Profession without grace is the funeral pageantry of a dead soul.

Our Lord discovered that there was no fruit, and that was a dreadful thing; but, next, He condemned the tree. Was it not right that He should condemn it? Did He curse it? It was already a curse. It was calculated to tantalize the hungry, and take them out of their way to deceive them. God will not have the poor and needy made a jest of. An empty profession is a practical curse; and should it not receive the censure of the Lord of truth? The tree was of no use where it was: it ministered to no man's refreshment. So, the barren professor occupies a position in which he ought to be a blessing, but, in truth, an evil influence streams forth from him.

After that, when the Saviour had condemned it, He pronounced sentence upon it; and

What was the Sentence?

It was simply, "As you were." It was nothing more than a confirmation of its state. This tree has borne no fruit, it shall never bear fruit. If a man chooses to be without the grace of God, and yet to make a profession of having it, it is only just that the great Judge should say, "Continue without grace." When the great Judge at last shall speak to those who depart from God, He will simply say to them, "Depart!" Throughout life they always were departing, and after death their character is stamped with perpetuity. If you choose to be graceless, to be graceless shall be your doom. "He that is filthy, let him be filthy still." May the Lord Jesus never have to sentence any of you in this way; but may He turn us, that we may be turned, and work in us eternal life to His praise and glory!

Then there came

A Change Over the Tree.

It began at once to wither. Have you ever seen a fig-tree with its strange, weird branches? It is a very extraordinary sight when bare of leaves. In this case I see its skeleton arms! It is twice dead, dead from the very roots. Thus have I seen the fair professor undergo a blight. No axe was lifted; no fire was kindled; a word did it, and the tree withered from the root. It is an awful fate. Better far to have the vine-dresser come to you with the axe in his hand, and strike you with the head of it, and say to you, "True, thou must bear fruit, or be hewn down." Such a warning would be terrible, but it would be infinitely better than to be left in one's place untouched, quietly to wither to destruction.

Now, I have delivered my heavy burden, laying it far more upon myself than upon any one of you; but now I desire to conclude with tender words. Let no man say, "This is very hard." Brother, it is not hard, is it, that if we profess a thing we should be expected to be true to it? Besides, I pray you not to think that anything my Lord can do is hard. He is all gentleness and tenderness. The only thing He ever did destroy was this fig tree. It is that He causes to wither away. He is all love and tenderness: He does not want to wither you, nor will He, if you be but true. The very least He may expect is that you be true to what you profess. Are you rebellious because He asks you not to play the hypocrite?

Only a Barren Tree

"But," saith one, "I know what I will do; I will never make any profession; I will bear no leaves." My friend, that is a sullen, rebellious spirit. Instead of talking so, you should say, "Lord, I do not ask thee to take away my leaves, but let me have fruit." The fruit is not likely to ripen well without leaves; leaves are essential to the health of the tree, and the health of the tree is essential to the ripening of the fruit. Open confession of faith is good, and must not be refused. Lord, I would not drop a leaf. Lord, I do not want to be set away in a corner; I am satisfied to stand where men may see my good works, and glorify my Father who is in heaven. I do not ask to be observed; but I am not ashamed to be observed; only, Lord, make me fit for observation.

Lastly, when you have made this confession, and the good Lord has heard you, there is one emblem in Scripture I should like you to copy. Suppose, this morning, you feel so dry and dead and barren that you cannot serve God as you would, nor even pray for more grace, as you wish to do. Then you are something like these twelve rods. They are very dead and dry, for they have been held in the hands of twelve chiefs, who have used them as their Official Staves.

These twelve rods are to be laid before the Lord. This one is Aaron's rod; but it is quite as dead and dry as any of the rest. The whole twelve are laid in the place where the Lord dwelleth. We see them next morning. Eleven are dry rods still; but see this rod of Aaron! What has happened? It was dry as death. See, it has budded! This is wonderful! But look, it has blossomed! This is marvellous! But look again, it has brought forth almonds! Fruit-bearing is the proof of life and favor. Lord, take these poor sticks this morning, and make them bud. Oh that our blessed Lord may get a fig from some dry stick this morning! at least, such a fig as this, "God be merciful to me a sinner;" there is sweetness in that prayer. Our Lord Jesus likes the taste of such a fig as this, "Lord,

I believe; help thou mine unbelief." Here is another, "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him"—that is a whole basketful of the first ripe figs, and the Lord rejoices in their sweetness. Come, Holy Spirit, produce fruit in us this day, through faith in Jesus Christ our Lord! Amen, and Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Timely Message.*

I WAS looking down upon a strange sea of women's faces that afternoon. Such varied expressions in their upturned countenances! As my glance swept over them, I stood silent a moment thinking, "Whom have we here? Under what circumstances? . . . Only the God who made them, and planned their lives can send home messages to each as varied as their characters. If one has come here, and there is nothing ready to suit her case, the word can still be given at the right moment." These thoughts were in my mind as I began to speak to them.

After speaking for a short time on the lesson of the day, I said: "I don't know why it seems to come from God to me to give a warning to some one here to-day whose foot is wellnigh over the brink of a precipice. Is there one here to-day—I seem to feel there is—who is near taking a fatal step that she will regret forever? Friend, wherefore art thou come here to-day? Did the Lord send thee? He who gave even Judas one last pleading of love—one last warning? Afterward he departed and hanged himself, and went to his own place. Wilt thou, too, look back out of a lost eternity, and remember what might have been if thou hadst heeded His warning to-day?"

It was a strange warning to deliver—that warning to some one whose history I knew not. I had never been moved to speak in that way before, but I seemed to have no choice in the matter, and something vibrated back to me as I uttered the words. The women dispersed. All who had stayed to speak to me were gone, when suddenly the door was flung open and one rushed back in feverish haste and with flushed face. She hardly waited until the door was shut, before she cried out: "Oh! I went home and tried to stay there, but I couldn't. I had to come back. As soon as you began to speak of having a special message from God for some one, I knew it was for me. I had been standing on a bucket in my room at home with my hands tied together, and a rope around my neck to put an end to myself, when God seemed to say to me, 'Go to that meeting, I have a message for you.' I had to come, and you spoke of Judas going and hanging himself. It seemed His last pleading of love to me. He does care for me still, after all He's seen me do, or He wouldn't have sent me here to-day and given you that to say to me. I've come back to give myself up to Jesus to be saved."

That woman has since been one of the honey-drops in my cup. There is a simple clinging dependence upon Jesus Christ in her, combined with a humility that always seems to say, "Sinners, of whom I am the chief."

A Visit to a Saloon-Keeper.

A woman pursued me along the street, and when she caught me said, as she gasped for breath, "There's a man dying in that saloon over there who's just the wickedest man in the neighborhood. There's nothing he hasn't done, and he's not a bit sorry for it neither. It isn't him as wants you, but his wife's in such a taking to think of him dying, and never none to make a prayer for him. And he won't have a clergyman, no road. He'd swear at 'em, and insult 'em awful." I crossed over to the saloon, and passed through the crowd of drunken loungers at the bar, who leered at me as I went to the rear, where I saw a stairway. I stumbled up in the dark right into the sick man's room, which

* From Modern Miracles. By Leila Thompson. The author of this little book cites from her own experience in Christian work incidents of transformation of character so remarkable as to justify the title she gives to her book. She speaks of people she has personally known, and whose changed lives she has witnessed. Pp. 156. Price 75 cents. Published by Robert Carter & Brothers, 530 Broadway, New York.

The Late King of Portugal.

A Missionary at a Chinese Fair.

Dining with a Mandarin's Son.

had no door to it. I was startled by the figure that confronted me. The man sat in an arm-chair wrapped in blankets. A great powerful-looking man, with the blackest hair, and the blackest eyes, and the most livid face I ever saw; and oh! such a villainous expression in it; a mixture of brutality and craftiness. He glared at me with those wicked eyes, and looked as if he would fain have thrown some sharp missile or have done something to frighten me.

"I know what you're after," he said, with a defiant laugh; "I've been the hardest drinker and the worst liver in this place, and what's more, I'm proud of it; so there!" and he snapped his fingers in my face.

There was no use shilly-shallying; I looked straight at him, and said, deliberately, as if weighing each word, "Then you've fully prepared yourself for what is preparing for the wicked when the Son of man shall send forth His angels, and shall gather all them which do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth." I turned to go, but was met at the top of the stair by the wife, who said, "You are never going away without making a prayer for my husband; don't you know doctor says he's about done?"

"Yes, I know; but your husband does not want my prayers."

"That isn't for to say he doesn't need them. Oh! don't go without a prayer."

She had struck the right note. Surely the need was all the greater that he was past feeling it. I knelt and seemed to claim eternal life for that dead soul.

When we rose, the wife said, "You'll come again soon to see my husband?"

"No, certainly not; I shall never come again, unless he sends for me."

No scintillation from that cold clay clod, so I made my way down the narrow stair through the sickening atmosphere of the rum-shop, and gave a long breath of relief to be in the open air again. Yet as I went my way the words were ringing in my ears, "Lazarus, come forth!"

Within four days I had three messages to beg me to come again. The third was written by the man himself. The piercing eyes, sunk with want of sleep, fastened on me as I emerged at the top of the dark stair. The craftiness and brutality of his expression had given way to an overpowering eagerness, and I shall never forget the soul-hunger in his face as he said:

"I shall go mad if I don't find peace soon; I'm the vilest sinner ever lived; fit for no place but hell. What was that you said about wailing and gnashing of teeth? It has begun already."

There are some scenes in life too intense to be written even on memory's tablets. When I came away from that saloon, all I could remember were the words I had caught as I left the house a few days before: "Lazarus, come forth!"

THE LATE KING OF PORTUGAL.

(See portrait on this page.)

NEWS of the death of Luis I., King of Portugal, was received on October 19. The deceased monarch was fifty-one years of age, and had reigned twenty-eight years. He had for several years been a chronic invalid, but had spent on the whole a happy and useful life. His subjects liked him, which is more than can be said for all European royalties. He was the second son of Maria II., Queen of Portugal, and whose husband was Prince Ferdinand, of Saxe-Coburg. The Queen died in 1853, and her eldest son, Dom Pedro, succeeded her. He, dying childless in 1861, Luis ascended the throne. He was at that time only twenty-three years old, and was serving, when the news of his accession reached him, as captain of the Bartholomew Diaz, a Portuguese war-ship. In after years, when talking with his sons of the vicissitudes of royalty, he was wont to say that if the worst came to the worst he could always earn a good livelihood as captain of an Atlantic liner. The King, however, had other acquirements besides naval skill. He was an excellent linguist and literary student. He gave to his country several literary works, notably an excellent translation of Shakespeare. In the course of his wanderings around the world in his early years he had made the acquaintance of Prince Napoleon and his Italian wife, and through them with the family of the King of Italy. Eventually, in 1862, he married the youngest daughter of King Victor Emmanuel, and sister of the present King of Italy. They had two sons; the elder of them, Carlos, now twenty-six years old, succeeds him.

MISSION WORK IN CHINA.

(See illustrations.)

MR. A. G. PARROTT, missionary in the province of Shan-si, says that, having heard of a fair to be held at Hung-Tung Hien, twenty miles from his residence, he set out with a few native helpers to take advantage of the opportunity. "We reached the city," he says, "by 8 o'clock in the morning, and found a large concourse of country people already there from the surrounding villages. We took our stand in the market-place, and soon had a crowd around us eagerly listening to our message. During the day, partly by sales on the streets and partly by free distribution to the shops, we had disposed of about 850 portions of Scripture books, and tracts. We were much pleased by being greeted by one of the crowd, who is a mandarin's son. He insisted upon my dining with him, and seeing that his invitation was not made merely out of politeness (which is generally the case), I, of course, consented. He told me that through my appeals heard in another place, he had been led to abandon the habit of opium-smoking."

DR. SOUTHEY'S NEIGHBOR.

(See illustration on page 701.)

THE vicar of St. Barnabas's was sitting at breakfast with his wife in their cozy morning room. It was an humble abode, only one of the rooms of a flat at the top of a large house, each floor of which was occupied by a different family. But it was near his work, and for so hard a worker as Dr. Southey that was an attraction. And it was cheap, which was another advantage to a man who gave away to the poor and the sick so much money as he did.

The next flat below had been taken by an elderly gentleman, a Mr. Englewood, a widower with one daughter about twelve years old. Mr. Englewood was evidently a scholar, and when the clergyman saw his extensive library being unpacked and carried to his rooms he congratulated himself on the prospect of congenial intercourse with the possessor of such rare and valuable books. But he was disappointed. Mr. Englewood, though courteous at their chance meetings, maintained a strict reserve, and repelled as plainly as a well-bred man could Dr. Southey's advances. Sylvia, his daughter, was disposed to be friendly, and Mrs. Southey at first made some progress toward acquaintance with her. She fancied, however, that the child had been admonished on the subject, for the child grew cold and reserved like her father.

So matters stood on the morning when Dr. Southey sat at breakfast with his wife. It was a Thursday morning, and the clergyman, having promised to exchange pulpits with an old college friend, was to set out that day to keep his appointment.

"Mr. Englewood is sick, I think, dear," said Mrs. Southey. "I met Dr. Wayland yesterday going to his room."

"Is that so? I am very sorry. I wonder if he would regard it as an intrusion if one inquired after him."

The clergyman, however, was saved the responsibility of deciding the question. He was packing some books in his valise ready for his journey when a timid rap was heard at the door. Mrs. Southey opened it, and little Sylvia Englewood entered. Her answers to Mrs. Southey's inquiries confirmed that lady's surmise. Her father was sick, very sick, much worse than he had been before. The doctor had sent a nurse to attend to him. Sylvia was evidently much distressed. She had, clearly, come on some definite errand, however, and having given her answers to Mrs. Southey in a pretty, ladylike manner, she turned to the clergyman and said, "I thought perhaps you would come and see papa. Dr. Wayland asked him if he would see a clergyman. He said 'No' then, but he is worse now. I have been reading to him," she added, touching a book under her arm, which was a Bible, "but I cannot find the places he wants."

Dr. Southey rose at once, and accompanied the child to the floor below. The sick man was surprised, and apparently not pleased to see him. He spoke slightly of his illness, and seemed anxious to avoid any word that could lead to religious conversation. Dr. Southey, however, was too much in earnest to be thwarted, and finding it impossible to reach the man naturally, asked him point-blank if he might pray with him.

"No, no," said the sufferer, impatiently, "you do not know me; I am not a believer in prayer. I suspect you would call me an infidel, though I prefer the name of an agnostic. I do not know; that is all I can say about religion. The proofs you rely upon for your religion I do not accept. There may be a God, but I cannot find Him, and I cannot pray to Him. My little daughter has been reading the Bible to me. I like to hear it, there is nothing finer in literature, but it is only a beautiful poem, the dreams and fancies of men like ourselves, who thought they knew. It is all dark, all a mystery."

"Yes," said the clergyman, "it must be so to you if you try to dispense with the light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world. The responsibility of doing that is very serious. Will you not let us submit the question to experiment?"

"Ah! that is what you clergymen will never do. You demand faith as a preliminary."

"Well, I propose an experiment in your case. I should like to offer a simple prayer, and you shall tell me if it is answered."

A wan smile played over the sick man's face as he said, "I will agree to that, but I have no faith."

Dr. Southey knelt by the bedside and prayed. Carefully choosing such words as he thought the agnostic might honestly use, even in his agnosticism, he went on to his own standpoint, and pleaded with God to reveal Himself to the dark soul. "You will allow me to come to-morrow," he said, "to see if you have received any light?"

"Certainly," said Mr. Englewood, "that is only fair to you."

Dr. Southey returned to his rooms to tell his wife that he would postpone his journey for a day, and then, like Elijah on Carmel, he knelt before God and begged Him to manifest Himself. He intended going to see the sick man at about the same hour the next day, but that night Sylvia came to him to beg him to come to her father at once. Dr. Southey's faith was strong, but even he was astonished at the force with which his prayer had been answered. Not only had the sick man's doubts been swept away, Sylvia's Appeal to Dr. Southey.

but, like the jailer at Philippi, he was in great distress, anxiously inquiring how he could be saved. In the whole course of his ministry Dr. Southey had never so rejoiced in leading a dark soul to Christ, and never had he been instrumental in the conversion of one who in after years was a more humble and devoted follower of the Master.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

A Life Story: By Mrs. Stenhouse.

For More than Twenty-five Years the Wife of a Mormon Missionary and Elder.

(Continued from page 622.)

[We are assured by Mrs. Stenhouse that her rights in this story are unassailable, and that we are legally and morally justified in completing its publication.]

OH what fanatics we Mormon women have been ever to have believed for a single moment that a just and loving Father and God would have given a command that in almost every instance has produced such fearful results upon those who should have been happy wives and mothers, and consequently upon their children! Indeed, even then it made me feel that there was no justice in heaven, if this love, which is the best part of woman's nature—this love that we had always believed was a part of divinity itself, this principle of pure and holy and self-denying love, without which there would be nothing worth living for—if this was to be our greatest curse, and the woman who showed herself most actuated by this gentle influence was to be the greatest victim.

I felt that day that if I could not get away by myself alone and give expression to my overcharged feelings, I should certainly lose my reason. I was utterly miserable. It was only in the dead of night, in my own chamber, that I gave way to the terrible anguish that was consuming me. God and my own soul can alone bear witness to what I suffered in that time of woe. That night was to me such as even the most God-forsaken might pray never to know, and morning dawned without my having closed my eyes.

I was now to realize personally, in my own home life, what plurality of wives actually was. Hitherto I had observed how other women suffered, and how other men treated their wives; but now the painful reality had come to my own door, and I was to experience the effects of the system upon myself, and, instead of noting the conduct of other men, I should be able to see the change which the hateful thing might work in my own husband.

How little do the Mormon men know what it is, in the truest sense, to have a wife, though they have so many "wives" after their own fashion! Almost imperceptibly to the husband, and even to the wife herself, a barrier rises between them from the very day that, in compliance with the Mormon demand, he marries another woman. It matters not how much she believes in the doctrine of plural marriage, or how willing she may be to submit to it, the fact remains the same. The estrangement begins by her trying to hide from him all her secret sorrows; for she feels that what has been done cannot be undone now, and she says: "I cannot change it, neither would I if I could, because it is the will of God, and I must bear it; besides, what good will it do to worry my husband with all my feelings? He cannot help me; and is he not another woman's husband?" Then comes, perhaps, the painful thought, "I have no longer any desire to confide in him." She feels bitterly toward both, for, strive as she may, human nature cannot be altogether crushed out. Is it right that it should?

That was a time of great misery to me, much as I tried to control my feelings. Day by day I strove to hide from my heart even the knowledge of my own unhappiness; and when I could no longer endure, I would lock myself in my room and give vent to the anguish that was consuming me. I realized, however, that this continual conflict of feeling was unfitting me for my duties. Everything was becoming a trial to me. I could not bear to be spoken to; the prattle of my children, that had always been so dear to me, was now discordant to my feelings; and all their little questionings were irksome. I determined that this should no longer be the case: I would battle with my own heart; I would henceforth devote my whole life—worthless as that life appeared to have become—to the welfare of my little ones. This was a conclusion that hundreds of wretched Mormon wives have arrived at; and when it is the case, there is some hope for them. But many give way to despair, and go down broken-hearted to their graves.

How terribly these Mormon men deceive themselves! When peace, or rather quiet, reigns in their homes, they think that the spirit of God is there. But it is not so. It is a calm not like the gentle silence of sleep, but as the painful stillness of death—the death of the heart's best affection and all that is worth calling love. What death is worse? All true love has fled, and indifference has taken its place. The very children feel it. What do they, what can they, care about their father, whom they so seldom see.

Some wives, afraid of creating a prejudice against themselves and of being forsaken altogether, deceive their husbands, and make them believe that they are satisfied. It must be admitted that, in acting thus, these wives are not always actuated by a fear of losing the society or love of their husbands, for, in such a state of things love dies a natural death; but it is galling to a woman's pride to have it said that she has been cast off for another. Then, too—and some women would consider this the most important reason of all—the best provision is usually made for the home where the husband stops most frequently; and the wife, if not for her own sake, at least for her children's, will be anxious to have a well-provided house.

When a man has several wives, there is, of course, no necessity for him to stay with an unhappy or mopish one, as he can always find a more pleasant reception elsewhere. Men who can really believe that women are satisfied and happy under such a system must be entirely ignorant of human nature. When a man has more than one wife his affections must of necessity be divided; he really has no home in the truest sense of the word; his houses are simply boarding-places. Should he have all his wives in one house, as is often the case, they are then all slaves to the cruel and debasing system; each one is continually watching the others, and they know it—trying to discover something that can be secretly told to the husband to draw away his affections from the rest. What more miserable position could be imagined? There is, however, no fixed principle regulating Mormon men in the management of their families: every one is at liberty to do just as he thinks best, and scarcely two families are governed alike.

When Salt Lake City was first settled, the people had to live as best they could, and a man was glad to get even one roof under which he and all his wives might be sheltered. Now, when the husband is wealthy, he generally provides separate homes for his wives. Some wealthy men, however, still have all their wives and families living together.

I have in my mind, as I write, a very prominent Mormon, who has half-a-dozen wives, living in separate houses. Each of them has his society for about one week in turn. Other men with the same number of wives pass constantly between one house and another; they can never be found when wanted; their lives are one eternal round, and they may be said to have no real abiding place.

In every settlement in Utah, long, low-roofed houses may be seen with a row of doors and windows alternating. Even in Salt Lake City, much as it has changed of late years, such houses may still be found. To every door and window there is a wife; and the furniture of her room consists of a bed, three chairs, and a table. Then, if the man is a very devout Mormon and wishes to increase his kingdom by adding another wife to the inhabitants of the long many-doored house, a wagon-box is so arranged as to form a sleeping apartment for the new comer; or, what is more likely, one of the old wives is put into the wagon-box, and the new one takes her place.

A house with two wings is rather a favorite style with those men who, to silence their conscience and the priesthood, conclude to take "just one extra wife," and no more. The wives, with their children, occupy respectively each a wing; and the entrance-door opens into a parlor, which serves as a reception-room for both families. The husband in this case spends a week on one side of the house and a week on the other, alternately; and thus, by an impartial division of his attentions, he preserves peace in his family. A man who is comfortably off can, of course, arrange his domestic affairs so as to avoid, as far as is possible, the inconveniences of the system, but a poor man is forced to submit to circumstances. Many men with two, three, and even four wives, live together under one roof—in one room—with their children; for the command to "Build up the Kingdom! build up the Kingdom!"—in other words, take many wives and raise up large families—has been so constantly and imperatively insisted upon that good sense and propriety have been entirely overlooked.

Stormy scenes may be witnessed in such households. Brigham Young was conscious of this when he said he "would stand no more fighting and scratching around him." It takes a most astute man to balance all the conflicting interests and obtain a little peace, if happiness is out of the question. Where the husband is a rich man, and has abundant wealth wherewith to supply the wants of his numerous wives and children, and to furnish all the necessary accommodation that a growing family demands, much of the inseparable jealousy and ill-feeling can, to a certain extent, be avoided, at least for a time.

I was surprised when first I went to Utah, to find a man whom under other circumstances I had known in London, living with two sisters whom he had married, and, strange as it may appear, it was not with them a matter of necessity. When I knew the husband in Europe, I considered him a man of education and refinement; but I certainly was mistaken, for no man whose nature was at all sensitive and refined would have acted thus. His wives, too, who had been considered highly respectable English girls, were not ashamed, but they professed to believe in bringing the world back to its primitive purity and innocence.

It is quite a common thing in Utah for a man to marry two and even three sisters. I was well acquainted with one man who married his half-sister, and I know several who have married mother and daughter. I know, also, another man who married a widow with several children; and, when one of the girls had grown into her teens, he insisted on marrying her also, having first by some means won her affections. The mother, however, was much opposed to this marriage. In another instance, a well-known man in Salt Lake City, who has several wives and married daughters, married a young girl of fifteen years of age, whom his wife had adopted and brought up as her own.

My life was now one series of deceptions, as was also that of my husband, and we began to wear the mask in each other's presence. I confess that for my husband's bride I felt such a detestation that I could not endure her presence, although she was not to blame. I should not have felt it so much if she had been a little older, but to have a mere child placed on a level with me, and to be compelled to treat her with all the respect due to a wife, was so terribly humiliating to me that at times I thought that I could not endure it another day. She, of course, expected to be treated with all the consideration which is proper to a wife, and to be consulted in everything by my husband, as a wife should be. She was not, however, competent to undertake any household duties or wifely cares, and was herself an additional responsibility to me. Young and inexperienced as she was, she had everything to learn; but at the same time, she stood so much upon her dignity that it was anything but a pleasant task to teach her. It of course devolved upon me to instruct her in everything, and I found it anything but a congenial task.

I soon began to look upon her simply as a boarder, and expected nothing more from her than I should if she had really been such. She took very kindly to this position, and would spend her days in her own room, reading and otherwise amusing herself, and, of course, was always pleasant, and well-dressed to receive her husband. But this did not suit me. In fact, I do not know what would have suited me at that time, for I was disposed to be displeased with everything. And yet a visitor to our house would, I have no doubt, have said, "How very pleasantly those two wives get along together!" This has been said of scores of women in Utah by casual observers—Gentiles, who thought they "understood" the accursed system. How little do they know the aching void and the bitter hatred which exists in the hearts of those wives—the detestation which they have of one another! How little can they know, when everything is so carefully hidden, even from their husbands! It is a shameful thing that women, faithful wives and mothers, should be placed in such a position.

How many times during the day have I been compelled to leave everything and rush to my chamber, and there, on my bended knees, supplicate for strength to endure, thinking all the time that, in ordaining this pretended Revelation, Providence had given us a burden greater than we could bear! Then, in the evening, when we were assembled together in our cosy parlor, as we were wont to be, all traces that remained of the terrible struggle which I had endured were a sad countenance and perhaps deepening lines upon my brow, which contrasted unpleasantly with the bright and cheerful face of the young wife, and made my husband feel that I was getting very sour in my disposition, as, indeed, was probably the case.

Things and actions, which at another time I should have considered too trifling to notice, had now a painful significance to me. On one occasion, not long after the wedding, my husband asked me to take a walk with him, and I consented. Among the Mormons it is a custom to take their wives out together very frequently. Their object, I presume, is to display the "jewels" in their crowns before the eyes of their less fortunate brethren. I had resolved that I would never submit to this; if my husband would not take me out alone, I would stay at home. On the occasion I mention, when I came out of my room ready dressed, I found him and No. 2 wife, Belinda, waiting and chatting pleasantly together, and looking unutterable love at each other—at least so I thought—and I felt greatly insulted and annoyed, and told them I did not wish to go.

I carefully avoided showing any outbursts of temper before the young lady, which I thought would be undignified, for I desired at least that she should respect me, though I did not want her love. If I had expected that they would urge me to accompany them, I should have been greatly mistaken, for my refusal appeared to be just what they wanted. They tripped off together as light-hearted and happy as children, while I remained rooted to the spot, tearing my pocket-handkerchief to pieces, and feeling very unamiable toward them.

I used sometimes to wonder whether it would be the same in the Mormon heaven, where this Celestial Order of Marriage is expected to be carried out in all its fullness, and I felt troubled for myself. These dreadful feelings would, I believed, be the ruin of my soul, and I thought it was impossible for me to obtain salvation until I had entirely subdued them—and that I had not power yet to do. I had, however, so concealed what I felt, that my husband believed that I was becoming used to this new life.

Day after day my rebellious soul was agitated by the same troubled feelings. There was no rest for me—nothing upon which I could stay my mind. My husband was painfully aware that there was a coldness and restraint existing between his young wife and myself, and I know that he was grieved by it, for he had tried in every way to create a friendly feeling between us. I felt, however, that it was utterly impossible that I could ever be affectionate toward his other wife, much as I might strive. I would do my duty, but I could not love her, or, in fact, him either for that matter, when he was associated with her.

(To be Continued.)

"SOMEBODY'S MOTHER."

The woman was old and ragged and gray, and bent with the chill of a winter's day; the streets were white with a recent snow, and the woman's feet with age were slow.

In the crowded crossing she waited long, stifled aside by the careless throng of human beings who passed her by, heedless of the glance of her anxious eye.

Down the street with laughter and shout, and in the freedom of "school let out," the happy boys, like a flock of sheep, piling the snow piled white and deep; and the woman, so old and gray, stretched the children on their way.

She offered a helping hand to her, weak and timid, afraid to stir, at the carriage wheels or the horses' feet could trample her down in the slippery street.

At last came out of the merry troop, the gayest boy of all the group; paused beside her, and whispered low, "I'll help you across, if you wish to go."

His ragged hand on his strong young arm was placed, and so without hurt or harm he guided the trembling feet along, and that his own were young and strong; and back again to his friends he went, his young heart happy and well content.

He's somebody's mother, boys, you know, all she's aged, and poor and slow; some one, sometime, may lend a hand to help my mother—you understand?—never she's poor and old and gray, and her own dear boy is far away."

"Somebody's mother" bowed low her head at her home that night, and the prayer she said was: "God be kind to that noble boy, who is somebody's son, and pride, and joy."

It was the voice, and worn and weak, Heaven lists when its children speak; angels caught the faltering word, and "Somebody's Mother's" prayer was heard.

E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Simple Picket of 50 leaflets (not two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10 or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, their fac-simile autograph, and also Imperial Photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-cents each. Postage stamps taken.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Be careful of Imitations. NOTICE TO PHOTOGRAPHERS OF THE GENUINE AND GET THE GENUINE

HARTSHORN

HENRY WARD BEECHER'S illustrated work "THE LIFE OF JESUS CHRIST." The publishers are now ready to forward terms of subscription for second volume, or the complete work.

IN THE PRESS.

AMERICAN CHRISTIAN RULERS; Religion and Men of Government; Biographical sketches of men of Christian faith and experience. Have held prominent positions in the National State Governments, and in the Judicial Department. Numerous authentic portraits, and a beautiful engraving of the great picture: "First Prayer Congress."

STENOGRAPHY. AND TYPE-WRITING. The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own way) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching: established; hundreds of graduates holding desirable positions; success guaranteed. Also writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free. Write or call. VERMILYER'S COLLEGE, 816 Broadway, New York.

E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shots at Sunday Targets, by I. Amaze, $2.50. Quick sales. Big pay. Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors. Edited by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75. 124,000 sold. 5000 copies of Bible $2. By Mail, E. B. TREAT, N.Y.

DR. J. C. DODGE'S FOOD The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Write to the Dr. J. C. DODGE & Co. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS

This is your opportunity. A new departure. SILKS direct from the manufacturers to you.

Our reduced prices bring the best goods within reach of all. We are the only manufacturers in the U. S. selling direct to consumers. You take no risk. We warrant every piece of goods as represented, or money refunded. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the U. S. Established in 1838, with over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the CHAFFEE DRESS SILKS, for richness of color, superior finish and wearing qualities, to be unexcelled by any make of Black Silks in the world. We offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grains, Satins, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aida Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON, Mansfield Centre, Conn.

Refer, by permission, to First National Bank, Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Willimantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

We send to all parts of the U. S. With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 1000 Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of dress.

RECOLLECT THE GOODS all carrying charges PREPAID

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are most pressing, and can be mailed to the address of BISHOP H. C. RILEY, Care of J. P. HEATH, 43 Bible House, New York.

$3.75 A DAY And steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write at once. Franklin Co., Richmond, Va.

3rd Edition Just Published.

Mr. Spurgeon's New Book. WITH A PAGE OF PRECIOUS PROMISES FOR EVERY DAY OF THE YEAR.

THE CHEQUE BOOK OF THE BANK OF FAITH. BEING PRECIOUS PROMISES ARRANGED FOR DAILY USE. With Brief Experimental Comments. Nearly 400 pages. 12mo. Price $1.50.

In Mr. Spurgeon's Preface he says: "I believe all the promises of God, but many of them I have personally tried and proved. I have seen that they are true, for they have been fulfilled to me. I commenced these daily portions when I was wading in the Surf of Controversy. Since then I have been cast into 'waters to swim,' which, but for God's upholding hand, would have proved waters to drown in. The waters rolled in continually, wave upon wave. I do not mention this to exact sympathy, but simply to let the reader see that I am no dry-land sailor—I know the roll of the billows, and the rush of the winds. Never were the promises of Jehovah so precious to me as at this hour."

N. Y. Christian Intelligencer: "When it is stated that this well-named book contains a SCRIPTURE PROMISE FOR EACH DAY IN THE YEAR, commented on, in his best vein, by the prince of practical and experimental preachers, enough has been said to commend as first in its class. It is most admirably adapted for daily reading either in the family or the closet, and wherever used will be found spiritually stimulative."

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

DO YOU SUPPOSE DO YOU WOULD WE DAILY DO YOU IS IT NOT WORTH WEAR PANTS COULD WE TAKE ORDERS

that Plymouth Rock Pants and Suits would have reached the largest sales ever known in the custom clothing business unless they had wonderful merit?

receive unsolicited letters testifying to their worth if such praise was not deserved?

a postal card to see a handsome line of our samples, mailed you free, with full directions how to measure yourself. We guarantee perfect fit and satisfaction or money refunded?

In the big cities where our branch stores are situated unless we could successfully compete with any tailor or ready-made clothier?

CUT TO ORDER: Pants, $3 to $5.25; Suits, $13.25 to $21; Overcoats, $10.25 to $20.

If you don't know who we are, look in any commercial agency, or write to any bank or business firm (except clothiers and tailors) in any of these cities.

PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO. ADDRESS ALL MAIL TO: Headquarters: 11 to 17 Elliot Street. Annex: 695 Washington Street, And 18 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BRANCHES: 285 Broadway, New York; 943 Penn. Avenue, Washington, D. C.; 72 Adams St., Chicago, Ill.; 914 Main St., Richmond, Va.; 225 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Md.; 110 Canal St., New Orleans; 104 Montgomery St., Montgomery, Ala.; 39 Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga.; Burnside Building, Worcester, Mass.; Hotel Gilmore, Springfield, Mass.; 195 Westminster St., Providence, R. I.; Old Register Building, New Haven, Conn.

PAINLESS EFFECTUAL BEECHAM'S PILLS THE GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

For Bilious and Nervous Disorders, such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Sick Headache, Giddiness, Fulness, and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, Blisters on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nervous and Trembling Sensations, &c. THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES. This is no fiction. Every sufferer is earnestly invited to try one Box of these Pills, and they will be acknowledged to be a Wonderful Medicine.—"Worth a guinea a box."

BEECHAM'S PILLS, taken as directed, will quickly restore females to complete health. For a WEAK STOMACH; IMPAIRED DIGESTION; DISORDERED LIVER; they ACT LIKE MAGIC:—a few doses will work wonders upon the Vital Organs, Strengthening the muscular System; restoring long-lost Complexion; bringing back the keen edge of appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. These are "facts" admitted by thousands. In all classes of society, and one of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE OF ANY PATENT MEDICINE IN THE WORLD. Full directions with each box.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helena, Lancashire, England. Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN & CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York. Sole Agents for the United States, who (inquire first), if your druggist does not keep them, WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS ON RECEIPT OF PRICE, 25 CENTS A BOX.

HAVE YOU CATARRH? ARE YOU GOING INTO CONSUMPTION? Do You Have Asthma?

By means of the PILLW-INHALER, sufferers in every part of the land have been cured of the above diseases, and many who were for years afflicted are now strong and well. The PILLW-INHALER is apparently only a pillow, but from liquid medicines that are harmless (tar, carbolic acid, iodine, etc.) it gives off an atmosphere which you breathe at night (or about eight hours), whilst taking ordinary rest in sleep. There are no pipes or tubes, as the medicine is contained in concealed reservoirs, and the healing atmosphere arising from it envelops the head. It is perfectly simple in its workings, and can be used by a child with absolute safety. Medicine for the reservoirs goes with each INHALER, ready for use. The wonderful and simple power of the PILLW-INHALER is in the long-continued application. You breathe the healing vapor continuously and at a time when ordinarily the cavities of the nose and bronchial tubes become engorged with mucus, and catarrh, throat and lung diseases make greatest progress. From the very first night the passages are clearer and the inflammation is less. The cure is sure, and reasonably rapid.

"Rev. Dr. J. T. DUNN, of Boston, writes: 'I really think the PILLW-INHALER is a very great hit, and the man who made it deserves the gratitude of all sufferers. I never slept more soundly, and my voice is better since using it.'

REV. J. R. DANFORTH, 290 Wallace St., Philadelphia, says he received great benefit from the use of the PILLW-INHALER for Bronchial troubles, and cordially recommends it.

WM. C. CARTER, M. D., Norfolk, Va., a physician in regular practice, says: "I believe the PILLW-INHALER to be the best thing for the relief and cure of Lung Troubles that I have ever seen or heard of."

MR. R. D. McMANUAL, of the firm of McManial & Morley, Miners and Shippers, Logan, Ohio, writes: "I suffered fifteen years with Catarrh of the throat. I bought a PILLW-INHALER, and after four months' use of it my throat is entirely cured."

Send for Descriptive Pamphlet and Testimonials.

THE PILLW-INHALER CO., 1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

CATARRH. BRONCHITIS. CONSUMPTION.

TURKISH HAIR CROWDER. Washed in pure & beautiful scented oil. Cleanses face or hair on ball heads, without injury, in 3 weeks, or money refunded. 10,000 testimonials. The only reliable article of the kind on the market. Beware of worthless imitations. One page, 25 cts.; 4 for 50 cts. TRENTON MANUFACTURING CO., Boston, Mass.

BEECHAM'S PILLS set like magic on a weak stomach, FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

If you have a COLD or COUGH, acute or leading to CONSUMPTION, SCOTT'S EMULSION OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME AND SODA IS SURE CURE FOR IT.

This preparation contains the stimulating properties of the Hypophosphites and fine Norwegian Cod Liver Oil. Used by physicians all the world over. It is as palatable as milk. Three times as efficacious as plain Cod Liver Oil. A perfect Emulsion, better than all others made. For all forms of Wasting Diseases, Bronchitis, CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, and as a Flesh Producer there is nothing like SCOTT'S EMULSION. It is sold by all Druggists. Let no one by profuse explanation or impudent entreaty induce you to accept a substitute.

CATARRH HAY FEVER CATARRHAL DEAFNESS

A NEW TREATMENT. Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been discovered which permanently cures the most aggravated cases of these distressing diseases by a few simple applications made (two weeks apart) by the patient at home. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent free by A. H. DIXON & SON, 295 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.

CHANCE FOR ALL To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect Tea. A TRIAL ORDER OF 34 pounds of Fine Tea, either Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpowder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289, 81 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

FLORENCE HOME NEEDLEWORK. The 1889 edition of this popular series is now ready. 96 pages, instructing you in Netting, Knitting, Tatting and Embroidery. Fully illustrated. Mailed on receipt of 6c. Nonotuck Silk Co., Florence, Mass.

Jesus! I rest in Thee,
In Thee myself I hide;
Laden with guilt and misery,
Where can I rest beside?
'Tis on Thy meek and lowly breast,
My weary soul alone could rest.

Thou Holy One of God!
The Father rests in Thee;
And in the savor of that blood
That speaks to Him for me,
The curse is gone—through Thee I'm blest,
God rests in Thee—in Thee I rest.

The slave of sin and fear,
Thy truth my bondage broke;
My willing spirit loves to bear
Thy light and easy yoke;
The love that fills my grateful breast,
Makes duty joy, and labor rest.

Soon the bright, glorious day,
The rest of God shall come!
Sorrow and sin shall pass away,
And I shall reach my home!
Then, of the promised land possessed,
My soul shall know eternal rest!

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

THE Alfred Dolge FELT SHOES AND SLIPPERS.

Noiseless,
Warm, Durable.

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York.

VICTORY AT LAST SELF-THREADING SEWING NEEDLES

The Blind can use them. Invaluable for falling sight. Finest needle made. Millward's Gold Eyes; do not cut the thread.
Sample paper mailed 10c.: 3 for 25c.; 12
for 80c. NEW ENGLAND NOVELTY MFG
Co., 24 Portland St., Boston, Mass.

CHRISTMAS CARDS. 10 very beautiful
Christmas Cards, no two alike, by mail, for 25c.
They will please you. NEW ENGLAND NOVELTY MFG
Co., 24 Portland St., Boston, Mass.

WANTED AGENTS for
The Christian's Legacy.
One reports the sale of 72 copies in a place of 798
people. Another has sold 102 copies in one church in Springfield, Mass., and is a stranger there. Circulars
free. W. J. HOLLAND, 150 Nassau St. New York.

TIMES HAVE CHANGED.

"Well, well; to think how, years ago, I put a slipper on to Tom, and yesterday he paid me up with interest by putting a pair on me. He says that he felt mine then, and it was warm enough for comfort; and now these are felt also, and, though likewise warm, are much more comfortable."

PERFECT EASE AND COMFORT.

Made in all Styles for Men,
Women, and Children.

Prevent Rheumatism and
Cold Feet.

Send for Illustrated Price-List.
Mention Christian Herald.

INDUCEMENTS IN DRESS GO

We invite special attention to following five lines of seasonable wool, low-priced Fabrics, 52 1 wide:

One line Plaids	$1.00	Worth $
" " Mixtures	1.00	"
" " Stripes	1.00	"
" " Combination Stripes	1.00	"
" " Stripes	1.00	"

These goods merit an early examination. Samples sent on request.

James McCreery &
Broadway, cor. Eleventh St
NEW YORK.

"Demonology or Spiritualism"
Ancient and Modern. "An effective weapon sword of fire." "Only unanswerable work subject." "Startling disclosures.—History of data—Scores saved already. Whole community rescued. Every family, preacher and Christian needs one. 310 pp. 12mo. cloth. Price reduced Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. A J. E. JEWETT. 77 Bible House, New

DR. SCOTT'S Electric Insoles

GIVEN AWAY EVERYBODY

KNOWS prevention of Disease SAVES
many valuable lives and much pain, suffering, expense and anxiety, hence

Thousands of persons are now writhing in diseases which were started by catching a cold from Damp or Cold Feet.
"Keep the feet warm and the head cool" is an axiom as old as the hills, and it is as true to-day as it was then.

Always wear our Insoles when using our Electric Plasters. Dr. Scott's Electric INSOLES keep the feet at one temperature all the year round (50) cents per pair). They are light and persons wearing them feel a pleasant glow of warmth.

In connection with Dr. Scott's Electric Plasters, Dr. Scott's Electric Insoles will prevent and assist in CURING almost every form of Disease, including:

Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cold Feet, Kidney Complaint, Gout,	Catarrh, Heart Disease, Nervous Prostra- tion, General Debility.
---	--

and help in the treatment of all forms of diseases resulting from Over-work, etc.

If you will send and get that very valuable book entitled, "THE DR'S STORY" you will see it gives an outline of the law of heat which explains the reason why Dr. Scott's

ELECTRIC INSOLES

keep the feet warm and at one temperature all the year round, or why you can stand

On Ice all Day and Yet Have Warm FEET.

They are light and despite the layers of different material needed to produce the effect, persons wearing them cannot distinguish anything but a pleasant glow of warmth.

Persons whose Feet Perspire will find a ready cure in Dr. Scott's Electric Insoles.

Indispensable to sufferers from Gout, Absence of Circulation, and fatigue after walking or exercise.

The CHEAPEST CURE ever OFFERED in the World.

with much pleasure and confidence we offer to every neighborhood Dr. Scott's celebrated remedial

ELECTRIC PLASTERS

They are a wonderful discovery, as they combine with Electro-Magnetism the best qualities of porous plasters made.

DR. SCOTT'S ELECTRIC PLASTER

Is a really wonderful remedy CURING Colds, Coughs Chest Pains, Nervous, Muscular and Neuralgic Pains, Stomach, Kidney and Liver Pains, Dyspepsia, Malarial and other Pains, Rheumatism, Gout and Inflammation IN ONE TO THREE MINUTES.

We unhesitatingly guarantee that it will produce
most astonishing
results, effecting rapid cures where medicine and all other treatments fail.

"The Dr's Story,"
an eminently interesting work, price 25c., sent free to those who name
this paper and send us 25cts. for one of Dr. Scott's Electric Plasters.

To quickly introduce Dr. Scott's remarkable Electric Plasters to those families who cannot obtain them at their Drug store, The Pall Mall Electric Association of London & New York have decided for a short period to MAKE A PRESENT of a pair of 50ct. Electric Insoles as you will read below

To Get Dr. Scott's ELECTRIC INSOLES

FREE

Remit one dollar, naming this paper, and we will deliver, all charges paid, to any part of U.S.
4 Electric Plasters, retail $1.00
1 Pair Insoles, FREE, " .50
1 Dr's Story, FREE, " .25

NO RISK! MONEY RETURNED EVERY TIME
IF NOT SATISFACTORY.

We want everyone to keep our Plasters on hand, as we know the great benefits to be derived from using them, and how very important to have a few in the house, ready for prompt use in an emergency. Hence for 30 days this liberal offer to give away our Electric Insoles. Mention this paper and remit $1.00 in Draft, Post-office Money Order, Stamps or Currency in Registered Letter payable to DR. SCOTT, 842 Broadway, New York City.

State Size Required and whether
LADIES OR GENTS.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1888, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 43. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAIT OF DR. TALMAGE, AND PICTURES OF THE BROOKLYN TABERNACLE, BURNED OCT. 13.

THE BAPTISM OF FIRE. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

THE KINGDOM. By Rev. A. C. Tris.

A Lady Nihilist's Testament—A Frenchwoman's Request at the McAll Mission—A New Yorker's Discovery in Vienna.

DAVID'S REBELLIOUS SON. By Mrs. M. Baxter. PORTRAIT OF THE LATE ELIZA COOK, THE FAMOUS POETESS.

A VICTIM OF AFRICAN SUPERSTITION. (Illustr.)

IN THE GARDEN. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: King Alfred's Creed—A Typical King—Wycliffe's Times—A Bible-Reading Statute.

WIDOW NORMAN'S SON. (With Illustration.)

CRIMES OF THE MORMONS. By Mrs. Mary Ettie V. Smith.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.—The Brooklyn Tabernacle—The Fire on Oct. 13—The Ruins.

BURNING OF BROOKLYN TABERNACLE.

No church edifice in the United States has so strong a personal interest for so large a number of persons as the Brooklyn Tabernacle. The sermons delivered within its walls by Dr. Talmage are read in every city in the Union, in all the English-speaking nations of the world, and are translated into several foreign languages every week. The conflagration on the morning of Sunday, October 13, which converted the spacious building into a heap of smoking ruins, is therefore a matter of concern the world over, and our readers will be glad to have with the portrait of Dr. Talmage, which we give this week on the first page, pictures of the Tabernacle as it was, of the edifice in the grasp of the fire, and of the ruins as they appeared the next day.

It was in the quiet hours of the night, about 2:45 A. M., that Schermerhorn St. resounded with

The Cry of "Fire!"

Policeman McCafferey, while patrolling his beat in Livingston Street, noticed as he passed the rear of the Tabernacle, that its windows were luminous, and, looking up, he saw smoke issuing from the ventilators on the roof. He realized the nature of the impending catastrophe, and ran around to the fire-alarm box on Third Avenue and sent out an alarm. Then he ran back to Schermerhorn Street to arouse the inmates of the houses adjoining the Tabernacle. In the meantime, a member of the church, who lives directly across Schermerhorn Street, had heard a crackling noise, and thought that the glass globe of the electric light, suspended over the roadway, had been broken. He had been converted to Christianity at the Tabernacle, and had a habit of taking a farewell look at its familiar façade every evening before retiring to his bed. The sharp noise aroused him from sleep. He looked out, and saw the increasing light within the church, and instantly raised an alarm.

In two minutes after the policeman's alarm went over the wires a hook-and-ladder company dashed up to the door of the Tabernacle, and the captain immediately sent out a second and third alarm, which brought eleven engines and three more hook-and-ladder companies.

The Spectacle was Brilliant in the extreme. The solid brick walls of the edifice kept the flames within the building, and their fantastic action showed brightly through the trefoiled and mullioned windows of the front and side walls. The peaked slated roof was soon eaten away and fell in, sending aloft a huge shower of sparks, followed by a huge burst of flame. The roof was a solid structure with trusses of stout oak, and the skeleton stood erect amid the general ruin until its uprights burned through, when it fell with a crash sending a shower of sparks far and wide to menace the safety of the neighboring houses. It was soon seen that any effort to save any portion of the church would be useless, and the attention of the firemen was directed to the adjoining property. The cornices of half a dozen dwellings adjoining and opposite the Tabernacle were in flames, and it was only the constant streams of water aided by the rapidly falling rain that saved the entire block from destruction.

A Narrow Escape.

Only the four walls of the Tabernacle were left of it by 5 o'clock, and at 9 o'clock the rear one fell. Just before it fell the men of Engine Company No. 10, despite the fact that the cross-tipped gables were swaying in the wind, stood under the walls with their hose. The men were beside the rear wall throwing a stream into the cellar under the organ niche. Finally somebody cried, "Look out!" and they scrambled back just as the top of the wall fell with a crash. Tons of brick covered the ground where a second before they had been standing. The crash of the wall followed so closely upon their escape that they couldn't make up their minds that no one of them had been killed until they gathered together again and were counted.

The Neighbors

were not without a share of the peril, and they suffered some losses, though happily no lives were lost. By 3 o'clock the block was alive with excited people who had escaped into the street in a panic, half clad. The stylish brick houses just across the street from the Tabernacle were soon tenantless, for the intense heat shivered the window glass into fragments and drove the people out. One house near the Tabernacle was so affected by the heat that the lead roof peeled off, and could be seen hanging over the side of the house in the morning. In another house where the inmates were aroused by Policeman McCafferey, there was a lady eighty years of age, who was unable to walk. The policeman took her in his arms as if she had been an infant and carried her to a place of safety. In several of the houses the furniture was completely ruined by fire and water. One tenant, who was away from home, remarked, as he left on the Saturday before the fire, that his $1,000 policy of insurance had run out, but he guessed he could risk it until Monday. His furniture was entirely destroyed. Another vexatious case was that of Prof. Henry Eyre Brown, the organist at the Tabernacle. He had a collection of music in the Tabernacle, much of which could not be duplicated. He had insured it for $2,000, which was less than the value at which he estimated it, but the policy had expired about a week before the fire, and he had not renewed it.

Dr. Talmage Was at the Fire

just before the roof fell in. "I am a sound sleeper," he said to a reporter, "and the thunder-storm after midnight didn't wake me up. But some of my family were aroused, and sometime between 2 and 3 in the morning they awakened me to see a bright light in the sky, as of a great fire. As soon as I looked from the windows I seemed to feel that it was our church that was on fire, and when I went up to the roof to get a better view from the observatory I could see the whole Tabernacle a mass of flame, the arched cathedral windows and the pointed Gothic walls outlined in fire. I dressed and hurried to the spot—about a mile distant—but of course was too late to be of any use. There was nothing to do but to sadly look on and watch the destruction of the building which had been our church home for fifteen years.

The Origin of the Fire is and will probably remain a mystery. The only fire burning overnight was a small one in a furnace to warm the infant-class room. The Fire Marshal, who examined the building after the fire, decided, from the appearance of the furnace, that it had nothing to do with the fire. He was of the opinion that it was most probably of electrical origin. The Edison incandescent system had recently been introduced in the Tabernacle, a plant of 330 burners succeeding illumination by gas. The electricians had been at work in the Tabernacle placing brass bands around the pillars where the lamps were clustered to serve as reflectors. The electrician in charge was positive that the connection with the Edison works had been turned off before he left, but the marshal thought that an electric flash had run along the wires into the building and set fire to the switchboard, which was situated in the lecture-room at just about the place where the policeman reported that he first saw the flames. It is also remembered by persons in the vicinity that they were startled about that time by a clap of thunder of unusual volume that seemed to shake the very earth.

The History of the Edifice dates back little over fifteen years, though it is more than twenty years since Dr. Talmage settled in Brooklyn. In 1869 the church, then known as the Central Presbyterian Church, was worshipping in an edifice built in 1847, which is now the annex to a public school a few yards west of the Tabernacle site. It would hold 1,200 persons, and was too large for the congregation which used it in March, 1869. But Dr. Talmage was called, and a few months after accepting the pastorate, the building was too small for the crowds that came, and a year afterward a new church was built, with a seating accommodation for three thousand. In 1872 that church had to be enlarged. Scarcely had the work been finished when, on Sunday, December 22, 1872, the congregation, on assembling, found their new edifice in flames, and it was burned to the ground.

Plans were at once made for a new and better building. It was a massive building of brick and stone, capable of seating five thousand persons, and finding standing room for one thousand more. The style of its architecture was Gothic, but, by a skilful adaptation, the acoustic defects for which Gothic edifices are notorious were overcome. The interior was like an amphitheatre, in the shape of a half circle. In the centre of the straight wall was the platform, and around it the seats rose gradually as they receded from the platform. A gallery ran around the building, springing from the two sides of the straight wall, while in a recess between the two ends, and behind the platform, was the magnificent organ. There was some difficulty in realizing Dr. Talmage's conception of a church edifice. Speaking of it to a reporter last week, he said: "This idea of an amphitheatre below and Gothic above was my conception. I gave the plan to two famous architects of New York, and they said it could not be done, and wouldn't look churchly, anyway. I had given up all hope of having my plan carried out, when a young architect came to the house and said: 'Have you accepted the plan yet?' I answered, 'No,' and added, 'I didn't care what they did with the church.' I would preach in it, of course, but was not enthused. I gave my ideas to him, and he drew plans that were acceptable. The Tabernacle destroyed on Sunday morning had those plans to perfection." It cost, including the organ and furniture, $123,880, and since that time, $44,156 has been spent upon it, making a total cost of $168,036.

The New Tabernacle

will of course be commenced at once. Toward the cost the trustees will have the fire insurance on the old building amounting to $129,450, and Dr. Talmage has issued an appeal for $100,000 more. There is no doubt that the whole amount will be sent to him in the course of a few weeks. The position in which the church is placed is precisely of that character which appeals most strongly to the generosity of wealthy men in our day, and even the poor, who may not fully realize the situation, will probably contribute their mites to help in the rebuilding of the Tabernacle. Dr. Talmage says: "I make appeal to all our friends throughout Christendom, to all denominations, to all creeds, and those of no creeds at all to come to our assistance. I ask all readers of my sermons the world over to contribute as far as their means will allow. What we do as a church depends upon the immediate response made to this call."

REV. T. DE WITT TALMAGE, D. D.

As we have already published on two occasions a full biography of Dr. Talmage, it is unnecessary to do more here than give a brief sketch of his life. He is now in his fifty-eighth year, having been born on January 7, 1832, at Bound Brook, N. J. He was the youngest of twelve children, who had the inestimable privilege of a pious, God-fearing father and a singularly devoted praying mother. Theirs was a life of self-denial, honest labor, and constant activity in the cause of Christ. With the claims of so large a family to meet, many men would have concentrated all their efforts on the accumulation of money, but Dr. Talmage's father was liberal in every case of personal need, and in the support of religious enterprise; and when the day's labor was done he was to be found leading a prayer-meeting in some neglected district, or visiting some sick neighbor for prayer and consolation. Of the mother's tenderness, watchfulness, and self-sacrificing devotion Dr. Talmage often speaks. Their life was one of those noble, devoted lives of which the world hears nothing, but which God sees, and on which He gives His choicest blessing.

Dr. Talmage's ambition as a youth was for the legal profession, and though his parents never ceased to pray that he might give his life to the preaching of the gospel, they yielded to his wish and gave him the necessary preparation for his chosen career in the University of New York. He graduated with honors, but in 1853 the prayers of the godly couple were answered, and he entered the Theological Seminary of New Brunswick to prepare for the ministry. His first charge was at Belleville, N. J., whence, after laboring with success for three years, he removed to Syracuse, N. Y. Numerous importunate calls to larger spheres of labor came to him, but he loved his work and his people, and it was not until three more years of hard work had been given to the church that he yielded, and in 1862 accepted an invitation to become pastor of the Second Reformed Church in Philadelphia. There in addition to his pulpit labors he accepted calls to the lecture platform, which widely extended his popularity.

The Philadelphia church grew rapidly, and the young preacher's name and fame were on the lips of Christian men throughout the country, and raised the hopes of those who were wondering how the places of the aged servants of God who were nearing the grave would be filled. The invitations to other large churches which came to the young pastor were of a most flattering kind, but for seven years he declined them all. At length, in March, 1869, three calls came to him at once. One from Brooklyn, N. Y., one from Chicago, and a third from San Francisco. The Brooklyn invitation had special attractions for him. There was a large church-building in the midst of a large and rapidly growing city, yet there were only nineteen members in the church, and a meeting of church and congregation numbered only thirty-nine.

That call Dr. Talmage accepted, and the results have been unparalleled. We believe there is no record in the annals of church work to compare with it for the rapidity with which splendid success was achieved. There is no clearer indication of the calibre of the intellectual powers of the American people than that furnished by the appearance of the building now destroyed, on any Sunday morning when Dr. Talmage preached, and by the avidity with which the sermon was read in every city of the United States. The people like Dr. Talmage. They admire his grasp of social and political subjects, his splendid intrepidity, his gorgeous diction, and his scathing denunciation of the sins and vices which are eating the heart out of American life. They rejoice, too, in his boundless optimism, and are cheered and inspired by his unshaken conviction that we are on the way to a brighter and better time, and by the glowing Turner-esque word-pictures which he delights to paint in his sermons. Yes, Dr. Talmage is popular, and the Christian heart blesses God that the man whose words reach the ears of more persons than are reached by the words of any other man in Christendom is a man who preaches the old orthodox doctrines of the Gospel which God has always owned and blessed.

A LADY NIHILIST'S NEW TESTAMENT.

THE well-known Christian officer, Colonel Paschkoff, whose work for Jesus in Russia has been so signally blessed, was one day visited by a beautiful girl who besought his intercession. She begged him to procure her the permission of the Government to go into that appalling exile of Siberia which is the dread of every Russian subject. The colonel inquired in astonishment the reason for so strange a desire. Then she told her pathetic story. Her lover was a Nihilist, and she, too, had joined the secret fraternity. He had been detected, and was then in prison under sentence of deportation to Siberia. She wanted to marry him, and share his exile. Colonel Paschkoff yielded to her entreaties, and by his influence the noble, self-sacrificing girl secured the strange boon which her heart coveted. The colonel took occasion when on her departure she overwhelmed him with expressions of her gratitude to present her with a New Testament and some tracts.

Five years passed away. The Countess Schouvaloff was one day visiting a hospital for women in Moscow, and distributing tracts and portions of the Holy Scriptures to the patients. She stopped at the bedside of a poor woman whose piteous groanings were sad to hear. Her disease was a real martyrdom. But when the countess showed her the Holy Book which told of peace for the soul, and even a balm for her sufferings, the patient seemed to forget her pains. "Ah, those books, I know them!" cried she, drawing out from under her pillow little books yellow with use and exposure, and a small Testament quite worn, and with corners turned down. These books she had kept during the five years she had passed in Siberia. Although a Nihilist, she had read them in remembrance of him who had secured her permission to accompany her husband. Unfortunate illness, far from any medical aid, had brought about her fatal disease. If only before dying she could see Colonel Paschkoff again! The latter, informed of her wish, went to the hospital, and recognized with difficulty the fresh young girl of five years before. A short time after, she was carried to the Evangelical Hospital. There she was visited by Christian friends. Her heart had been prepared already in Siberia. The truth soon came to her soul, and she gave herself to the Saviour. Full of peace and happiness, she had now only one thought—to glorify her Saviour, to witness of His love. The Princess X. had her taken to her own splendid hospital at Ioula. Here the patient had all the care which her body and soul needed. Some months later, the dying woman was again at St. Petersburg. She had asked to be nearer Colonel Paschkoff, to whom she vowed eternal gratitude. There she died blessing her Saviour, and beseeching Him to reveal Himself to her husband.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

Last Visit to the Saloon.—Mr. Hamilton observes: "I heard a worker say that the last debt he had contracted was for strong drink. Just before his conversion he had gone to the saloon at which he generally left the greatest part of his week's wages, and asked the bar-keeper to send up half a dozen of bottles of porter to his house. Before they were paid for he was converted, and having then forsaken his old habits, drinking among them, he wondered how he could pay his account at the saloon without again entering it. He thought for a time, then concluded that having ordered the liquor himself it was his duty to go and pay it. As he walked into the saloon, he became uncomfortably aware that the loungers, with whom he had often tipped, were regarding him intently. Going up to the proprietor, he paid his small bill, then turned to the men and said: 'Mates, that is the last of my money that is ever going in drink. You know how I used to love drink, but I have found something far better now. I have found Christ, who instead of leading me to death gives me life everlasting.'"

Ears That did Not Hear.—Dr. Pentecost said: "I have a daughter who, when she was quite young was very fond of reading. When she got hold of a book that she liked, she would just devour it, and while thus engaged was oblivious to all around her. On one occasion she had got hold of a book peculiarly to her taste, and was seated on a sofa in the room just opposite my study, in which I was at that time engaged. In the course of my work I required for reference a book which was in a room up-stairs. I was about to go for it, when remembering my daughter was there, I called, 'Lucy! Lucy!' No movement, although I knew she heard me. 'Lucy,' I called again, 'go up-stairs and get me such a book.' 'Yes, papa, just in a minute.' Then she forgot all about it. I waited three or four minutes, still no movement from Lucy. Then I said, more sharply, 'Lucy, did you hear me?' 'Yes, papa, just wait till I finish this sentence.' She finished it, and I suppose found it so interesting that she went on to a few more. Then I became impatient and said very sharply,

'Lucy.' 'Yes papa,' and down went the book with a bang on the floor, as she scampered off to get my book. That was the first time she had really heard me. All the previous calls had struck her ear, and then rolled off, but my last call had been grasped by it, and taken to herself. That is what is meant by, 'He that hath ears to hear let him hear.'"

A Comic Singer Becomes a Precentor.—Mr. Climie said: "There was a young man who lived a notoriously fast life. He was a great favorite at the various saloons which he frequented, where his mirth and jovial ways made him always welcome, his forte being the singing of comic songs. He had a good voice, and night after night he would stand amidst his companions, who, with drunken bawls, applauded his rendering of some music-hall ditty or the latest questionable sonnet. But a change took place; God's Holy Spirit showed him his sin. At once he looked for a way of escape, and found it in Jesus. All his old ways and companions were forsaken, and he wondered how he could best serve Christ. In the old times he had served Satan manfully with his voice, why should he not now dedicate it to Christ? He acted upon the thought, and soon entered the precentor's chair to lead the praises of God. If men would only be as zealous in the service of God as they are of Satan, what a different world we should have! Christians, unfurl the banner of your Captain and march to the battle-field, where if the strife may be arduous, the victory is sure."

From a Coal Mine to Heaven.—At a Meeting held in a colliery district, not far from Glasgow, were two men, one called Andrew, and the other Donald. Donald wanted to stay to an evangelistic meeting, but Andrew did not. Finally Andrew was persuaded to remain, but he would not let anyone speak to him. 'No,' he replied, 'I am not here on my own account. I am only here with my friend.' That night Donald gave himself to Christ, and the two friends left the meeting together. Next day, while both were at work in the pit, a part of the roof came crashing down, crushing to death some of the men beneath it. Andrew had a narrow escape, but when he looked round for his friend, to his horror he saw him lying beneath a large mass of coal. As he knelt down beside his comrade, the injured man said feebly: 'I'll never get out of this alive, but tell the wife I accepted Jesus Christ as my Saviour last night. Tell her to accept Him, too, and meet me in the Father's house in heaven.' His words were true; he died a short time afterwards, in much pain, but rejoicing in Christ. To-day is ours; of to-morrow we are not sure, for 'We know not what a day may bring forth.'"

Flowers From the Queen's Garden.—"A Poor woman living near Balmoral, the favorite residence of Queen Victoria, had a daughter who lay dying. She was very fond of flowers, and as her mother had no garden of her own it was very seldom that the poor girl had her taste gratified. Often had the mother stood outside the magnificent garden of the Queen, and longed for just a few of those rare flowers that bloomed in such profusion within; if she could only procure some of them she thought it would give her daughter great happiness. Pence by pence she saved from her slender pittance, until she had a few shillings, then going to the undergardener, she asked if she could buy a rose. 'No,' was the curt response of the old Scotchman, 'the Queen does not sell flowers.' The woman told him her sad story, but the only reply she got was, 'Be off with you! the Queen does not raise flowers for the like of you.' The gardener did not know that the Queen, behind some shrubbery, had heard every word of the conversation, and now coming forward, cut off some of the finest roses, and, handing them to the woman, said, 'The gardener was quite right. The Queen does not raise flowers to sell, but she has plenty to give her people.' Similarly God has no grace to sell. He will give it, without money and without price, to those who seek it. God is a King, He gives, He does not sell."

THE BAPTISM OF FIRE.

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached last Sunday Morning, October 20, in the Academy of Music.

"None of these things move me." Acts 20: 24.

Paul's Spirit in Adverse Circumstances—The Grievous Loss of the Tabernacle—Tender Associations With the Ruins—Joyous and Mournful—A Command to Go Forward—An Appeal to All Christendom—The Communion Chalice Saved—Significant of Wide Communion—A Letter Fit for Every Stone—The Confraternity of Sorrow—A People Fused by Fire—The Encouragement of Hospitality Offered—On the Way to a Heaven Incombustible—The Light in the Window—The Watchword for the Future—A Welcome to the New Tabernacle.

BUT, Paul, have you not enough affliction to move you? Are you not an exile from your native land? With the most genial and loving nature, have you not, in order to be free for missionary journeys, given yourself to celibacy? Have you not turned away from the magnificent worldly successes that would have crowned your illustrious genius? Have you not endured the sharp and stinging neuralgias, like a thorn in the flesh? Have you not been mobbed on the land, and shipwrecked on the sea; the Sanhedrim against you, the Roman Government against you, all the world and hell against you?

"What of that?" says Paul. "None of these things move me!" It was not because he was a hard nature. Gentlest women was never more easily dissolved into tears. He could not even bear to see anybody cry, for in the midst of his sermon when he saw some one weeping her sobs aloud, "What mean ye to weep and to break mine heart?" for not to be bound only, but also to die at Jerusalem for the name of the Lord Jesus." What then did Paul mean when he said, "None of these things move me?" He meant, "I will not be diverted from the work to which I have been called by all the adversities and calamities."

I Am Ready

I think this morning I express not only my own feelings but that of every man, woman, and little child belonging to Brooklyn Tabernacle, or that was converted there, or comforted there, or blessed there, when I look toward the blackened ruins of the dear and consecrated spot and, with an aroused faith in a loving God, cry out, "None of these things move me."

When I say that, I do not mean that we have no feeling about it. Instead of standing here today in this brilliant auditorium, it would be more consonant with my feelings to sit down and weep at the words of David: "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem, let my right hand forget her cunning." Why, let me say to the strangers here to-day, in explanation of the deep emotion of my flock, we had there in that building sixteen years of religious revival. I believe that a hundred thousand souls were born there. They came from all parts of the earth, and we shall never see them again until the books are opened. Why, sirs! our children were there baptized, and at those altars our young men and maidens took the marriage vow, and out of those gates we carried our dead. When from the roof of my house last Sunday morning at 3 o'clock, I saw our church in flames, I said, "That is the last of the building from which we buried our De Witt on that cold December day, when it seemed all Brooklyn wept with my household." And it was just as hard for you to give up your loved ones as for us to give up ours. Why, like the beautiful vines that still cover some of our affections are clambering all over the ruins, and I could kiss the ashes that mark the place where it once stood. Why, now that I think of it, I cannot think of it as an inanimate pile, but as a soul, a mighty soul, an indestructible soul. I am sure that majestic organ had a soul, for we have often heard it speak and sing and shout and wail, and when the soul of that organ entered heaven I think Handel and Haydn and Mozart and Mendelssohn and Beethoven were at the gates to welcome it. So I do not use the words of my text in a heartless way, but in the sense that we must not and will not be diverted from our work by the appalling disasters which have befallen us. We will not turn aside one inch from our determination to do all we can for the present and everlasting happiness of all the people whom we may be able to meet. "None of these things move me. None of these things move you."

Among the Ruins

The Fallen Walls,

When I looked out through the dismal rain from the roof of my house, and saw the church crumbling brick by brick and timber by timber, I said to myself: Does this mean that my work in Brooklyn is ended? Does this terminate my association with this city, where I have been more than twenty years, glad in all its prosperities, and sad in all its misfortunes? And a still small voice came to me, a voice that is no longer still or small, but most emphatic and commanding, through pressure of hand, and newspaper column, and telegram and letter and contributions, saying, "Go forward!"

I have made and I now make

Appeal to all Christendom to help us. We want all Christendom to help, and I will acknowledge the receipt of every contribution, great or small, with my own hand. We want to build larger and better. We want it a national church, in which people of all creeds and all nations may find a home. The contributions already sent in make a small-hearted church forever impossible. Would I not be a sorry spectacle for angels and men if, in a church built by Israelites and Catholics, as well as all the styles of people commonly called evangelical, I should, instead of the banner of the Lord God Almighty, raise a fluttering rag of small sectarianism? If we had three hundred thousand dollars we would put them all in one great monument to the mercy of God. People ask on all sides about what we shall build. I answer, it all depends on the contributions sent in from here and from the ends of the earth. I say now to all the Baptists, that we shall have in it a baptistery. I say to all Episcopalians, we shall have in our services, as heretofore at our communion table, portions of the Liturgy. I say to the Catholics we shall have a cross over the pulpit, and probably on the tower. I say to the Methodists, we mean to sing there like the voices of mighty thunderings. I say to all denominations, we mean to preach a

Religion as Wide as Heaven

and as good as God. We have said we had a total loss. But there was one exception. The only things we saved were the silver communion chalices, for they happened to be in another building, and I take that fact as typical that we are to be in communion with all Christendom. "I believe in the communion of saints!" I think, if all the Brooklyn firemen and all insurance companies should search among those ruins on Schermerhorn Street, they would not find a splinter large as the tip end of the little finger marked with bigotry. And as it is said that the exhumed bricks of the walls of Babylon have on them the letter N, standing for Nebuchadnezzar, I declare to you that if we ever get a new church the letter we should like to have on every stone and every timber would be the letter C, for that would stand both for Christ and for catholicity. The last two words I uttered in the old church on Friday night, some of you may remember, were "Hallelujah! Amen!" The two words that I utter now as most expressive of my feelings in this our first service after the Baptism of Fire, are Hallelujah! Amen! "None of these things move me."

We are kept in this mood by two or three considerations. The first is, that God rules. In what way the church took fire I do not know. It has been charged on the lightnings. Well, the Lord controls the lightnings. He managed them several thousands of years before our electricians were born. The Bible indicates that, though they flash down the sky recklessly, God builds for them a road to travel.

In the Psalms it is said: "He made a way for the lightning and thunder." Ever since the time of Benjamin Franklin the world has been trying to tame the lightnings, and they seem to be quite well harnessed, but they occasionally kick over the traces. But though we cannot master great natural forces, God can and does, and that God is our Father and best Friend, and this thought gives us confidence.

We are also reinforced by the increased consolation that comes from Confraternity of Sorrow.

The people who, during the last sixteen years, sat on the other side of the aisle, whose faces were familiar to you, but to whom you had never spoken—you greeted them this week with smiles and tears as you said: "Well, the old place is gone." You did not want to seem to cry, and so you swept the sleeve near the corner of the eye, and pretended it was the sharp wind made your eyes weak. Ah! there was nothing the matter with your eyes; it was your soul bubbling over. I tell you that it is impossible to sit for years around the same church fireside and not have the sympathies in common. Somehow you feel that you would like those people on the other side of the aisle, about whom you know but little, prospered and pardoned and blessed and saved. You feel as if you are in the same boat, and you want to glide up the same harbor, and disembark at the same wharf.

If you put gold and iron and lead and zinc in sufficient heat they will melt into a conglomerate mass; and I really feel that last Sabbath's

Fire Has Fused us All, grosser and finer natures, into one. It seems as if we all had our hands on a wire connected with an electric battery; and when this church sorrow started it thrilled through the whole circle, and we all felt the shock. The oldest man and the youngest child could join hands in this misfortune. Grandfather said, "I expected from those altars to be buried;" and one of the children last Sabbath cried, "Grandpa, that place was next to our own house!"

Yea, we are supported and confident in this time by the cross of Christ. That is, used to the fire. On the dark day when Jesus died, the lightning struck it from above, and the flames of hell dashed up against it from beneath. That tearful, painful, tender, blessed cross still stands. On it we hang all our hopes; beneath it we put down all our sins; in the light of it we expect to make the rest of our pilgrimage. Within sight of such a sacrifice, who can feel he has it hard? In the sight of such a symbol, however great the darkness that may come down upon him? Jesus lives! The loving, patient, sympathizing, mighty Jesus! It shall not be told on earth, or in hell, or in heaven, that three Hebrew children had the Son of God beside them in the fire, and that a whole church was forsaken by the Lord when they went through a furnace about two hundred feet wide.

Who Can Be Discouraged,

O Lord Jesus! shall we take out of thy hand the flowers and the fruits, and the brightness and the joys, and then turn away because thou dost give us one cup of bitterness to drink? Oh no, Jesus! we will drink it dry. But how it is changed! Blessed Jesus, what hast thou put into the cup to sweeten it? Why, it has become the wine of heaven, and our souls grow strong. I come now, and place both of my feet deep down into the blackened ashes of our consumed church, and I cry out with an exhilaration that I never felt since the day of my soul's emancipation, "Victory! victory! through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

Your harps, ye trembling saints, Down from the willows take,
Loud to the praise of love divine
Bid every string awake.

We are also reinforced by the catholicity that I have already referred to. We are in the Academy to-day, not because we have no other place to go. Last Sabbath morning at 9 o'clock we had not one church; now we have about thirty, all at our disposal. Their pastors and their trustees say: "You may take our main audience rooms, you may take our lecture-rooms, you may take our church parlors, you may baptize in our baptisteries and sit on our anxious-seats." Oh! if there be any larger-hearted ministers or anywhere than in Brooklyn, tell me where they are, that I may go and see them before I die. The millennium has come. People keep wondering when it is coming. It has come. The lion and the lamb lie down together, and the tiger eats straw like an ox. I should like to have seen two of the old-time bigots, with their swords, fighting through that great fire on Schermerhorn Street last Sabbath. I am sure the swords would have melted, and they who wielded them would have learned war no more.

Larger-Hearted Churches

I can never say a word against any other denomination of Christians. I thank God I never have been tempted to do it. I cannot be a sectarian. I have been told I ought to be, and I have tried to be, but I have not enough material in me to make such a structure. Every time I get the thing most done, there comes a fire, or something else, and all is gone. The angels of God shake out on this air, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, goodwill toward men." I do not know but I see on the horizon the first gleam of the morning which shall unite all denominations in one organization, distinguished only by the locality as in apostolic times. It was then the Church of Thyatira, and the Church of Thessalonica, and the Church of Antioch, and the Church of Laodicea. So I do not know but that in the future history, and not far off either, it may be simply a distinction of locality, and not of creed, as the Church of New York, the Church of Brooklyn, the Church of Boston, the Church of Charleston, the Church of Madras, the Church of Constantinople,

The Church of America.

My dear brethren, we cannot afford to be severely divided. Standing in front of the great foes of our common Christianity, we want to put on the whole armor of God, and march down in solid column, shoulder to shoulder! One Commander! One triumph!

The trumpet gives a martial strain
O Israel! gird thee for the fight;
Arise, the combat to maintain;
Arise, and put thy foes to flight.

We also feel reinforced by the thought that we are on the way to a heaven that can never burn down. Fires may sweep through other cities—but I am glad to know that the New Jerusalem is fireproof. There will be no engines rushing through those streets; there will be no temples consumed in that city. Coming to the doors of that Church, we will find them open, resonant with songs, and not cries of fire. Oh, my dear brother and sister! if this short lane of life comes up so soon to that blessed place,

What is the Use of Worrying?

I have felt a good many times this last week like Father Taylor, the sailor preacher. He got in a long sentence while he was preaching one day, and lost himself, and could not find his way out of the sentence. He stopped, and said, "Brethren, I have lost the nominative of this sentence, and things are generally mixed up, but I am bound for the kingdom, anyhow." And during this last week, when I saw the rushing to and fro, and the excitement, I said to myself, "I do not know just where we shall start again, but I am bound for the kingdom, anyhow." I do not want to go just yet. I want to be pastor of this people until I am about eighty-nine years of age, but I have sometimes thought that there are such glories ahead that I may be persuaded to go a little earlier—for instance, at eighty-two or eighty-three—but I really think that, if we could have an appreciation of what God has in reserve for us, we would want to go, stepping right out of the Academy of Music into the glories of the skies.

Ah! that is a good land. Why, they tell me that in that land they never have a heartache. They tell me that a man might walk five hundred years in that land and never see a tear or hear a sigh. They tell me that our friends who have left us and gone there, their feet are radiant as the sun, and that they take hold of the hand of Jesus familiarly, and that they open that hand and see in the palm of it a healed wound that must have been very cruel before it was healed. And they tell me that there is no winter there, and that they never get hungry or cold, and that the sewing girl never wades through the snow-bank to her daily toil, and that the clock never strikes twelve for the night, but only twelve for the day. See

That Light in the Window.

I wonder who set it there! "Oh!" you say, "my father that went into glory must have set that light in the window." No; guess again. "My mother, who died fifteen years ago in Jesus, I think must have set that light there." No; guess again. You say, "My darling little child, that last summer I put away for the resurrection, I think she must have set that light there in the window." No; guess again. Jesus set it there; and He will keep it burning until the day we put our finger on the latch of the door and go in to be at home forever. Oh! when my sight gets black in death, put on my eyelids that sweet ointment. When in the last weariness I cannot take another step, just help me put my foot on that doorsill. When my ear catches no more the voices of wife and child, let me go right in, to have my deafness cured by the stroke of the harpers whose fingers fly over the strings with the anthems of the free.

Heaven Never Burns Down!

The fires of the last day, that are already kindled in the heart of the earth, but are hidden because God keeps down the hatches—those internal fires will after a while break through the crust, and the plains and the mountains and the seas will be consumed, and the flames will fling their long arms into the skies; but all the terrors of a burning world will do no more harm to that heavenly temple than the fires of the setting sun which kindle up the window glass of the house on yonder hill-top. Oh, blessed land! But I do not want to go there until I see the Brooklyn Tabernacle rebuilt. You say, "Will it be?" You might as well ask me if the sun will rise to-morrow morning, or if the next spring will put garlands on its head. You and I may not do it—you and I may not live to see it; but the Church of God does not stand on two legs, nor on a thousand legs.

The Watchword.

How did the Israelites get through the Red Sea? I suppose somebody may have come and said: "There is no need of trying; you will get your feet wet; you will spoil your clothes; you will drown yourselves. Who ever heard of getting through such a sea as that?" How did they get through it? Did they go back? No. Did they go to the right? No. Did they go to the left? No. They went forward in the strength of the Lord Almighty; and that is the way we mean to get through the Red Sea. By going forward! But, says some one, "If we should build a larger church, would you be able with your voice to fill it?" Why, I have been wearing myself out for the last sixteen years trying to keep my voice in. Give me room where I can preach the glories of Christ and the grand-eurs of heaven.

Forward! We have to march on, breaking down all bridges behind us, making retreat impossible. Throw away your knapsack if it impedes your march. Keep your sword arm free. Strike for Christ and His kingdom while you may. No people ever had a better mission than you are sent on. Prove yourselves worthy. If I am not fit to be your leader, set me aside. The brightest goal on earth that I can think of is a country parsonage amidst the mountains. But I am not afraid to lead you. I have some dollars; they are at your disposal. I have good physical health; it is yours as long as it lasts. I have enthusiasm of soul; I will not keep it back from your service. I have some faith in God, and I shall direct it toward the rebuilding of our new spiritual house. Come on, then! I will lead you.

Come on, ye aged men, not yet passed over Jordan! Give us one more lift before you go into the promised land. You men in middle life, harness all your business faculties to this enterprise. Young man, put the fire of your soul into this work. Let women consecrate their persuasiveness and persistence to this cause, and they will be preparing benedictions for their dying hour and everlasting rewards; and if Satan really did burn that Tabernacle down, as some people say he did, he will find it the poorest job he ever undertook.

Good-by, Old Tabernacle!

I put my fingers to my lip and throw a kiss to the departed church. In the last day, may we be able to meet the songs there sung, and the prayers there offered, and the sermons there preached. Good-by, old place, where some of us first felt the gospel peace, and others heard the last message ere they fled away into the skies! Good-by, Brooklyn Tabernacle of 1873! But welcome our new church. (I see it as plainly as though it were already built!) Your gates wider, your songs more triumphant, your gatherings more glorious. Rise out of the ashes and greet our waiting vision! Burst on our souls, oh day of our church's resurrection! By your altars may we be prepared for the hour when the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. Welcome, Tabernacle of 1890!

A VICTIM OF SUPERSTITION.

(See illustration on page 684.)

How sorely Africa needs the light and love of the gospel to be widely diffused among her people is shown by the following incident, related by Bishop Crowther: A slave who lived at Alenso was decoyed to a neighboring village under pretence that he was appointed to offer a goat as a sacrifice to a dead man. On arrival at the house where the corpse was laid out, the goat was taken from the slave, and he was at once pounced upon by two stalwart men and bound fast in chains. The poor man saw at once that he himself, not the goat, was to be the victim. He calmly addressed the people around, saying he was quite willing to die and need not be put in chains. A pipe was brought to him, which he smoked, a new cloth replaced his rags, and while he was having his last smoke the daughter of the deceased chief stood before him and began to eulogize her dead father, telling of his former greatness and achievements. The address was directed to the victim, that he might repeat the same to the inhabitants of the spirit world when he arrived there.

The news of the intended sacrifice was soon circulated. It reached the ears of the missionary, Rev. J. Buck, who, with some Sierra Leone friends, hastened to the spot. A large hole had been already dug; the poor man was led into it, and ordered to lie on his back with his arms spread out. The missionary and his friends used all possible arguments, entreaties, and pleadings for his release, but in vain. They offered to give bullocks for sacrifice instead of the man, but these were flatly refused; and while they stood entreating, the corpse was brought and placed on the poor slave. He was then ordered to embrace it, and obeyed. The missionary and his friends turned away from the horrible sight as the grave was being filled, burying the living, as a sacrifice, with the dead.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 71 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for October:

The Seven Seals. By William Kelly.

St. James's Prophecy in Acts 15:16, 17.

The Future Imperial Church and its Divine Head.

Jerusalem to be Trodden Down by Antichrist.

The 144,000. By the Late Rev. R. A. Purdon.

Seven Proofs that Antichrist is Future. By the Late Rev.

W. Burgh.

Only Twelve Years to live.

The Right Position for the Believer at the Present Time.

The French Elections.

DAVID'S REBELLIOUS SON.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for November 3, II Samuel 15: 1-12; Golden Text, Eph. 6: 1, 2.

The Only Way to Mercy—The Retribution for David's Sin—A Crime Against a Family Avenged by Family Trouble—Absalom's Flight and Recall—His Treachery Toward His Father—The Deceiver Deceived—The Conspiracy Unveiled—The Warrior King in Flight—Fidelity in a Stranger—David's Acquiescence in Adversity—The Climax of His Humiliation—Absalom an Instrument of God—Mine and Countermine—A Prophecy Fulfilled.

"I WILL raise up evil against thee out of thine own house," was God's message to David by Nathan the prophet. (II Sam 12: 11.) The law knows no mercy; under the law of a holy God righteous retribution must follow sin. Every transgression and disobedience receives a just recompense of reward. (Heb. 2: 3.) David's sin had broken up a family life; evil must arise out of his family. Nothing but Christ's redemption, believed in, accepted, and dwelt in, can reverse the sentence of the righteous law of God. In as far as we live under the law, the law condemns and punishes us. In as far as we live in the power of the blood of Jesus, in newness of life, which is the indwelling life, we are transplanted from the law into Him and He into us. Christ "is the end of the law for righteousness unto every one that believeth." (Rom. 10: 4.)

Already sin far more terrible than his own sin had broken out in David's family, and Absalom, his son, had avenged the outrage upon his sister Tamar by the death of his half-brother Amnon, taking the law into his own hands, not by any desire for the honor of God, for he knew not God, not from any abhorrence of sin, as his after conduct shews us, but only from his human or diabolical desire for revenge.

And These Were the Children of David!

Oh how terrible it is when God humbles us through our children, shews us the evil of our own hearts as it is transmitted to our children! Absalom fled, but David could not forget his son; wilful, selfish, wayward, his own brother's murderer, yet he was his son. "David mourned for his son every day." (II Sam. 13: 37.)

Nothing escaped Joab; he knew David through and through, and after Absalom had been three years taking refuge with his grandfather, Talmai, King of Geshur, Joab employed "a wise woman" to invent and tell to the King a story which should touch his sensibilities and enable him to introduce the subject of Absalom. The end was that Absalom was recalled, but for two years more he did not see the King's face, for David must deny his own heart in his loyalty to God, who hated the sin of Absalom. But Absalom was not slow to compass his own ends, and by setting Joab's field of barley on fire he prevailed upon him to obtain an interview for him with the King. (II Sam. 14: 29-33.)

But Absalom was an unchanged man; self reigned in his own heart; he lived for self and nothing else. He had gained his object in being restored to the favor of the King, his father, but instead of devoting himself to him out of loving gratitude, he made use of his position against him. He "prepared him chariots and horses, and fifty men to run before him." In order to further his plans he must make an appearance which would command the respect of the people; they must know him as prince by the state which he kept up. But, joined with this, he made use of every art by which he could ingratiate himself with the people. He rose up early and stood by the gate on the wall for all who came to the King for judgment, and thus intercepting them on their way to the palace, he misrepresented his father's government. He asked the plaintiff his name and address, and then said, "Thy matters are good and right, but there is no man deputed of the King to hear thee. . . . Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man that had any cause might come unto me, and I would do him justice."

Standing there in state, as he did, the people very naturally did him obeisance, and in the most condescending and genial way he would take them and kiss them. In this manner "Absalom stole the hearts of the men of Israel." At this time David was unconscious of what was going on, but God's word was being fulfilled; there was evil to David in his own house. The plot was ripe for execution, and Absalom made use of the most dastardly and to gain his ends. He came to his father and said, "I pray thee let me go and pay my vow which I have vowed unto the Lord in Hebron for thy servant vowed a vow while I abode at Geshur in Syria, saying, 'If the Lord shall bring me again to Jerusalem, then I will serve the Lord.'" Poor David! It may be that his heart was gladdened, and that he thought he saw signs of a true conversion. But he was bitterly to reap in his own son the deceit which he himself had been guilty of. The King said unto him "go in peace," and he went forth to disturb the peace of his father's heart and house and kingdom. Absalom went to Hebron, and from thence "sent spies throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet, then ye shall say Absalom reigneth in Hebron."

Consummate Hypocrisy

So secret had been the conspiracy, and carried out with such marvellous success, that two hundred men, who went with Absalom from Jerusalem, were utterly unaware of all that was going on; "they went in their simplicity, and they knew not anything." Among others who joined Absalom was Ahithophel, David's counsellor, for whom he sent while he offered the sacrifices for which he had obtained leave of absence from the King.

But truth must out; the conspiracy became too great to keep secret any longer, and then came a messenger to break the news to David, and to tell him that the hearts of the men of Israel were after Absalom. It was

Sore News to David.

He was proud of Absalom, his fine, beautiful son; his heart would not rest while Absalom was away from him, and now that son, that very son, had risen up against him, and the curse of his own sin was bearing its terrible fruit more and more. The warrior King became feeble as a woman, he could not fight against his son, he had but one thought, and he told it to his servants, "Arise, let us flee." It was a new phase in the life of David to flee before his enemies, was hitherto unheard of, but the enemy was his own son, and courage failed him. It was touching that now, when his own son turned against him, his servants should say, "Behold, thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the King shall appoint." Surely many of them felt in their own hearts that it was a mistake in David to abandon his throne to a rebellious son.

It was a sorry assemblage which filed out of Jerusalem that day. Now that David could no longer hide from himself the sin and hypocrisy of Absalom, he shrank from letting it come to the worst; and that Absalom should stain his soul by the blood of his own father—rather anything than that. Very touching was the love shown him by some of his followers. Six hundred former Philistines of Gath were among them, and the King said to Ittai the Gittite: "Wherefore goest thou also with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king [Absalom] for thou art a stranger and also an exile. Whereas thou camest but yesterday, should I this day make thee go up and down with us? Seeing I go whither I may, return thou and take back thy brethren; mercy and truth be with thee." But God was with David; it was not for his followers a choice of prosperity or position, but

God was on his Side, and Ittai (once a heathen, now probably a spiritual child of David's) answered, "As the Lord liveth, and as my lord the King liveth, surely in what place my lord the King shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be." It was grateful to David to have such faithfulness among his followers, and he said, "Go and pass over—and Ittai the Gittite passed over, and all his men, and all the little ones that were with him," all these were of one mind with the man who followed God's anointed.

The priests and Levites, with Zadok the high priest at the head, carried the ark of God along with the company of those who fled, but the King had faith in his God, and said to Zadok: "Carry back the ark of God into the city; if I shall find favor in the eyes of the Lord, He will bring me again and shew me both it and His habitation: but if He thus say, I have no delight in thee, behold here I am, let Him do to me as seemeth good to Him." "All the country wept with a loud voice. . . . And David went up by the ascent of Mount Olivet, and wept as he went up, and had his head covered, and he went barefoot." No doubt David saw in all this the consequence of his sin, and recognized, as no other in that mournful company could, the hand of God in all that had befallen him. "All the people that was with him covered every man his head, and they went up, weeping as they went up." But the climax of his sorrow manifested itself when Shimei, the son of Gera, came out to curse him, and in holding back Abishai from destroying him David said, "Behold, my son which came forth of my bowels seeketh my life; how much more now may this Benjamite do it? Let him alone, and let him curse, for the Lord hath bidden him."

Others saw the unnatural ingratitude with which Absalom requited his father's love, but David the fulfilment of the prophecy of Nathan,

"Evil out of Thine own House."

He saw his son only as the tool of God to shew him the awful wickedness of his own sin. Shimei's cursing could not add to the already almost unendurable burden of Absalom's rebellion. David accepted the bitter cup from God, and did not question or complain of His dealings with him. Perhaps if David had now been given a choice whether Absalom should then sin against him and involve his own soul in irreparable ruin, or whether he himself should suffer all his life some painful sickness, David might have eagerly chosen the latter, but it would not have so served to make him know his son.

Zadok and Abiathar, the priests, were on David's side, and he directed them to remain in Jerusalem to be bearers of tidings to him in the wilderness. He was told that Ahithophel was among the conspirators, and prayed, "O Lord, I pray thee turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness." That prayer was heard in the end, as events proved. When Hushai the Archite came to him with his coat rent, and earth on his head, he directed him not to follow him, but to remain in Jerusalem and offer to be Absalom's counsellor, and so to defeat the counsel of Ahithophel. So Hushai, David's friend, came into the city, and Absalom came into Jerusalem."

Not long after the flight of David the rebel Absalom with a large following entered Jerusalem in triumph, the base Ahithophel, the time-serving counsellor, accompanying him. It seemed as though Absalom was to have everything his own way, for when Hushai came to him, he, David's well-known friend, said, "God save the king! God save the King!" And Absalom said, "Is this thy kindness to thy friend? Why wentest thou not with thy friend?" Hushai, who was playing his part for David's sake said, "Nay, but whom the Lord and this people and all the men of Israel choose, his will I be, and with him will I abide." He might have had David in his heart all the time he spoke thus. "And again, whom should I serve? Should I not serve in the presence of his son? As I have served in thy father's presence, so will I serve in thy presence." Hushai had served God in his father's presence, and Hushai would serve God in his presence, but Absalom could not understand the language of faith and of loyalty to God.

Absalom first asked counsel of Ahithophel, and he counselled an awful deed of sin, which should be done in the sight of all Israel. It was part of the fulfilment of that terrible retribution which God had spoken of (II Sam. 12: 11, 12) in saying, "Thou didst it secretly, but I will do this thing before all Israel and before the sun." Sin after sin came upon the children of David; every true principle, every sentiment of honor, of righteousness, of purity, of holiness, in him was denied by the character of his own family. No more poignant grief could than this terrible mortification; then there was the consciousness of their lost souls, and then, and above all, the knowledge that if he had not so sinned they might have been saved, and made blessings to others. Oh how blessed it is to turn from the severity of the law to the grace of the Gospel. "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ, for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. For the promise is unto you and to your children." (Acts 2: 38, 39.)

Crush a Parent's Heart

THE KINGDOM.

By Rev. A. C. Tris, of Howard, Kans.

Apparent Confusion and Scriptural Inconsistencies—Their Disappearance in Fuller Light—The Edict of the King—The Right of Appointment—A Covenant—A Threefold Authority—Birth, Purchase, Conquest—The Resurrection a Proof—The Kingdom Still Future—The People of the Kingdom—Israel as Well as Judah—Distinct Nation, not a Christian Sect—Distinction Between the Church and the Kingdom—In its Offices—Boundaries—Unity—No Basis for the Sensual Conception.

As the unscientific observer of the starry heavens sees only confusion and irregularity, while the astronomer perceives and admires the wondrous order and harmony in the position and movement of the celestial bodies, so the casual and careless reader of the Bible is impressed with apparent contradictions and inconsistencies, which become more and more clear as the sacred volume is studied. One of the passages which has been most Frequently Misunderstood,

and has caused perplexity in the minds of readers, is that remarkable passage in Luke 22: 29, 30: "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as My Father hath appointed unto Me; that ye may eat and drink at My table in My kingdom, and sit on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

A statement so clear and definite deserves our most careful study. It is one of the greatest prophecies of our Saviour. Indeed, the words are more than a prophecy; they are a mandate and royal edict of a King, appointing His officers in His government, which will be established in a future time. They are a divine declaration, corroborating the prophecies of the Old Testament, and establishing fully the claim: That Jesus Christ is the true Messiah of Israel, the Savior of the world, and the Second Adam of the "Palingenesia," the renewed earth.

The Appointing Power.

We are dazzled in approaching this subject by the connection which exists between God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit, which we find here in the words, "as My Father hath appointed unto Me." Indeed, there is opened a vista into the deepest secrets of the nature of the Everlasting Jehovah, and also of an agreement or covenant, in which the plan of salvation and glory was devised, before the world was made; and in which was set in order the rule and government of nations and dominions (Dan. 10: 13, 14), and also, in which was ordained all those things which should belong to the kingdom to come, spoken of in the above-mentioned text. "For it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." (Luke 12: 32.)

The person appointed by the Father is "God manifest in the flesh" (1 Tim. 3: 16), the Logos tabernacled among us (John 1: 14), "the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth;" Immanuel, God with us, and in such a capacity He is accredited at the court of heaven, and is the highest appointing power. The Greek word, "I appoint unto you," signifies, "I appoint by covenant." (Heb. 9: 17.)

Flaccius and Beza translate the word, "I covenant to give;" E. Schmedius, "I assign by will," and this same word is twice used in the text, so that the Father appointed by covenant, and Jesus the Son, appointed likewise by covenant.

It must be noticed that the Lord Jesus qualifies Himself. Not in His office of Prophet, neither of that of a Priest, but, especially as the Christ of God, the King of Israel in His kingly office (John 1: 49), and also that He declares emphatically: That He is the possessor of such a kingdom to come, and that He has a right to give such preferments legally to His apostles as rulers in His kingdom; and, indeed, our Lord has a threefold right: He was born a king of the Jews. (Matt. 2: 2.) He bought His kingdom by His redeeming blood (John 11: 52); and He will conquer all His enemies. (Ps. 110: 2.) The Father has His Messiah already anointed, His King upon Zion, the hill of His holiness. (Ps. 2: 6.) The declaration of Gabriel is proclaimed: "God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David" (Luke 1: 32, 33); and the Resurrection of Christ is the surest pledge that Jesus is the lawful and legal heir of the Davidic covenant. (11 Sam. 7: 12; Acts 2: 30; Ps. 89: 4; Ps. 132: 11; Rev. 3: 21.)

Age to Come.

This appointment and promise was made for an age or dispensation to come. It was not a kingdom already in existence, because the twelve tribes of Israel were not homogeneous at that period in the land of Palestine. Neither can it mean the dispensation of the Gentile nations, nor the present Christian Church, because "Jerusalem is yet trodden down of the Gentiles." (Luke 21: 24.) We know with certainty that this appointment and kingdom belongs to a future era. We have the key to this text in Matt. 19: 18. In the regeneration "palingenesia Greek" renewed earth, when "the Son of man shall sit on the throne of His glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel," and in Rev. 2: 26: "To him (that overcometh) will I give power over the nations." (Rev. 11: 15; Dan. 2: 44; 7: 14, 18, 27; Matt. 8: 11, 12.)

The People of the Kingdom.

Principally, the kingdom belongs to the Israelites (Jews) restored in their own land, Canaan. The words of the text are plain. The appointing power, the King, is Jesus of Nazareth. Those who are appointed—the apostles—all Jews by pedigree. The kingdom is the whole house of Jacob, the twelve tribes of Israel, and the twelve thrones are in the midst of that people, and all this corroborates the following prophecies: Is. 9: 6, 7; Jer. 33: 15-26; Ezek. 36: 8-15; Ezek. 39: 21-29; Hos. 3: 4, 5; Zech. 14: 4; Rom. 11: 25-32; Luke 1: 32, 33.

Erroneous Ideas.

Allow us to direct the attention of the unbiassed reader to the words of our blessed Lord. He speaks of "judging the twelve tribes of Israel," and if so, it must mean that the Jews are yet a people and a nation; and not, as many Christians advocate, "That the Jews are only a sect, and not a nation." Christ and the apostles, thrones, and judging cannot apply to a sect. We maintain that the scattered nation shall be restored to Canaan, not as a sect, but as a nation. (Jer. 32: 37-44; Jer. 33: 24, 25.)

Many clergymen and others maintain: "That in future time all the Jews shall be converted, and become members of the different Christian denominations, and that the whole sect shall be so merged in the Churches of the present time that the distinction of Jew and Gentile shall be obliterated." The words and prophecy of Christ under consideration teach us plainly: That Israel shall remain for ever a distinct nation, a kingdom; twelve tribes, having their own rulers and judges—and, although many Jews will become Christian professors, yet the distinctive national idiosyncrasy of the Abrahamic covenant people will always remain, and the distinction between Jew and Gentile shall be known.

(To be Concluded.)

A FRENCHWOMAN'S REQUEST.

AMONG the records of Rev. R. W. McAll's work in Paris during the past month is the following incident, related in the McAll Record (published by the Association, at 1622 Locust Street, Philadelphia): Arriving at the Salle one evening much earlier than usual, I found a bright, honest-looking young couple, who informed me they had come that night to be made Protestants. We sat down and I spoke to them of sin, of personal sin, of our lost condition, of true contrition, of a personal Saviour, through faith in his blood shed for the sins of each one of us. They looked very serious and a little puzzled, but I had to cease as the people were coming in. M. Rombeau preached that evening, and the Holy Spirit began its work. To say that these strangers listened with rapt attention is not to say too much, and at the close of the service, the woman came up and pressing my hand hard, said with tears and wonder in her eyes, "Madame, je l'ai tout pris pour moi." ("I took it all to myself.") The man was surprised and delighted. She apologized for the address she gave me, saying they were very poor and had to put up with a furnished room in that quarter for cheapness. It was at a wine shop in the very blackest quarter of Versailles. They continued coming very regular, bringing with them, and often in the snow, their little lad of six. We had all got to like them. One night the man said his wife had been ill for two or three days. The next morning found me with her. She was better and alone. I read a portion of the Word, and perceiving that she was under conviction, we knelt down in that terrible room, where probably prayer had never been made before. She begged of the Saviour to save her, and she believed He did. I believe so, too, for her face shone with a newness of beauty it had never possessed before, the beauty of deliverance and joy. I knew she had got it. How she loved the gospel now!

A NEW YORKER'S DISCOVERY IN VIENNA.

IN the columns of a European journal a remarkable incident is reported. It states that a few days previously an American traveller called at Huber's, the famous photographic establishment in the Austrian capital, to have his portrait taken. He had to wait a few minutes for the usual preparations, so an album of specimen photographs was handed to him. All at once the employés in the next room heard an outcry, and, hurrying to the salon where the stranger was waiting, they found him lying senseless on the floor. When he recovered consciousness he explained that the album at which he had been looking, contained a photograph which he was convinced was that of his daughter, whom he had not seen for twenty-one years. The features were so like those of his wife that he could not be mistaken. He said that unfortunate circumstances had compelled him to leave his wife twenty-one years ago, at a time when his daughter was only three years of age. He had made every effort to find out the whereabouts of his family a few years later, but had not been able to discover any trace of them. He had long since been driven to the conviction that they were both dead. The photographer told him that the portrait in question was that of a teacher of the piano-forte, residing in Vienna, giving her name and address. It was arranged that the stranger, a citizen of New York, should call on her the next day, and that in the meantime she should be warned of his intended visit. The lady turned out to be his daughter, and has already left Vienna with her father for the United States. He is a wealthy speculator, and the poor music-mistress has suddenly found herself heiress to a fortune of several millions of dollars. While he had been longingly searching for her to endow her with his wealth, she had believed him dead, or indifferent to her. It is so with millions of God's creatures. He loves them, seeks them, promises them endless happiness and joy, yet they know it not, and even when His servants proclaim the message to them they do not believe.

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

NOTICE.

At the beginning of next year the "Christian Herald" will be enlarged by making the pages a little longer and wider than now, so that thirteen pages will contain a larger quantity of reading matter than fourteen of the present size. The price of the annual subscription will NOT be increased.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The International Maritime Conference Held its first session in Washington on October 16, and elected Admiral Samuel R. Franklin, of the American Navy, President of the Conference. The nomination was made by Mr. Charles Hall, one of the English delegates, and the election was unanimous. In welcoming the delegates Mr. Blaine said: "On behalf of the United States I welcome you, gentlemen, to the honorable, the scientific, the philanthropic duties which lie before you. The already great and rapidly increasing intercourse between continent and continent, between nation and nation, demands that every protection against the dangers of the sea, and every guard for the safety of human life, shall be provided. The spoken languages of the world will continue to be many, but necessity commands that the unspoken language of the sea shall be one. That language must be as universal as the needs of man for commerce and intercourse with his fellow-man. The deep interest which the maritime nations have taken in the questions at issue is shown by the eminent character and the wide experience of the delegates to whom they have committed the important work."

The Department of State is Not Yet Clear of the Samoan difficulty. King Malietoa has formally abdicated, and by his advice the Samoans have elected Mataafa king. As Mataafa held the islands for Malietoa against the Germans, he is personally obnoxious to the German Government, which cannot forget or forgive the humiliations it suffered at his hands. His election, therefore, is regarded as a direct affront to Germany. The precise obligations of our State Department in the matter have not been disclosed, but it is suspected that they are infringed by Mataafa's election, and that Germany, having made liberal concessions at the Conference, will hold the United States responsible for the good behavior of her protégé. It is therefore a matter of much concern to the Government at Washington that a new and serious difficulty should be created by almost the first use the Samoans have made of the autonomy secured to them by the persistence of the United States.

The Election in New York this Fall Promises to be one of unusual interest. Ex-Senator Platt, who is regarded as the owner of the Republican party in the State, controlled the Convention, and carried all his points in defiance of his opponents, and in some cases against the wishes of his friends. The Democratic Convention was controlled by Governor Hill in similar despotic fashion. Tammany Hall, which has a monopoly at present of city offices, has seized the county nominations, leaving the County Democracy out in the cold. As everything has been arranged on all sides to suit the bosses of both parties, who just now are representatives of the most degraded elements of each, the citizens have been aroused, and propose to nominate a ticket of their own, composed of respectable men. A few days ago a strong party journal challenged the mugwumps to "stand up and be counted." It looks now as though it will take a longer time to count them than to count their opponents, unless a larger number of the men who sell their votes for two dollars each are bought up.

One of Commissioner Tanner's Re-ratings has been voluntarily renounced by the recipient, who sent back the $4,300 back pay and the warrant to Secretary Noble with a manly letter. This example is set by Senator Manderson, of Nebraska. In the course of his explanatory letter he states that Tanner raised his pension without his application. He goes on to say that he asked to be examined by a board to determine how far his disability justified the advance under the pension laws, but as no examining board had been appointed, and having had no information that such board would be appointed, he desired full and searching examination by Mr. Noble, to determine whether the action taken by the Pension Office was such as was warranted by the rules of proceeding governing such cases. The Senator said, "I wished the strictest construction of the law, rule, and precedent, and could not consent to any straining of either." The Secretary having replied that the re-rating having been without application and without medical examination, was not in pursuance of the usual practice, and was therefore unwarranted, Senator Manderson promptly renounced the advance and returned the money. It appears that twenty-one employees in the Pension Office were re-rated.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions held its eightieth annual meeting in New York last week. It assembled in the Broadway Tabernacle on October 15, and held three sessions a day until Friday October 18. The report showed that "During the last year there were twelve missionaries and forty assistant missionaries sent out by the Prudential Committee. Thirty-six of them were women, three of whom were physicians. The donations during the year have not fallen behind those of the preceding year, but are $476.53 in advance, having reached the sum of $395,044.90, a gain over the annual average of the preceding five years of about $12,500. Of this amount, $152,755.51 came from the three woman's boards." The unrest and dissatisfaction which has been growing for several years manifested itself early in the meetings, and came to a climax when the subject of the election of officers was under consideration. It could not be allayed until the President, Dr. R. S. Storrs, appointed a committee of nine to investigate the doings of the Prudential Committee. Finally the officers and committee were re-elected. A strong protest was made by eminent clergymen against certain tests established by the Prudential Committee, which, it was alleged, prevented young men who could not pass them offering themselves as missionaries.

An Officer who Accompanied Mr. H. M. Stanley on the Emin Pasha expedition was in New York last week. In an interview with a reporter he expressed his doubts of the recent reports of the explorer's movements. He said that no previous experience of Stanley's parallels the one he is now engaged in in point of danger and difficulty. His sufferings since he began his last journey through Central Africa have been almost incredible. Stanley's immediate staff are just as ignorant of his plans as the general public. One of his characteristics is to do his work first, and talk about it afterward. "I am inclined," said the officer, "to believe, that Stanley and Emin Pasha are now at Uganda. They are probably stopping there, and taking advantage of the unsettled state of the country, caused by the dethronement of Mwanga, the son of the famous Mtésa, the Sultan of Uganda, by the Arabs, to initiate some systematic government, which would permit of a caravan route between the Emin Pasha country and the Albert Nyanza Lake and Mombasa, the seaport of the Imperial East African Company." The officer had an interview with Tippoo Tib in March, 1888.

The French Government is Endeavoring to strengthen its majority in the Legislature by an alliance with the Radical members of the opposition. Its overtures are reported to have been to some extent successful. A number of Radical deputies are disposed to tone down their demands, or to defer them for the present, and vote with the Cabinet, which would in return undertake a practical business programme. The Radical party fully realizes that it is much less formidable than last session, both in number and in authority. Some of the leaders have lost their seats, and others received unequivocal intimations at the polls that extremist views were not in flavor with the better-educated classes, and with the people whom they influence. The members of the Cabinet believe that with some tact sufficient Radicals and Independents can be won over to secure a working majority, and so avoid the crises which paralyzed public business before the elections.

A General Election in Miniature has taken place in England. The phrase is Mr. Chamberlain's. He used it in a speech two weeks ago when he invited the people to watch certain political contests, then pending, for indications of popular opinion. The contests arose from seats being vacated, in some cases by the death of members of Parliament, and in others by their elevation to the House of Lords. In the election of new members Mr. Gladstone's party has received already seven accessions. In some cases—notably in Buckinghamshire, a Tory stronghold—the triumph was unexpected. In all cases the number of votes recorded for the Gladstone candidates were more numerous than at the last election. In reply to an inquiry, Mr. Gladstone said: "I can't undertake to describe with precision at this early date the full effect of the recent elections, but they appear to mark a stage in the progress of the Home Rule controversy." It is believed by unbiased persons that the elections do not so much indicate a change of the public mind on the question of Ireland, as alienation of strong Protestants from the Conservative party on account of their project to endow a Roman Catholic University.

The Czar's Visit to the German Emperor came to a conclusion on October 14. The Emperor exerted himself to entertain his imperial guest, but in spite of the public exchange of courtesies and protestations of friendship, an impression was left that there was little real cordiality between them. One instance of this coldness is cited: Emperor William in toasting the Czar, said, "I drink to the welfare of my honored friend and guest, the Emperor of Russia, and to the continuance of the friendship which has subsisted between our houses for over a hundred years, and which I am resolved to cherish as a legacy from my ancestors." He spoke in German, except at the end of his toast, when he exclaimed in Russian, "Long live His Majesty, the Czar! Hurrah for the Czar!" The Czar, replying in French, thanked the Emperor for his friendly sentiments, and drank to his welfare. Turning then to Prince Bismarck, the Czar raised his glass and drank to the Chancellor, who stood up, emptied his glass, and bowed low. There was a similar exchange of courtesies between Emperor William and the Russian Ambassador. Though French is the court and diplomatic language spoken throughout Europe, there were some unpleasant reflections on the Czar's using it on the occasion of his visit, especially as he had been speaking German all day, and knew the antipathy of his host to the language of the hereditary enemy.

City Missionaries, Christian Workers, and others may obtain miscellaneous back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for mission, hospital, and prison work, and for general distribution, at $1 per 100. Address The Manager, 71 and 73 Bible House, New York.

Dr. Talmage's Appeal for Funds to Aid in rebuilding the Tabernacle is printed in our sketch of the burned building on another page, and is repeated in his sermon in this number. No words of ours could present the case so well as Dr. Talmage does. We therefore simply call the attention of our readers to his statement of the need of the Church, and shall be pleased to forward to him any contributions which may be sent to us for the purpose. All sums will be published in these columns, unless the givers object; and Dr. Talmage has promised to send a personal acknowledgment. Nine years ago, when an appeal was made for money to pay off the debt on the church now destroyed, our readers gave liberally, and we have no doubt that this sudden calamity will evoke a like response.

The Cheering News Comes from the Rev. W. F. Re Qua that a good friend in Michigan has presented him with an excellent portable organ for use in his mission work among the Indians. As the gift was anonymous, but the giver is evidently one of our readers, we take this opportunity of letting him know how thoroughly his present is appreciated. Too much cannot be said in praise of Mr. Re Qua's noble, devoted labors. He left a comfortable home in Aurora, Ill., resigned a regular salary, and went out in faith to live among the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches in the Indian Territory, trusting solely on God's promises for support. We hear from others—Mr. Re Qua seldom speaks of them—of the hardships and privations he has undergone. Rough fare, long journeys on foot in all weathers, visits to fever-stricken hovels, dangers from robbers, from floods, and other evils, have been his experience. His reward is that many who never heard the gospel before have heard it from his lips. In money he has not received a quarter of the sum that would have been paid him as pastor of a church. He is now about to set out to open a school in Lone Wolf's district, and writes us asking that any readers who may be thinking of sending him help would do so speedily, that he may leave his home work provided for. His address is, Rev. W. F. Re Qua, McAlester, Indian Territory.

The Rescue of a Young Lady from Niagara Falls is reported in a press dispatch from Lockport. She resides near the Falls, and on October 10 took a party of friends from the West, who were visiting her, to see the wondrous spectacle. In the course of their rambles they came to the Three Sisters Islands at the well-known spot where the water rushes between the shore and a large rock at lightning speed, sweeping down over the Falls only a short distance below. The lady, full of gaiety and spirits, said, "Watch me jump on that rock!" Suiting the action to the word, she made the leap, but her footing slipped and she fell into the water. A young man and a young lady of the party jumped down, and at the same moment seized her by her clothing, as her hold on the rock was slipping. She was pulled out dripping wet, and was saved from an awful death in the cataract. When she was placed on the rock she fainted, but quickly recovered and was taken home. She said she had jumped from the shore to that rock many times. Many have been eternally lost through the same kind of temerity generated by former escapes from spiritual and moral peril. The warnings of God's word are not gainsaid even if, as it says, the sinner may have escaped "a hundred times." (Eccles. 8: 12.)

The Paintings of a Prisoner in Sing Sing prison are attracting considerable notice in the press. It is stated that a prisoner who was formerly a broker in New York City, but who is now serving a sentence of six years imprisonment for embezzlement, obtained permission to work at engraving during his term. He displayed marked ability in the work, and was encouraged to go on with it. A few months ago he got hold of some water-colors, and with these he executed some work that surprised the officials. His achievement was so remarkable that when he volunteered to execute some paintings on the walls of the prison chapel his offer was accepted. He has finished two of them to the admiration of all who have inspected them. They are scenes from the parable of the Prodigal Son. One represents the prodigal herding the swine, and the other the prodigal being welcomed by his father. The natural inference from this selection would be that the prisoner had been impressed with the parable, and had gone to God for pardon, as the prodigal did to his father. The presumption, however, is negated by the record that the prisoner is now under prison discipline for misconduct. It would appear that, though he understands the lesson of the parable, he has not acted upon it. If such a man heard that Governor Hill had signed a pardon for him, and, instead of walking out of prison stayed in his cell drawing pictures of the Governor in the act of signing the pardon, his conduct would not be more foolish. Yet he is not by any means alone in his folly. (Matt. 22: 5.)

A Swallow's Unwilling Journey is Described by the Globe of St. Paul, Minn. It states that a sleeping-car was taken off the Northern Pacific Railroad last spring and sent to St. Paul for repairs. As it was a busy time, the car was left untouched in the yard for several months. The swallows took a fancy to the car, and before the interior fitting had been completed the busy little workers had built several nests under the eaves of the car. They were rearing their families when the car was finished and returned to the service. On the car being pulled out of the yard there was a distressing commotion among the feathered colony, the male birds flying wildly between the moving car and the trees around, while the females popped in and out of the nests in evident terror. The excitement reached its climax when the car was attached to a train bound for Portland, Oregon. As the speed increased, one bird after another deserted the nests and returned to the neighborhood of the repair-shops, but one mother-bird remained. She darted out of the nest at each stopping-place in manifest bewilderment, but returned as the train started again. It was not until the nest was shaken down that she flew away. The birds could not know, when they built their nests, that the car was not a permanent building, but men who build all their hopes on this transitory world do it in spite of warning that this is not their rest. (Mic. 2: 10.)

A Curious Dispute About a Land Claim in Dakota was decided by Land Commissioner Groff on October 11. It appears that a young lady from Iowa went on a visit to Dakota, and while there took up an eight-acre claim, had a small log house built, and broke up one acre. She made the acquaintance of the man who held the adjoining claim, and finally married him. They moved their houses up close together on the line separating their claims, and sodded them around, making one house. They were careful not to make a communication between the two houses, and there was no way of going from one to the other but by going outside. This was done so as not to violate the Homestead law. The Land Commissioner, however, has disallowed the claim, on the ground that husband and wife cannot maintain separate relations at the same time and in the same house, so that each, by virtue of said residence, may perfect entry under the Homestead law. The wife evidently hoped to have the legal privileges of an unmarried woman while enjoying the privileges of wedded life. She has failed, and so will those Christians fail who are trying to make the best of both worlds by striving after the prizes of this world while claiming union with Christ. (Matt. 6: 24.)

The Story of a Deed of Daring Comes from Scranton, Pa. On October 9 the large wooden house built at the head of the Bellevue Breaker for holding the engine of the hoisting-apparatus and other machinery, caught fire. As it was late in the afternoon, it was believed that none of the workmen were in the pit. The flames spread so rapidly that hope of saving the building was abandoned, and the engineer was driven by the heat from the engine-room. Just then

Thomas Reese, the foreman of a gang of men engaged in deepening the shaft, ran up, and shouted that three men were at the bottom of the shaft. They could not know of their danger unless some one went down to warn them, and he said he was ready to go. The only means of descent was by an iron cradle suspended by a stout hemp rope. The engineer pointed to the rope, which was already smoking, and said it was madness to venture down. Reese, however, said three lives were at stake, and he was determined to go down if he died in the attempt. He sprang into the cradle, and the engineer sent him down at lightning speed. In a few seconds the signal to hoist was heard. But the rope had begun to burn. The engineer threw the throttle wide open, and the spectators held their breath as the drum of the engine whirled at terrific speed. Four lives depended on that burning rope holding out until the cradle reached the surface. There was not a second to spare, the strands of the rope were parting, but before it broke the four men appeared above the shaft and stepped out of the cradle in safety. The next instant the rope had burned through, and the cradle went crashing to the foot of the shaft, 450 feet below. What a hero that man Reese was! What ingratitude it would have been had the men, whom he risked his life to warn and save, have refused to be saved! Yet that is how men treat Christ, who came from heaven to warn them of their danger and to save them. (Gal. 1: 4.)

BRIEF NOTES.

Prohibition was carried in North Dakota by a majority of 1,100; in South Dakota the majority was 6,053.

Rev. C. H. Yatman's meetings at Pittston, Pa., have been blessed to the conversion of over 200 persons.

The issues from the Bible House during the month of September were 50,052 copies; issues since April 1, 457,069 volumes.

Mrs. Mahan, widow of the late Rev. Dr. Asa Mahan, has gone to Bulgaria to join Mrs. Mumford in her mission work, and expects to remain the rest of her life.

The Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, founder of the China Inland Mission, states that during the past year a thousand persons have been baptized into the faith in China.

A member of the Methodist Church in Kansas City, Mo., offers the ground and $25,000 toward the establishment of the proposed Missionary Training School, provided it be located in that city and a like sum be raised.

Mr. Seth Low, ex-mayor of Brooklyn, whose portrait was published in this journal last week, is an officer in the Sunday-school of St. Ann's Church, Brooklyn, and is intimately identified with the Missionary Society of the Episcopal Church.

Mr. G. W. Jacoby, of 1122 Savery Street, Philadelphia, has been engaged in open-air evangelistic meetings in that city during the summer. He hopes to find opportunities for labor in Mission Halls, etc., in other cities during the winter months.

Rev. William Ashmore, who has been Home Secretary of the Baptist Missionary Union, has returned to China to resume his missionary labors. He was urged to remain, as his services were highly appreciated, but he was not happy away from his beloved work in China.

Rev. Henry Varley continues to hold gospel services in the Theatre Royal, Melbourne, Australia, more than 3,000 persons attending each of the Sunday services, and numbers of conversions have taken place. He also holds frequent evangelistic services in the suburbs of the city.

Information has been received of the death, at Caracas, Venezuela, on August 19, of the Rev. Dr. William M. Patterson. He caught yellow fever by officiating at the funeral of a man who had died of that disease. Dr. Patterson formerly labored in Mexico under the Methodist Board.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's services at Norristown, Pa., presented an extraordinary spectacle. Long before the hour of opening, a large crowd collected about the doors, and filled the church to overflowing as soon as the place was opened. Hundreds were unable to obtain admission. A large number of persons made profession of faith.

Dr. Justin D. Fulton has been holding crowded meetings in Toronto. On Sunday, October 13, he held three meetings which were densely thronged with attentive hearers. The people have been aroused by the Jesuit Estate Act to the perception that Rome is intriguing for supreme control, and were in hearty sympathy with Dr. Fulton's denunciation of Romish methods. Dr. Fulton's visit was timely, as an effort is being made by the Romanists to have the French language taught in the schools, and he was able to enlighten the people as to the motive underlying the project.

IN THE GARDEN.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"One of the servants of the high-priest, being his kinsman, whose ear Peter cut off, saith, Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" John 18:26.

Peter on Unsafe Ground—Dangerous Linger—Advice to a Girl—Three Ways of Acting About a Horse-Car—The Only Safe Way—I. Special Association with Jesus—In Church Fellowship—In Testimony—In Suffering—In Secret—II. The Association Observed of Men—Christians of a Retiring Disposition—Observed in the Family—By the Godless—III. The Subjects of Expectation—Much Rightly Expected of the Christian—What Christ's Men Should Be—IV. The Question Asked in Reproach—A Young Man Flung Out of Window.

PETER was on dangerous ground. When his Master was being buffeted, he was trying to make himself comfortable. We read of the high priest's servants that they warmed themselves, and Peter stood with them, and warmed himself. He stood with them, and they were rough servants of ill masters. He was in bad company, and he was a man who could not afford to be in bad company; for he was so impulsive, and so easily provoked to rash actions.

The Holy Spirit having notified us once that Peter was in the words "Peter stood with them, and warmed himself," specially observes that he remained there, which was worse still. Any man may inadvertently stumble upon a boggy piece of ground; but if he be a wise man, he will make all speed that he may soon pass it, and be on sound soil again. He does ill to linger upon a quagmire, for thus he toys with danger and courts destruction. Thou mayest be called, in providence, to go through the Campagna when it reeks with miasma; but thou art not called to live there. Where there is peril there should be a prudent haste. Quick! Pilgrim, be quick, and tarry not in the place of danger! Linger no longer in the wilderness than you are forced to do: hurry through the enemy's country, and rest not till you are in Immanuel's land.

On Unsafe Ground,

While you tarry on dangerous ground your weakness increases. Peter, who might at first have owned his Master, did not do it, but denied Him. Having once denied Him, it was almost inevitable he that should do the same again; and so, again and again, he said, "I know not the man." And as the weakness increases, and the sin gains force, the fault deepens in blackness. Thrice he denied his Master, and in the end he added oaths and curses, as if it would be a sure proof that he had never been with Christ if he could swear.

The lesson of this is—again I say it—hasten out of the place of temptation; flee from it as speedily as possible. There are some who are in positions of life which they ought to give up: positions which are sinful, and cannot be held by persons who are honest, truthful, and chaste. It is of no use to try to fight the battle of the cross where some people are: they are harnessed to the chariot of the devil, and they must come out of it, or be driven to destruction. If they are engaged in a trade which, in the very essence of it, is bad, let them get away from it. If they are in associations which are distinctly sinful, they must break loose from those associations, and not pretend to be Christians. Talking, the other evening, with who has, I trust, escaped from the grosser sin into which she might soon have fallen, I said to her: There are three things you can do, and those three things I will set before you by an illustration. When you get outside the Tabernacle, there will be a horse-car. Now, go up to the car, and put one foot on the car, and keep the other foot on the ground, and if you do not come down with a smash I am very much mistaken. Yet many people try to keep in with the world and keep in with Christ, and they will never do it; but will make a terrible fall of it before long. Now, the second thing that you can do is, that you can keep standing in the road in the mud, and not get into the car at all. You can stop there, and let the car go by: that is all fair and straight. If you want to live in the world, and be of the world, well, live in the world, and be of the world, and take what pleasure it can give you, and reap the fruit of it at last. But there is a third thing that you can do, namely, get right off the road into the car, and let the car take you right away where it is going. Now, it is this third thing that I commend to you. Get right into Christ, and let the Lord Jesus, by the power of His Holy Spirit, carry you right away from the unclean place where you now stand, bearing you in safety along the track of holiness till He brings you to the terminus of glory at His own right hand. May the Lord deliver you from halting between two opinions, or choosing the wrong opinion; and may He now decide you to leap into the gospel chariot, and leave all sinful company and doubtful ways, that you may own the Lord Jesus, and be His true disciple!

A Young Girl

This brings me to consider one of the questions which led Peter into his denial of his Master. It is this question, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" Let us try to handle that a little; and may the Lord cause it to do us as much good as once to Peter it did harm!

I. And the first thing I say about it is this: many of us have had

Special Association

with our Lord. If any were to ask us, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" we should right gladly answer, "Yes, you have probably seen me; for I have often been there." We are by no means ashamed to own that we have been much in the company of the despised Redeemer. Let us think how we have been, many of us, associated with our Lord Jesus Christ: it will do us good to consider our close connection with our well-beloved Lord.

The large proportion of the friends present to-night have been associated with Him in church-fellowship. Our names are on the church-roll as belonging to Jesus. We, voluntarily and cheerfully, first gave ourselves to the Lord, and afterwards to His people, according to His Word. Some of us have had our names enrolled among baptized believers for many years, and we are right glad to have them there. May they never be erased by any shameful act of ours; but there may they stand until that day when the church-rolls of earth shall all be swallowed up in the muster-roll of the redeemed above!

But then, dear friends, we have, some of us, been associated with Him in a yet higher sense still: I mean in distinct open testimony. We have preached His name:

We Have Borne Witness

to the truth of His Word. We have pleaded with others; as though God did beseech them by us, we have prayed them, in Christ's stead, to be reconciled to God. So much have we been identified with the Lord Jesus. What an association with Christ has this been! Others of you, beloved, have been associated with Him in teaching the children; and you have come very near Him, for He said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." You have brought the young to Him, and He has smiled upon you while you have been bringing them. Oh yes, you have been associated with Christ in visiting the sick, in instructing the ignorant, in bringing in the wandering, in cheering the faint. You have taken upon yourself, by His grace, this holy ministry, each one according to his ability; and thus, in the most practical way, you have been "in the garden with Him."

Ay, and to go further still, you have not only been associated with Him in service, but also in suffering for His name's sake. You had a battle to fight in your youth against and associates; and you fought it well for Christ's sake. Some of you godly women have had to bear a living martyrdom ever since you were married, through the ungodliness and unkindness of your husbands. Certain of you have been despised, ridiculed, and rejected with Christ, and for Christ. Oh, it is a glorious thing! Some of us know what it is to have our name cast out as evil, and to have come down, in some men's esteem, from the brightest heights to the darkest depths, solely and only because we will follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth, and will shake ourselves clear of the infidelity of the present age, which is defiling the visible church with its filthy leprosy. Yes, we can say that we have been in the garden with Him.

Ungodly Relatives

With Him in Secret.

Once more: not only have we been with Him in church-fellowship and in service, and in some small measure of suffering, but we have been with Him in secret. O beloved, we dare not tell that which we have enjoyed behind the veil with our all-glorious Lord; but we have been with Him, sometimes, in His joy, till whether in the body or out of the body we could not tell: God alone has known! It would not have taken us any trouble to slip into heaven, we were so near the door, and the door was so open. We have also had a measure of fellowship with Him in His anguish, when we have groaned out our very soul to see the apostasy of His church; to see how those that should preach His gospel do not preach it, but preach the very reverse of it. We have been with Christ almost in a bloody sweat concerning His base betrayal by His disciples. Beloved, in these senses, you would have to say, "Yes, I have been in the garden with Him."

II. Now I go a step further in the text. The question is, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" which leads me to observe that many of us have been with our Lord Jesus Christ. We did not want to be observed: we were far from courting observation. There are some of the Lord's people who would like to go to heaven without being seen with the Lord Jesus in the streets by daylight. They would be saved, and yet never be seen with their Saviour. I do not think that the sin of this age, with most Christians, is obtrusiveness; far more likely it is unholy fear. Some think it modesty; but I question whether this is its real name. I will not call it cowardice, but I will take their own expression, and call it backwardness. They say they are of a "retiring" disposition, which I interpret in a way very little to their credit. I have heard of a soldier who was of a very "retiring" disposition when the battle was on, and he retired with great diligence as soon as the first shots were fired. I think I heard that he was hung up as a deserter and a coward. No good comes of a retiring disposition of that kind. We have that sort of "retiring person" with us nowadays, but such people will have to answer for it when the Lord denies those who denied Him.

Seen in Our Association

Seen by the Family.

But without desiring to be known, dear friends, you that have been with Christ have been found out; and, first, you have been seen in the garden with your Lord, by those associated in family life with you. They were not long before they discovered that you were a Christian. A man who carries in his hand otto of roses will soon be known to bear it by the perfume which is scattered abroad. He that has grace in his heart needs not to advertise it; it will advertise itself. Mother finds out that there is something very different in John from what there used to be. Sister Jane finds out that Mary seems quite altered from what she used to be. Father discovers that mother is so different from what she was a little while ago. If you have not been found out, I should think you have no grace to spare.

We have been found out, especially by those whom our holy faith opposes. Here was one that had come to take the Saviour as a prisoner, and he was the man to pitch upon Peter. "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" Just so. Those who are on the other side will know you. I hope that they will have good Reason for Knowing You.

I hope that they will oppose you very much, and thus effectually drive you out of their fellowship.

Oh yes, yes, these people will say: "Did not I see you at the meeting-house? Did not I hear of your being with that canting crew? Are not you one of those vile hypocrites?" and so on. That is the way in which they compliment us. Do you know all the pretty things they say of your leaders? Do you think that I lie on a bed of roses? Am I never opposed and slandered? I have my full, fair share of the world's abuse; but I am ready for twice as much, if necessary. We are willing to be so publicly in the garden with our Master, that His enemies may quote it against us, if they wish, and sneeringly ask, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?"

Assailants Recognized.

Especially will this be known to those who are affected by our procedure. The gentleman whose ear had been cut off knew Peter. So did his kinsman, who, to his alarm, saw a sword come so very close to his kinsman's skull. He recognized Peter at once; and no wonder. It was only by the flash of one of those torches that he caught a glimpse of the disciple with the sword; but, as Peter cut off that man's cousin's ear, the impression made was particularly vivid. So, if you begin to talk about Christ to people, if you ask them whether they are saved, some of them will thank you for your holy anxiety; but others, who choose to feel annoyed, will judge that you wantonly tread upon their corns, and will feel that you have assaulted them.

There are some of us—and a very considerable number of friends now here—who are known to have been in the garden with Christ by a vast number of persons. If some of you were to fall into grave sin, and desired to hide yourselves, where would you go? Especially myself—where could I go? I could not go into any doubtful or questionable place, with the hope of being unknown, for someone would point me out in a moment. You and I had better keep our regimentals on, and go through with the war, and never be ashamed, for we cannot go away incognito. The day is past in which we can be hidden.

III. That leads me to the third point, to which we have climbed up insensibly, we are now

The Subjects of Expectation.

As we have been in the garden with Jesus, and we have been seen there, we are now the subjects of very high expectations; that is to say, people expect a great deal from those who are known to be associated with Jesus. They are very unreasonable sometimes, and expect far more than they are warranted in looking for, and consequently much more than they will ever get. I have known some expect young Christians, who have just come to Christ, to be perfect—to know everything, to be able to preach a sermon, pray in public, and listen patiently to all the nonsense everybody chooses to talk. Well, they may expect what they like, but they will not get unreasonable things. The mercy is that we are not the servants of man; we are the servants of God; and if we please our Master, that is quite enough for us. One Master is enough for the best of servants. If we are popular in heaven, we may wisely be indifferent to the judgments of men.

Unreasonable expectations we are not bound to meet; but there are expectations which are just and righteous. Men are quite right in expecting that, if you have been with Jesus, your character should be affected by the association.

For, first, you make a very high profession. You say, "I am Christ's." Well, then, they come to look at you, and see What Christ's Men Are.

If you are in an ugly temper, they will say, "Surely, this is not the work of God." If you are awfully stingy, and never give anything away, they will conclude that it is not desirable to be a Christian. If you are sarcastic, and find fault with everybody and everything, they will say, "That is not a very beautiful spirit." They are right, are they not? Can you blame them for thus judging? No one will think well of your religion if you do not tell the truth. When your word is passed, be sure that you keep it, or you will discredit your Lord and Master. I am not going into all the ways in which a man can so act in common life, as to lead people to exclaim, "That is not what we should have expected of a man that talks of following Jesus." They have a right to expect a good deal from our sacred profession. They have a right to expect a great deal from the Disciples of Such a Lord.

Beloved, they may well expect great things on account of our comrades, with whom we are proud to be numbered. Consider who they were that went before us, those holy men and women who counted not their lives dear unto them. How faithfully they lived and served the Lord Jesus! Many of them went in a chariot of fire to heaven, burnt quickly to death for Christ's sake. We are bound by our associations, bound by our Master, bound by the truth we believe, bound by the profession we have made, to live, not as other men, but as men who are of noble lineage, lifted up by a second birth, twice born, the elect of God, redeemed from among men, that we may be a first-fruits of His creatures.

A Reproach.

IV. So, you see, we are brought where the world expects a good deal of us, and when the world does not get it (that is the fourth point)—if we disappoint such expectations—the question may be very properly put to us, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" It is a salutary thing for a man to know, that his inconsistency is observed. Then he begins to see himself as others see him. It is very painful, very disagreeable, but, at the same time, very likely to bless the man. A man is apt to get a little angry about it; but it is a good thing for him to know how his conduct strikes other people.

Such a question as this should effectually recall us to holiness—to deep repentance of the past, and to strong resolves for the future. I will imagine that a certain Christian man has come to town for a holiday, and during the season of his holiday in London, he is asked by a friend to go to a questionable place of amusement. I will imagine that he yields to the invitation and goes, though I am sorry even to imagine such a thing. Well, he has gone where he should not have gone; and I should like some venerable minister, some saint of God, to meet him in the street as he comes out, and say, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?"

And if you are ever tempted to conceal your religion, then I hope that this question will come whistling in your ears, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" I have sometimes been obliged to a wicked world for what it has done to inconsistent professors of religion. I remember a young man, in my early pastorate, going to a certain place of doubtful fame, and in the midst of a dance, somebody cried out, "That is one of Spurgeon's people."

Fling Him Out

of the window." And out he went. I felt grateful for that act of discipline from the adversary. Those who were gathered in that assembly felt that they did not want the company of a downright hypocrite, and so they put him out of their synagogue. If you should ever be found in "gay company," or even in respectable company where evangelical doctrine is at a discount, I hope you will have things made uncomfortable for you. If you hold your tongue and are quiet, and try to be one of the clan, where Jesus is dishonored, I hope this question will fall into your ear like a drop of burning lava, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?"

"Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" I should like to be welcomed with that question as I enter the skies at the last. I should not object to have that spoken to me by some bright spirit as I pass through the pearl gate, "Did not I see thee in the garden with Him?" "Yes, bright seraph, you may have seen me; and now you see that He casts not off His poor friend in the day of His glory." The angel of the Lord saw you when you repented, he spied you out in that little room where you wept alone because of sin. Up-stairs in the solitary chamber where you told the Lord how father and mother were opposed to you, and yet you meant to follow the Lamb in all the ways of service and obedience, you were "seen of angels." Beloved, the brave adherence of the least of our Lord's disciples is seen, known, and remembered in heavenly places. In the last great day you that have been with Christ here, and trusted Him amid the clouds, and the darkness, and the derision, shall see Him, and reign with Him, and He shall acknowledge you as His, since you were in the garden with Him in the day of His humiliation. God bless you! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

King Alfred's Creed.*

THE great King Alfred, who was in his prime in 889, just a thousand years ago, had throughout a most picturesque and adventurous life: he is hard pushed by the Danes, by rivals, by his own family—one while a wanderer on the moors, another time disguised as a minstrel in the enemy's camp, but always high hearted, always hopeful, always working. He is oppressed by the pall of ignorance which lies over that lordly reach of his kingdom. "Scarce a priest have I found," says he, "south of the Thames, who can render Latin into English." He is not an apt scholar himself, but he toils at learning; his abbots help him; he reverts old chronicles and makes his people know of Beda; he has boys taught to write in English; gives himself with love to the rendering of Boethius's Consolation of Philosophy. He adopts its reasoning, and plants his hope on the creed: (1) "That a wise God governs; (2) That all suffering may be made helpful; (3) That God is the chiefest good; (4) That only the good are happy; (5) That the foreknowledge of God does not conflict with free will." These would seem to carry even now the pith and germ of the broadest theologic teachings.

A Typical King.

Here is what a Saxon scribe of the eleventh century had to say of the new come and conquering Norman, King William I: "King William was a very wise man, and very rich, more worshipful and strong than any of his foregangers. He was mild to good men who loved God, and stark beyond all bounds to those who withstood his will. He had earls in his bonds who had done against his will; bishops he set off their bishoprics; abbots off their abbotries, and thanes in prison. By his cunning he was so thoroughly acquainted with England, that there is not a hide of land of which he did not know, both who had it and what was its worth. . . . He took from his subjects many marks of gold, and many hundred pounds of silver; and that he took some by right and some by mickle might for very little need. He had fallen into avarice, and greediness he loved withal. Among other things is not to be forgotten the good peace that he made in this land; so that a man who had any confidence in himself might go over his land with his bosom full of gold, unhurt. Nor durst any man slay another man, had he done ever so great evil to the other. . . . Rich men moaned, and poor men murmured, but he was so hard that he recked not the hatred of them all. For it was need that they should follow the king's will, if they wished to live, or have lands and goods. Alas that any man should be so moody, or should so puff up himself, and think himself above all other men! May Almighty God show mercy to his soul and grant him forgiveness of his sins."

Wycliffe's Times.

In the great crowd of his writings, whether English or Latin, Wycliffe told no story of himself or of his young days. We have only clear sight of him when he has reached full manhood—when he has come to the mastership of Baliol Hall, and to eloquent advocacy of the rights and dignities of England as against the Papal de-

* From Lands, Letters, and Kings, from Celt to Tudor. By Donald G. Mitchell. An interesting series of talks on English history which at first entertained a circle of friends, and now take permanent form for the general public. They are picturesque, dramatic, and thoroughly pure and healthful in tone. Pp. 327; price $1.50; published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

The Late Eliza Cook.

A Victim of African Superstition. (See page 677.)

mand for tribute. On this subject he goes up to London and is heard there—maybe in Parliament; certainly he is heard with so much approval that only a few years thereafter he is sent with a commission to treat with ambassadors from the Pope, at the old city of Bruges. His great friends—and Wycliffe numbered the widow of the Black Prince among them—could not shield him entirely from Romish wrath, when he began to call the Pope “a cut-purse,” and his arguments were as scathing as his epithets and had more reason in them. He was compelled to forego his teachings at Oxford, and came to new trials at which—as traditions run—he wore an air of great dignity; and old portraits show us a thin, tall figure, a little bent with over-study, his features sharp-cut, with lips full of firmness, a flowing white beard and piercing eyes, glowing with the faith that was in him. This was he who blocked out the path along which England stumbled through Lollardry quagmires, and where Huss the Bohemian walked in after days with a clumsy, forward tread, and which Luther in his later time put all alight with his torch of flame.

A Bible-Reading Statute.

In Henry the Eighth's time the English Bible was by no means a freegoer into all companies. A statute dated 1452 runs: “A nobleman or gentleman may read it [the Bible] in his house, or in his garden, or orchard, yet quietly and without disturbance of order.” A merchant may read it to himself privately; but the common people, artificers, apprentices, journeymen, and servingmen are to be punished with one month's imprisonment as often as they are detected in reading the Bible, either privately or openly.” Some alleviating provisions were afterwards made in respect to “Noblewomen and gentlewomen who read to themselves,” and the same statute makes warning mention of the “craftye, false, and untrue translation of Tyndale.”

THE LATE ELIZA COOK.

(See Portrait.)

It will surprise many readers to learn that Eliza Cook, the famous poetess, died on September 25. She has so long dropped out of public view that, though her poems are still familiar in every household, her personality was lost sight of, and not a few supposed that she must be dead. But it was not until last month that the gifted lady went down to the grave. The younger generation of readers has lent its ears, not always to its benefit, to the strains of later poets, but the elders among us will always have a tender, grateful regard for her who wrote of that seat still cherished in many a household:

“In childhood's hour I lingered near
The hallowed seat with listening ear;

And gentle words that mother would give,
To fit me to die, and teach me to live.
She told me shame would never betide,
With Truth for my creed and God for my guide;
She taught me to lisp my earliest prayer,
As I knelt beside that old arm-chair.”

To whatever stage of refinement and culture our race may reach, the words must touch a sensitive place in our hearts, and make us feel that she who so wrote was one with us.

Eliza Cook was born in Southwark, a suburb of London, on December 24, 1818, and was, therefore, in her seventy-first year when she died. She was the youngest of eleven children, and was left motherless in her early girlhood. She voluntarily devoted herself to study, and to a large extent educated herself. Her poetic genius first manifested itself, when she was fifteen years old, in the poem entitled “Melaia.” A new volume of poems appeared in 1864, and became widely popular. Their charm lay in the melodious rhythm of the lines, and still more in the familiarity of the subjects which inspired her pen. Her words were simple, her thoughts pure, and all good men and women who read her lines found their own secret thoughts set to music there. There was no passion, no tragedy tearing nature to tatters, no sensual drive!—only a pure mind clothing common objects in poetic garments, and breathing ordinary emotion in harmonious words. Yet it must not be forgotten that there were profound depths in her nature that were stirred by the most potent of all forces. Her ear had not been deaf to the call of God, which she heard not alone in His Word, but through all nature.

“God hath a voice that ever is heard
In the peal of the thunder, the chirp of the bird;
It comes in the torrent, all rapid and strong;
In the streamlet's soft gush as it ripples along;
It breathes in the zephyr, just kissing the bloom;
It lives in the rush of the sweeping simoon;
Let the hurricane whistle, or warblers rejoice;
What do they tell thee but God hath a voice?”

Her gentle voice is now hushed in death, but her words will live in the hearts and memories of thousands. So sweet, so gentle, so loving, so good—Eliza Cook had and will have the grateful affection of the common people, and she had no higher ambition.

WIDOW NORMAN'S SON.

(See illustration on page 685.)

The deep tones of the great bell of a cathedral reverberated through the streets of a quiet English city proclaiming the hour of midnight. It was a small city; many places in the same county known only as towns had five times its population and fifty times its business. Mitreham, however, was in 1867 much what it had been in 1767, when it was the chief place in the county. It had not retrograded; it had simply stood still in its decorous, eminently respectable position, while its neighbors had started factories, built wharves, and invited trade. Mitreham did not want trade. Its society was ecclesiastical through and through. The Bishops and the Dean and the canons were at the head of it, and an aged nobleman, deeply versed in ecclesiastical law and history, who had his country-seat about a mile away, did not dispute their supremacy.

Mitreham did not keep late hours. Few of the citizens heard the sound of the twelve strokes. The majority of them had been in bed two hours, and were wrapped in slumber. The long rows of ancient houses seemed to be asleep too. The policeman who ponderously paced the echoing pavement could see but one light gleaming from a window, and the cause of that being there he could understand. Widow Norman was probably sitting up working on some great lady's dress. Her husband had been choir-master at the Cathedral, but he died six years ago, leaving her to support herself and their ten-year-old boy, David. She knew she would have less difficulty in doing so in Mitreham, where she was well-known, than elsewhere, so a very neat brass plate was affixed to her door bearing the inscription, “Mrs. Norman, Dress and Mantle Maker,” and she waited for employment. Sympathy brought it at first, but as time passed, and the widow's hand acquired dexterity, ladies came to her on business principles, and ceased to limit their confidence in her abilities to their second-best dresses.

It was not work, however, that kept Mrs. Norman up that night; she was working, but it was only that the time might not seem so long to her. Yet it did seem very long, and but half her attention was given to her work. She was listening for a footfall that she could have heard in that sleeping city two blocks away.

“Where can he be? What can he be doing?” she cried, distractedly, throwing down her work and rising to her feet as the Cathedral bell struck the hour. The “he” in question could mean only one person in her case. For the last six years her love and tenderness had been lavished on her son. He was in all her thoughts, and she felt that if she could only see him well started in life she would be satisfied to lay her head down beside that of her dead husband in the Cathedral graveyard.

And David was, physically, a boy that any mother might be proud of—tall for his years, with curly auburn hair and great grey eyes of wondrous depth, his father's very image. Perhaps the widow was a little too proud of him. She could see no fault in him, though he had many, and being unchecked, they grew with frightful rapidity. Latterly, for several months past, the widow had been growing uneasy about him. He had been coaxing her for money, and it seemed to her that he could have no legitimate use for such sums as he wanted. But she gave it to him, until at last she had to tell him that for some time to come he could have no more. The little provision she had made for emergencies must not be depleted. But that very day he had urged her again, and she had refused him. He was a clerk in a proctor's office; had been there some six months, and the widow was economizing in all ways to save the sum that would soon be needed for his "articles." He was evidently greatly disappointed by the refusal, and the widow thought he was concerned too, and the look on his face troubled her.

He had often been away from home until 10 o'clock, but never so late as this. Visions of all kinds of calamities rose before the widow's mind as David came not. She saw him crushed by some heavy vehicle, saw him lying insensible under some fallen building—always the victim of some accident, never, as he actually was, cowering in the corner of a railroad car speeding to Liverpool.

All that night she suffered torture, pacing her rooms, flinging herself weeping on her bed, pleading in agony on her knees for her absent boy. But the next day she knew the truth. David had not returned, but his employer came to tell her that a large sum of money was missing from the office, and there could be no doubt that David had taken it. He told her, too, that the lad had been seen in evil places outside the city, and that youths of bad character were known to be his companions. The widow fainted when belief in her son's guilt was forced upon her, and for many weeks she lay hovering on the brink of the grave in the illness which followed. When she rose to resume her life of labor, deep wrinkles showed on her brow, and her step had lost all its elasticity.

Five years passed, bringing no tidings of David. The widow worked harder than ever, and spent less than before. She was saving that she might repay her son's defalcation, so that if she did hear from him again she could tell him he might return. It seemed a futile hope, but the widow had learned much of God's ways in her affliction, and she had committed her boy to God with firm confidence that He who hears the widow's prayer would restore her darling.

It was sad news that at length broke the long silence. It came in a cable message from New York. "Mother," it ran, "I am sick unto death; come if possible." The widow's heart could give but one answer. The one word, "Coming," was flashed under the sea, and two days later she was on her way westward. That was a voyage all prayer. In her cabin, and on deck far into the night, as she watched the dark waves around her, she pleaded with clasped hands for her boy; that she might arrive while he yet lived, that God would bless her effort for his salvation. Only those two requests; and beyond those she asked no boon.

Both were granted. The sickness was not unto death, but proved a stepping-stone to a life that would never end—life in Christ—and the widow received her son, now dearer to her than ever before, united with her in the bond of a common love to the Saviour.

Widow Norman's Journey.

ESCAPED FROM THE MORMONS.

We hope to resume the publication of Mrs. Stenhouse's story next week.

CRIMES OF THE MORMONS.

By Mrs. Mary Ettie V. Smith.*

Sister of a Mormon High Priest.

ABOUT this time, Jesse T. Hartly came to Great Salt Lake City. He was a man of education and intelligence, and a lawyer by profession. I never knew where he was from, but he was a Gentile when he came, and soon after married a Mormon girl by the name of Bullock, which involved a profession, at least, of Mormonism. It was afterwards supposed by some that his aim was to learn the mysteries of the Church, in order to make an exposé of them afterwards. At all events, the eye of the Prophet was upon him from the first, and he was not long in discovering, through his spies, good grounds for suspicion.

His friends after this avoided him, and it was understood that his fate was sealed. He knew that to remain was death; he therefore left his wife and child, and attempted to effect an escape.

Not many days after he had gone, Wiley Norton told us, with a feeling of exultation, that they had made sure of another enemy of the Church; that the bones of Jesse Hartly were in the cañons; and that he was afraid they would be overlooked at the Resurrection, unless he had better success in "pleading" in the next world than in this, referring to his practice as a lawyer.

* An incident from her thrilling narrative, published by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York, to whose courtesy we are indebted for the privilege of publishing this and former extracts.

Nearly a year and a half after this, when on my way to the States, I saw the widow of Jesse Hartly at Green River. The unrelieved picture of woe which she presented, excited our curiosity and sympathy. Accompanied by my sister, I went to her, and after some delay and the assurance that, although we were Mormons, we yet had the hearts of women, she told us her brief story; without a tear, yet with an expression of hopeless sorrow which I shall never forget. Oh! Mormonism is too hard—too cruel upon women. Can it—will it be permitted forever?

It was not until I had suggested to her that perhaps I had also a woe to unburden, as the result of my Mormon life, which might have some comparison to her own, that she commenced by saying:

"You have suffered; and if you have been a Mormon wife, you must have known sorrow. But the cruelty of my fate, I am sure, is without a parallel—even in this land of cruelty.

"I married Jesse Hartly, knowing he was a 'Gentile' in fact, but he passed for a Mormon, but that made no difference with me, although I was a Mormon, because he was a noble man, and sought only what was right. By being my husband, he was brought into closer contact with the members of the Church, and was soon enabled to learn many things about us, and about the Heads of the Church, that he did not approve, and of which I was ignorant, although I had been brought up among the Saints; and which, if known among the Gentiles, would have greatly damaged us. I do not understand all he discovered or all he did; but they found he had written against the Church, and he was cut off, and the Prophet required as an atonement for his sins, that he should lay down his life; that he should be sacrificed in the endowment rooms, where human sacrifices are sometimes made in this way.

"This I never knew until my husband told me, but it is true. They kill those there who have committed sins too great to be atoned for in any other way. The Prophet says, if they submit to this he can save them; otherwise they are lost. Oh! that is horrible. But my husband refused to be sacrificed, and so set out alone for the United States; thinking there might be at least a hope of success. I told him when he left me, and left his child, that he would be killed, and so he was. William Hickman and another Danite shot him in the cañons; and I have often since been obliged to cook for this man, when he passed this way, knowing all the while he had killed my husband. My child soon followed after his father, and I hope I shall soon die also; for why should I live? They have brought me here, where I wish to remain, rather than to return to Salt Lake, where the murderers of my husband curse the earth, and roll in affluence unpunished."

She had finished her sad story, and we were choking down our sobs of pity in silence, when she noticed her brother, of whom she appeared to stand in awe, coming toward us, and she rose saying, "I trust you will excuse me," and then went her way, still wearing the same stony expression of agony, and as unrelieved by tears, as when we first saw her. This is but one case among a thousand others that have never seen the light, and never will, until the dark history of the "Danites," or the "Destroying Angels," as the Prophet was sometimes pleased to call them, is unveiled.

It was about one year previous to the death of Hartly that the following incident occurred. Wiley Norton was going by our house one day on horseback, and calling at the gate, said he was on his way to assist in burying a dead body that had been found a short distance out of the city by two of the herd boys. These were smallish boys, employed in looking after the cattle, and to assist the herdsmen. They had reported the fact of finding the body when they came in the night before, and by this time the Gentiles had heard of it, and a great number of stories were in circulation. Among others, that a Gentile had been murdered by the Mormons, which was probably true; but there was no evidence of it. Wiley said he would call when he returned, and tell us what he saw, and all he could learn about it. In the evening, Wiley, as he had promised, called and gave us the following facts. He said:

"We went out with the boys to find the body, who took us to the log, behind and partly under which it was hidden. When we came near it, and the boys pointed where it was, brother Jeddy (Jedediah M. Grant) told them there was no dead man in that place. And this was true, for it had already been removed. He then attempted to make them believe they had been mistaken; but the boys persisted in the statement first made. They said they saw it yesterday, and knew what it was, although it was now gone. Brother Jeddy's object was to have the boys return to the city, and report they had never seen the body, but that they had told the story as a joke; which coupled with the fact that it was not to be found, would allay the excitement among the 'Gentiles.' This the boys refused to do: for how could we?" asked the honest little fellow, "for we did see it."

"Brother Grant told them if they would not he would take them to the slough and have them drowned. Still they refused, and they were taken to the water, and brother Jeddy put one of them in, and held him there until he was quite exhausted, and when he could breathe again, he said as resolutely as ever, that the man was dead; for he saw him. He knew it. This was repeated several times, with a similar result. We then dug a grave, and told the other boy we would bury him alive if he did not go to the city and contradict the statement the two had first made. What a time we had with them! Although the one we were about to bury consented, the other was silent, and so brother Grant let them off for the present; and one of them has set it right with the Gentiles, who now believe the story of the dead body was a hoax, got up by the boys. I believe the boy that brother Jeddy put in the water, avoids having anything to say about it."

When the reader reflects that it was but the merest chance that brought this fact under my notice, and that a hundred such incidents might and probably did occur, unknown to any one except to the perpetrators of them, he will be able to form something of an estimate of the amount of crime committed by the Heads of the Church, and by their authority. Certainly, there must be a day of reckoning for such as these.

The Mormons recognize the right, and inculcate the duty of the father to slay his daughter or her lover, as a last resort, to prevent her marriage with a "Gentile."

Many facts are within my knowledge illustrative of this point. Several occurred of some note the winter Colonel Steptoe was at the valley with his regiment. One of his soldiers became attached to Amanda Tanner, a Mormon girl, with whom I was well acquainted. Her father forbade their meeting, and confined her to the house until he supposed the attachment had been forgotten; and she was left alone one day for a few hours, and the girl sent for her soldier, who came, of course. Unfortunately, the father returned sooner than expected, and finding the Gentile there, took his sword and charged upon the lover before the latter knew the enraged father was in the house. But fortune favored the soldier; for Mr. Tanner, in his haste, and in the act of striking, brought the point of his sword against a beam, breaking it in several pieces, and the Gentile escaped.

The father, still holding the handle of the shivered blade, said to the trembling girl: "Listen. When you are caught in Gentile company again, you shall die;" and she knew he would do what he said, and she gave up the Gentile. The soldier was prosecuted and heavily fined.

The same winter one of Colonel Steptoe's officers formed an acquaintance with a daughter of John Taylor—Mary Ann. She was a very interesting girl; and the intimacy ripened into a mutual attachment. Her father was one of the Twelve Apostles, and a man of great influence in the Church; and was at the time living in New York, where he edited a paper known as the Mormon.

On account of her beauty, as well as the position of her father, Mary Ann was much sought after, both by old gray-headed saints among the heads of the Church, and by younger aspirants for saintly and matrimonial honors. But the budding instincts of her young womanhood naturally revolted against the dark future promised her by Mormon wifeism; and she preferred the Gentile. She succeeded in getting before Judge Kinney with her lover, and they were married. This was a termination more fortunate than she could have expected had the father been at home. For when he heard of it, he wrote to the Prophet, blaming him very severely for not preventing the marriage by the sacrifice of her life. He wrote that he should always feel dissatisfied because the blood of his daughter had not been shed to atone for the sin of marrying out of the Church. She was afterwards cut off from the Saints, and publicly traduced by Orson Hyde, who had been one of her admirers before.

This man Hyde, whose number of wives was great already, had urged the mother very strongly to force Mary Ann to marry him, even against her own consent, which extreme measure might have been resorted to had Col. Steptoe's military force not been at hand. When the regiment left the valley, she accompanied her husband.

That the strictness as to the intermarriage with Gentiles was a question of policy, and not one of principle, was shown by the course pursued by the Prophet, in relation to the Indian chief, Walker. This chief was at the head of a powerful tribe in the western part of the Territory. Some cause of quarrel had interrupted the good understanding before existing between Walker and the "Mormon Chief," as the former called Brigham Young; and the Prophet, wishing to re-establish friendly relations, and also to found a permanent influence favorable to the Saints within the tribe, attempted to induce some of the Mormon women to marry Walker, as a means of effecting that object. I heard the Prophet say, one day, to a young girl, that the Mormon woman that would volunteer to make that sacrifice for the Church should have a crown of immortal glory in the celestial kingdom.

The matter created great excitement among us at the time, and it was expected that some of the girls were to be "counselled" to accept this "mission," as none were found so reckless of peace and womanly "glory" in this world as to volunteer to hazard it for the prospective glory of the next. But either on account of some misgivings on the part of the Prophet as to the policy of forcing the acceptance of the dusky warrior as a husband upon an unwilling maiden, or for some other reason, the matter was delayed until the chief suddenly died from some cause unknown.

It was remarked, however, at the time, that the Prophet was seldom at fault in knowing how to accomplish his aims, and the death of the chief, whether by natural or foul means, was followed by a new line of policy, i. e., by the marriage of the Indian women by the Mormon men sent to preach among them, and this has now become the settled policy of the Church, pursued not only in that, but among all the Indian tribes within the reach of Mormon influence.

After Walker's death, he was succeeded in the government of the tribe by his brother, Squash Head. I knew but little of the character of this chief. He was looked upon as being not very sagacious, but at the same time, remarkably obstinate. He soon fell under the censure of the Prophet, who had taken offence at the obstacles Squash Head interposed to the influence of the Mormon missionaries sent to his tribe.

The Prophet intrigued to decoy the chief to the city, and then upon some charge, either real or trumped up for the occasion, had him arrested, and thrown into prison, where he remained for a long time.

The chief was attended in his prison by a "Danite," by whom he was regularly furnished with food. This attendant represents that one morning he took his breakfast to him, and left with it, thoughtlessly, a case knife; and that when he returned an hour after to remove the dishes, and the remains of the breakfast, he found the chief dead. He had cut his throat with a very dull case knife! This was a version of the story first circulated; but it was very soon after this generally understood that the poor old Indian was murdered by the Prophet's order, as his influence among his tribe was considered an obstacle to the spread of the faith among them; and for that reason, was held to be justifiable by the great body of the Church. This circumstance was freely spoken of among us at the time, and I never heard these facts questioned.

I deem this a fitting place to mention another circumstance, which occurred while I was at the valley. I refer to the massacre of Capt. Gunnison and his party, as was supposed at the time by the Indians. I have heard the circumstances of this atrocious murder discussed frequently at Great Salt Lake, by the Heads of the Church, and by the Prophet, and others. In all these cases, it was exultingly claimed by them, and unquestioned in well informed circles among us, that Capt. Gunnison and his party were murdered by the "Danites," disguised as Indians, by, and with the knowledge, and "counsel" of the Prophet.

It was, however, believed by some that the massacre was perpetrated by the Indians in fact but instigated by the Prophet—all parties agreeing in this, that it was done for the good of the Church, which justified the act. My belief is that the first theory is the true one. I could state many facts going to prove this. The generally received opinion in the Church upon that subject should have some weight; and I never heard any other opinion expressed until I came to the States, about one year since. I was one day at my brother's house, where a small company were assembled, when this subject came up; and Edmond Ellsworth said, among many other things, "I think Uncle Sam will get sick of sending officers here, when we serve a few more as we served Gunnison."

Ellsworth is a son-in-law of the Prophet, having married for his first and only wife, Elizabeth, the oldest daughter of Brigham Young.

Thus his statement should be entitled to the more weight, as he was known to be familiar with the Prophet. There was, in fact, no effort made at concealment, and it was freely talked of among ourselves, although it was scrupulously kept from the knowledge of the Gentiles, and from those Mormons whose discretion or orthodoxy was doubtful.

"CALLED ASIDE."

Called aside;—

from the glad working of thy busy life, from the world's ceaseless stir of care and strife,
to the shade and stillness, by thy Heavenly Guide,
for a brief space thou hast been called aside.

Lonely hours
thou hast spent, weary on a couch of pain, watching the golden sunshine and the falling rain;
hours, whose sad length only to Him was known,
who trod a sadder pathway, dark and lone.

Called aside;—

not the little cup of suffering be giving one of blessing given to thee?
The cross of chastening sent thee from above,
Him who bore the cross whose name is Love.

Called aside;—

thou no memories of that 'little while,' sweet remembrance of the Father's smile, hidden thoughts that wrapped thee in their hold Him who did such light and grace unfold?

Called aside;—

haps into a desert garden dim yet not lone when thou hast been with Him,
heard His voice in sweetest accents say, Wilt thou not with me this still hour stay?

Called aside;—

knowledge deeper grows with Him alone, secret oft His deeper love is shown,
learned in many an hour of deep distress
a rare, sweet lesson of His tenderness.

Called aside;—

dden paths with Christ thy Lord to tread, er to drink at the sweet fountain head,
in fellowship with Him to roam,
er, perchance, to feel thy heavenly home.

Called aside;—

hank Thee for the stillness and the shade, hank Thee for the hidden paths Thy love hath made,
so that we hath wept and watched with Thee
hank Thee for our dark Gethsemane.

Called aside;—

restful thought--He doeth all things well-- lessed sense, with Christ alone to dwell;
the shadow of Thy cross to hide, hank Thee, Lord, to have been called aside."

Jewett, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, publish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty per hundred. A Simple Packer of 50 leaflets at no two alike will be sent, post-paid, for 10 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

is now excelling the foreign countries in manufacture of gloves. Especially in the finishing qualities. The fact seems to be well-known by our people, as they are now using the home retured glove more than ever before. In business gloves you have no redress when they poor as is so often the case, but the home made glove is of any defect that he may returning that is not right, and guard against it in the future.
We feel interested in American manufacture and to know of these facts. There is no better produced than those made by John C.
Johnson, Johnston, N. Y. Those caring for neat visible hand-gear will be interested in his "Patent Gloves," which can be had by sending a to his address, which we would advise you to do.

STENOGRAPHY.
AND
TYPE-WRITING.
valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand personally or by mail in your own or Vermilye's rapid system of teaching;
published: hundreds of graduates holding able positions; success guaranteed. Also being taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free.
Recall, VERMILYER'S COLLEGE.
816 Broadway, New York.

EE samples of cloth the famous Plymouth Rock 83 Pants are cut from, including sufficient blanks and linen tape-measure, if upon this paper. Address Plymouth Rock Co., 11 to 17 Elliot St., Boston, Mass.

Just Published. One of the best Books for Christian Workers.

GOLD FROM OPHIR.

A NEW BOOK OF BIBLE READINGS, ORIGINAL AND SELECTED.

By J. E. WOLFE, Evangelist.

With introduction by DR. JAMES H. BROOKES. In addition to original readings by the author, there are many articles and readings by

REV. JAMES INGLIS,
REV. A. B. MACKEY,
DR. W. S. PLUMMER,
PASTOR F. B. MEYER, B.A.,
REV. G. S. BOWES,
DR. JAMES H. BROOKES,
J. N. DARBY,
DR. EDESHREIM,
DR. L. W. MUNHALL,
PASTOR A. J. GORDON,
DR. HORATIUS BONAR,

PROF. G. W. MOREHEAD,
DR. ANDERSON,
REV. C. H. SPURGEON,
THOMAS NEWBERRY,
LADY DENT,
REV. W. P. MACKAY,
DR. NATHANIEL WEST,
REV. E. P. MARVIN,
PROF. BLAIRIE,
MR. & MRS. G. C. NEEDHAM,
DR. G. F. PENTECOST,

GEORGE MULLER,
REV. W. F. CRAFTS,
REV. MARCUS RAINSFORD, GEORGE SOLTAN,
DR. H. M. PARSONS,
W. FLINT JONES,
LORD RADSTOCK,
F. E. MARSH,
REV. W. J. ERDMAN,
ALF. SANDHAM,
DR. ALEX. WHYTE,

C. RUSSELL HURDITCH, and many others.

The book is also enhanced in value by a very full Index.

"The best book of Bible Readings out."—HON. D. N. ROBB, U. S. Commissioner.

"These Bible Readings, these nuggets of gold, are arranged under the heads, Heaven, Hell, Redemption, Regeneration, and Resurrection. The Readings are brief, lively, full of the marrow of the gospel. This book would be helpfully suggestive to our catechists, and to inexperienced preachers. Eminent writers in the 'old country,' as well as on this side the ocean are drawn upon. We recommend the volume to the reader as eminently Scriptural and practical."—Presbyterian Witness.

"One of the best books I have ever seen. Every Pastor, every Evangelist, yea, every Christian Worker should have a copy."—EVANGELIST BISCHOFF.

"It is excellent in matter, material and make up."—REV. E. P. MARVIN.

Royal Octavo, 308 pages, strongly bound in cloth, $1.25. Mailed free on receipt of price.

Address, J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

WHY, WHEN AND WHERE.

"Why, When and Where." A Dictionary of Rare and Curious Information. A Treasury of Facts, Legends, Sayings, and their explanation, gathered from a multitude of sources, presenting in a convenient form a mass of valuable knowledge on topics of frequent inquiry and general interest that has been hitherto inaccessible. Carefully compared with the highest authorities. Edited by ROBERT THORNE, M. A.

500 Pages. Handsome Cloth Binding.

It is the every-day experience of almost all persons to be confronted by an allusion or a fact the origin or explanation of which is unknown to them. Many of such matters are properly enough contained within the covers of the encyclopedias and great dictionaries, but by far the larger number are a part of that general knowledge which is largely fugitive, and which must be verified by searches into odd corners and out-of-the-way places. The unsatisfactory part of it is that hardly any one knows exactly where to look for the desired help, and much rare and curious information of real value is lost through ignorance of the sources of supply. This volume is the first attempt to gather a mass of these unrelated but important and interesting bits of knowledge into one book. It has been compiled from countless channels, from the columns of the newspapers and periodicals of the present day to the musty pages of books long since out of date.

Over 2,000 Subjects. A convenient alphabetical arrangement has been chosen, and conciseness and simplicity of statement have of course been necessitated by the aim of the work. It is intended for popular use, for the general reader, and to supplement the standard reference-books by its treasury of rare and curious wealth. Authorities have been diligently consulted and statements most strictly verified, so that its matter may be depended upon as being exact and reliable; but, after all, its chief excellence and claim to consideration come from the collection itself, the first and only volume in which much that is herein given can be found. Every-day sayings, legends and facts which have been current in the daily lives of all of us, and of which often diligent search has failed to find the origin, will be found explained and elucidated, and in convenient shape for constant reference and use.

A Few Subjects to Indicate the Scope of this Book.

- | | | | |
|--------------------------|------------------------|--------------------------|-----------------------------|
| Adam and Eve. | Chess. | Longest Rivers. | Standing-Stones. |
| Age of Animals. | Church Bells. | Libraries, Foreign. | Standard Time. |
| All-Foot's Day. | Civil War Casualties. | Lotus-Eaters. | State Militia, Strength of. |
| American Commanders. | Comets. | Meteoric Stones. | States, Names of. |
| Animal Worship. | Continental Currency. | Millennium. | Stores. |
| Arctic Dwellings. | Corner-Stones. | Monuments, Heights of. | Suez Canal. |
| Army Officers' Salaries. | Council of Ten. | Mound-Builders. | Suicide Statistics. |
| Atlantic Cables. | Cure Bell. | Mountains, Highest. | Sunday-Schools. |
| Babel, Tower of. | Cyclones. | Natural Gas. | Temperance Movement. |
| Bad Lands. | Dark Day. | Navies of Europe. | Terrapin War. |
| Banks. | Decisive Battles. | Obelisks. | Treasury Department. |
| Barber's Pole. | Diamonds, Celebrated. | Opium War. | Salaries in. |
| Bastille. | Draco's Laws. | Pandora's Box. | Trusts. |
| Beer. | Earthquakes. | Passion-Plays. | Utopia. |
| Benedictines. | Eden, Garden of. | Penny-Weddings. | Valley of Death. |
| Black Death. | Elgin Marbles. | Pictured Rocks. | Veiled Prophet. |
| Black Forest. | English Crown Jewels. | Population of the World. | Velocity of Sound. |
| Black Friday. | European Cathedrals. | Postage-Stamps. | Venus, Statues of. |
| Bluebeard, Story of. | First Railroads. | Precious Stones, Lan- | Violins. |
| Blue Laws. | Florida Shell-Mounds. | guage of. | Volcanoes. |
| Blue Stockings. | Flying Dutchman. | Presidents' Ages. | War Department, Sala- |
| Boston Mob. | Funeral Rites. | Pyramids. | ries in. |
| Bottle Chart. | Galley Slaves. | R. R. Trains, Speed of. | Wars of the U. S. |
| Bovvitt. | Glacial Period. | Red Snow. | Wars of the Night. |
| Brilliant of the World. | Go's Truce. | Religious Statistics. | Wealth of Nations. |
| Buddhism. | Golden Fleece. | Rivers, Velocity of. | Wedding Anniversaries. |
| Bulls and Bears. | Gold, Prices of. | Rome Saved by Geese. | Wheat Harvest Calen- |
| Burial Customs. | Gordian Knot. | Royal Incomes. | dar. |
| Camp-Meetings. | Governors' Salaries. | Sailors. | Whipping-Post in Ameri- |
| Canals, Great. | Great Bells. | Sea-Serpents. | ca. |
| Captain Kidd. | Great Fires. | Secret Societies. | Wine Production. |
| Cardiff Giant. | Height of Waves. | Serpent-Charming. | World's Fair. |
| Catacombs. | Hobson's Choice. | Shogers. | Writing, History of. |
| Cat Out of the Bag. | Hunker and Barnburner. | Signals. | Yankee Doodle. |
| Centuars. | Koran. | Singing Sand. | |

When we consider the number of topics, the judgment exercised in their selection, the conciseness with which they are explained and elucidated, the convenient shape for constant reference and use, this volume is an unique and remarkable book, and should be possessed by all who seek for rare and curious information.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price, $1.00.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

SAFE INVESTMENT
FARRAND & VOTY
ORGANS
DETROIT, MICH. U.S.A.

BRECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills.
BRECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

$3.75 A DAY And steady work right at home for any man or lady. Write at once. Franklin Co., Richmond, Va.

RIDGE'S FOOD

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids.
Nota medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Write to J. & C. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

HENRY WARD BEECHER'S
celebrated work "THE LIFE OF JESUS THE CHRIST." The publishers are now ready to forward terms of subscription for second volume, or for the complete work.

IN THE PRESS.

AMERICAN CHRISTIAN RULERS;
or, Rulers and Men of Government, Historical Sketches of men of this title and prominence, who have held prominent positions in the National and State Governments, and in the Judicial Department. Numerous authentic portraits, and a beautiful wood engraving of the great picture: "First Prayer in Congress."

BROMFIELD & CO., 68 Broadway, New York.

A NEW BOOK.

THE SALT CELLARS;

A Collection of 3,300 Proverbs and Quaint Sayings, Together with Homely Notes Thereon.

BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

Very handsomely bound in 12mo, illuminated cloth, $1.50.

"The placing of a proverb for every day for 20 years has cost me great labor, and I feel that I cannot afford to lose the large collection of sentences which I have thus brought together. There are many proverb books, but none exactly like these. Some of my sentences are quite new, and more are put into a fresh form."—From the Author's Preface.

The London Literary World says: "There is not a page that is not brightened with genuine wit and enriched with wisdom."

"Few books contain more wit and wisdom to the cubic inch than this, and the man who can read it without profit must either be too virtuous for this world or too hardened in wickedness to be helped."—New York Examiner.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York.

HOSPITAL REMEDIES

THE Favorite Prescriptions of the Brightest Medical Minds in the world, as used by them in the Hospitals of London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna.

ONE MEDICINE FOR ONE DISEASE.

- No. 1—Cures Catarrh, Hay Fever, Cough, Catarrhal Deafness.
- No. 2—Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Asthma, Consumption. A Peerless Remedy.
- No. 3—Rheumatism, Gout.
- No. 4—Liver & Kidneys, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Constipation, Bright's Disease.
- No. 5—Fever and Ague, Dumb Ague, Malaria, Neuralgia.
- No. 6—Female Weakness, Irregularities, Whites. A Golden Remedy.
- No. 7—A Perfect Tonic, which gives Health, Form and Fulness, Clear Complexion, Good Blood and lots of it.
- No. 8—Nervous Debility, Loss of Power, Impotence, an incomparable remedy.

Every bottle guaranteed to cure its special disease if CURABLE and to give permanent relief ALWAYS. Please send Circulars sent free on application. HOSPITAL REMEDY COMPANY, Toronto, Canada.

RELIABLE AGENTS WANTED.

"A Perfect Remedy for Catarrh."

A learned professor in one of the largest and most famous colleges in America, recently told a gentleman that the Pillow-Inhaler had cured a nasal catarrh which he had had from birth, and that he owed his present healthful and rotund appearance to the Pillow-Inhaler.

Rev. James Chambers, pastor of Calvary Presbyterian Church, New York City, writes: "I have used the Pillow-Inhaler for over two months and I hereby cheerfully testify to its effectiveness for throat disease and bronchitis. I would not be without it."

A pamphlet explaining all about the Pillow-Inhaler, and testimonials, sent free by addressing The Pillow-Inhaler Co., 1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

BAILEY'S REFLECTORS.
A wonderful invention for lighting CHURCHES, Halls, etc. Handsome designs. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price free.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.
112 Wood St., Pittsburgh, Pa.

$50 OUTFIT ON 30 DAYS' TIME TO AGENTS. Guarantee $150 profits. In four weeks or no pay, to travel or work at home. No competition. C. JARVIS & CO., Racine, Wis.

STRENGTH FOR TO-DAY.

Strength for to-day is all that we need,
As there never will be a to-morrow;
For to-morrow will prove but another to-day
With its measure of joy and sorrow.

Then why forecast the trials of life,
With such sad and grave persistence,
And watch and wait for a crowd of ills
That as yet has no existence?

Strength for to-day—what a precious boon
For the earnest souls who labor!
For the willing hands that minister
To the needy friend or neighbor!

Strength for to-day—that the weary heart
In the battle for right may quail not,
And the eyes bedimmed with bitter tears
In their search for truth may fail not.

Strength for to-day, on the down-hill track,
For the travellers near the valley;
That up, far up on the other side
Ere long they may safely rally.

Strength for to-day, that our precious youth
May happily shun temptation,
And build from the rise to the set of the sun,
On a strong and sure foundation.

Strength for to-day, in house and home,
To practice forbearance sweetly;
To scatter kind words and loving deeds,
Still trusting in God completely.

Strength for to-day is all that we need,
As there never will be a to-morrow;
For to-morrow will prove but another to-day,
With its measure of joy and sorrow.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike), will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of
Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also Imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

DO YOU WANT ANY ROOFING.

Half the price of tin or shingles. Guaranteed water tight on flat or steep surface, and you or your man John can put it on. Sample free if you mention Christian Herald and

STATE SIZE OF ROOF.
Ind. Paint & Roofing Co., 42 W. Broadway, New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY.
CHANCE FOR ALL
To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect
Tea. A TRIAL ORDER OF
3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either
Oolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunpow-
der, Young Hyson, Mixed, English
Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent
by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea
you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

HUTCHINSON'S GLOVES ARE THE BEST.
made with care from selected skins and WARRANTED. Those wanting serviceable gloves and to learn how get them and save money, send stamp to the manufacturer for the book "About Gloves."
It will interest you. Dated January 1892.
Will send a good glove measure with book to those who mention this paper.
John C. Hutchinson, Johnstown, N. Y.

PIANOS UNIVERSITY ORGANS
Guaranteed 6 years.
They Lead the World.
We sell organ to families and send for trial in your own
home before you buy.
Catalogue Free.
Established 1820. London, 1870.
MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, N. Y.

SHORTHAND Writing thoroughly taught
by mail or personally.
Situations procured at a price when content.
Circulars, W. G. CHAPPEL, Oswego, N. Y.

WORD TO THE THOUSANDS WHO HEARD OR READ WITH INTEREST

TALMAGE'S GREAT SERMON

"The Day is at Hand."

Let Nothing Prevent.

Procure and read at once that wonderful book on the same topic, and of almost the same title (just out 12,000 already in circulation), viz:—

THE TIME IS AT HAND

360 Pages, Cloth, $1. Paper, 25c.—post free.

This volume is a continuation or second part of that able work which, during the past year, has cheered and warmed so many Christian hearts, both in England and America, and which has done and is doing so much to make plain to the masses the word of God; overcoming the objections of Infidelity and clearing away skeptical doubts by pointing out from Scripture the how and the why of God's dispensational dealings as they encompass the past, the present and
the future, viz:

"The Plan of the Ages"

Over 120,000 copies of this last-named work are already in circulation, and so many are ordering the cheap edition by the dozen copies for friends, that it bids fair to have half a million copies out ere long.
All the earnest friends of Jesus and the Bible, after refreshing their own hearts at the Fountain by the use of this "Bible Key," should do all they can to pass the blessing on and on until all shall have tasted of the Grace of our God. These two books are surely a part of the dispensational blessing now due to
"those who look for him," mentioned by the Prophet Daniel when he said: "Knowledge shall be increased"
and the wise shall understand.

The Plan of the Ages aptly says of this work:
"It is built up stone upon stone, and upon every stone
it is inscribed and it becomes a pyramid of God's love and Spirit and wisdom. There is nothing in the Bible that the skeptic queries or doubts, but there are many texts that seem a flood of light upon that seems to uncover its mystery. It is impossible to read this book without looking at the writer and pondering upon his wonderful solution of the great mysteries that have troubled us all our lives."

Surely in the present time none are so strong, so rooted and grounded and built up in God's truth that they could not be greatly assisted by this Helping Hand for Bible Students.

352 Pages, cloth bound, $1.00. Paper covers, 25c.

Address TOWER TRACT SOCIETY,
"Bible House," Arch St.,
Allegheny, Pa.

The above 2 vols. in cloth, together, $1.70 post-paid.
The paper bound edition, 25c. in any quantity. Formerly price was 50c.; it was reduced to bring the work within the reach of all.

"CALAMITIES—Why God Permits Them."

A most interesting and lucid treatment of a most complex subject, often bewildering and annoying even to God's children. Issued since the Johnstown calamity, but already in its 90th thousand. Neat 32 page tract, price, $1.25 per hundred. Sample copy
FREE. Address as above, TOWER TRACT SOC'Y.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and HYPOPHOSPHITES
of Lime and Soda

is endorsed and prescribed by leading physicians because both the Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites are the recognized agents in the cure of Consumption. It is as palatable as milk.

Scott's Emulsion is a perfect is a wonderful Flesh Producer. It is the Best Remedy for CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, Bronchitis, Wasting Diseases, Chronic Coughs and Colds.
Ask for Scott's Emulsion and take no other.

WANTED Agents for LITTLE GIANT CYCLOPE-DIA, a marvel of bookmaking, 48 compact pages, 82 colored maps and plates;
cheapest book ever published, in full morocco, only one dollar. Over 15,000 sold in 2 weeks. A bonanza for agents. Address PARK PUB. CO., Hartford, Ct.

Scroll Sawyer.

On receipt of 15c. I will send, postpaid,
the pattern of this three-shelf Bracket, size 18x21, over 300 new and beautiful miniature designs for scrollsawing, and a 10-page illustrated Catalogue of Scroll Saws, Lathes, Fancy Woods, Mechanics' Tools, Small Locks, Fancy Hinges, Catches, Clock Movements, etc., or send 6c.
for Catalogue and Miniature Designs.
Bargains in Pocket-
saws, K. N. V. E. S., great inducements in way of Premiums.
A. H. POMEROY,
Division H,
216-220 Asylum Street,
HARTFORD, CONN.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to
the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of Send for new books. Shots at Sunday Targets, by Talmage
$2.50. Quick sales. Big
pay. Also, Mother,
Home & Heaven,
400 best authors. Edited by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75.
192,000 sold. 500¢
Curiosities of Bible $2 By Mail. E. B. TREAT, N. Y.

Curiosities of Bible $2 By Mail. E. B. TREAT, N. Y.

THE Alfred Dolge

FELT SHOES
AND SLIPPERS.

Noiseless,
Warm, Durable.

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York

MAGIC LANTERNS

art, science, history, religion and travel, is immense. For Home Amusement and Parlor Entertainment, etc., nothing can be found as instructive or amusing, while Church Entertainments, Public Exhibitions and Popular
Lectures
pleased Holiday present. We are the largest manufacturers and dealers, and ship to all parts of the world. If you wish to know how to order, how to conduct Parlor Entertainments for pleasure, or Public Exhibitions, etc., for MAKING MONEY, send us your name and address on a postal card (naming this paper), and we will mail you our
152 PAGE BOOK FREE.

McALLISTER, Mfg. Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y. City.

"THE WORD FOR THE DAY."

Text, Hymn and Prayer for every day in the year. Compiled
by A. J. A. R.

"The word for the day" has been compiled with reference to real every-day needs—not fictitious or sentimental ones. Its thoughts are very well selected, and its brief prayers are prayers indeed; for devoutness it is admirable.—New York Evangelist.

"The word for the day" is one of those strong helps
to a true Christian life.
16mo, Cloth, plain, 75c.; Gilt, $1.00; American Seal,
$1.75; Calif. flex., $2.50.

Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price.
J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

FREE ENCRAVING OF THE GREAT BROOKLYN BRIDGE by return mail. Send address and stamp to K. D. QUMBY, 80 Vesey St., New York.

SILKS.

JAMES MCCREERY & CO. are showing for Bridal Dresses, Evening, Dinner, Reception, and Street Costumes, in Metal, Silks, and Velvets, the Richest and most Beautiful Designs and Combinations procurable.

In low and medium-priced Nove-ties, ladies will experience no difficulty in finding goods suited to the various uses to which Fancy Silks can be applied.

Dress Silks in the latest Colorings and the newest and most approved
Weaves, from 85 cents to $4.00 a yard.

Mail orders receive most careful attention.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

PERFECT EASE AND COMFORT

Made in all Styles for Men,
Women, and Children

Prevent Rheumatism and
Cold Feet.
Send for Illustrated Price-List
Mention Christian Herald

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York

AND STEREOPTICONS

afford the best and cheapest means of object teaching for Colleges, Schools and Sunday Schools. Our assortment of Views, illustrating Instruments and Popular
Lectures
pleased Holiday present. We are the largest manufacturers and dealers, and ship to all parts of the world. If you wish to know how to order, how to conduct Parlor Entertainments for pleasure, or Public Exhibitions, etc., for MAKING MONEY,
send us your name and address on a postal card
(naming this paper), and we will mail you our
152 PAGE BOOK FREE.

McALLISTER, Mfg. Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y. City.

3000 COPIES From One Original
DRAWING, MUSIC, Etc. Of Type-Write Let-1500 COPIES can be ters taken from
ONE ORIGINAL. Recommended by over Send for Circulars
and samples of work.
300000 USERS
A. B. DICK COMPANY,
52 & 54 Lake St., Chicago; 32 Liberty St., New York

For a DISORDERED LIVER
Try BEECHAM'S PILLS.
25cts. a Box.
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

"Demonology or Spiritualism"
Ancient and Modern. "An effective weapon."
sword of fire. "Only unanswerable work on subject."—Startling disclosures.—History, facts, data.—Scores saved already. Whole community rescued. Every family, preacher and Christian work needs one. 310 pp. 12mo, cloth. Price reduced to Sent by mail, postpaid, on receipt of price. Address
J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 42. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

PORTRAITS OF M. GUSTAVE EIFFEL AND PRESIDENT CARNOT, AND PICTURE OF THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

THE SAVING LOOK. Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

DIABOLICAL THROES OF THE LAST DAYS, By D. L. Shirres, J. P.

Robbery Avoided by Sabbath Observance—A Pianist's Discovery—A Wife-Beater's Story—Christian Physicians Wanted.

SIN, FORGIVENESS, AND PEACE. By Mrs. M. Baxter.

A RESCUE FROM THE SEA. (With Illustration.)

PREPARATION FOR THE COMING OF THE LORD. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.

Gems from New Books: Buddha's Inferiority to Christ—Atheism in Practice—Christianity and Socialism.

PORTRAIT OF HON. SETH LOW, President-Elect of Columbia College.

MR. RUSSELL'S WARD. (With Illustration.)

SLAIN BY THE MORMONS. By Mrs. M. E. V. Smith.

M. GUSTAVE EIFFEL.

PRESIDENT CARNOT.

M. GUSTAVE EIFFEL AND PRESIDENT CARNOT—The Eiffel Tower and Paris Exposition Buildings.

THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

Former French Expositions—Dimensions of the Eiffel Tower—The View from It—The Awards Declared—American Prize Winners.

THE interest naturally taken by the American people in any effort to stimulate trade and industry in another country is intensified in the case of the French Exposition by the project of holding a world's fair here in 1892. Though we are not in the habit of copying others, we fairly take an interest in their work, and in studying it get the benefit of an experience the cost of which is borne by our predecessors. The general desire, therefore, to have full knowledge of the Paris achievement will give interest to another picture of the Exposition, which appears on the preceding page, with portraits of M. Carnot, President of the French Republic, and M. Gustave Eiffel, the constructor of the wonderful tower which bears his name.

"The Best Exposition Yet!"

is the verdict of all our fellow-countrymen who have visited the French capital this season, and foreign critics agree with them. Paris is the only city in the world which has persevered in the holding of these great international shows at intervals of about eleven years, as was suggested when the first of them was held in London in 1851. That they have met a public want, and have proved of interest and value to both exhibitors and visitors, may be inferred from their gradually increasing size. The first French Exhibition, that of 1855, inaugurated by the late Emperor Napoleon III., was contained in the still existing Palais de l'Industrie, a building made of glass and iron, with a stone façade, situated in the Champs Elysées, and which is now used for holding the "Salon," or annual exhibition of pictures. The second Exhibition of Paris was held in 1867, and was contained within the limits of the Champ de Mars. The third, that of 1878, occupied, in addition to the Champ de Mars, the gardens and buildings of the Trocadero; while the present Exhibition not only takes up the whole of the above-mentioned space, but extends for some distance along the Quai d'Orsay, by the side of the River Seine, and into the Esplanade des Invalides; and, as an ambitious French writer has put it, not content with the available space here below, has sought to penetrate to the skies by means of which latter is the most striking feature of the entire Exhibition. This tower, designed by M. Eiffel, stands opposite a bridge called the Pont de Jéna. It is composed of iron, and unless the Tower of Babel surpassed it before work upon it was suspended, is by far the loftiest which has ever been constructed by man. Its height is 984 feet. The Washington Monument, 574 feet high, comes next; next comes Cologne Cathedral, 521 feet; Rouen Cathedral, 492 feet; the Great Pyramid, 479 feet; Strasburg Cathedral, 466 feet; St. Peter's, Rome, 433 feet; while St. Paul's, London, is only about 400 feet high. The lower part of the Eiffel Tower resembles in shape a four-legged stool or table—so that there is a great vacant space as a promenade underneath the first platform, which corresponds to the surface of a table, and which is 197 feet above the ground.

The Gigantic Eiffel Tower,

The gigantic edifice rests on four foundations of concrete placed accurately, so as to point to the four cardinal points of the compass. From each foundation rises one of the four legs which support the tower, and these are bound together by the first platform. The ironwork at the four corners of each leg forms the structural base of the tower; and as there are four feet to each leg, the whole may be said to rest on sixteen feet. From the first platform the tower rises to a second platform, and then tapers to a narrow top. The total weight of the ironwork of the tower is about 7,300 tons, but so admirably is the weight distributed that the greatest pressure which can be brought to bear on the foundations does not exceed 425 pounds to the square inch.

This first platform of the tower is at a level of 197 feet above the ground, and is rather over 5,000 square yards in area. It can readily

Accommodate 5,000 Visitors at one and the same time. From it an admirable bird's-eye view can be obtained of the Exhibition buildings and of the entire city of Paris. The platform is surrounded with large open galleries, and the centre space is occupied by four large restaurants. The second platform is at a level of 492 feet above the ground. Both platforms are reached by means of a spiral staircase, or by a hydraulic elevator travelling at the speed of about 400 feet a minute. This second platform covers an area of about 1,700 square yards. A large portion of it is occupied by the printing-press and publishing office of the daily journal of the Exhibition, which is brought out by the proprietors of the famous Paris Figaro. There is also a luncheon-bar on this platform. The third and last platform is situated at a height of about 412 feet above the second. It is completely enclosed, so that there may be no danger of visitors getting giddy from the great altitude. It resembles a large room, having an area of about 180 square yards, and a height of 8¼ feet. The view from this part of the tower is very extensive and imposing.

Paris Lies at One's Feet

an immense congregation of houses in the midst of a beautiful landscape, traversed by the river Seine. The view extends right over the hills which surround the town for an immense range in every direction. On a clear day the sea is visible in two directions. The furthest point from which the tower itself is visible to the naked eye is in the Forest of Fontainebleau, forty miles away. The view of Paris by night, with its countless myriads of lights, is a remarkable spectacle. The quality of the air also at this height is most exhilarating. The visitor is far above the cloud and dust and heat of the city, and can enjoy the purity of mountain air. The campanile which surmounts the tower is used for meteorological observations.

The Main Body of the Exhibition buildings is the form of a square, of which it occupies three sides, and the Eiffel tower the fourth side. In the open space in the centre of the square is a garden beautifully laid out and ornamented with fountains and triumphs of the sculptor's art. No mere verbal description can give an adequate idea of the magnitude of the undertaking. The ribbed cast glass for the roofs of the buildings, for instance, is over a quarter of an inch in thickness, covers an area of 86,000 square yards, or nearly eighteen acres, and weighs about 930 tons. It took 141 railway-wagons to transport it to the Exhibition site, and an average of eighty glaziers were employed for 240 days in putting it in place. There are five main buildings, the greatest of all being the splendid Palais des Machines, or Machinery Hall, which is the largest building under one roof in the world. It is to be a permanent structure.

The Proclamation of Awards to exhibitors was made, with the disregard of the Sabbath usual in France, on Sunday, September 29, in the Industrial Palace. The hall presented a magnificent appearance for the occasion. About three thousand people were seated in the immense nave and in the galleries when President Carnot took his seat in the official tribune to the sound of the "Marseillaise," played by a band of five hundred musicians. On the right and left of M. Carnot sat M. Le Royer, President of the Senate, and M. Méline, President of the Chamber of Deputies. Behind were the officers of the President's military household, the Senators and other dignitaries. MM. Alphand and Georges Berger, gorgeous in their decorations, received the President, the Ministers and the Ambassadors, who occupied tribunes to the right and left of the Presidential tribune. Conspicuous among the gold-bedizened uniforms was the plain black suit of Mr. Whitelaw Reid, the American Minister.

A procession of all the commissioners then defiled before the President. They were arranged in alphabetical order according to the countries they represented, beginning with Argentine Republic and ending with Uruguay. It was noticed that the commissions most heartily cheered by the distinguished assemblage were those bearing respectively the flags of the United States and Russia. The President made an eloquent address, thanking the exhibitors and visitors for the hearty manner in which they had co-operated in making the Exhibition worthy in every way of France. M. Tirard, Minister of Commerce, next made a speech, and in the course of which he said 903 grand prizes had been distributed, besides 5,153 gold medals, 9,660 silver medals, 9,323 bronze medals, and 8,070 honorable mentions. M. Berger then announced the names of the exhibitors who had received awards; amongst whom were several American jewelers, photographers, printers, engravers, and manufacturers. The assembly on dispersing gave loud shouts of "Long live Carnot!" "Long live the Republic!"

M. GUSTAVE EIFFEL,

whose portrait is given on the first page, was born at Dijon, in Burgundy, in 1832, and is therefore fifty-seven years old. He was educated at the Central School of Arts et Manufactures, where he graduated with distinction at the age of twenty-three. Soon after this he was engaged in the construction of an immense iron bridge at Bordeaux, and showed then and there evidence of that indefatigable energy, boldness, and enterprise which have never forsaken him, and which are the marked characteristics of the man. His capacity for works of an extensive character won him golden opinions throughout Europe, and he has been engaged on many of the principal engineering enterprises of the day. He was prominently connected with the Paris Exhibitions of 1867 and 1878. M. Eiffel's name and skill are also associated with Bartholdi's famous "Statue of Liberty," which stands as a lighthouse in New York Harbor.

M. CARNOT.

HAVING already published a biography of the President of the French Republic in this journal on May 29 of this year, it is unnecessary to do more in this place than give a brief summary of the leading events in his career. He is the grandson of the famous Hippolyte Carnot, who during the great revolution in France, which this exposition was organized to commemorate, was the colleague of Robespierre, but eventually separated from the bloodthirsty monster and led the attack which effected his downfall. He had the honor of being proscribed by the royal family on their return to power. The father of the President, M. Lazare Hippolyte Carnot, was a prominent figure in the revolution of 1848 and was proscribed by Napoleon III.

President Carnot was born in 1837, and is therefore fifty-two years old. He was educated for a civil engineer, and after graduating took charge of several important public works. He was elected to the Legislature in 1872 and re-elected in 1876. He became Minister of Public Works in 1880, and in 1885 Secretary of the Treasury. In that office he distinguished himself by a refusal to become a party to a project which would have made him a favorite with the President but would have been an injustice to the Republic, and he finally quitted office rather than yield. He was elected to the Presidency of the Republic on December 3, 1887.

The Prophetic News and Israel's Watchman

(London), edited by the Rev. M. Baxter, may be had from the office of this journal, 71 Bible House, New York; price six cents, including postage. Annual subscription, seventy cents. The following articles, among others, are contained in the number for October:

The Seven Seals. By William Kelly.
St. James's Prophecy in Acts 15:16, 17.
The Future Imperial Church and its Divine Head.
Jerusalem to be Trodden Down by Antichrist.
The 144,000. By the Late Rev. R. A. Purdon.
Seven Proofs that Antichrist is Future. By the Late Rev. W. Burgh.
Only Twelve Years to live.
The Right Position for the Believer at the Present Time.
The French Elections.

DIABOLICAL THROES OF THE LAST DAYS.

By D. L. Shirres, J. P.*

THE final period of Satan's long struggle against God on this earth begins with his ejection and overthrow after a fierce conflict (Rev. 12: 7-10) in the heavenly regions—such a conflict as can be waged by spirits great in power and in might; principalities and powers in heavenly places, conflicting with principalities and powers, still great, though fallen, being the rulers of the darkness of this world; but God, in whose hands are the issues of all conflicts, gives the victory to His own angels, and the overthrow is complete. The great dragon, that old serpent called the devil and Satan, who was a murderer from the beginning, he and all his followers (drawn into their rebellion probably by him) are precipitated to the earth, and confined within the limits of our atmosphere, so that all beyond is impenetrable, being finally shut out from heaven. It is but the first step in

Their Terrible Descent.

In a very brief period there will be another descent, when the bottomless pit will open her mouth wide to receive their whole host, and in this horrible prison shall they, by Divine mandate, be shut up many days. The hatred of Satan and his angels to men will, by their precipitation to our earth, be greatly intensified, "for the devil has come down unto you, having great wrath because he knoweth that he hath but a short time," therefore, "woe to the inhabitants of the earth, and of the sea." (Rev. 12: 12.) Every possible effort will now be made to involve, without exception, the whole existing generation in their own irretrievable ruin.

"And the dragon shall be wroth with the woman, and shall go to make war with the remnant of her seed, who keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." Every man, therefore, who in those days will hold fast his integrity will have to pass through a fiery ordeal, for whosoever will not worship which Antichrist sets up shall be slain. Up until this period the flood-gates of wickedness have been restrained; God having mercifully kept back the tide of evil from overrunning the whole earth, but now this restraining power shall be withdrawn, and transgressors shall come to the full, and consequently the time for judgment be ripe. Crime will no longer cover itself with a veil to hide its deformity, but men shall glory in their shame, and boast themselves in their wickedness.

The Golden Image

The great arch-enemy of God and man, knowing that he hath but a short time after his ejection to the earth, will seek to make the most of that short time by accomplishing the greatest possible amount of evil within these short limits. It is against the Most High that all his shafts are directed. Against Himself personally he has no power, but if he can indirectly wound Him, by turning the earth into a pandemonium, that will be some gratification to his malignant mind, and with this view he arranges and matures a great plan of getting up an opposition-god, one who should acknowledge his power to proceed from the dragon; thereby recognizing him as his superior. This

Antigod, or Antichrist,

this great impersonation of evil, is spoken of by various names in Scripture; he is called by Isaiah the "Assyrian," "the fierce king," and "cruel Lord." In the fourteenth chapter of Isaiah he is particularly described as the "oppressor," "the king of Babylon," by which name he is also designated in the prophet Jeremiah, and in others of the prophets; and in Revelation 17 as "the scarlet-colored beast full of blasphemy." As "the beast that ascendeth up out of the bottomless pit," and "riseth up out of the sea," he is styled the "wicked one," and by St. Paul, the "man of sin;" and is alluded to by nearly all the prophets in connection with and as preliminary to the commencement of the eternal reign of Messiah.

When the ten toes of the great image are clearly developed, which are the ten distinct kingdoms into which the Roman monarchy has yet to be divided, then, after them, is another king to arise: this is Antichrist. "He shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think

To Change Times and Laws,

and they shall be given into his hand until a time, and times, and the dividing of a time" (or the forty and two months of Revelation). He is "The Little Horn" mentioned in the eighth chapter of Daniel, which "waxeth exceeding great toward the south and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land," and is interpreted by the angel to be "a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, who is to stand up in the latter time of the kingdom, when transgressors have come to the full." He is the "desolator" mentioned at the end of the ninth chapter of Daniel, and also the "vile person" described at great length in the eleventh chapter, commencing at the 21st verse, onward to the end of the chapter. He is there shown as exalting himself above all that is called God, yet does honor to the God of forces—by which name he recognizes the dragon—to whom he is indebted for his power, and his seat, and great authority. To this God of forces he dedicates a golden image, of which the image that Nebuchadnezzar set up was the type. The dragon will speak through the mouth of the image, as of old through the pagan oracle, requiring of all nations and peoples and kindreds and tongues universal homage. This great development and manifestation of the Man of Sin is the immediate result consequent upon the overthrow of the devil and his angels, and is in accordance with his scheming device, that he might thereby win a victory over the Most High on earth, if he could not claim one in heaven; but in this he is also baffled by a wisdom and power infinitely superior to his own, and who at the same time subserves His own all-wise purposes, and makes the wrath of men and devils to contribute to His praise.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

The Convict and the Christian.—A Minister remarks: "I think one of the finest pages in literature is to be found in the writing of an old French writer, who tells of an aged man, a Christian, who always kept his door open that anyone who liked might enter. There came that way an old convict. Every one repulsed him, and would have nothing to do with him, but this servant of Christ took him in, and treated him so kindly that the ex-convict was sure he did not know who and what his guest was. He resolved to tell his host his name and history, but hung back for some time, lest he should be spurned by the kindly old man whom already he had learned to love, but at length he began. 'I do not want to know your name and what you are,' his benefactor exclaimed, ere he had fairly commenced; 'It does not matter whether you have a name or not; if you have a sorrow, if you have a burden, go to Him, for He says to you, "Come unto Me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Come to Jesus, who will bear all your sorrows, who will pour oil upon the sea of your troubles and put balm on your wounded conscience.'

The Fisherman's Last Chance.—The Rev. Mr. Ross relates: "A brother minister told me that one day shortly before he met me, he was talking with a man who was absolutely unconcerned about his soul, and urged him to come to Christ at once and accept His blood-bought forgiveness and salvation. They sat until after midnight, the minister pleading with the man that he would submit himself to Christ, for he saw that he had come to that state when it was either victory or eternal loss: for sin had made great and unmistakable ravages upon him. But the man would not yield, and as the minister rose to go, he said, 'I will go to the fishing with you to-morrow night (for the man was a fisherman), and I hope you will settle the matter then.' But the following day the minister was obliged to visit an invalid just at the time that the fishing fleet set sail. The fleet had got their nets set, and the men were all asleep in their boats, all but one, who was called a fool because he was not able to sleep in his boat, when swiftly a large steamer bore down upon them. The fishing boats had no lights, and the sleeping men did not know of the steamer's approach; even the 'fool' was not aware of the proximity of the danger until it was close upon them, and had only time then to cut himself loose and get out of the track; all the others found a watery grave, and among them the man who had refused Christ only the night before. Beware how you reject Christ. One day you will hear the offer of mercy for the last time, and if you reject then, and are lost, then your blood will be upon your own head."

A Successful Candidate "Standing Treat."—Mr. Climie says: "A minister in a country district was standing as a candidate for the School Board. He was straining every nerve to secure his election, and being an unconverted man, was not very particular about the means he employed. The election took place, and he was returned. As he was passing the door of a saloon he met two young men, who said, 'Sir, we were so glad to hear that you had gained a seat on the Board.' 'Thank you,' he replied; 'will you just come in this way and have something?' and he led them into the ale-house, followed by two members of his church. The young men were not slow to obey, and had liquor at the expense of their minister, who, in the exercise of a mistaken hospitality, instead of directing them to heaven, was leading them down the broad road that leads to destruction. The whole party presently left the house all the worse for the strong drink they had taken. Many men have the idea that there is no way of celebrating a joyful event properly without liquor drinking. He who sanctions and confirms that idea by treating incurs an awful responsibility whether he be minister or layman."

A Certificated But Christless Lady.—Mr. Ralston remarks: "Not long ago, a lady, having removed her residence from one part of the city to another, was unable to attend the church of which until that time she had been a member. She called upon her minister and, explaining her reason, asked for her own and her husband's transfer, that they might join some other church which would be more convenient. After some delay they determined to join the church nearest to their home. When the minister had received and read the certificates of membership he said to the lady: 'This is all right, but it is not enough. Are you a Christian?' 'What do you mean?' demanded the lady, somewhat astonished; 'you have the certificate that I was a member of a church. Is not that enough? I have never been asked that question before, and I shall not submit to it now.' 'But,' continued the minister, 'I do not require to accept these transfers, and I certainly shall not admit you unless you confess yourself a Christian.' At this the lady's anger increased, and she departed, vowing she would never again enter his church. She told the story to her husband, and sought sympathy under the insult she had received, but he had been truly converted, though he had been diffident in owning it at home, and, knowing the good minister was right, he seized the opportunity of avowing his conversion, and showing her that unless she were really a Christian she had no right to sit at the Lord's table. She listened to her husband's words, and saw that hitherto she had been travelling the road of self-righteousness, which would never have led her to Christ. But that night she started on the right path, and when next she visited the minister she did not object to declare boldly that she was a Christian."

* From his article entitled "Jerusalem to be Trodden Down by Antichrist" in the Prophetic News. Price six cents. For sale at this office, 71 and 79 Bible House, New York.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE BURNED.

WHEN the crowds of worshippers arrived at the Tabernacle last Sunday morning they found their beautiful church a heap of smoking ruins. A fire had broken out at about 2:30 A. M., and had burned the entire building, except the wall fronting on Schermerhorn street, which still stands, but looks as if a strong wind would overturn it. This is the second time Dr. Talmage's Church has been driven by fire from its home. On Sunday, December 22, 1872, the Tabernacle, which had been built in 1870, and had just been enlarged and beautified, was burned to the ground. The erection of the building just destroyed was at once commenced, and it was dedicated January 22, 1874. It cost $118,434, beside the organ, which cost $20,000. It was a massive structure of brick and stone capable of holding six thousand persons. Happily most of the loss is covered by insurance policies amounting to $129,450.

THE SAVING LOOK.

A Sermon by Dr. Talmage, which He Intended to Preach last Sunday, October 13, 1889.

"Looking unto Jesus." Heb. 12:2.

The Christian to be Always on Duty—The Conflict Compared to the Olympian Games—The One Object of Sight—A Great Chemist's Simple Apparatus—Looking to Christ—I. As a Personal Saviour—The Brazilian Murderer Plant—What is Meant by Believing—II. As an Example—How Turner Painted—Imperfect Examples not to be Copied—Only One Perfect Example—An Example of All Noble Qualities—Alexander's Army Stimulated—III. As a Sympathizer—The Midnight of Sorrow—A Balm for Every Wound—A Wounded Army Chaplain—IV. As Our Final Rescue—The Contrast—Infantile Questions.

In the Christian life we must not go slipshod. This world was not made for us to rest in. In time of war you will find around the streets of some city, far from the scene of conflict, men in soldier's uniform, who have a right to be away. They obtained a furlough, and they are honestly and righteously off duty; but I have to tell you that in this Christian conflict, between the first moment when we enlist under the banner of Christ, and the last moment in which we shout the victory, there never will be a single instant in which we will have a right to be off duty. Paul throws all around this Christian life the excitements of the old Grecian games—that sent with such a stretch of nerve and muscle that sometimes when he came up to the goal he dropped down exhausted. Indeed, history tells us that there were cases where men came up and only had strength just to grasp the goal and then fall dead. Now, says this apostle, making allusion to those very games, we are all to run the race, not to crawl it, not to walk it, but "run the race set before us, looking unto Jesus;" and just as in the olden times, a man would stand at the end of the road with a beautiful garland that was to be put around the head or brow of the successful racer, so the Lord Jesus Christ stands at the end of the Christian race with the garland of eternal life, and may God grant that by His Holy Spirit we may

A Man On a Race,

So Run as to Obtain.

The distinguished Welliston, the chemist, was asked where his laboratory was, and the inquirers expected to be shown some large apartment filled with very expensive apparatus; but Welliston ordered his servant to bring on a tray a few glasses and a retort, and he said to the inquirers: "That is all my laboratory. I make all my experiments with those." Now, I know that there are a great many who take a whole library to express their theology. They have so many theories on ten thousand things; but I have to say that all my theology is compassed in these three words; "Looking unto Jesus," and when we can understand the height and the depth and the length and the breadth and the infinity and the immensity of that passage we understand all.

I remark, first, we must look to Christ

As Our Personal Saviour.

Now you know that man is only a blasted ruin of what he once was. Our body is wrong. How it is ransacked of disease! Our mind is wrong. How hard it is to remember, and how easy to forget! The whole nature disordered, from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot—wounds, bruises, putrefying sores. There is in Brazil a plant they call the "murderer," for the simple reason that it is so poisonous it kills almost everything it touches. It begins to wind around the root of the tree, and coming up to the branches, reaches out to the ends of the branches, killing the tree as it goes along. When it has come to the tip end of the branch the tree is dead. Its seeds fall to the ground and start other plants just as murderous. And so it is with sin. It is that was planted in our soul a long while ago, and it comes winding about the body and the mind and the soul, poisoning, poisoning, poisoning—killing, killing, killing as it goes. Now, there would be no need of my discoursing upon this if there were no way of plucking out that plant. It is a most unfair thing for me to come to a man who is sick and enlarge upon his disease if I have no remedy to offer. But I have a right to come to a man in financial distress or physical distress if I have financial reinforcement to offer or a sure cure to propose. Blessed be God that among the mountains of our sin there rolls and reverberates a song of salvation! Louder than all the voices of bondage is the trumpet of God's deliverance, sounding, "O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thy help." At the barred gates of our dungeon, knocks, and the hinges creak and grind at the swinging open. The famine-struck pick up the manna that falls in the wilderness, and the floods clap their hands, saying, "Drink, oh thirsty soul, and live forever," and the feet that were torn and deep-cut on the rocky bridle-path of sin now come into a smooth place, and the dry alders crackle as the panting hart breaks through to the water brooks, and the dark night of the soul begins to grow gray with the morning, yea to purple, yea to flame, from horizon to horizon. The batteries of temptation silenced. Troubles that fought against us captured and made to fight on our side. Not as a result of any toil or trouble on our part, but only as a result of "Looking unto Jesus." "But what do you mean by 'Looking unto Jesus'?" some one inquires. I mean faith. "What do you mean by faith?" I mean believing.

A Poisonous Plant

The Conqueror

"What do You Mean by Believing?"

I mean this: If you promise to do a certain thing for me, and I have confidence in your veracity—if you say you will give me such a thing and I need it very much, I come in confidence that you are an honest man, and will do what you say. Now the Lord Jesus Christ says: "You are in need of pardon and life and heaven, you can have them if you come and get them." You say: "I can't come and ask first. I am afraid you won't give it to me." Then you are unbelieving. But you say: "I will come and ask. I know, Lord Jesus, thou art in earnest about this matter. I come asking for pardon. Thou hast promised to give it to me, thou wilt give it to me, thou hast given it to me." That is faith. Do you see it yet? "Oh," says some one, "I can't understand it." No man ever did, without divine help. Faith is the gift of God. You say: "That throws the responsibility off my shoulders." No. Faith is the gift of God, but it comes in answer to prayer.

All over glorious is my Lord,
He must be loved, and yet adored;
His worth if all the nations knew,
Sure the whole earth would love Him, too

I remark again that we must look to Jesus as an example. Now a mere copyist, you know, is always a failure. If a painter go to a portfolio or a gallery of art, however exquisite, to get his idea of the natural world from these pictures, he will not succeed as well as the artist who starts out and dashes the dew from the grass and sees the morning just as God built it in the clouds, or poured it upon the mountain, or kindled it upon the sea. People wondered why Turner, the famous English painter, succeeded so well in sketching a storm upon the ocean. It remained a wonder until it was found out that several times he had been lashed to the deck and then looked out upon the wrath of the sea, and coming home to his studio, he pictured the tempest. It is not the copyist who succeeds, but the man who confronts the natural world. So if a man in literary composition resolves that he will imitate the smoothness of Addison, or the rugged vigor of Carlyle, or the weirdness of Spenser, or the epigrammatic style of Ralph Waldo Emerson, he will not succeed as well as that man who cultures his own natural style. What is true in this respect is true in respect to character. There were men who were fascinated with Lord Byron. He was lame, and wore a very large collar. Then there were tens of thousands of men who resolved that they would be just like Lord Byron, and they limped and wore large collars, but they did not have any of his genius.

In the Midst of a Tempest

You cannot successfully copy a man, whether he is bad or good. You may take the very best man that ever lived and try and live like him, and you will make a failure. There never was a better man than Edward Payson. Many have read his biography, not understanding that he was a sick man, and they thought they were growing in grace because they were growing like him in depression of spirit. There were men to copy Cowper, the poet, a glorious man, but sometimes afflicted with melancholy almost to insanity. The copyists got Cowper's faults, but none of his virtues. There never was

But One Being Fit to Copy.

A few centuries ago He came out through humble surroundings, and with a gait and manner and behavior different from anything the world had seen. Among all classes of people He was a perfect model. Among fishermen, He showed how fishermen should act. Among tax-gatherers, He showed how tax-gatherers should act. Among lawyers, He showed how lawyers should act. Among farmers, He showed how farmers should act. Among rulers, He showed how rulers should act. Critics tried to find in His conversation or sermons something unwise or unkind or inaccurate; but they never found it. They watched Him, oh how they watched Him! He never went into a house but they knew it, and they knew how long He stayed, and when He came out, and whether He had wine for dinner. Slander twisted her whips, and wagged her poisoned tongue, and set her traps, but could not catch Him. Little children rushed out to get from Him a kiss, and old men tottered out to the street corner to see Him pass.

Do you want an illustration of devotion, behold Him whole nights in prayer! Do you want an example of suffering, see His path across Palestine tracked with blood! Do you want an example of patience, see Him abused and never giving one sharp retort! Do you want an example of industry, see Him without one idle moment! Do you want a specimen of sacrifice, look at His life of self-denial, His death of ignominy, His sepulchre of humiliation.

Oh, What an Example!

His feet wounded, yet He submitted to the journey! His back lacerated, and yet He carried the cross! Struck, He never struck back again! Condemned, yet He rose higher than His calumniators, and with wounds in His hands, and wounds in His feet, and wounds on His brow, and wounds in His side, He ejaculated, "Father forgive them, they know not what they do." Ah, my brethren, that is the pole by which to set your compass, that the headland by which to steer, that is the light by which to kindle your lamps, that is the example that we ought all to follow. How it would smooth out the roughness in our disposition! and the world would be impressed by the transformation, and would say, "I know what is the matter with that man; he has been with Jesus and has learned of Him."

Alexander was going along with his army in Persia, and the snow and the ice were so great that the army halted and said, "We can't march any further." Then Alexander dismounted from his horse, took a pickaxe, went ahead of his army, and struck into the ice and snow. The soldiers said, "If he can do that, we can do it," and they took their picks and soon the way was cleared and the army marched on. So our Lord dismounted from His glory, and through all icy obstacles hews a path for Himself and a path for us, saying: "Follow Me! I do not ask you to go through any suffering, or fight any battles where I do not lead the way! Follow Me!"

Again I remark, that we are to look to Christ As a Sympathizer.

Is there anybody in the house to-day who does not want sympathy? I do not know how anybody can live without sympathy. There are those, however, who have gone through very rough paths in life who had no divine arm to lean on. How they got along I do not exactly know. Their fortunes took wings in some unfortunate investment and flew away. The bank failed, and they buttoned up a penniless pocket. Ruthless speculators carried off the fragments of an estate they were twenty-five years in getting with hard work. How did they stand it without Christ? Death came into the nursery and there was an empty crib. One voice less in the household. One fountain less of joy and laughter. Two hands less busy all day long in sport. Two feet less to go bounding and romping through the hall. Two eyes less to beam with love and gladness. Through all that house shadow after shadow, shadow after shadow, until it was midnight. How did they get through it? I do not know. They trudged the great Sahara with no water in the goat skins. They plunged to their chin in the slough of despond and had no one to lift them. In an unseaworthy craft they put out into a black Euroclydon.

My brother, my sister, there is a balm that Cures the Worst Wound.

There is a light that will kindle up the worst darkness. There is a harbor from the roughest ocean. You need and may have the Saviour's sympathy. You cannot get on this way. I see your trouble is wearing you out, body and mind and soul. I come on no fool's errand to-day. I come with a balm that can heal any wound. Are you sick? Jesus was sick. Are you weary? Jesus was weary. Are you persecuted? Jesus was persecuted. Are you bereaved? Did not Jesus weep over Lazarus? Oh, yes, like a roe on the mountains of Bethel, Jesus comes bounding to your soul to-day. There is one passage of Scripture every word of which is a heart throb: "Come unto me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Then there is another passage just as good: "Cast thy burden on the Lord, and He will sustain thee." Oh, there are green pastures where leads the wounded and sick of the flock. The Son of God stands by the tomb of Lazarus, and will gloriously break it open at the right time. Gennesaret cannot toss its waves so high that Christ cannot walk them. The cruse of oil will multiply into an illimitable supply. After the orchard seems to have been robbed of all its fruit, the Lord has one tree left, full of golden and ripe supply. The requiem may wail with gloom and with death; but there cometh after a while a song, a chant, an anthem, a battle march, a jubilee, a coronation. Oh, do you not feel the breath of Christ's sympathy now, you wounded ones, you troubled ones?

The Heavenly Shepherd

If you do not, I would like to tell you of the chaplain in the army who was wounded so he could not walk, but he heard at a distance among the dying a man, who said, "O my God!" He said to himself, "I must help that man though I can't walk." So he rolled over and rolled through his own blood and rolled on over many of the slain, until he came where this poor fellow was suffering, and he preached to him the comfort of the gospel, and with his own wound he seemed to soothe that man's wound. It was sympathy going out towards an object most necessitous, and one that he could easily understand. And so it is with Christ: though wounded all over Himself, He hears the cry of our repentance, the cry of our bereavement, the cry of our poverty, the cry of our wretchedness, and He says, "I must go and help that soul," and He rolls over with wounds in head, wounds in hands, wounds in feet, toward us, until He comes just where we are weltering in our own blood, and He puts His arm over us—and I see it is a wounded arm, and it is a wounded hand—and as He throws His arm over us I hear Him say, "I have loved thee with an everlasting love."

Again, we must look to Christ

As Our Final Rescue.

We cannot with these eyes, however good our sight may be, catch a glimpse of the heavenly land for which our souls long. But I have no more doubt that beyond the cold river there is a place of glory and of rest, than we have that across the Atlantic Ocean there is another continent. But the heavenly land and this land stand in mighty contrast. This is barrenness, and that verdure. These shallow streams of earth which a thirsty ox might drink dry, or a mule's hoof trample into mire, compared with the bright, crystalline river from under the throne, on the banks of which river the armies of heaven may rest, and into whose clear flood the trees of life dip their branches.

These instruments of earthly music, so easily racked into discord, compared with the harps that thrill with eternal raptures, and the trumpets that are so musical that they wake the dead. These streets along which we go panting in summer heat, or shivering in winter's cold, and the poor man carries his burden, and the vagrant asks for alms, and along which shuffle the feet of compared with those streets that sound forever with the feet of joy and holiness, and those walls made out of all manner of precious stones, the light intershot with reflections from jasper and chrysolite and topaz and sardonyx and beryl and emerald and chrysoprasus.

Pain and Want and Woe,

Oh, the contrast between this world, where we struggle with temptation that will not be conquered, and that world, where it is perfect joy, perfect holiness, and perfect rest! Said a little blind child: "Mamma, will I be blind in heaven?" "Oh no, my dear," replied the mother, "you won't be blind in heaven." A little lame child said: "Mamma, will I be lame in heaven?" "No," she replied, "you won't be lame in heaven." Why, when the plainest Christian pilgrim arrives

At the Heavenly Gate

it opens to him, and as the angels come down to escort him in, and they spread the banquet, and they keep festival over the august arrival, and Jesus comes with a crown and says, "Wear this," and with a palm and says, "Wave this," and points to a throne and says, "Mount this." Then the old citizens of heaven come around to hear the newcomer's recital of deliverance wrought for him, and as the newly arrived soul tells of the grace that pardoned and the mercy that saved him, all the inhabitants shout the praise of the King, crying, "Praise Him! Praise Him!"

Quaint John Bunyan caught a glimpse of that consummation when he said: "Just as the gates were opened to let in the man, I looked in after them, and behold the city shone like the sun; the streets were also paved with gold, and in them walked many men with crowns on their heads, and golden harps to sing praises withal. And after that they shut up the gates, which when I had seen, I wished myself among them."

The Great Crisis from 1889 to 1901. By Rev.

M. Baxter. This is a 32-page pamphlet containing a résumé of his larger works, with diagrams and tables of prophetic dates. It has been specially prepared for distribution at meetings, lectures, etc., and is of a convenient size for sending in envelopes through the mails. Persons desiring to arouse the attention of their friends and the public to the momentous character of the period on which we are entering will find this a valuable means of assistance. Price Fourteen Cents per dozen, including postage. Address Manager, 71 Bible House, New York.

A RESCUE FROM THE SEA.

(See illustration on page 668.)

ONE of the most thrilling stories of peril and escape of recent date is contained in the report of an inquest held at Douglass, in the Isle of Man, on September 21. One of the witnesses, a man of about fifty years of age, named O'Neill, related the story. He said that he was a seaman on board the Florence, a steamer of 207 tons, which sailed from Liverpool for Belfast on September 17. She was heavily laden with coal, and just as she was about to leave her dock another large wagon-load of coal was brought for shipment. It was taken on board, though the steamer was laden beyond the safety-line.

The steamer proceeded on her voyage, but had barely reached the open sea before a heavy squall struck her. She labored helplessly in the trough of the sea, and though the hatches were closed, the waves which dashed over her decks made their way below into the engine-room and the hold. By midnight it was found that there were several feet of water in the hold, and the engines were barely able to keep her on her course. They were at that time only about ten miles from the Isle of Man, the lighthouse on the rocks being distinctly visible. The captain went below to examine the condition of affairs, and soon returned announcing that there was no reason for alarm. The words were scarcely spoken when something like a shudder passed through the ship, and she sank like a stone.

There were twelve men on board, one of them a passenger. O'Neill said that he jumped overboard, and struck out to get clear of the suction as the Florence went down. He kept himself afloat for about a quarter of an hour, when he struck an overturned boat, which was part of the wreckage of the Florence. He climbed upon it, and was soon joined by a shipmate, Michael Grace, a younger man than himself, who had been in his berth when the vessel sank, but had managed to get on deck, and save himself by swimming. He was not dressed.

They maintained their position on the keel of the boat until dawn of Wednesday the 18th, when a heavy sea washed them off. It was, however, a merciful stroke for them, for it righted the boat, and they succeeded in climbing in, and found that her oars had not been lost. All this time Grace had been exposed to the full fury of wind, rain, and sea, with no better protection than his underclothing, and the older man, though more warmly clad, was of course wet through and through. The long hours of Wednesday brought no relief. They pulled wearily about all day, but no one saw or heard them; and hungering, thirsting, and nearly dead with exhaustion, they had to face the prospect of another night. The boat had two or three holes in her; she was fast breaking to pieces, and only a water-tight compartment, which might give way at any moment, kept her afloat. By nightfall on Wednesday Grace gave up pulling, and quietly lay down in the water in the bottom of the boat. He had roused himself once or twice to ask if there was any hope of rescue; at last he said, sadly, "If I die send my wife word;" and O'Neill never heard his voice again.

Thursday found them in the same situation, O'Neill with his oilskins vainly trying to signal ship after ship, Grace incapable of word or deed. So passed the whole of Thursday, and Thursday night, and Friday morning. At length, on Friday afternoon, the look-out man on the King Orry, an Isle of Man steamer, made out something dancing on the waves, bore down upon it, and the two men were hauled on board, one terribly bruised and all but speechless, the other quite dead. The rescue came not a moment too soon, for scarcely had the dead and living man been hauled on board, than the boat broke up and sank.

O'Neill said that during those long days and nights he saw over forty vessels, but his signals for help were either unseen or unheeded. The chief part of his suffering arose from thirst. He believed he would have died, or gone crazy, but for the moisture from his rain-soaked garments.

SIN, FORGIVENESS, AND PEACE.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for October 27, Psalm 32; Golden Text, Romans 5: 1.

Sin the Source of all Misery—Sin in a Child of God More Heinous than in Others—Is False Witness to God—Evil Influence of David's Fall Still Operating—David's Sin Recognized by Himself—His Plea—Discovered the Treachery of His Own Heart—Need of Divine Cleansing—Rejoices in Redemption—A Thorough Break with Sin—No Blessing Till Sin is Put Away—The Song of Deliverance—Secret of David's Fall.

SIN: we shall never know the full extent of its hatefulness, of its malignity, until we know in its fullness all the holiness of God. "Fools make a mock at sin" (Prov. 14: 9), and they are fools indeed who cannot trace to sin all the misery there is upon the earth. Take sin away, and where would be the sorrow, the shame, the tears, the sickness, the death? Where would be poverty? How could war exist? Where would be prisons, lunatic asylums, hospitals, etc., if there were no sin? Who would know disappointment, heart-burning, vexation, sorrow, if there were no sin? All evil springs from one evil—sin.

Sin in a Child of God

is worse than any other sin. If a worldly man, for instance, gets out of temper, one cannot wonder; he sees his powerlessness against circumstances, and frets against them; he cannot have his own way, and thinks himself wronged, and, unless he is something of a philosopher, he yields to the present mood, and gives vent to his anger. But when a child of God loses his temper, everyone feels that something is out of joint, he has no right to complain of circumstances which are overruled by his Father; if he is truly converted he has given up his "own way" for God's way, and instead of thinking himself wronged, he sees his calling to "endure grief, suffering wrongfully," and, therefore, instead of losing his temper, he rejoices in tribulation, and glories in it. And if he does not do thus, worldly men have a right to doubt his conversion, and to say, "These converted people are no better than we are." Better to bear no witness for God than to bear false witness: and everything in our hearts and lives which is not like Christ is bearing false witness of God.

God has not hidden from us the sins of David's life. Some who reckon themselves children of God take a terrible undue advantage of this, and say, "If David, the man after God's own heart, was so bad—an adulterer, and a murderer—what can you expect of me?" And these forget the awful consequences of his sin—the death of his infant child, the incest, murder, rebellion, and open profligacy of his family: how awfully the sin of the father was visited upon his children. There are others who learn from the history of David to know the evil of their own hearts, and to value intensely and gratefully the wondrous provision of God's keeping power in Christ, which is made known to us in the New Testament.

It is not clear, from the title, at what period of David's life this thirty-second Psalm was written. In any case it is personal and experimental. David had sinned, and he wanted all the world to know that "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered." He had tried to cover his own sin, but his attempt had been a terrible failure. Nothing but the blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth from all sin. (1 John 1: 7.) "Without shedding of blood is no remission." (Heb. 9: 22.) "It is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul." (Lev. 17: 11.) But in some way the Spirit of God had shown him the way of salvation, and he says, "Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity." David understood how "the Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all." (Isa. 53: 6.) In some way he saw beforehand how "God was in Christ reconciling the world unto Himself, not imputing their trespasses unto them." (11 Cor. 5: 19.)

David had no superficial veils of sin. He says in his prayer for mercy, as soon as he sees his awful sin in the light of God, "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to Thy lovingkindness; according unto the multitude of Thy tender mercies, blot out my transgressions." (Psa. 51: 1.) As far as he himself is concerned, he has nothing to plead, he cannot open his lips, but he looks at God, away from the wreck which sin has made of him. "Thy lovingkindness," "Thy tender mercies," these were his only ground of hope; it lay in what God was, not what he was. And he pleaded, "Blot out my transgressions, wash me thoroughly, cleanse me from my sin." He uses no shadow of excuse, he makes no promises: but, on his own part, simply owns his sin, "For I acknowledge my transgression, and my sin is ever before me." But that is not his great burden, he had found out the treachery of his own heart—that for nine long months he should have had this awful sin upon his soul, and he not been alive to its enormity. Till God sent Nathan, all he had thought of was to save his reputation, but now how different! "Against Thee, Thee only have I sinned, and done this evil in Thy sight." His sin against Bathsheba, against Uriah, against his people, was heinous indeed, but all sunk into insignificance in view of

The Wrong He Had Done His God.

Never in his life did he see himself as now. If he had ever had a good opinion of himself, it was gone now, and he saw himself shapen in iniquity, conceived in sin. He saw that God required "truth in the inward parts," that there could be no really holy life unless the whole being was cleansed; and he cried, "Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean; wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow." David had already found out that the blood of bulls and goats cannot take away sin, that even in doing that which was commanded, he still had conscience of sins." (Heb. 10: 2-4.) He needed a divine cleansing, and cried, "Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me." It is only as Christ is in us "the hope of glory," that we are created anew in Him. (Col. 1: 27; 3: 10.) His blood cleanses, His presence makes new. The same David who was so intent on making devices to hide his sin from man has now abandoned such a pursuit, and is broken before his God, leaving it to His holiness and wisdom whether to expose him publicly or not; the broken spirit shrinks from the sin, not from the exposure of it.

And being thus conquered of God, and seeing sin in His light, David now sees redemption also in the light of God: his sin is "forgiven," "covered," no longer imputed to him, and although he knew that, under the law as he was, the fearful consequences of his sin must follow, yet he was so overcome by the goodness of God, and the greatness of his salvation, that he saw himself a blessed man.

One thing besides was now manifest to David, that the forgiven man must be one "in whose spirit there is no guile." A forgiven man must be single-eyed; his purpose, to be free from sin at any cost, and utterly, giving sin no quarter, sparing himself neither reputation nor anything else, but being whole and thorough with God. There are too many who, when they are converted, do not break thoroughly with the past; old habits are not left, old companions are not renounced; above all, old indulgences are indulged in still; the question with them is not what suits God, but what suits me, and in their spirit there is they are not yet fully blessed. David thus graphically describes his experience after he had sinned, and before the blessedness was experienced by him: "When I kept silence, my bones waxed old through my roaring all the day long. For day and night Thy hand was heavy upon me, my moisture is turned into the drought of summer." No enviable condition. He who had sung, "Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life" (Ps. 23: 6), who had cried, "I will bless the Lord at all times" (Ps. 3: 1), and again, "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places, yea, I have a goodly heritage" (Psa. 16: 6), now finds the hand of that Lord, that good Shepherd, heavy upon him. Now, instead of blessing God at all times, he roars all the day. And why? He has sinned, and the sin is not put away. He had known the presence of God as "the fullness of joy," but now all was changed.

Still Guile,

A child of God cannot thrive out of His presence. The plants which our heavenly Father has planted need the Sun of Righteousness and the air of heaven, or they droop and die. Our inner and outer man was made for God, and once having been united to Him, all is wrong and out of joint when He does not have His right place.

But God is not hard; He expects no impossibilities. "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins." (1 John 1: 9.) David says, "I acknowledged my sin unto Thee, and mine iniquity have I not hid: I said, I will confess my transgressions unto the Lord; and Thou forgavest the iniquity of my sin." Confessed, forgiven, put away. But would it ever be as though it had never been? Could Uriah live, and Bathsheba be restored to him? Could the reproach to the name of God be done away? "By this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme." David was, in a sense, a broken man from this time; his relations were right with God, he had no bitterness of spirit; but it could never be in man's sight as though this sin had not happened.

But David is now at peace, "being justified by faith;" he has

"Peace with God

through our Lord Jesus Christ" (Rom. 5: 1), although he could not, as we can, understand the fullness of his redemption. All the gospel he knew was, "The Lord also hath put away thy sin; thou shalt not die." (11 Sam. 12: 13.) How it was put away, David knows better now than he then did. But peace was surely his, communion with his God was surely re-established. "For this," he says, "shall every one that is godly pray unto Thee, in a time when Thou mayest be found." During the months in which he had "kept silence," and God had kept silence, and no real intercourse had taken place, peace was unknown to him; now God may be found again, he was at home, he could breathe freely. "In the floods of great waters they shall not come nigh unto him." It was impossible to David to keep to himself the goodness of God. He had known Him before, but now He knew Him in his long-suffering love as never before; he knew Him as one whom he had deeply injured, and who returned him only love; and he would tell others also to seek Him. He felt safer than before. The floods of great waters had almost overcome him, but now they should not come near him. "Thou art my Hiding-place;" he could hide from Satan there, and nowhere else; he could be safe even from himself in God. "Thou shalt preserve me from trouble; in himself he had lost confidence. "Thou shalt compass me about with songs of deliverance." Songs of triumph he had sung before, songs of praise and of gladness, but that now, at this very moment, he was not among the lost, oh, this made in his heart a "song of deliverance."

But what was the secret of this fall?

Independence of God.

He had not inquired of God whether he should go out to battle. And now, wherein was to consist his deliverance in the future? God promises to a dependent child, "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go; I will guide thee with mine eye." There is no excuse for a false step when we have the pledged assistance of such a Guide. Oh, how wondrous that He wills to direct such as we are in every little detail of our lives! What unparalleled love! And in His yearning over us He entreats, "Be ye not as the horse or as the mule, which have no understanding, whose mouths must be held in with bit and bridle lest they come near unto thee." God will never put on the bit and the bridle unless it is absolutely necessary; He loves the guidance of the eye—a look and not a blow. Jesus conquered Peter by a look, and it is the aim of God in all His dealings with us to bring us to a place of nearness where a look will be sufficient. But for such guidance close attention is indispensable. In our busy modern life, the Mary spirit, which sits at the feet of Jesus and listens, is very rare; it is such whom He can guide with the eye. First class honors in the school of Christ are all taken by these. The temptations of Satan multiply and intensify, especially upon those who are in prominent places, but the guiding Eye and delivering Hand are infallible; and thus, he that trusteth in the Lord, although in the past he may have deeply sinned, "mercy shall compass him about."

ROBBERY AVOIDED BY SABBATH OBSERVANCE.

IN the course of a missionary's diary published by Dr. Dowkontt in his Medical Missionary Record occurs the following incident. Dr. T. G. Churcher, the missionary in question who was travelling in Northern Africa writes: "I left the duar at about 7, and very soon came to a branching of the road, one, the shorter of the two, passing through the angle of the forest of Memona, infested with the Zemoor, a wild tribe who care not for the Sultan. My men were evidently scared, so I consented to take the longer route via the old Portuguese town of Mehadeer. The road lay for some time along the banks of the Sebou, a fine tidal river. We rode safely on into Salle, and again came under the most hospitable roof of our beloved friends Dr. and Mrs. Kerr. I learned afterwards that the very day before I passed this way a party of travelers was stopped by a troop of horsemen and robbed of everything—money, animals, clothes—and came into Salle with nothing (they offered no resistance, and hence there was no bloodshed). This occurred upon the safer of the two roads, and the property stolen included the Spanish mail bag. If I had not rested on the Lord's Day, I should, humanly speaking, have been just on that road at that very place and time of the attack, and should probably have shared their fate. 'In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths.'"

A PIANIST'S DISCOVERY.

A USEFUL little book has been widely circulated giving instruction to ordinary people how to act in cases of accidental injuries when a surgeon is not on hand. The principle of the book was sometime ago applied to spiritual emergencies by a clergyman with remarkable results. The incident is related by Dr. A. J. Gordon in his Watchword: He says, A charming young lady arose from the piano, and a Christian friend said: "Thanks for your music. You entertain us delightfully. May I ask how it would be if you were called to serve some poor sinner in his sorest extremity?"

"I don't quite understand you."

"Well, suppose one with only a few moments to live should cry out to you to tell him how to be saved. No minister or other Christian we'll say, can be called in time: the soul must learn the way from you or be lost. What would you tell him?"

"I am sure I don't know. I am not a Christian. Why ask me?"

"But think a moment. You have been going to church and Sunday-school all your life, and have heard sermons and exhortations without number. You surely could think of something to tell him."

"Well, I would tell him to pray."

"Suppose now, he has but ten minutes to live, could you tell him that ten minutes' praying would certainly save his soul? Remember now, one in such a condition must not waste time in mistakes."

"No; ten minutes or ten hours of praying would not save him, unless he was real sorry for his sins."

"But suppose he should say: 'I don't know how to be real sorry. How can I tell when I am sorry enough?' and you should hear him cry out: 'I am lost, I am lost!' what would you say then?"

By this time the young lady was deeply interested, and said eagerly: "Tell me what I ought to say."

"Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved."

"But suppose," said she, "he should answer, 'I don't know what that means.'"

"Then I would give him more of the words of God. Man's words are unavailing, but the entrance of God's Word gives light. I would tell him he must believe that 'All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God:' and that 'Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners;' that He died on the cross, 'the just for the unjust, to bring us to God,' and that whosoever believes on Him (relies on—trusts Him to save) 'shall not perish but shall have everlasting life.' I would say with great positiveness: 'Believe this, and even in this eleventh hour you shall be snatched as a brand from the burning.'"

After a pause, the young lady said, with a new light in her eyes: "Why, I believe all that."

"All what?"

"That I am a sinner, and that Christ came to save sinners, and that He died for sinners."

"Anything else?"

"Yes!" was the answer, with a quivering lip, "He died for me."

"Will you thank Him?"

"Of course I will; I never did before but I do now. I do now!"

A WIFE-BEATER'S STORY.

THE reporter of a daily journal recently visited a mission hall to describe the scenes that might be witnessed there during some revival services. He sat where he could see the faces of the audience and was particularly impressed with the appearance of a man and his wife who were among the most earnest there. The man was one of the square-jawed, brawny, bull-necked type, more frequently seen in saloons, at dog-fights and horse-races than in religious meetings. The woman was coarse, too, but had evidently been tamed in some way. After the service, being curious to learn what brought them there, he followed them as they took their way to the roughest and most depraved quarter of the city. He accosted them civilly, said he had noticed them at the meeting and would like to know if they went there often and how they liked it. The woman answered, but the man interrupted her. She was trying to conceal his evil deeds and he would not be screened. He said:

"How she came to go, I'll tell you sir, it was because her husband was as hard and as cruel a beast as ever a poor soul was tethered to. That was me. I was the curse of her life, sir. I'm a slaughter-man by trade; but half my time I used to be too lazy to work at it, and I used to make this poor little bundle o' bones work for me at the wash-tub or at scrubbing, or at charring—anything. What did I care, so long as I could wait on her, when she came home at night, to find me in beer and 'bacca? And I didn't let her off at that. I used to fust her. I confess, sir, that I used to fust her often."

"I fisted her wuss than ever when I found out that she used to come on the quiet to the hall here. I was that mad jealous of her doing it that I used to feel like killing her sometimes. It used to seem to me that she did it on purpose, to show me up and make me feel ashamed of myself. It didn't seem half so bad to do as I was doing when she fisted up at me, and swore back when I swore at her, and sometimes caught up something and fetched me a clout with it when I came home drunk and began fisting her. But when she began to go to the hall, sir, she took a turn—a turn that raised the devil in me that strong that it is a wonder I did not murder her. No matter how I fisted her, she took it meek, and wiped the blood off her mouth, and said: 'May the Lord forgive you, as I do, Jack.' I used to be furious then, and go at her and fust her till she hadn't got any voice left to crow over me. But next morning, she'd be bright and cheerful, and, if I said anything taunting, she'd make answer: 'I can wait, Jack. It is not you and me that is rustling (wrestling), lad. It is the devil in you fighting against the Lord in me. The victory may be far off; but I can wait, for it is certain."

"Praise be to His glorious name, sir, the victory was not far off; it was nigher than she thought. It come sudden, sir, as I'd fell a beast with the axe. I'd been fisting her cruel, for I was malicious drunk that night, till I thought I had done for her quite. She lay on the floor so still, with the blood a trickling from her forehead, and I was growing frightened and sober, when she comes to her senses and pulls herself up to her knees by catching hold of the bedstead, and, sez she: 'Oh, Lord! don't be too hard on my poor husband. Take pity on him, for my sake, and loosen the hold the devil has on him.' And as I sat there on the chair, sir, staggered and wandering, she managed to get up, and she put her arms around my neck, and sez she: 'Oh! dear Jack, I may be dying. I think I am. Let me hear you say: "Oh God, forgive me!" and I shall die happy.' But I didn't say it: I couldn't. I was so took aback, and 'mazed that I was dumb. I was dumb all through the night, sir, and she never let me go; and it wasn't till morning's light that I found a voice to say what she asked me hours before. There's the story from first to last, sir. I don't know who you are, sir, but I've told you my story and why I was at the hall to-night, and why I mean to stick."

CHRISTIAN PHYSICIANS WANTED.

THE opportunities open in China to a physician willing to sacrifice his prospects of wealth and honor at home that he may preach Christ to the heathen are unlimited. The Rev. Arnold Foster, B. A., writing from Hankow deplores his ignorance of medicine, and describes his painful experience in the presence of suffering he could not relieve. He perceived how rich an opportunity of telling the sufferers of the Spiritual Healer he missed through his incapacity to cure their bodily pain, and so gain their attention to the Gospel message. He says:

"My special object in writing to you to-day is to bring before you the need of a district like this in regard to a medical missionary. Arriving here three days ago, after a boat journey of about fifty miles from Hankow, almost the first person who spoke to me when my boat stopped at the landing-place was an elderly man, who asked me if I could give him any medicine for his eyes, which were causing him a good deal of pain. I was obliged to tell him that I had no medicine, and that I was not a doctor. Almost immediately afterwards some one else came forward and asked when a doctor was likely to come here. I could only say that I did not know. From that time on I have been asked continually by country folk whom I have met on the road, or whom I have seen working in the fields, whether I could give medicine for themselves or their friends. Again and again I was accosted by the country people, and asked if I was a doctor. (The Chinese seem to think all Europeans have some medical knowledge.) In each case the question was not made simply out of curiosity, but with a view to getting medical help for some sufferer. I generally replied that I was not a doctor, and could do nothing. In one or two cases, however, I yielded to specially urgent entreaties, and turned into houses by the wayside to see some one who was in pain. On each such occasion I was immediately confronted with other patients besides the one that I had been summoned to see. The thing that struck me was this: while some of these poor people were in very great pain, they were nearly all of them suffering from very simple complaints, boils, abscesses, rheumatism, toothache, etc., as well as fever and ague, skin diseases, etc. Some, however, had more serious maladies, but, simple or serious, they were almost all beyond my skill, and I turned away sick at heart at the thought of all the suffering I had seen. What I saw, I saw in just two or three villages, but this is only a sample of what may be seen any day in tens of thousands of villages all over China.

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

Remittances by Mail should be by Post-office money order, bank cheque, draft, or express money order, whenever possible, and should always be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Letters containing money sent in this way need not be registered, as, when lost, duplicates can always be obtained.

NOTICE.

At the beginning of next year the "Christian Herald" will be enlarged by making the pages a little longer and wider than now, so that thirteen pages will contain a larger quantity of reading matter than fourteen of the present size. The price of the annual subscription will NOT be increased.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Negotiation of a New Treaty with Hawaii is in progress. Ostensibly it relates to the naval station the United States maintains in the islands at Pearl River. Current rumor, however, both in this country and Hawaii, has it that a much more extended purpose is in view. A section of the Hawaiian people desire annexation to the United States; the King is said to be weary of the constant danger and turmoil of his position, and would be glad to abdicate if a liberal pension were secured to him; while speculators in this country perceive how much profit might be made of the islands under a strong government with American energy, enterprise, and capital. The project was under consideration five years ago, during Mr. Blaine's previous term in the State Department, but was discontinued by Mr. Frelinghuysen, who succeeded him under President Arthur.

Prohibition Has Gained a Victory in The Supreme Court of Iowa. The recent decision permitting citizens of another State to send intoxicating liquor into Iowa, to be sold in the original packages, menaced the enforcement of the prohibitory law. The Supreme Court has now decided that the clause in the law authorizing the seizure of liquor so sent into the State is constitutional. The purport of the decision is that if prohibition is made the law, and its enforcement involves the confiscation of property or the destruction of its value, there is no redress. This was the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Kansas cases, and it is applied in the Iowa case, the only difference being that the owners of the seized liquor were residents of another State, who had sent it to an agent in Keokuk to be sold in the original packages.

The International Maritime Conference which assembles to-day in Washington ranks with the Congress of the Three Americas in importance. Its object is to devise measures for the better protection of life at sea. It will include: a system of signals for use in fogs and snowy weather to indicate more definitely the course a vessel is taking, and so lessen the risk of collision; a code of signals of storm warnings; the marking of lanes for steamers on frequented routes, the regulation of the proportion of freight to tonnage; the establishment of a permanent international board of arbitration; and other subjects connected with ocean travel. About fifty delegates, representing twenty-three European and Asiatic countries, are expected. The only maritime power conspicuous by absence is Portugal. The assembly will form a conference only, and has no power to legislate or form a treaty. Its conclusions, however, will take the form of recommendations to the powers represented by the delegates, which may become the bases of treaty. It is believed that if important rules are adopted by a few of the leading nations, in some cases even by the United States and Great Britain alone, they will be practically operative upon the majority of merchant vessels, and there can be little doubt that other nations will gradually follow in their course, and the ocean be governed by one uniform code which will be equally intelligible to men of all nations, and all tongues.

Favorable Reports of the New System of voting come from Montana and Connecticut, where it has just been tried. It is known as the Australian system, and consists in the voter receiving a paper containing the names of all the candidates and marking with a cross in the margin those whom he wishes to vote for, and then depositing it in the ballot-box as he now does the tickets supplied by his committee. Many voters were a little puzzled by the change, but the Helena newspapers say that it caused no delay and was generally approved. Voters who could not read had less trouble than those who could. The party workers had cards ready for the illiterate bearing the names of the candidates of the voter's choice. At the top was printed, "I want to vote for all the candidates on this card." The voter signed this card and presented it to the judges, who checked his official ballot accordingly. Voters of this sort were thus disposed of with great expedition. The strong point in its favor is that the voter who can read can vote in secrecy, as was intended under the ballot, and does not have to indicate how his vote will be cast by applying for a particular ticket.

An Effort to Obtain Religious Statistics for the Census of 1890 is being made by Mr. Robert P. Porter, Superintendent of the Census. In a letter received from him last week, he asks us to inform our readers that he proposes to include five items on which he is anxious to have accurate information: (1) Organizations or Societies; (2) Church Edifices; (3) Seating Capacity; (4) Value of Church Property; (5) Number of Communicants. Every denomination, whatever its creed and however small its numbers, is invited to collect and send in statistics. It is hoped that some recognized leader of the respective denominations will make arrangements for securing the figures of his own denomination. As the ordinary enumerators cannot undertake this work, and as the appropriation available for the census will not admit of the employment of special enumerators, the Government must rely on voluntary co-operation to obtain the facts. Dr. H. K. Carroll, of the Independent, has accepted the duty of supervising this work, and is preparing plans for such a subdivision of the inquiry as will entail on any one person the smallest amount of labor required for a faithful and full report.

Elections Were Held in France on Sunday, October 6, in 183 districts, in which, as at the election two weeks previous, no candidate polled a majority of all the votes cast. They resulted, as the former election did, in a moderate success for the Republicans. It is now officially announced that the new Chamber of Deputies will be composed of 364 republicans and 212 members of the opposition. The republicans comprise 236 moderates and 126 radicals. The opposition consists of 100 royalists, 58 Bonapartists, and 47 Boulangists. This result can scarcely be regarded as a triumph for the Government; it means victory, however, in the sense that the Republic has not been overthrown by the formidable attack of the allied Monarchists and Boulangists. It is an ominous feature of the election that the Boulangists have obtained nearly half of the representation of Paris, and many of the anti-republicans elected are pledged to the revision policy. It is thus evident that those who regard Boulanger as politically dead are premature in their estimate. His followers are numerous enough to give trouble to the Government. They will have 47 representatives in the new Chamber, against 20 in the last, and they have thrown more votes in Paris than all of their opponents put together, the exact figures being 209,000 versus 208,000. If the so-called Boulangists co-operate with the followers of the Comte de Paris, and with the Imperialists, the combined opposition will control a force considerably larger than they had at their disposal during the last four years. They will only need an addition of 77 to form a majority of the House.

The German Reichstag is to be Asked for a special military credit of fifteen million dollars. This amount is to be spent in increasing the force of cavalry and artillery, and in the formation of two new army corps. The fact forms a curious commentary on the protestations European monarchs are making of their desire for peace. Another fact of similar tenor is that throughout the whole Balkan Peninsula Russian pamphlets are being distributed by itinerant Russian priests, setting forth explicitly the duty of all Slavs to hate Austria, and to prepare for a rise against her when the armies of Holy Russia come. Meanwhile, the Emperor of Austria, with the whole general staff, is holding important military manoeuvres in eastern Galicia, covering all the strategic points which would be involved in a Russian invasion. No correspondents are allowed to be present, and the only foreign witnesses are German and Italian military attachés, who represent Austria's allies. There is no disguise whatever about the fact that these secret manoeuvres, the most extensive and costly that Austria has ever undertaken, are rehearsing for war with Russia.

The Long Expected Visit of the Czar of Russia to the Emperor of Germany was made last week. He arrived in Berlin on Friday morning, and was received with great pomp and pageantry, but without popular enthusiasm. The Czar was accompanied by the Grand Duke George, his second son. He was received by the Emperor, several of the royal princes, Prince Bismarck, Count Herbert Bismarck, and a number of generals and court officials. The Czar was attired in the uniform of the German Alexander Regiment, of which he is honorary colonel. He and Kaiser Wilhelm embraced repeatedly. After their greeting was over, the Czar turned to Prince Bismarck and shook hands with him. He also held a brief conversation with the Chancellor. The most elaborate precautions were taken to guard the Czar from assassins. His carriage was surrounded with a strong guard of soldiers, and when the Emperor took him to the opera, the public was excluded from the building, and even from the streets leading to it. The galleries were filled with soldiers, and no one but specially invited guests was allowed on the floor.

The Authorship of an Anonymous Article in an English review is perplexing critics and vexing politicians. It is a powerfully written protest against England's joining the triple alliance of Germany, Austria, and Italy. Its logic and vigor would alone have commanded attention, but to it has been added the prestige of Mr. Gladstone's name. The London Daily News, which has always been supposed to be in Mr. Gladstone's confidence, states that he wrote the article. It is denied by other Liberal papers, but the News is confident that he is the author. The momentous significance of the question is fully realized, because if Mr. Gladstone again became Premier and the principles enunciated in the article are really his, the foreign policy of England for several years past would be reversed. The excitement produced by the article on the continent is little less than that in England. Full translations of the article have been telegraphed to all the leading journals of Europe, with the result that the French are exultant and the Germans and Italians wild with rage. The effect will be to weaken English influence by convincing European statesmen that her policy is unreliable through divided councils.

City Missionaries, Christian Workers, and others may obtain miscellaneous back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for mission, hospital, and prison work, and for general distribution, at $1 per 100. Address The Manager, 71 and 73 Bible House, New York.

A Deeply Interesting Meeting Was Held in the Temperance Annex Hall, New York, on October 7. It was called by the Church Unity Society, and was attended by prominent clergymen of all denominations, among whom were many of the Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church, now in attendance at the National Convention. The object of the meeting was to promote unity of effort among the churches in evangelistic work. The spirit that animated the speakers was best voiced by the venerated Bishop Whipple, of Minnesota, who said: "I suppose I speak for all the older folk when I say that as the grave grows nearer our theology grows simpler. World-wide Christian hearts are saying, 'Give me back my brother.' I do not believe it is possible for men to frame any platform or resolution that will reunite a divided Christendom, but I do believe with all my heart that when the spirit of divine love shall fill all hearts, then, and not till then, will reunion come." Among the speakers were Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, Dr. Philip Schaff, and Dr. R. J. Nevin.

African Missionaries are Protected by Savages, according to a letter which arrived on October 8 from Zanzibar. News was brought to that town by a messenger, who at the peril of his life had made his way from Usagara to the coast, that the white missionaries had escaped from the Bushiri tribe, who had swooped down upon them at Usagara, and had taken refuge with the Wagogo tribe in the desert. The Wagogo have been the terror of all travellers from Zanzibar. Mr. Cole and his wife, Messrs. Price and Stokes, and the other missionaries who have now taken refuge among them, would probably have been killed or starved to death if it were not that, at the mission station at Kisokwe, established on the edge of the Ugogo two years ago, the native chiefs learned the true character of Christ's followers.

Mechanical Automatic Detectives Have Been introduced into a lunatic asylum in Norristown, Pa. Complaints were made some time ago that refractory patients were being brutally treated by the nurses and attendants. There was considerable doubt among the trustees of the asylum about the truth of the charges, as they had been very careful in the selection of employees to have only men and women of great forbearance in the institution. Still humanity demanded that some check should be established. It was proposed by Dr. A. G. Chase, and adopted, that a novel method of observation should be introduced. It consists of a system of complex mirrors and shafts leading to the attic or top story, by which an inspector stationed there is enabled to observe minutely every act and motion of the patients and attendants in the wards of the first and second floors. The object of the arrangement is to prevent as well as to detect the abuse of the patients, and it is believed the attendants will be more careful when they know they are constantly under the eye of a watchful official whose sole task it is to report any dereliction of duty. The trustees have examined the operation of the mirror system, and expressed the opinion that it would effectually prevent the perpetration of any abuses like those complained of. Many who knowing human nature will approve this constant surveillance and admire the method by which it is attained, probably do not realize that their own actions, and even their words and thoughts, are observed by Him who will be their judge. (Ps. 33: 13, 14.)

An Anecdote of the Late Kindly Statesman, Mr. S. S. Cox, has found its way into print since his death. It appears that the much-coveted place of Consul at Constantinople was filled by a Republican, while Mr. Cox was the Democratic Minister of the United States at the Turkish court. The same Republican official had occupied the post under the Republican Administration, but it was supposed that Mr. Cleveland would have made a change. The reason for his remaining is now said to be the personal intercession of Mr. Cox. Many years before, an American family was travelling in Turkey, when the eldest daughter, a young lady of twenty years, was prostrated with Oriental fever. The Consul at once visited the family and had the sick daughter removed from the close and unhealthy quarters at the hotel to the consulate, where, in the better air, and under the kind attention of the ladies of the Consul's family, she was nursed back to health. On her return to America she became the wife of Mr. S. S. Cox. Of course when the Democratic party gained the ascendancy in 1884 the Consul's position was in jeopardy. But Mr. Cox had heard how he had befriended his wife in her extremity, and the Consul found, when Mr. Cox was sent as Minister to Constantinople, that he had in him not a political enemy, but a grateful personal friend. Many Christians will be similarly surprised at the last day when they are rewarded for acts of kindness which they did, without expectation of recompense, to the poor followers of Christ. (Matt. 25: 37-40.)

An Emblematic Monument is to be Erected over the grave of a well-known manufacturer of New York, who died a few weeks ago. His will, which was admitted to probate on Wednesday last, provides: "That the monument over my grave shall to a degree indicate my life, I direct my executors to procure a large boulder stone of not less than 4,000 pounds in weight, in all respects as nature shall have formed it, its surface being of irregular and sudden elevations and depressions, and smooth only to a moderate degree, upon which boulder shall be inscribed in legible letters of reasonable size my name, age, and date of death, and cause this boulder stone to be placed over or at the head of my grave, as soon after my death as is reasonably practicable, upon a substantial foundation of brick or stone masonry extending to a depth of at least eight feet below the surface of the ground, which boulder stone and inscription thereon shall be the only monument erected to my memory." Happily for the testator, it is only to a degree that "the boulder in all respects as nature formed it" will indicate his life. In his present state he is doubtless rejoicing that he was changed by the transforming grace of God. (Eph. 2: 2-5.)

A Curious Photographic Phenomenon was observed at Pittsfield recently. A party of amateur photographers set out from that town one afternoon two weeks ago to get some views of Pontoosuc Lake, a lovely sheet of water nestling between the hills on the north of the town. Reaching a good vantage-ground, they placed their camera in position and made a shot. They noticed a strange spot on the lake, which at that distance looked like a small island, but when they looked again it had disappeared. When they returned to their hotel and developed the plates, the little spot was distinctly marked. Being curious to understand its nature, they examined it through a powerful magnifying-glass, and there saw a complete reproduction of a drowning scene. There was an overturned boat, and a man clinging to the stern, while the head of another man was just visible above the water. While they were examining it a man arrived at the hotel, and reported that a boating accident had occurred that afternoon and two men had been drowned. The photographers had been too far away from the lake to distinguish the incident, but the camera had made all clear to them afterwards. It is so in moral and spiritual things. The meaning of events that puzzle us now, and lead sceptics to dispute the existence of a loving God, will be beyond the grave be made plain to the man who trusts where he cannot understand. Even from the companions of Jesus many things were hidden that they perceived them not (Luke 9: 45), but afterward the Holy Spirit taught them, and brought "all things to their remembrance." (John 14: 26.)

A Tragedy at the Altar is Reported From West Virginia. It originated in the famous feud between the McCoy and Hatfield families, which has already involved fourteen murders. Of late the animosity between the families has been intensified by the fact that four members of the Hatfield family are in jail for the murder of as many McCoy's. One of them is under sentence of death, and the others for long terms of imprisonment. A few weeks ago a strange rumor was current on the mountains where the desperadoes live. It was that the beautiful daughter of Peter McCoy was being courted by a young man belonging to a Hatfield family. The news of what seemed to them an unnatural marriage seems to have exasperated both families. But the two young people went their way, indifferent to the angry passions their love affair was arousing. They fixed October 1 for their marriage, and on the evening of that day they stood before a minister, hand in hand, to be united in marriage. Both families had discovered the date and place of the ceremony, and while the minister was pronouncing the words that united them, a storm of bullets poured in through the windows, and bride, bridegroom, and minister were all killed. The crime is as deplorable as it is shocking. The union might have led to a reconciliation of the factions. The victims, like that Divine Victim on Calvary, perished for crimes not their own, but, unlike Him, they died in vain. The strife will still go on, for both families realize now that they are hated by their enemies as much as they hate them. When Christ died, a way to peace and reconciliation between God and man was opened, because men learn at Calvary how infinitely God loves them. (Eph. 2: 14, 16.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The Southern Presbyterian Church propose to establish a mission on the Congo.

Most of the Presbyteries have voted to postpone answer to the Revision overture until next spring.

Evangelist B. Fay Mills is holding meetings this week at Spencer, Mass., in the Congregational Church.

The twenty-seventh annual meeting of the trustees of the Peabody Education Fund was held in New York October 3. The total sum disbursed by the Fund during the fiscal year ending October 1 was $69,633.

The Rev. John Charles Petit, who was at the head of the work in the Five Points House of Industry, New York, died on October 7 at St. Luke's Hospital, from Bright's disease. He was sixty-two years old.

The fiftieth birthday of Miss Frances E. Willard was enthusiastically celebrated on September 29 in the First Methodist Church, Evanston, Ill. Congratulatory messages from the poet Whittier, Mr. R. B. Hayes, and others were received.

The Right Rev. Thomas Hubbard Vail, D. D., LL. D., Protestant Episcopal Bishop of the diocese of Kansas, died at Bryn Mawr, Pa., on October 6, after an illness of two weeks. Bishop Vail was 77 years of age. He was a native of Richmond, Va.

Robert Baxter, Esq., the eminent English lawyer, and father of the Rev. M. Baxter, died October 8, aged 87. Mr. Baxter's loss will be severely felt by many religious and philanthropic societies, which were indebted to him for money, time, and labor.

Dr. L. W. Munhall's meetings at Norristown, Pa., have been the means of stirring the whole town and vicinity. The services of Sunday, October 6, were the most remarkable, says the Daily Herald, ever held in Norristown. At the meeting for men only, 1,200 were present, and over 100 professed conversion.

The bones of Lord Howe were found at Ticonderoga, N. Y., on October 10 by some workmen who were digging a sewer. He was killed on July 8, 1758, while leading an attack on the French at Fort Ticonderoga. The remains were in an oak coffin, at the foot of a tombstone bearing Lord Howe's name and the date of his death.

A series of Talks to Young Men commence on Friday evening next at the Young Men's Christian Association, Twenty-third Street and Fourth Avenue, New York. They are to be held every Friday evening through the winter. Among the speakers are eminent physicians, professors, lawyers, and journalists, who will speak on the subjects with which they are familiar. Tickets are distributed at the Y. M. C. A. rooms.

The Baltimore Convention on the Person and Ministry of the Holy Spirit, which we mentioned in a previous number, is now definitely fixed for October 29 to November 1. Three sessions each day will be held in the Mount Vernon M. E. Church, Baltimore, Md., commencing at 10:30 A. M., 2:30 P. M., and 7:30 P. M. Bishop W. R. Nicholson, Dr. J. H. Brookes, Bishop A. M. Wilson, Rev. J. W. Erdman, Dr. Thomas A. Hoyt, and other eminent men have promised to read papers. Further information about hotel accommodation, etc., may be obtained from the secretaries, Rev. George C. Needham and A. C. Dixon, 1819 St. Paul Street, Baltimore, Md.

PREPARATION FOR THE COMING OF THE LORD.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"And now, little children, abide in Him; that when He shall appear we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before Him at His coming." 1 John 2: 28.

The Third Aim of the Christian Minister—One of Christ's Favorite Words—I. To What the Apostle Urges His Readers—Fidelity to the Truth—Uniformity of Trust—Christ the One Object in Life—Perseverance in Obedience—To Be at Home in Christ—A Londoner's New House—II. The Believer's Relation—Little Children—Imply Feebleness—Fickleness—Dependence—III. The Motive—The Appearing, and the Coming of Christ—What Confidence Implies—Freedom of Speech—A Church Member Surprised—The Way to Prepare.

OUR first anxious desire is that our hearers would come to Christ. When men have looked to Jesus, our next anxiety is that they may be in Christ, the City of Refuge. We long to speak of them as "men in Christ Jesus." When we have good hope that our hearers have come to Christ, and are "in Christ," a further anxiety springs up in our hearts that they may "abide" in Christ. Oh that they may be rooted in Him, and built up in Him, and may always be in union with Him! Then shall we present them to our Lord in with exceeding great joy. To this third anxiety of the minister of Christ I would give my mind this morning. John says, "Little children, abide in Him." How sweetly those words must have flowed from the lips and the pen of such a venerable saint! Methinks he is in this the echo of the Lord Jesus; for in the fifteenth chapter of the gospel of John, the Lord Jesus said: "Abide in Me, and I in you. As the branch cannot bear fruit of itself, except it abide in the vine, no more can ye, except ye abide in Me. If ye abide in Me, and My words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." That word "abide" was a very favorite one with the Lord Jesus, and it became equally dear to that disciple whom Jesus loved. In our Authorized Version, the translators have interpreted it sometimes "remain," and sometimes "continue;" but it is not very wise of them to have so changed the rendering. It is one of the virtues of the Revised Version that it translates the same Greek word by the same English word.

The Day of His Appearing

I. First, then, observe

To What He Urges Them:

"Abide in Him." By this He meant one thing; but that thing is so comprehensive that we may better understand it by viewing it from many sides. He meant fidelity to the truth taught by our Lord. Truth is, in its very nature, fixed and unalterable. You know more about it than you did; but the thing itself is still the same, and must be the same. Take care that you abide in it. You will find it difficult to do so, for there is an element of changeableness about yourself; this you must overcome by grace. You will find many elements of seduction in the outside world. There are men whose business it is to shake the faith of others, and thereby to gain a repute for cleverness and depth of thought. Some seem to think it an ambition worthy of a Christian to be always questioning, or, as the apostle puts it, to be "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth." To throw doubt into minds which, by a gracious certainty, have been made blessed, is their chosen lifework. Therefore, you will be often led to try your foundation, and at times you will tremble as you cling to it.

Next, he means "abide in Him" as to the uniformity of your trust. When you first enjoyed a hope, you rested upon Christ alone. Now you know the things of God by the teaching of the Holy Spirit; be grateful for that knowledge. But do not now fly in the face of your Saviour by putting your experience, or your graces, or your knowledge where He and He alone must be. Depend to-day as simply as you depended then. If you have some idea that you are hastening towards perfection, take care that you do not indulge a vain conceit of yourself; but even if it be true, still mix not your perfection with His perfection, nor your advance in grace with the foundation which He has laid for you in His blood and righteousness. "Abide in Him."

Moreover, abide in the Lord Jesus Christ in making Him the constant object of your life. As you live by Christ, so live for Christ. Ever since you trusted in Christ as dying for you, you have felt that if He died for you, then you died in Him, that henceforth your life might be Consecrated to Him.

You are not your own, but you are Christ's, and Christ's only. The first object of your being is to honor and serve Him who loved you, and gave Himself for you. To live for Christ is the highest style of living; continue in it more and more. If the Lord changes your circumstances, still live for Christ. If you go up, take Christ up with you; if you go down, Christ will go down with you. For you "Excelsior" means higher consecration, more heavenly living.

Surely we should also understand by "Abide in Him" that we are to persevere in our obedience to our Lord. What your Lord bids you, continue to do. Call no man Master, but in all things submit your thoughts, your words, and your acts to the rule of the Lord Jesus. Obey him by whose obedience you are justified. Be precise and prompt in your execution of his commands. If others reckon you morbidly conscientious, heed not their opinion, but "Abide in him." The rule of the Master is always binding on all His disciples, and they depart from Him in heart when they err from His rule. If you have been upright in your dealings, be upright; be accurate to the penny in every payment. If you have been loving and generous, continue loving and generous; for your Lord's law is love. If you have closely imitated the Lord Jesus, go on to copy Him still more minutely.

"Abide in him in the sense of being

At Home in Him.

What a world of meaning I intend by that word "being at home in Christ"! and yet this is the sense of the word, "Abide in him." I was speaking yesterday to a friend who had bought a pleasant house, with a large garden; and he said to me: "I now feel as if I had a home. I have lived in London for years, and I have changed from one house to another with as little regret as a man feels in changing an omnibus; but I have always longed for the home feeling which hung about my father's house in the country. Why, there we loved the cosy rooms, and the look-outs from the little windows, and the corner cupboards in the kitchen. There is a vast difference between a house and a home." That is what John means with regard to Christ: we are not merely to call on Him, but to abide in Him. Do not go to Jesus one day and to the world another day; do not be a lodger with Him, but abide in Him.

Why does the apostle urge us to abide in Christ? Is there any likelihood of our going away? Yes; for in this very chapter he mentions apostates, who from disciples had degenerated into anti-christs, of whom he says, "They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us they would, no doubt, have continued with us." "Abide in Him," then, and do not turn aside unto crooked ways, as many professors have done. The Saviour once said to His apostles, "Will ye also go away?" and they answered Him with that other question, "Lord, to whom shall we go?" I hope your heart is so conscious that He has the words of eternal life that you could not dream of going elsewhere.

The Believer's Relation.

II. Secondly, notice under what character John addresses these believers. He says, "And now, little children." This indicates the apostle's love to them. John lived to a great age; and the tradition is that they used to carry him into the assembly, and when he could do nothing else, he would lift his hand, and simply say, "Little children, love one another." Here, to show his tender concern for those to whom he wrote, he called them "Little children." He could not wish them a greater blessing out of the depth of his heart's affection, than that they should faithfully abide in Christ.

Next, by this he suggests their near and dear relation to their Father in heaven. You are the children of God; but as yet you are little ones, therefore do not leave your Father's house, nor run away from your Elder Brother's love. Because you are little children, you are not of travelling years, therefore stay at home and abide in your Lord.

Does He not hint at their feebleness? Even if you were grown and strong, you would not be wise to gather all together and wander away into the far country; but as you are so young, so dependent, so feeble, it is essential that you abide in Him. Shall a babe forsake its mother? What can you do apart from God? Is He not

Your Life, Your All?

Does not the apostle also gently hint at their fickleness? You are very changeable, like little babes. You are apt to be hot and cold in half an hour. You are this and that, and fifty other things, in the course of one revolving moon. But, little children as you are, be faithful to one point—abide in your Saviour. Change not towards your Redeemer. Surrender yourself to Him by an everlasting covenant never to be cancelled. Be His for ever and ever.

Did not this remind them of their daily dependence upon the Lord's care, as little children depend on their parents? Your new life is as yet weak and struggling; do not carry it into the cold atmosphere of distance from Jesus. Little children, since you derive all from Jesus, abide in Him. To go elsewhere will be to wander into a howling wilderness. The world is empty; only Christ has fullness. Away from Jesus you will be as a child deserted by its mother, left to pine and starve and die; or as a little lamb on the hillside without a shepherd, tracked by the wolf, whose teeth will soon extract its heart's blood. Abide, O child, with thy mother! Abide, O lamb, with thy shepherd!

The Motive.

III. I now come to my last point, which is most important, for it finds steam wherewith to drive the engine. Thirdly, we shall consider by what motive John exhorts us to this pleasant and necessary duty of abiding in Christ. The motive is drawn from our Lord's expected advent. Notice how John puts it. He uses two words for the same thing: "When He shall appear," and, "at His coming." The second advent may be viewed in two lights, First, as the appearing of one who is here already, but is hidden; and next, as the coming of one who is absent. In the first sense, we know that our Lord Jesus Christ abides in His Church; according to His Word, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." Yet, though spiritually present, He is unseen. Our Lord will, on a sudden, be "manifested," as the Revised Version has it. The spiritual and secret presence of Christ will become a visible and manifest presence in the day of His appearing.

The apostle also uses the term, "at His coming," or "His presence." This is the same thing from another point of view. In a certain evident sense our Lord is absent: "He is not here, for He is risen." He has gone His way unto the Father. In that respect He will come a second time, "without a sin-offering, unto salvation." He who has gone from us will as He was seen to go up into heaven. There is thus a difference of aspect between the second advent, when it is described as "His appearing," and "His coming." John pleads the glorious manifestation of our Lord under both of these views as a reason for abiding in Him.

So Come in Like Manner

As to our Lord's "appearing," he would have us abide in Christ, that we may have confidence when He appears. Confidence at His appearing is the high reward of constant abiding in Christ. The apostle keeps most prominent "the appearing" as an argument. A thousand things are to happen at our Lord's appearing; but John does not mention one of them. He does not hold it up as a thing to be desired that we may have confidence amid the wreck of matter and the crash of worlds, when the stars shall fall like autumn leaves, when the sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood; when the graves shall be opened, and the dead shall rise, or when the heavens, being on fire, shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up. Those will be direful times, days of terror and dismay; but it is not of these that he speaks particularly; for he regards all these events as swallowed up in the one great fact of the glorious appearing of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

His desire is that we may have confidence

If He Appear on a Sudden.

What does He mean by having confidence when He shall appear? Why, this: that if you abide in Him when you do not see Him, you will be very bold should He suddenly reveal Himself. Before He appears you have dwelt in Him, and He has dwelt in you; what fear could His appearing cause you? Faith has so realized Him, that if suddenly He were to appear to the senses, it would be no surprise to you; and, assuredly, it would cause you joy rather than dismay. You would feel that you at last enjoyed what you had long expected, and saw somewhat more closely a friend with whom you had long been familiar. I trust, beloved, that some of us live in such a style that if, on a sudden, our Lord were to appear, it would cause no alarm to us. We have believed Him to be present, though unseen, and it will not affect our conduct when He steps from behind the curtain, and stands in the open light.

The word translated "confidence" means freedom of speech. If our divine Lord were

To Appear in a Moment,

we should not lose our tongue through fear, but should welcome Him with glad acclaim. To desert our Lord would rob us of that ease of mind which is betokened by free speech; but to cleave to Him will secure us confidence. I have preached concerning my Lord, while He is not seen, those truths which I shall not blush to own before His face. If my Lord and Master were at this instant to appear in His glory in this Tabernacle, I dare with confidence hand in to Him the volumes of my sermons, in proof that I have not departed from His truth, but have heartily continued in Him. I ought to improve in many things, but I could not improve upon the gospel which I have preached among you. I am prepared to live by it, to die by it, or to meet my Lord upon it if He should this day appear. Oh my hearers, if you are in Christ, see to it that you so abide in Him that, should He appear, you would behold Him with confidence.

Beloved, if you do not abide in Him you will have no confidence. If I were to the truth, and then my Lord were to appear, could I meet Him with confidence? If, to preserve my reputation, or be thought liberal-minded, I played fast and loose with the gospel, how could I see my Lord's face with confidence? If any of you have failed to serve your Master; if you have preferred gain to godliness, and pleasure to holiness; if He were suddenly to shine forth in His glory, what confidence could you have in meeting Him? A good man was asked one day, "If the Lord were now to appear, how would you feel?" He replied: "My brother, I should not be afraid; but I think I should be ashamed." He meant that he was not afraid of condemnation, but he blushed to think how little he had served his Lord. In this case it was genuine humility. I pray you, get not only beyond being afraid, but may the Lord make you so to abide in Him that you would not even be ashamed at His appearing!

Compromise

The other point is, that you should "not be ashamed before Him at His coming." That means, that having regarded Him as being absent, you have not so lived that, if He should suddenly be present in person, you would be ashamed of your past life. What must it be to be driven with shame away from His presence into everlasting contempt! The text may have such a meaning. What have you been doing while He has been absent? This is a question for a servant to answer at his lord's arrival. You are left in his house to take care of it while he is in the far-off country; and if you have been beating his servants, and eating and drinking with the drunken, you will be greatly ashamed when he returns. His coming will be in itself a judgment. "Who may abide the day of His coming? and who shall stand when He appear-eth?" Blessed is that man who, with all his faults, has been so sanctified by grace that he will not be ashamed at his Lord's coming. Who is that man? It is the man who has learned to abide in Christ. What is for Christ's coming? By the study of the prophecies? Yes, if you are sufficiently instructed to be able to understand them. "To be prepared for the Lord's coming," some enthusiasts might say, "Had I not better spend a month in retirement, and get out of this wicked world?" You may, if you like; and especially you will do so if you are lazy. But the one Scriptural prescription for preparing for His coming is this, "Abide in Him." If you abide in the faith of Him, holding His truth, following His example, and making Him your dwelling-place, your Lord may come at any hour, and you will welcome Him. The cloud, the great white throne, the blast of trumpets, the angelic attendants of the last assize, the trembling of creation, and the rolling up of the universe as a worn-out vesture, will have no alarms for you; for you will not be ashamed at His coming.

The Way to Prepare

Watch for Him, and be always ready, that you may not be ashamed at His advent. Should a Christian man go into worldly assemblies and amusements? Would he not be ashamed should his Lord come and find him among the enemies of the cross? I dare not go where I should be ashamed to be found should my Lord come on a sudden. Should a Christian man ever be in a passion? Suppose his Lord should there and then come; would he not be ashamed at His coming? One here says of an offender, "I will never forgive her; she shall never darken my doors again." Would you not be ashamed if the Lord Jesus came, and found you unforgiving? Oh, that we may abide in Him, and never be in such a state that His coming would be unwelcome to us! Beloved, so live from day to day in duty and in devotion, that your Lord's coming would be timely. Go about your daily business and abide in Him, and then His coming will be a glorious delight to you.

I called to see one of our friends, and she was whitening the front steps of the house. She apologized very much, and said that she felt ashamed of being caught in such a position; but I assured her that I should like my Lord to come and find me just as I found her, doing my daily work with all my heart. We are never in better trim for seeing our Master than when we are faithfully doing His work. There is no need for a pious smartening up; he that abides in Christ always wears garments of glory and beauty; he may go in with his Lord into the wedding whenever the midnight cry is heard.

The Millennial Splendor.

He will come—behold, He is coming even now. Hear ye not the sounding of His chariot wheels? Be ye so engaged, day by day, that you will not be taken at unawares. What will it be to be caught up together with the saints in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air! What will it be to see Him come in the glory of the Father, and all His holy angels with Him! What will it be to see Him reign upon the earth, with His ancient gloriously! Can ye imagine the millennial splendor, the age of gold, the halcyon days of peace? As for the judgment of the world, know ye not that the saints shall judge angels? They shall appear as assessors with Christ, and the Lord shall bruise Satan under their feet.

Glory awaits us, and nothing but glory, if we abide in Christ. Therefore, keep your garments unspotted, your loins girt, your lamps trimmed, and your lights burning, and ye yourselves as men that look for your Lord, that, when He cometh, you may have confidence, and not shame. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Buddha's Inferiority to Christ.*

"Is Christianity better than Buddhism? Was Christ better than Buddha?" asks my correspondent. We know whence these ideas come. During the last few years Buddhism has become a study, and its noble elements have been again and again put before the public. The story of Buddha's great renunciation has been told with matchless skill by Sir Edwin Arnold; the psalms of Buddha have been translated into faultless cadence by Max Müller and other Oriental scholars. And next to the story of Jesus there is none nobler, and next to the Psalms of David there are none more loftily devout. Jesus said of John, "He was a burning and a shining light;" and I find no difficulty in saying as much of Buddha. "The light that lighteth every man that cometh into the world" shone in him; and we can venerate and love him if we will, but not with that species of faith that daily piles forests of flowers on his shrines, and daily moves countless millions of lips to repeat the formula, "I take refuge in Buddha." And why? Because we have known a greater, even Him who is the Light of the world. Buddhism preaches pessimism and extinction; Jesus brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. Buddha claims no deity; he claims only to be an erring man who tried by the practice of noble virtues to free himself from the tyranny of desire, and in return to gain not the boon of life, but of death, to be extinguished and annihilated, as the bubble is extinguished in the ocean. The one point in which Buddhism touches Christianity is in its teaching of austere purity and self-sacrificing love. Buddha himself regarded his religion as elementary; he said it might last five thousand years and then a new Buddha would appear. The nirvana, or heaven, of Buddhism is simply painless annihilation, the complete destruction of identity and personality. Its promise is, Whoso followeth me shall die for evermore. The promise of Christ is, "Whoso believeth in Me shall never die."

Atheism in Practice.

Will the eyes of some youth who is already half atheist read these pages? I hope they may. You repudiate Christianity because it presents serious difficulties to a philosophic mind. The iron system of necessitarianism which you have built up is logically consistent and complete. It may seem to you right that the world should be emancipated from the follies of supernaturalism and the credulities of creeds. You may even believe that you would confer an inestimable benefit upon mankind in destroying its faith in Jesus. Shelley thought so once; Renan thinks so today. I will take it for granted that you honestly think so, too. But now, can you tell me what actual benefit atheism has yet conferred upon mankind or on yourself? Has atheism proved itself beneficent or philanthropic? Has it given men the victory over selfishness? Has it wiped away the tears of the mourner, or comforted the bruised heart of the orphan, or given crushed and struggling men a new impulse to heroic endeavor? Has it ever yet built an orphanage, an alms-house, a refuge for the outcast? Can it show me the man that it has healed? I have never heard of him. I have heard of the men whom it has destroyed, but never of the men

* From The Threshold of Manhood: A Young Man's Words to Young Men. By W. J. Dawson. A strong, manly appeal for purity of life, and holiness of heart, and faith in Christ is made to young men in this book. Mr. Dawson talks with his readers as a brother, and argues with them in the full knowledge of the new difficulties and temptations which during the last twenty years have assailed youth. A greater kindness could not be done to any intelligent young man setting out in life than to put this book into his hands. It would be better than giving him a fortune. Pp. 273. Price—, Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 714 Broadway, New York.

Hon. Seth Low, New President of Columbia College.

The Shipwrecked Sailors of the "Florence." (See page 661.)

whom it has healed. You can destroy, but you cannot construct. You can slay, but you cannot make alive. You can deform and defile, and make a man's life so bitter to him that suicide wears a new enchantment; but you cannot heal. I show you the men whom Christianity has healed. I show you the drunkard who is sober, the hopeless who have learned to look up again and become victors, the profligates who have received a new impulse of purity which has lifted them into newness of life, the children of darkness who have become the children of the light. Can you say anything against it?

Christianity and Socialism.

Or does the Socialist read these words? You, too, have honest aims. You are filled with the spirit of righteous indignation against the artificial inequalities of life and man's inhumanity to man. In so far I agree with you. But you preach the gospel of spoliation, the crusade of universal anarchy, as the prelude to the age of universal happiness; and in that I disagree with you. You had your chance just a hundred years ago in France; did you heal mankind with that fiery medicine of class-hatred and revenge? Is the man who was healed found in France to-day? Did that tremendous cautery of revolution after all extirpate the disease it aimed to cure? I point you to the one true Socialist, Jesus of Nazareth. Take His teachings as the code of individual conduct, and you will soon find the world leavened with a new spirit. Every force that to-day purifies and sweetens the life of nations is the direct fruit of His influence in the world. Wherever Christianity has been honestly applied, there the working socialism of love and charity has been set up; and the difference between us is simply this: what you seek in vain to do by force, Jesus accomplishes by kindness. Can you say anything against it?

HON. SETH LOW.

THE high honor of the Presidency of Columbia College was last week conferred on Mr. Seth Low, ex-mayor of Brooklyn, whose portrait appears on this page. Seldom, if ever, in the 135 years of the history of the institution has so young a man been at its head; but the board of trustees which elected him have had abundant opportunities of learning Mr. Low's fitness for the position. He graduated from Columbia in 1870, when he was twenty years of age, and since that time has manifested a hearty interest in the affairs of the institution, delivering addresses to the students, and serving one year as President of the Alumni Association. In 1881 he was elected a trustee, so that the board has had eight years of association with him before electing him to succeed the late President, Dr. F. A. P. Barnard who died in April last.

Mr. Low is a native of Brooklyn, and is thirty-nine years of age. He was prepared for college at the Brooklyn Polytechnic Institute. When he graduated from Columbia he was at the head of his class, and divided the second Greek prize of the year. He spent the next few years in foreign travel, and in 1875 returned to Brooklyn and entered his father's business as a partner. He was shortly after elected a member of the Chamber of Commerce, and achieved a creditable distinction for a series of addresses made before that body on the trade and commerce of New York and kindred subjects. In 1881 Brooklyn secured a new charter which permitted her to concentrate the responsibility of city government and of appointments in the hands of the mayor instead of in the several bureaus. This placed enormous power for good or evil in the mayor's hands, and rendered the choice of a fitting person for that office one of momentous importance. Seth Low received the nomination and though he was only thirty-one years old at the time, he won the confidence of the citizens and was triumphantly elected. A still more noteworthy fact is that after administering the city government for two years, the citizens gave their endorsement of his policy by re-electing him. Mr. Low is congratulated on the new honor that has been conferred upon him not more heartily than Columbia is on its acquisition.

A SPANISH FREETHINKER ASTONISHED.

In a letter to the Missionary Herald Mr. Gulick, who is laboring among the miners in Bilbao, Spain, describes a journey one of his evangelists took through the mines to visit the inquirers whose interest had been enlisted at his former visits. Mr. Gulick says: "He was accompanied by an intelligent but free-thinking lawyer from Logrono. When they set out this gentleman made no little fun of the heavy pack of books and tracts with which the pastor had laden himself. But this laughter died out and honest surprise took the place of sarcastic gibes when, from group after group of the iron-stained and hardy miners, stalwart fellows greeted his companion with cordial and respectful salutations, and at once commenced earnest conversation respecting the books that they had been reading and those which were now brought to them. Many of these books and tracts had been selected for special individuals, to whom they were now delivered as they were found in the various workings of the mines.

"From this missionary excursion with our pastor, the lawyer went down to his house with quite revolutionized ideas respecting religion in general, and Protestantism in particular. He marveled at the manifest sincerity of these rough men, and at the softening and elevating effect of their religion on their whole bearing and manner. He admired the religion that had turned these most coarse and blasphemous of all the sons of toil into readers of books—and of such books! And he declared that one would rarely see anything to compare with the respect and the evident love of these people for their pastor."

MR. RUSSELL'S WARD.

(See Illustration on page 669.)

It was difficult to persuade Mr. Russell to take into his household little Ettie Barnard. Ettie had been left an orphan. Her mother was Mr. Russell's youngest sister, who was almost young enough to be his daughter, and to whom he had acted a father's part when their father died. But the sister, though dependent on her grave elder brother for home and education, as all the family were, had not paid him the respect which he thought was his due, and had finally married a poor, shiftless, handsome idler in defiance of Mr. Russell's veto. Both she and her husband were now dead, after living a wretched life of poverty and debt for some seven years. Ettie was the offspring of the marriage, and at the time of her mother's death was not more than six years old.

What to do with the child? Mr. Russell by this time was a widower, but he was a prosperous merchant now, with abundance of money and a house elegantly furnished, which it was the pride of his only daughter, Miriam, to keep in that perfect order which her father loved. It was she who undertook the task of persuading Mr. Russell to receive his little niece. He was absolutely firm at first in his refusal. The child had no claim upon him. Her father's friends were the proper persons to care for her. She would be a nuisance in the house. There had been no child there since Miriam was herself a child. Mr. Russell foresaw that the house would not be so quiet, that there would be anxiety and trouble with the undertaking, and, besides, she might follow in her mother's footsteps and repay his kindness with ingratitude.

Given the strong, earnest desire of a woman in opposition to the determination of a man, and that the man has a tender love for the woman, the result of the contest between them will not be doubtful. Miriam carried her point, and little Ettie Barnard became a member of her uncle's household.

Of course difficulties arose. It was impossible to avoid them while the same house held a man so nervous and sensitive as Mr. Russell and a child whose spirits were so exuberant as Ettie's. But Miriam had promised to take entire charge of the child, and she was in the main successful in preventing friction. Ettie might have been in better hands. Miriam was kind and indulgent, but she lacked the one indispensable quality for the training of the child. She had not given her own heart to Jesus. There had been a time when she was on the point of doing so, but, as she said, she believed in Jesus, she had faith in Him as the Saviour, she understood the plan of salvation, but it seemed to make no difference to her. Prayer and Bible reading were tiresome, and she could not understand what people meant by being born again. Still, she did her best to bring Ettie up on right principles.

One inflexible rule established was that Ettie should not enter the library—her uncle's sanctum. Once or twice, when Miriam had occasion to go there to consult her father, and Ettie was with her, she went in too, and her eyes wandered greedily over the long rows of books and the glass cases filled with Mr. Russell's choice curiosities. Her curiosity was excited. What beautiful pictures might there not be in those large, beautifully bound books! The temptation was too strong for her. One winter day, when Mr. Russell was at his office and cousin Miriam was out visiting friends, the child stole into the room and looked around. She examined one book after another, and at last found one all pictures. Ettie sat in the big easy-chair by the open fire, and was soon lost in unwonted enjoyment. She must have sat longer than she knew, for she was startled by the rattle of a key in a lock and the sharp closing of the outer door, which, as she knew, announced her uncle's return from business. She jumped from her chair and ran to replace the volume. But the book was heavy and Ettie was trembling with terror. She stumbled, and, to her horror, in falling she upset one of the glass cases containing coins and medals, which rolled away in every direction.

Mr. Russell, as usual, walked straight to the library, and there in the midst of the desolation stood the child, her face alternately flushed and deathly white. What would be her punishment Ettie could not imagine. The very vagueness of the possibility added to her terror. She could not speak when her uncle questioned her, and he naturally mistook her silence for sullenness. His anger rose, but just at the crisis Miriam came in, and looking around took in the situation at a glance.

"Oh Ettie, Ettie," she exclaimed kneeling down beside her, "how could you be so disobedient! Tell uncle how sorry you are."

But the child stood silently gazing into the fire, while Mr. Russell gazed upon her in mute wonder. Miriam found that neither coaxing or scolding could melt the child, and finally she took her away to her own room and left her there, while she returned to the library to help her father repair damages. When she went back to Ettie it was for a serious talk. She dwelt on the kindness of Mr. Russell and the wickedness of annoying him, and then the perversity of not asking pardon. Ettie yielded in the end, and

Mr. Russell's Ward Contumacious.

Miriam carried her off to Mr. Russell to humbly beg his forgiveness. It was freely granted, and Ettie was transformed again into her usual merry self. "But," she said, "Cousin Miriam, I'll never do it again."

Miriam, however, was troubled. It had all ended well, but Ettie's obstinacy was a new feature of her character that gave her concern. As she meditated on the whole incident conscience smote her. All that she had said to Ettie applied to herself with infinitely greater force. Had she ever felt sorry for her sins against God? Had she not been silent when she should have been begging for pardon through Christ? It was a night of self-reproach, of humble, earnest prayer. Ettie was forgotten and Miriam struggled alone before God for light. The morning found her rejoicing in a new experience. The consciousness of pardon sought and granted filled her heart with joy.

SLAIN BY THE MORMONS.*

By Mrs. Mary Ettie V. Smith.

Sister of a Mormon High Priest.

SINCE leaving Utah, I have heard much said about the death of Leonidus Shaver. I knew Judge Shaver well, and recollect the circumstances of his death. He occupied a room in my brother Howard's house; and he died there. There were a great many things connected with the trouble between him and the Prophet which I never understood, and, I have good reason to believe, much more than has yet been disclosed. I remember, that one day the Prophet came to the house, and inquired for the Judge. The latter was in the habit of locking the door and darkening the windows of his room, when not at home, and they were so on this occasion; which led us to believe he was gone.

The Prophet was very much excited about something that had just happened in connection with the Judge. This was a year or so before his death. I never saw the former more disturbed and alarmed than at that time, and he talked very freely about it. Just as he was in the height of the excitement, we heard the Judge jump out of bed, and this alarmed the Prophet still the more, as he supposed Shaver had heard what had been said, which was probably true. The difficulty between them increased after this, and one morning the Judge was found dead in his bed, in the room just mentioned. But at this time, my brother did not own the house, for he had sold it to a Mr. Dotson, who was living there.

The Heads of the Church made a great show of having the case investigated, by which they made it appear that the Judge had died of some disease in the head, which perhaps was true. But I heard the Prophet say before this that Judge Shaver knew a great many things that he did not wish to come to the knowledge of the Government at Washington, and that he dare not allow him to leave the Territory. He was unquestionably poisoned.

I think it was in the summer of 1853 that another Judge was sent to Utah, by the name of Brocchus. Soon after he came he was called upon to make a speech, at a public meeting, at a time when the Prophet and the Heads of the Church were on the stand. I suppose Judge Brocchus knew but little of our customs, for he commenced to address the women, large numbers of whom were present, upon the subject of spiritual wifeism. He pointed out to them its wickedness, and the unhappy results that must follow to themselves and their children if persisted in. He also stated that it was against the laws of both God and man. I presume this was the first and only time that a Mormon assembly was ever addressed in open opposition to their faith and practice; certainly the only case of the kind that ever occurred at Salt Lake.

The Assembly were greatly excited, and more than two-thirds of the women were in tears before he had spoken many minutes, among whom Brigham observed some of his own wives. All were astonished. It was a moment of great peril for the Prophet and for the Church. One word then, spoken by authority and having the physical support of a military force at hand, would have brought on an explosion.

The Prophet saw this, and, as usual, he was equal to the occasion. The Judge was admonished to desist, and when he sat down, the Prophet rose, and by one of those strong, nervous appeals, which has never been wanting in success before a Mormon audience, he annihilated the Judge and the effect of his speech. In five minutes many of those whose tears had flown most freely responded to his broad sarcasm in screams of laughter.

When the spirits of the congregation were fully restored, he turned to the Judge and administered to him a torrent of abuse.

The Judge was beaten, and saw the necessity of leaving the Territory. The Prophet afterwards threatened, in private, to take his life, but I heard he was permitted to leave.

Judge Brocchus was succeeded by Judge Reed, of Bath, Steuben County, New York, who, profiting by the experience of his predecessor, exercised great discretion in his intercourse with the Mormon leaders, and became very popular with them. The Mormons, on their part, treated Judge Reed with studied attention, hoping to efface the unfavorable impression likely to be made upon the authorities at Washington by the Brocchus affair, in which they appear to have succeeded in a measure, for it is understood that Judge Reed expressed the opinion, when he afterwards returned to this country, that the Mormons had been misrepresented, and that the charges against them were exaggerated. This, if true, was in pursuance of a line of policy adopted by him, as being the best calculated to meet the difficulties of his position; for beyond question he had studied the state of things at Utah very closely, and though he expressed his opinions with caution, he was certainly not a convert to our faith, nor to the Prophet's administration of the Government.

*An incident from her thrilling narrative, published by Messrs. Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York, to whose courtesy we are indebted for the privilege of publishing this and former extracts.

As he was from the neighborhood of our native place, and was well acquainted with most of our family, we were very intimate with him during his stay at the valley. It was due to the friendly relations existing between him and the Prophet, more than to any other cause, that we were afterwards permitted to leave Utah, as hereafter narrated. It was through him that we received letters direct from my uncle, Col. John R. Stephens, of Hornellsville, New York; and through this channel came the information which finally led to our escape.

Judge Reed remained in the valley about a year, and then went home on business, intending to return to Utah, but he died suddenly while there. He was an excellent and kind man, of whom I still entertain the most grateful recollections.

About this period a young man was coming from Mexico in command of a company of traders; and by chance he was met at Utah by Brigham Young, who was on his way from Great Salt Lake City to Little Salt Lake.

The Prophet was accompanied as usual by his "Body Guard," and attracted some notice on the route by the display in which he indulged—a kind of demonstration he was fond of making when well protected by his military attendants.

It is said all great men have their little weaknesses, and that of the Prophet is well known to be cowardice. He was great in words, however, and withal is a shrewd manager of men, and when not threatened with personal violence he was truly great. On this occasion the state and display affected by the Governor and Prophet excited the curiosity of the young captain of this band of Mexican traders, whose name was Wallace Alonzo Clark Bowman. This young man was a native of the State of New York, and being of a daring and roving turn of mind, had left his home at the early age of eighteen, and was now in the full tide of a successful career when he thus unfortunately met Brigham Young. He was over six feet in height, stoutly built and well formed, standing straight as an arrow, with fair complexion and light hair, a broad high forehead, with a keen blue eye and a Roman nose. He was as fine a specimen of manliness as is often met with in real life. He was, moreover, one of that class of men with whom the emotions of fear or the necessity of caution are entirely unknown. He also entertained the most undisguised contempt for double-dealing and of religious affectation of any kind. In short, having no reverence, and unable to comprehend the meaning of discretion, he was the last man to meet the Prophet's approval, but quite the man to awaken his cowardly suspicion, as he was a specimen of the only class of men of whom the Prophet was not a judge.

The two companies met at Utah, and halted to make of each other mutual inquiries as to the state of the roads and the like, while the animals were being fed. Bowman observed that Brigham was a personage of some consideration among the strangers, and upon inquiry was informed that he was the Governor of the Territory and the Mormon Leader. "If that is so," said he, "I must make the acquaintance of that distinguished adventurer." He then introduced himself to the "Prophet" by saying he had heard of him and of his religion often, though he knew but little of the latter, and he would like to be instructed in it somewhat. He then asked him to take a seat for that purpose. He told him further that he had heard much said against the Mormons, and their practices, but he presumed they had been misrepresented, as all such sects were liable to be by their opponents, and he should be pleased to know the facts from the Prophet himself.

Bowman said this in that easy off-hand manner which, had it been addressed to an equally brave and simple-minded man, would have been met in a similar spirit of courteous independence—willing to concede as much as it exacted. But the Prophet was not a man of the generous mould to understand one of that nature. Though a good judge of the kind of men of which his Church was composed, the Mexican trader puzzled him; and he assumed at once the young man must have some villainous design upon him. He thereupon retired to his carriage with an indecent haste that betrayed his want of either courage or courtesy, and directed his secretary to inform the authorities of the City that he wished Bowman arrested upon his arrival there, as he knew by the Spirit of God the trader was a spy sent from the States to take his life.

The fact was that nothing could have been farther from the truth; and the pretence of revelation, behind which the Prophet attempted to shield his cowardice, smacked more of unscrupulous villainy than of Divinity.

Bowman, unawed by this treatment, stepped to the door of the Prophet's carriage, and said to him, in that spirit of defiant independence which a free rover of the plains feels himself at liberty to assume when treated rudely, "Sir, I have seen Governors before, but I never saw one so little a gentleman or so much a bigot;" and then turning to his men, with a dignity the Prophet might well have envied, ordered his company to move on.

The whole outfit and other accompaniments of Bowman's party proved he was possessed of wealth, and this was perhaps another inducement with the Prophet for wishing to bring the young rover into collision with his Danite assassins. When Bowman arrived at the city, he was arrested by Robert Burton upon suspicion of various crimes. This was a pretense resorted to for his detention. He was put in charge of John Norton, one of our nearest neighbors, who kept him imprisoned near by, in a place used by the police for that purpose. There was a great curiosity manifested among us to see the man who had made so long a journey to kill the Prophet; and, among others, I went to his prison. I was astonished at the courteous good breeding with which we were received.

I came away with a full understanding of his position. I knew he was innocent; but I knew equally well that would not avail him. I asked my mother, who had accompanied me, what she thought. Without saying a word for some time, she shook her head, and the big tears filled her eyes. "He is about the age Uriah was when he died among strangers," said she at length. "How should I feel if this brave boy were mine? But he is somebody's boy."

"They will kill him," said I.

"Certainly," said my mother; and then we sobbed in silence.

Bowman was held a prisoner for several weeks, as the Prophet had not returned. When he came a trial was had, and great efforts were made to procure some evidence against him; but all rested upon the revelation of the Prophet, except that the latter stated that Bowman was armed when he approached his carriage. Being armed in that country was not a crime, for no man went unarmed there. But it so happened that Bowman, although generally provided with and well skilled in the use of defensive weapons, had, on this particular occasion, left them on his horse, as he expected to remount in a few moments. This was proved by all his men. He was therefore set at liberty, after an annoying confinement of nearly two months. But this did not avert his fate.

The Danites are called in only as a last resort; but are never at fault when the Prophet's will is known; and in this case the Prophet had gone too far to think of relenting. The details of Bowman's fate I learned afterward from the agents of the Prophet. They were John Norton and James Ferguson, and they had volunteered to execute Brigham's will.

Bowman bade us all good-bye; and there was quite a company who felt kindly toward him, and who would have shielded him from the Prophet's vengeance had they dared. He, too, was grateful for the sympathy they had shown him, and seemed to have a prevision that he was doomed. He started with all his company, and a few hours later Ferguson and Norton followed. They left the city on horseback, and that night passed, after dark, the house where Bowman had put up. Knowing the route he must take from there, they went on to Salt Creek Cañon, where they disguised themselves as Indians by painting their faces and putting on blankets and horse-hair wigs. It appears that Bowman had sent his main company on, while he remained behind, keeping but four horses and two Spaniards with him. He had purchased a wagon and harnessed two of his horses to it; one Spaniard was driving, and the other was riding one, and leading another horse behind the wagon, and Bowman was riding inside of it. It was in this manner that Bowman entered the cañon, the next morning, nearly alone, probably with the hope of misleading the "Danites," who, as he knew, would be on his track.

But Norton and Ferguson were in ambush near the road, and as the wagon came on they both rose from behind some rocks and bushes, and gave an Indian war-whoop, and fired a shot, which took effect in the hat of one of the Spaniards, whom they wished not to kill, but only to frighten. At this, both of these cowards fled with the loose horses, and made their way back to the city, leaving Bowman alone, who now rose in the wagon, and drawing himself up to his full height for a quick survey of the danger, from which he evidently felt there was no escape, looked undaunted upon his assailants. A moment of silence intervened, and the report of two rifle shots rang among the rocks of the cañon, and he fell to the bottom of his wagon dead. Either wound was mortal; one hit him full in the breast, and the other in the forehead. I afterwards heard both Norton and Ferguson relate the circumstances of his death, and both agreed in the statement as above given. The Spaniards, upon their arrival at the city, went before a magistrate, at the suggestion of the Mormons, who affected great alarm, and made oath that Bowman had been shot in Salt Creek cañon by the Indians, one of them showing the ball hole through his hat in confirmation of it, and this statement was credited as well among many of the Mormons as among the Gentiles, and is so received to this day by the masses.

A posse of the police were sent out to look for his body, and for the property, but returned, after a thorough search, without discovering either; and thus the matter was hushed up with the public. No part of his property, which must have been valued at many thousands of dollars, was ever discovered, as far as was generally known; but the following will indicate its probable disposition.

The first or second night after Bowman's death, John Norton and Ferguson brought his body to the city, in the wagon in which he had been killed, and drawn by his own horses. They took it to Norton's house. When the men had gone out, Rebecca came over and told me what had happened, and I went home with her. We took a light, and went to the back room and saw the body. We had no difficulty in recognizing it. I had afterwards, and at different times, repeated conversation with the actors in the tragedy of Bowman's imprisonment and death, from whom I have gathered what I did not know of my own knowledge. Norton and Ferguson both acknowledged, in my presence, that they killed Bowman in cold blood; and, what will perhaps appear singular to my Gentile readers is, they did not consider it a crime. Hiram Clauson told me that the body of Bowman was given to Drs. Andrews and Williams, well-known physicians of the city, for dissection.

WAITING.

"For they shall not be ashamed that wait for me."
—ISAIAH, XL: 23.

Yes, I am waiting, Lord, and it is sweet
To rest the while close at thy sacred feet;
Here with thy wounded hand upon my head,
My weary soul is blest and comforted.

'Tis joy to tarry at thy bleeding side,
Whence flows the healing, purifying tide,
My only hope, my perfect righteousness;
Yes, I will wait in this dear hiding-place.

For prone am I, my Lord, from thee to stray,
And lose thy presence in earth's busy way;
Yea, sometimes out on errands thine alone,
Self rises, and I count them all my own.

So eager am I to devise and do,
And in my frantic zeal the way pursue,
That I forget I should but follow thee;
And hurry, till thy face I cannot see.

And thou in love dost check my foolish haste,
Take me apart into the desert waste,
And bid me pause till thou shall point the way,
And go before me lest again I stray.

So here beneath the shadow of thy wing
I stay my steps, and as I wait I sing;
While peace divine through all my soul dis-
tills,
And love its blessed, perfect work fulfills.

In this dear refuge, quieted and still,
I fold my hands and bide thy holy will;
'Speak, for thy servant heareth,' I will say,
Ready, when thou shall send me, to obey.

Shall disappointment or dismay betide
The soul that meekly waits her Lord beside?
Ah no, my expectation is from him,
And shall not fail though heaven itself grow dim.

God is the Lord, who gives the soul's desire,
bind the sacrifice and wait the fire;
They shall not be ashamed who watch and wake,
The morn of joy and glory soon shall break.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York.
Will furnish the above poem in leather form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Pocket of 50 leaflets sent on application. Will be sent postpaid, for 10 cts., or 100 for 50 cts. Postage stamps taken.

The latest and best Imperial Photographs of
Dr. Talmage and Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, with their fac-simile autograph, and also imperial photograph of Rev. Henry Ward Beecher,
can be obtained from J. E. Jewett, 77 Bible House, New York. Sent postpaid for twenty-five cents each. Postage stamps taken.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE
AUTOGRAF
OF
AND GET THE GENUINE
HARTSHORN

HENRY WARD BEECHER'S Celebrated work "THE LIFE OF JESUS
THE CHRIST." The publishers are now ready for forward terms of subscription for second volume, for the complete work.

IN THE PRESS.
AMERICAN CHRISTIAN RULERS;
Religion and Men of Government: Biographical Sketches of men of Christian faith and experience, to have held prominent positions in the National and State Governments, and in the Judicial Department. Numerous authentic portraits, and a beautiful and engraving of the great picture: "First Prayer Centenary."

ROMFIELD & CO., 638 Broadway, New York.

BOOKS FREE!
Upon receipt of 12 Cents we will send our charming 16-page, 64-column paper for ladies and the family. Two best worth, for Three Months, and also will send free with subscriber Six Complete Novels, as follows: Bull dust, by Marion Harland; Two Kisses, by the author of "a Thorn"; Bread Upon the Waters, by Miss Mulock; Ninety-two, by Mary Cecil Hay; A Vagabond Heroine, by Annie Edwards, and Caramel Cottage, by Mrs. Henry Wood.
A great offer is made to introduce our paper into new homes.
No subscription guaranteed or money refunded. Address:
H. H. MOORE & CO., 27 Park Place, New York.

TURKISH HAIR AND BEARD GROWER.
Grows a beautiful mustache on the most delicate face in hair on bald heads quicker than any other on the market.
100,000 people say so. Contains no poisonous drugs as some do. Sample, 50c; 4 for $2.00. TRAMONT MFG. CO., 25
E. Butler St., N. Y. Beware of worthless imitations.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach.

tion." The articles described are so new and the directions so explicit, that the one paper is worth a year's subscription. For those who can paint, Alice H. Crockett furnishes suggestions for many a dainty offering.

The department of "Practical Dress" is conducted by Jenny June, whose advice on fashions is always authoritative. "Late Autumn Styles," "Modern Advice in Methods," "How Babies are Clothed," "No More Tight Lacing," "A Neat Coat and a Lovely Hat," are some of the subjects discussed. An attractive feature in this department has been a series of articles on Home Dressmaking, and this month the Collar is considered. One of the special characteristics of Housewife is the "Chat-Box," ably edited by Agnes C. Stoddard. The Chat-Box is thrown open to all subscribers, and for November is, as ever, running over with good things. For the lovers of Knitting and Crocheting, the Needle Worker is ever found reliable, as directions alone are given that have been thoroughly tested. The illustrations are made especially for the department. George R. Knapp, for years interested in the culture of flowers, and a practical writer upon floriculture, edits the floral department. "Prepare for Winter," "Women in Home Culture," "Hints for the Month," and "Two Desirable Plants" are the subjects in November issue. Anna R. Henderson has contributed to our Kitchen Department a pathetic poem, "The Common Lot." "A Thanksgiving Dinner" has been prepared for the Housewife by Catherine Owen, who, as every good housewife knows, always spreads an inviting table. The bill of fare is most appetizing, and the directions so plain that no one need hesitate to serve it. The Housewife gives more for the money than any other publication. It entertains with the most delightful stories. It instructs by answering questions of all subjects interesting to its patrons. The most gifted writers in all the departments of social life. We cannot begin to tell you about it in this advertisement. One woman expressed it when she wrote to us: "Each number is so much better than the preceding. I don't know what you will do by and by." Send 10 cents for three months and learn how it is yourself!

N. B.—Mention CHRISTIAN HERALD as the 1st, 50th, 100th and 200th persons answering this advertisement will each receive a year's subscription to either Century Magazine, Harper's Monthly or Scribner's Magazine, Harper's Weekly or Harper's Bazar, as you prefer. We do this to get you to mention CHRISTIAN HERALD. We want to find out how many CHRISTIAN HERALD readers buy Housewife. If you should be entitled to choose one of these publications, you can, if you are already a subscriber to that publication, have your subscription begin when present subscription expires.

Only 10 cents for 3 months. HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City, N. Y.

PAINLESS BEECHAM'S EFFECTUAL GREAT ENGLISH MEDICINE PILLS WORTH A GUINEA A BOX

For Weak Stomach—Impaired Digestion—Disordered Liver.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS.
PRICE 25 CENTS PER BOX.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England.
B. F. ALLEN & CO., Sole Agents
FOR UNITED STATES, 365 & 367 CANAL ST., NEW YORK,
Who (if your druggist does not keep them) will mail Beecham's Pills on receipt of price—but inquire first. (Please mention this paper.)

GOD IN BUSINESS.

A REMARKABLE RECORD OF DIVINE HELPS AND DELIVERANCES TO CHRISTIAN BUSINESS MEN.

This book is a record of God's dealings with His people in business. The author begins with personal testimony. Then follows the experience of more than 100 of God's people who desire to acknowledge that they were helped by Him in business. * * * The incidents here recorded are of such a wonderful character that it is not an easy matter to lay down the book until every page is perused. A short sketch of the life of John S. Creed, of Brooklyn, is a most wonderful record of divine guidance and help. Here then is testimony that there is a God-force waiting to be used in all prayer and faith for all our affairs. It is a truth that all God's people need more and more to study.

This is a well-entitled book, and one moreover, that is built on such a foundation that it is impossible to shake it. * * * If young business men will read they may learn from it a lesson that may prove of great commercial value.—Methodist Times (London).

Bound in Cloth. Price, 85 Cents.
Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher,
77 Bible House, New York.

A NEW BOOK.

THE SALT CELLARS;

A Collection of 3,300 Proverbs and Quaint Sayings, Together with Homely Notes Thereon.
BY REV. C. H. SPURGEON.

Very handsomely bound in 12mo, illuminated cloth, $1.50.

"The placing of a proverb for every day for 30 years has cost me great labor, and I feel that I cannot afford to lose the large collection of sentences which I have thus brought together. There are many proverb books, but none exactly like these. Some of my sentences are quite new, and more are put into a fresh form."—From the Author's Preface.

The London Literary World says: "There is not a page that is not brightened with genuine wit and enriched with wisdom."

"Few books contain more wit and wisdom to the cubic inch than this, and the man who can read it without profit must either be too virtuous for this world or too hardened in wickedness to be helped."—New York Examiner.

Sent postpaid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

A WORD TO THE THOUSANDS WHO HEARD OF
READ WITH INTEREST

DR. TALMAGE'S
GREAT SERMON

"The Day is at Hand."

Let Nothing Prevent.

Procure and read at once that wonderful book the same title, and of almost the same title just 12,000 already in circulation, viz:—

THE TIME IS AT HAND

360 Pages, Cloth, $1. Paper, 25c.—post free.

This volume is a continuation or second part that able work which, during the past year, has been ed and warmed so many Christian hearts, both England and America, and which has done and done so much to bring plans to the masses the of God; overcoming the objections of infidelity, a clearing away skeptical doubts by pointing out from Scripture the hope and the duty of God's kingdom dealings as they encompass the past, the present and
the future, viz:

"The Plan of the Ages"

Over 120,000 copies of this sustained work are ready in circulation, and so many are ordering the cheap edition by the dozen copies for friends, that bids fair to have half a million copies out ere long.
All the earnest friends of Jesus and the Bible, af-reshing their own hearts at the fountain by the use of this "Bible Key," should do all they can pass the blessing on and on until all shall have taste of the Grace of our God. These two books are sura part of the dispensational blessing now due
"these who look for him," mentioned by the Prop-Daniel when he said: "Knowledge shall be increased
and the wise shall understand."

The Atlanta Constitution aptly says of this work
"It is built up stone upon stone, and upon every stone is the text, and it becomes a pyramid of God's love and mercy and wisdom. There is nothing in the Bi-that the author denies or doubts, but there are man-texts that he throws a flood of light upon that seem to uncover its meaning. It is impossible to read the book without loving the writer and pondering upon his wonderful solution of the great mysteries that
have troubled us all our lives."

Surely in the present time none are so strong, rooted and grounded and built up in God's truth they could not be greatly assisted by this Help Hand for Bible Students.

352 Pages, cloth bound, $1.00. Paper
covers, 25c.

Address TOWER TRACT SOCIETY,
"Bible House," Arch St. Allegheny, Pa.

The above 2 vols. in cloth, together, $1.70 post-pa-
The paper bound edition, 25c. in any quantity. Forerly price was 50c; it was reduced to bring the work
within the reach of all.

"CALAMITIES—Why God Permits Them."

A most interesting and lucid treatment of a most complex subject, often bewildering and annoying even to God's children. Issued since the Johnstown calamity, but already in its 90th thousand. Next page tract, price, $1.25 per hundred. Sample copy
FREE. Address as above, TOWER TRACT SOC.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to
the address of
BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

NEW ENLARGED EDITION.

Encouragements to Faith.
207 Pages. Cloth. Price 75 Cents.

The Rev. ANDREW MURRAY, in his popular work "Abide in Christ," has mentioned this book as especially to be recommended for young, weak,
doubting Christians.

Here is a warm hand and a loving heart tender-you, in the name of the Lord, from one who harbors doubts, and would gladly help you to break away from them. This book has greatly helped many Christi-to a stronger faith in the blessed Lord Jesus; earnestly hope that many more may be benighted
it.—Preface.

"This volume by J. W. Kimball, seems to be precious such a one as a Christian would desire to put into hands of any young man or woman troubled with doubts concerning the religious life. It has refer-to the experience of the soul rather than the mind and is in fact, a tender, confidential exhortation to the motive in love to cultivate faith in God."—Be-Advertiser.

* * Sent post paid on receipt of price.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher and Bookseller,
77 Bible House, New York.

WHO LOVED ME.

GALATIANS II: 20.

Three little sunbeams, gilding all I see;
Three little chords, each full of melody;
Three little leaves, balm for my agony.

"Who"

He loved me, the Father's only Son.
He gave Himself, the precious, spotless One.
He shed His blood, and thus the work was done.

"Loved"

He loved—not merely pitied. Here I rest.
Sorrow may come—I to His heart am pressed.
What should I fear while sheltered in His breast?

"Me."

Wonder of wonders! Jesus loved me.
A wretch, lost, ruined, sunk in misery,
He sought me, found me, raised me, set me free.

My soul, the order of the words approve.
Christ first, me last, nothing between but LOVE.
Lord, keep me always down. THYSELF above.

Trusting to Thee, not struggling restlessly,
So shall I gain the victory.
"I—yet not"—but Christ—"Who loved me."

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher: 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets
assorted (no two alike) will be sent, post-paid, for 10
cts., or 100 for 20 cts. Postage stamps taken.

DO YOU WANT ANY ROOFING.

Half the price of tin or shingles. Guaranteed
water tight on flat or steep surface, and you or your man John can put it on. Sample free if you mention Christian Herald and

STATE SIZE OF ROOF.
Ind. Paint & Roofing Co., 42 W. Broadway, New York.

Steamless and Odorless.
HILL'S CHAMPION STEAM COOKER

Pleasant work and large profits.
HILL, WHITNEY & CO., 140 Pearl St., Boston, Mass.
England & Webster, Western Agts., 89 Lake St., Chicago, Ill.

STENOGRAPHY.
AND
TYPE-WRITING.

The valuable profession of Stenography or shorthand taught personally (or by mail in your own home) by Vermilye's rapid system of teaching; long established; hundreds of graduates holding responsible positions; success guaranteed. Also type-writing taught thoroughly. Pamphlets free.
Write or call. VERMILYER'S COLLEGE.
116 Broadway, New York.

MUSIC SALE

To reduce our stock of music
we will send by mail post-paid
70 pieces, full
sheet music size, including songs, marches, waltzes, &c.,
by Mendelssohn, Beethoven, Mozart, &c., for only 20c.
WHITE WINGS and 100 songs, words and music.
C. H. HATHAWAY, 339 Wash. St., Boston, Mass.

CHANCE FOR ALL
To Enjoy a Cup of Perfect
Tea. A TRIAL ORDER OF
3½ pounds of Fine Tea, either Goolong, Japan, Imperial, Gunwder, Young Hyson, Mixed, English
Breakfast or Sun Sun Chop, sent
by mail on receipt of $2.00. Be particular and state what kind of Tea
you want. Greatest inducement ever offered to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees and Baking Powder. For full particulars address
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 228, 81 and 83 Vesey St., New York.

DONATION PARTIES.

Are just as important as ever,
and nothing can be given for the same amount of cost that will suit your pastor and his wife more than a first-class Family Soap, especially if you can get one of those Larkin boxes containing so many fine toilet articles, such as tooth powder, shaving soap, and a fine line of toilet soaps made in the most perfect manner, and so pure and refined that a queen might use them. Send a postal card with your full name and address to J. D. Larkin & Co., Buffalo, N. Y., and they will promptly forward you a box, price of which is only six dollars. They ask no pay for the goods until the soaps have been on trial thirty days and the parties know that they are satisfied.

THE Alfred Dolge
FELT SHOES
AND SLIPPERS.

Noiseless,
Warm, Durable.

THESE KITTENS ARE ALL RIGHT.
GENTLEMAN: "Well, well, your kittens do know a thing when you see it. It was many, many years before I discovered how warm and comfortable the Alfred Dolge Felt Shoes and Slippers were, but you little friskies have found it out before you are a month old."

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York.

MAGIC LANTERNS AND STEREOPTICONS

afford the best and cheapest means of object teaching for Colleges, Schools, and Sunday Schools. Our assortment of Views, illustrating ment, etc., nothing can be found as instructive or amusing, while Church Entertainments, Public Ex-
hibitions and Popular
Illustrated Lectures
splendid Holiday present. We are the largest manufacturers and dealers, and ship to all parts of the world. If you wish to know how to order, how to conduct Parlor Entertainments for pleasure, or Public Exhibitions, etc., for MAKING MONEY,
send us your name and address on a postal card (naming this paper), and we will mail you our McALLISTER, Mfg. Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y. City.

DO YOU SUPPOSE that Plymouth Rock Pants and Suits would have reached the largest sales ever known in the custom clothing business unless they had wonderful merit?

DO YOU WOULD WE DAILY receive unsolicited letters testifying to their worth if such praise was not deserved?
a postal card to see a handsome line of our samples, mailed you free, with full directions how to measure yourself. We guarantee perfect fit and satisfaction or money refunded?

WEAR COULD WE TAKE ORDERS in the big cities where our branch stores are situated unless we could successfully compete with any tailor or ready-made clothing?

CUT TO ORDER: Pants, $3 to $5.25; Suits,
$13.25 to $21; Overcoats, $10.25 to $20.
If you don't know who we are, look in any commercial agency, or write to any bank or business firm (except clothiers and tailors) in any of these cities.

PLYMOUTH ROCK PANTS CO.
ADDRESS ALL MAIL TO
Headquarters: 11 to 17 Elliot Street.
Annex: 695 Washington Street,
And 18 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.
BRANCHES: 285 Broadway, New York;
943 Penn. Avenue, Washington, D. C.; 72
Adams St., Chicago, Ill.; 914 Main St., Richmond, Va.; 225 E. Baltimore St., Baltimore, Md.; 116 Canal St., New Orleans; 104 Montgomery St., Montgomery, Ala.; 39 Whitehall St., Atlanta, Ga.; Burnside Building, Worcester, Mass.; Hotel Gilmore, Springfield, Mass.; 198 Westminster St., Providence, R.
I.; Old Register Building, New Haven, Conn.

AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of Send for new books. Shows a Sundry Targets, by 12 large
$2.50. Quick sales. Big
day. Also, Mother,
Home & Heaven,
400 best authors E. tied
by T. L. Cuyler. $2.75.
192,000 sold. 50000
Curiosities of Bible $2. By Mail, E. B. TREAT, N.Y.

CALIFORNIA BLANKETS.

We have put on sale several thousand pairs of California Blankets at the lowest prices ever named for these goods:

Single Bed Size, $4.75 per pair.
Double Bed Size, $6 per pair.
Extra Large, $7.50 per pair.

These goods have a wide reputation for beauty and durability, and every pair is warranted.

Orders by mail carefully executed.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

$3.75 A DAY And steady work right at home
for any man or lady. Write
at once. Franklin Co., Richmond, Va.

PERFECT EASE AND COMFORT.

Made in all Styles for Men,
Women, and Children.

Prevent Rheumatism and
Cold Feet.
Send for Illustrated Price-List.
Mention Christian Herald.

DANIEL GREEN & CO., 122 East 13th Street, New York.

afford the best and cheapest means of object teaching for Colleges, Schools, and Sunday Schools. Our assortment of Views, illustrating ment, etc., nothing can be found as instructive or amusing, while Church Entertainments, Public Ex-
hibitions and Popular Illustrated Lectures
splendid Holiday present. We are the largest manufacturers and dealers, and ship to all parts of the world. If you wish to know how to order, how to conduct Parlor Entertainments for pleasure, or Public Exhibitions, etc., for MAKING MONEY,
send us your name and address on a postal card (naming this paper), and we will mail you our McALLISTER, Mfg. Optician, 49 Nassau St., N. Y. City.

HAVE YOU CATARRH?
ARE YOU GOING INTO CONSUMPTION?
Do You Have Asthma?

By means of the PILLOW-INHALER, sufferers in every part of the land have been cured of the above diseases,
and many who were for years
afflicted are now strong and
well. The PILLOW-INHALER
is apparently only a pillow,
but from liquid medicines
that are harmless (tar, carbolic acid, iodine, etc.) it gives off an atmosphere which you breathe all night (or about eight hours), whilst taking ordinary rest in sleep. There are no pipes or tubes, as the medicine is contained in concealed reservoirs, and the healing atmosphere arising from it envelops the head. It is perfectly simple in its workings, and can be used by a child with absolute safety. Medicine for the reservoirs goes with each INHALER, ready for use. The wonderful and simple
power of the PILLOW-INHALER is in the long-continued
application. You breathe the healing vapor continuously
and at a time when ordinarily the cavities of the nose
and bronchial tubes become engorged with mucus, and catarrh, throat and lung diseases make greatest progress.
From the very first night the passages are clearer and the inflammation is less. The cure is sure, and reasonably rapid.

CATARRH.
BRONCHITIS.
CONSUMPTION.

"Rev. Dr. J. T. DUNN, of Boston, writes: 'I really think the PILLOW-INHALER is a very great bit, and the man who made it deserves the gratitude of all sufferers. I never slept more soundly, and my voice is better since using it.'"
Rev. J. R. DANFORTH, 2030 Wallace St., Philadelphia, says he received great benefit from the use of the PILLOW-INHALER for Bronchial troubles, and cordially recommends it.
Wm. C. CARTER, M.D., Norfolk, Va., a physician in regular practice, says: "I believe the PILLOW-INHALER to be the best thing for the relief and cure of Lung Troubles that I have ever seen or heard of."
MR. R. D. McMANIGAL, of the firm of McManigal & Morley, Miners and Shippers, Logan, Ohio, writes: "I suffered fifteen years with Catarrh of the throat. I bought a PILLOW-INHALER, and after four months' use of it my throat is entirely cured."
Send for Descriptive Pamphlet and Testimonials.
THE PILLOW-INHALER CO.,
1520 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

EVERY LADY WANTS A SILK DRESS.

This is your opportunity. A new departure. Silks direct from the manuf-
turers to you.
Our reduced price
bring the best good
within reach of all.
We are the only
manufacturers in
the U. S. selling
direct to consumers. You
take no risk. We warrant every piece of good represented money returned. See our references. We are the oldest Silk Manufacturers in the
U. S. Established
in 1838, with
over 50 years' experience. We guarantee the
dress.

offer these Dress Silks in Gros Grain Satin, Surahs, Faille Francaise and Aid
Cloths, in Blacks only.

Send us a 2c.-stamp (to pay postage) and
we will forward you samples of all our styles free with prices, and you can see
for yourselves.

O. S. CHAFFEE & SON

Mansfield Centre, Conn.
Refer, by permission, to First National Bank,
Windham National Bank, Dime Savings Bank, Wil-
lantic Savings Institute, of Willimantic, Conn.

RECOLLECT

we send to all parts of the U. S.
With each Dress Pattern we present the buyer with 100
Yards Sewing Silk, and enough Silk Braid to bind bottom of
dress.

THE GOODS are delivered to you PREPAID
all carrying charges

WHY DO I SUFFER SO?

Do you feel generally miserable or suffer with a thorsand and one indescribable bad feelings, both mental and physical? Among them low spirits, nervousness, weariness, lifelessness, weakness, dizziness, feelings of fullness or bloating after eating, or sense of "goneness" or emptiness of stomach in the morning, flesh soft at lacking firmness, headache, blurring of eyesight, speck floating before the eyes, nervous irritability, poor memory, chilliness, alternating with hot flushes, lassitude, throbbing, gurgling or rumbling sensations in bowel with heat and nipping pains occasionally, palpitation of heart, short breath on exertion, slow circulation of blood
cold feet, pain and oppression in chest and back, pain
around the loins, aching and weariness of the lower limbs, drowsiness after meals but nervous wakefulness
at night, languor in the morning and a constant feeling of dread as if something awful was about to happen.
If you have any or all of these symptoms send 40c to GEO. N. STODDARD, druggist, 1226 Nassau Street, BUFFALO, N. Y., who will send you postpaid, some simple and harmless powders, please to take and easy directions, which if you follow, you positively and effectually cure in from one to the weeks' time, no matter how bad you may be. Few have suffered from these causes more than I, and fewer set at my age (51) are in more perfect health than I am
now. The same means will cure you.
"Mr. Stoddard is an honest man." — Publisher of Golden Argosy, N. Y.

The Christian at Work, New York, says: "We personally acquainted with Mr. Stoddard, and know that any communication to him will receive prompt and careful attention." Say where you saw this adv.

RIDGE'S FOOD

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids
Not a medicine, but a special prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach, 4 sizes conveniently packed. (Pamphlet free, on every label). Palmer, Mass.

FREE ENGRAVING of the CREA-BROOKLYN BRIDGE by turn mail. Send address and stamp
K. D. QUILBY, 30 Vesey St., New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1889, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Vol. XII., No. 41. Office, 71 Bible House, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1889.

Price, 4 Cents. Annual Subscription, $1.50.

CONTENTS OF THIS NUMBER.

TRAITS OF MESSRS. F. N. CHARRINGTON AND E. P. TELFORD.

THE WORLD'S FAIR: A BLESSING OR A CURSE? Dr. Talmage's Sermon Last Sunday Morning.

PICTURE OF WESLEY MEMORIAL CHURCH. BETRAYED BY THE MORMONS. By Mrs. Mary Ettie V. Smith.

GENERAL BOULANGER'S PROSPECTS.
DAVID'S THANKSGIVING PRAYER.
Converted in a Heathen Temple—A Christian Chinaman's Ministry—An Indian Child's Death—About Their Father's Business, etc.
THE FATEFUL DAY OF SEPTEMBER 22.
THE TURNING-POINT. A New Sermon by Rev. C. H. Spurgeon.
PORTRAIT OF GEN. A. W. GREELY.
Gems from New Books: The Venerable Bede—Wickliffe's Bible.
A NURSE'S PRAYER. (With Illustration.)

Messrs. F. N. Charrington and E. P. Telford—The Charrington Hall During Mr. Telford's Meetings.

MR. F. N. CHARRINGTON.

As we mentioned in these columns two weeks ago, Mr. E. P. Telford, the successful Methodist evangelist whose meetings in this country two years ago were so signally blessed, has returned at the pressing request of ministers and friends in New England, and is again holding crowded meetings. During his former visit the work which God enabled him to do was so promising that he was urged to remain, but he was unable to comply, having promised Mr. Charrington to hold a mission in his great hall in the East of London. Mr. Telford returned to keep that engagement, and we now, in welcoming him back to the United States, give with his portrait a portrait of his friend Mr. Charrington, and a picture of Mr. Charrington's hall as it appeared during the meetings Mr. Telford has been holding there.

The Son of a Brewer

whose ale is popular in the saloons throughout England, Mr. F. N. Charrington was one of the heirs to enormous wealth. He was born in 1850, and is therefore now thirty-nine years old. After completing his education, he went with his parents on a tour through Europe before settling down to work as a partner in his father's brewery. During their wanderings they met the Rev. W. S. Rainsford, now rector of St. George's Church, New York. Mr. Rainsford spoke earnestly to the young man about his soul, and afterward the serious thoughts then awakened were intensified by the appeals of a friend who had recently been converted. Mr. Charrington gave his heart to Christ, and immediately began to look around for some work that he might do for God. He was advised to open a night-school for ragged boys in the East End of London. The young convert was glad to make a beginning. His days were occupied in the great brewery, while his evenings were spent in the night-school. It was rough, difficult, uphill work, but, full of Christian love, he persevered. At this time he became acquainted with Mr. Campbell, and his friend Mr. Kerwin, and under their influence he entered upon more direct religious work. They were carrying on in the immediate neighborhood a regular meeting among rough boys in a hay-loft. Mr. Charrington was present at their service one night. On arriving, he found himself in a long room, lighted with paraffine lamps hanging from the rafters. The room was fitted with rude benches, with a platform at one end. Despite the odor of the stable below, it seemed a house of God. The rough lads sang with a will, and listened intently to the address. Mr. Charrington saw that this was a better work than his own of teaching boys to read and write, and he at once proposed that they should join forces. The next night he took his boys to the loft, and helped in the service. It was to his former life. As he stood in the loft over the stable, urging the boys to seek the Lord, it occurred to him that only a year ago that very night he was the gayest of the gay in a ball-room. He continued in this work for some months, and when new premises were needed for the growing work, which it was felt should include girls as well as boys, Mr. Charrington spent $1,500 in hiring and fitting up a suitable room in one of the lowest slums of the city. Up to this time Mr. Charrington had remained in the brewery, but his conscience was not at rest. Wherever he went he saw his father's name printed on large signboards and posts over the various grog-shops at every miserable street corner. He saw drunken fathers, gin-drinking mothers, and ill-used children, whose worst enemies were those whom God designed to be their natural protectors. There might seem to be light, warmth, and cordials within, but brawls and fights spoiled the glitter; and then above all he read, "Charrington, Head & Co.'s entire." In addition to this, the boys and lads were continually asking him questions about the drink that were not at all likely to make his conscience more at ease, and he began to feel that he was pulling down with one hand what he was building up with the other.

A Startling Contrast

The crisis came. Mr. Charrington told his father that he could have nothing more to do with the business of the brewery. This decision came so unexpectedly that it was a great blow to the family, but he was resolute, and not knowing whether he would be penniless or not he forever. It is gratifying to know that his father, bitterly as he resented his son's conduct at the time, saw things in a new light later. On his death-bed he expressed his approval of the course his son had taken, although it was then too late to change his will in which he had marked his resentment at his son's renunciation.

Quitted the Brewery

Thus delivered from entanglements, Mr. Charrington gave himself up unreservedly to Christian work among the million and a half of the poor in the East End of London. He had meetings every evening, and he preached in the streets and visited the sick and poor in the daytime, and on Sunday evenings he hired the variety theatres for religious services.

The Mission Hall,

a picture of which appears on the first page, is the outcome of his efforts. He realized that some central home was necessary as headquarters of the movement which he was leading, and on November 10, 1883, the foundation stone was laid of the great edifice. Aided by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon, the late Earl of Shaftesbury, and other eminent men, Mr. Charrington purchased a plot of ground in the heart of the slums at a cost of $40,000, and commenced the erection of the enormous mission hall, which is now filled every night and three times on Sunday with an eager, attentive congregation. Mr. Charrington modestly keeps himself in the background, and invites any earnest gospel preacher to speak to the people, but he is the life and soul of the undertaking. By God's grace the name of Charrington is now famous among the poor of London for something else besides beer.

MR. E. P. TELFORD.

MR. TELFORD, whose portrait we give, with that of Mr. Charrington, on our front page, has been associated very closely with the work of the Great Assembly Hall for over thirteen years, he having made an annual visit, usually lasting six weeks. His preaching has been blest to the conversion of hundreds in East London. Mr. Charrington, when speaking at Mr. Telford's recent farewell meeting, before his departure for America, said his "work had been wonderfully successful in the Great Hall." Apart from his connection with Mr. Charrington's enterprise, he is known throughout England as a soul winner. His meetings have been largely amongst the Methodist churches, and during the last twelve years it is estimated that no fewer than 20,000 inquirers have entered the inquiry-rooms at his meetings seeking salvation.

Mr. Telford is a native of North Northumberland. He was born in 1846, and is, therefore, forty-three years of age. His mother was an enthusiastic Christian, and her boy was the subject of her constant prayers. At the age of fourteen he was apprenticed to the dry-goods trade in Newcastle-on-Tyne. Not long afterwards, during a series of mission services in the neighboring town of Gateshead, he was at once united with the Church through whose instrumentality he was translated "from death unto life," and threw himself with heartiness into the service to which he felt convinced God called him. He began at once to address small gatherings in cottage meetings, which were held in some of the lowest haunts in Gateshead, with most successful results. At the age of seventeen he commenced to preach with great acceptance in village chapels in the neighborhood, and frequent conversions followed.

Converted to Christ,

When Mr. Telford was twenty-three years old—in 1869—he removed to Stockton-on-Tees, and commenced business there on his own account. He observed with very much concern the irreligious condition of thousands of the inhabitants of Stockton, and began to hold open-air meetings in the spacious market-place, and every night for nearly three years—winter and summer—these meetings were continued. He held a building capable of holding 3,000 persons, and the services were often crowded to overflowing. For twelve months he preached in the Exchange Hall, a building holding some 2,000 people, his discourses being the means of arresting many from a downward career. Through some four or five years of incessant labor by Mr. Telford and the band of earnest men and women he had drawn around him, many hundreds of both sexes were rescued from degradation.

Revival Meetings in the Theatre,

So great was the success attending the labors of Mr. Telford, that invitations came pouring in from adjacent towns, and he conducted missions at Dewsbury, Halifax, and Hanley. He remained nearly six months in the Potteries, and excited great attention by his exertions in Longton, Stoke, Silverdale, and other places in this district. He has since held missions at Leeds, Gateshead, Nottingham, South Shields, Durham, Hartlepool, Sheffield, and in the East End of London. His year's mission at Nottingham in 1886-87 was a great blessing to the town.

A work of remarkable power also resulted from his visit to Ashton-under-Lyne, when in less than a month 1,500 men and women came forward testifying their conversion and decision for Christ. The Rev. Thos. Rider, ex-president of the Methodist New Connexion, with whom Mr. Telford was associated, says in a letter to him: "For many reasons I am sorry that you are about to leave England. It was my hope to have had you as a co-worker in special work for the great Master whom we serve. Your evangelistic labors have been a great blessing to very many souls in this country, and I hope will yet be so to many more. I pray that God may be with you abroad, and that everywhere precious souls may be won for Christ." The Rev. T. T. Rushworth, President of the Methodist New Connexion Conference, says: "I have been associated with Mr. Telford in several successful missions. He is eminently qualified for the special work to which he is devoted. I have pleasure in commending him to the confidence of the churches he may visit."

Two years ago Mr. Telford made a short Visit to the United States, and was most warmly received by the ministers and churches which he visited. His first meetings were held with Dr. J. W. Hamilton, of Boston, whose name is so well known in the Methodist Church of America. He agreed to go for a ten days' mission, but at the request of Dr. Hamilton and the church extended his visit to a month, and even then the people reluctantly let him leave them for an engagement made with the First Methodist Church of Fall River, Mass. Some thousands of English cotton weavers from Lancashire have settled in this city, and crowds came nightly to hear the English evangelist, many of whom had heard him in the old country. After spending a month in Fall River, Mr. Telford visited Lynn, Mass., in the churches of Dr. Knowles and Dr. Pickles, preaching nightly for seven weeks; then he went to Wilmington, Del., preaching daily in the Reformed Episcopal Church—Pastor Rev. G. Tucker. He afterward proceeded to Philadelphia, where six weeks were spent laboring with Rev. Dr. Cleveland and other ministers of the Methodist Church.

Mr. Telford is now laboring at Plymouth, N. H. At the end of his engagement there he goes to Troy, N. Y. Thence to East Boston, where he will hold meetings in Dr. J. W. Hamilton's church. He hopes to preach in all our chief cities during his visit, though it is scarcely possible to accept all the invitations which have been sent to him. He is, however, arranging his routes so as to save time and get as much work as possible into the period at his disposal. At the close of his work in the United States Mr. Telford expects to proceed to New Zealand, Australia, and India. Letters for him addressed to this office, 71 and 73 Bible House, New York will be forwarded to him.

CONVERTED IN A HEATHEN TEMPLE.

In an interesting article on Mohammedans in Persia in the Church at Home and Abroad, Dr. J. H. Shedd relates the following incident: A young man, well educated, whose brother is a high ecclesiastic in Teheran, was led to doubt his religion by the vileness and hypocrisy which he knew existed among the mollahs or ecclesiastics. He was determined to follow it up and went to his brother at the capital, and from thence to the shrine of Ali at Kerbela, the seat of the highest teacher and holiest man of the Sheites. At this holy shrine he saw such rotten and abominable vileness and venality that he says, "I there became a Christian," and now he is in exile from his friends for Christ's sake. Another of our converts is the son of the highest ecclesiastic. His father died last fall; and on his refusing to take charge of the mosque his brothers deserted him, and he is an outcast to-day, though from a noble family, for his faith. Twice he has been handed over to the governor for death, but the governor has managed to get him away alive.

A CHRISTIAN CHINAMAN'S MINISTRY.

A QUIANT letter from a Chinaman who was converted in California and who has been on a visit to his own country is sent by Dr. W. C. Pond to the American Missionary. It refers to the baptism of six converts, and says: "One of the women was about sixty years of age. Her brother was a Christian and a preacher, and through her brother she gain to be a Christian. After this she encountered many trials, especially with her son's wife. Her son was in California, and his wife and two children lived with his mother. After she became a Christian both the children died. Their mother quarrel with her because she will not worship the idols. Then her brother, the preacher, died. Then she herself was taken very sick. We miss her three Sabbath days. That time no Chinese preacher was there, and only myself and, perhaps, one or two Christian brothers with me at the chapel. So I ask one of them to go with me to see for what cause she was absent. She lived about five miles from my place. We reach the village, meet a young man outside the village, ask him 'where is the Christian woman's house?' He said to us, 'Follow me.' So we follow him straight to her house and that young man live there. So I found she was sick. Three women were in the house, one of them the son's wife. These women said to us, 'If she not be a Christian you would not come to her.' My answer, 'Certainly not; if I not a Christian myself I would not come here.' So I begin to have a little talk to them and tell them who is the true God and how much God love us all, and how Jesus died for us. After this I gave them a prayer. They felt very much pleased to hear it. They gave me some present to take home, and soon the woman got all well. Then she went with her brother's widow to Hong Kong and leave her son's wife at home. Then she also became a Christian woman, very faithful, although a great many people make fun of her and use many bad words about her. She must be one of the five baptized."

AN INDIAN CHILD'S DEATH.

AN incident related by Miss M. C. Collins in the American Missionary is a type of the fatal results of spiritual indecision. Men and women who are trying to make the best of both worlds by enjoying the pleasures of this one, while giving Christ half-hearted allegiance, will have reason for still deeper sorrow than had the Indians Miss Collins describes. (Matt. 6: 24.)

Writing from Fort Yates, Dakota, she says: During the recent measles epidemic a large number of children died on the Agency. At this village a little child had been conjured until they thought it was dying, and then they sent for me. I found the poor little one all bruised with the hands of the conjurer. I showed the mother how to bathe it, and I poulticed the throat and sent Josephine over again to change the poultice, and she reported the child as breathing quietly. The next morning the swelling had gone down and the baby seemed much better; all day it continued to improve, and the next day sat up and ate rice soup which I carried it. The mother said, "She is well now!" I said, "Oh, no, she is not; keep her in the house three days and I will visit her, then she will be well perhaps." If an Indian is not in a dying condition, they do not consider anything the matter. So, after I left, she took her child out and walked about two miles. The child caught cold, and that afternoon grew worse. They had an Indian to conjure it, and it died immediately. They sent for me to come and pray with them. Josephine went for Elias, and we went to the desolate home. The baby had been dead an hour and was closed up in a box, the grandfather singing a mourning song, the mother wailing, "Oh my daughter, my daughter, I loved her and she has left me!" Over and over again she cried out in her sorrow. The grandmother had cut her flesh, and the streams of blood running down from her hair over her face only made all seem more desolate, and more weird and terrible. They were trying to be Indians, and yet they had asked for me to come. I suppose it was to give the child the full benefit of both religions, so that there should be no mistake in the future world.

ANECDOTES RELATED AT RECENT EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS.

"A Working Slater, Given to Drink," says an evangelist, "was, after much persuasion, induced by his wife to come to one of our meetings. After coming once, he was most earnest and regular in his attendance, and before long he gave evidence of being truly a changed man. He gave up his drink, and came out boldly as a Christian. At the end of twelve months he was scarcely to be recognized: he became master where he had been a workman, and he has to-day five men under him. Moreover, he is still steadfast to his Christian profession, and full of praise to Christ for saving him."

Thrown From His Trap.—"A Young Man was driving along a country road, when suddenly his horse shied, and he was thrown from his trap, receiving fatal injuries. He was carried to the nearest farm-house by those who had witnessed the accident. A messenger was hastily dispatched for the doctor, while the sufferer waited in an agony of suspense. The moment the physician made his appearance, the young man exclaimed, 'Must I die, sir? Oh, tell me truly, must I die?' The doctor examined his injuries, then said, 'I do not think you can live more than an hour.' 'Oh!' shrieked the dying man, with a sudden frenzy, 'must I die in one short hour? I have made no preparation. I am not ready. Must I really die?' Some of those who were present reminded him of the thief on the cross, and told him to repent and believe on Jesus. 'What do you say?' he asked. 'Repent; believe!' 'What does that mean? Tell me quickly, quickly, or I shall be dead; I have only one hour!' The doctor had formed a right opinion. Within an hour the young man's spirit had gone, and his last sad words were, 'Oh, tell me, tell me, what am I to do!' He was cut down in the bloom of his youth, and that without warning. God says: 'Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation.'"

A Sailor Called "Satan" Converted.—"About six years ago," says an evangelist, "I took a mission in the Oxford Hall at Ilfracombe. Many were, I believe, then brought to the Lord, and among the rest was one man known as a ringleader in open wickedness. He was a stalwart man, a sailor, named Davey; but on account of his extraordinary character he had earned the sobriquet of 'Satan,' and was universally known by that name. To the great surprise of many, this man was brought to the Lord, and I had the joy of knowing him as a brand plucked from the burning. In January this year (1889) I was again at Ilfracombe, and one of the first items of news that reached my ears was that a small boat had been capsized two days previous to my arrival, and that two men had been drowned, one of whom was my poor friend Davey. I had the privilege of calling upon his poor widow, who is left with nine children; and thankful indeed was I to hear from her and from everyone of the wonderful change that had taken place in this man. He had truly witnessed a good confession, and he had been rejoicing in the thought of seeing and hearing me once more. He had, however, been unexpectedly called instead to go in and see the King, and the sea has not yet given up the body."

A Young Man's Solemn Dream.—A Minister says: "I knew a young man who had been very anxious about his soul. Salvation was the centre of his thoughts by day, and of his dreams by night. One night he dreamed that he stood before the judgment seat of Christ. He saw an angel with balances in his hand. Into the one scale his sins were put. As that side weighed down, the angel said, 'What have you to put into the other?' He put in all his good thoughts, words, and deeds, but they were light as feathers in comparison with the great weight of sin. 'Have you nothing else?' asked the angel. 'Yes; I was the child of godly parents. Put in all their prayers for me.' But they made no difference. 'Have you nothing else to put in against your sins?' the angel demanded. Then he thought of Jesus, the sinner's Saviour, and he said, 'Will you put in Jesus along with my prayers?' 'No,' was the reply; 'Jesus will never consent to go into the scale as a make-weight. It is He only, or not at all.' Then the young man turned to the angel, and asked him to empty the scale, and put Jesus in alone. No sooner had the Saviour entered than down came the scale, and He far out-weighed all the sinner's sin. The young man awoke. It was only a dream, but it had shown him where he was erring. He was going to take Jesus to help him to work out his own salvation. Now he saw that he must depend on Christ alone. Salvation is all of grace; we can neither buy nor work out the smallest part of it. We must come to Jesus, and, throwing ourselves upon His grace, accept that which He so generously offers to us."

An Heroic Malagasy Girl.—Mr. Hamilton observes: "This story is told of one of the Malagasy converts: It was a time of great tribulation, and the Hova Queen of Madagascar had been prejudiced against Christianity. She issued a decree that by a certain day all her people who had professed Christianity should go before officers whom she had appointed, and take an oath against their professed religion under pain of her displeasure. The day came, and from all quarters they trooped to renounce Jehovah, the God of the whites, as their God. Many took the oath, but a faithful minority refused to deny or renounce their God. These were all condemned to death, and swiftly the executions followed. Some were burned, some were beheaded, and a large number were condemned to be thrown over a precipice. Among the last was a young girl who, when before the officer of state had given a most striking testimony. She was extremely beautiful, and as the officer, who was drunken and brutal, glared upon her, she said, 'You think to frighten me with your fearful countenance; but I fear you not, though your evil eyes proclaim you the servant of the evil one. I am trusting in Christ, the Almighty, and you cannot harm my soul.' The officer was enraged, and raising his hand smote her on the cheek; she calmly turned to him the other saying, 'God enables me to offer my other cheek to the smiter.' All were astonished. Her case was represented to the queen, who gave orders that every means was to be taken to win her back to her idols. They kept her to the last that the sight of her companions' destruction might weaken her resolute spirit, yet when her turn came she was prepared to die for her faith. Threats and bribes were showered upon her, but the noble girl remained firm. The queen, interested in her heroism, pardoned her, saying she was not a Christian, but bewitched. Set at liberty, for many years she continued to serve God and His afflicted people until it pleased her Master to call her home."

THE COMING WORLD'S FAIR.

SHALL IT BE MADE A BLESSING OR A CURSE?

Dr. Talmage's Sermon Preached Last Sunday Morning, October 6, 1889.

"They traded in thy fairs." Ezekiel 27: 12.

The Fairs of Tyre—How the City was Taken—The Exhibits of the Tyrian Fair—The American Project—The Event to be Commemorated—The Eventful Day in 1492—Suggestions for the Fair—I. Our Cities Should not Belittle Each Other—II. The Financial Idea not to Eclipse the Moral—III. The Opportunity for Another Pentecost—IV. A Good Time for a Peace Congress—The Only Disinterested Nation—V. Bar out Foreign Vices—International Education—Reconciliation of Capital and Labor.

PAIRS may be for the sale of goods, or for the exhibition of goods on a small scale or a large scale, for county or city, for one nation or for all nations. My text brings us to the fairs of ancient Tyre, a city that is now extinct. Part of the city was on an island, and part on the mainland. Alexander, the conqueror, was much embarrassed when he found so much of the city was on an island, for he had no ships. But his military genius was not to be balked. Having marched his army to the beach, he ordered them to tear up the city on the mainland and throw it into the water, and build a causeway two hundred feet wide to the island. So they took that part of the city which was on the mainland, and with it built a causeway of timber and brick and stone, on which his army marched to the capture of that part of the city which was on the island, as though a hostile army should put Brooklyn into the East River, and over it march to the capture of New York.

That Tyrian Causeway

of ruins which Alexander's army built is still there, and by alluvial deposits has permanently united the island to the mainland, so that it is no longer an island but a promontory. The sand, the greatest of all undertakers for burying cities, having covered up for the most part Baalbec and Palmyra and Thebes and Memphis and Carthage and Babylon and Luxor and Jericho, the sand, so small and yet so mighty, is now gradually giving rites of sepulture to what was left of Tyre. But, oh, what a magnificent city it once was! Mistress of the sea! Queen of international commerce! All nations casting their crowns at her feet! Where we have in our sailing vessels benches of wood, she had benches of ivory. Where we have for our masts of ships sails of coarse canvas, she had sails of richest embroidery.

The chapter from which my text is taken after enumerating the richest countries in all the world says of Tyre: "They traded in thy fairs." Look in upon

A World's Fair at Tyre.

Ezekiel leads us through one department, and it is a horse fair. Underfed and overdriven for ages, the horses of to-day give you no idea of the splendid animals which, rearing and plunging and snorting and neighing, were brought down over the plank of the ships, and led into the world's fair at Tyre, until Ezekiel, who was a minister of religion, and not supposed to know much about horses, cried out in admiration: "They of the house of Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses." Here in another department of that world's fair at Tyre, led on by Ezekiel the prophet, we find everything all ablaze with precious stones. Like petrified snow are the corals; like fragments of fallen sky are the sapphires; and here is agate a-blush with all colors.

What is that aroma we inhale? It is from the chests of cedar which we open, and find them filled with all styles of fabric. But the aromatics increase as we pass down this lane of enchantment, and here are cassia and frankincense and balm. Led on by Ezekiel the prophet, we come to an agricultural fair with a display of wheat from Minnith and Pannag, rich as that of our modern Dakota or Michigan. And here is a mineralogical fair, with specimens of iron and silver and tin and lead and gold.

But halt! for here is purple, Tyrian purple, all tints and shades, deep almost unto the black, and bright almost unto the blue; waiting for kings and queens to order it made into robes for coronation-day; purple, not like that which is now made from the orchilla weed, but the extinct purple, the lost purple, which the ancients knew how to make out of the gasteropod mollusks of the Mediterranean. Oh, look at those casks of wine from Helbon! See those snowbanks of wool from the back of sheep that once pastured in Gilead! Oh, the bewildering riches and variety of that world's fair at Tyre!

The Greatest Fair of All.

But the world has copied these Bible-mentioned fairs in all succeeding ages, and it has had its Louis the Sixth fair at Dagobert, and Henry the First fair on St. Bartholomew's day, and Hungarian fairs at Pesth, and Easter fairs at Leipsic, and the Scotch fairs at Perth (bright was the day when I was at one of them), and afterward came the London world's fair, and the New York world's fair, and the Vienna world's fair, and the Parisian world's fair, and it has been decided that, in commemoration of the discovery of America in 1492, there shall be held in this country in 1892 a world's fair that shall eclipse all preceding national expositions.

I say, God speed the movement! Surely the event commemorated is worthy of all the architecture and music and pyrotechnics, and eloquent and stupendous planning, and monetary expenditure, and congressional appropriations which the most sanguine Christian patriot has ever dreamed of. Was any voyage that the world ever heard of crowned with such an arrival as that of Columbus and His Men?

After they had been encouraged for the last few days by flight of land birds, and floating branches of red berries, and while Columbus was down in the cabin studying the sea-chart, Martin Pinzon, standing on deck, and looking to the southwest, cried: "Land! Land! Land!" And "Gloria in Excelsis" was sung in raining tears on all the three ships of the expedition. Most appropriate and patriotic and Christian will be a commemorative world's fair in America in 1892. Leaving to others the discussion as to the site of such exposition—and I wonder not that some five or six of our cities are struggling to have it, for it will give to any city to which it is assigned an impulse of prosperity for a hundred years—I say, leaving to others the selection of the particular locality to be thus honored, I want to say some things from the point of Christian patriotism which ought to be said, and the earlier the better, that we get thousands of people talking in the right direction, and that will make healthful public opinion. I beg you to consider prayerfully what I feel called upon of God as an American citizen and as a preacher of righteousness to utter.

The Conflict of the Site.

My first suggestion is that it is not wise, as certainly it is not Christian, to continue this wide and persistent attempt of American cities to belittle and depreciate other cities. It has been going on for years, but now the spirit seems to culminate in this discussion as to where the World's fair shall be held, a style of discussion which has a tendency to injure the success of the fair as a great moral and patriotic enterprise, after the locality has been decided upon. There is such a thing as healthful rivalry between cities, but you will bear me out in saying that there can be no good to come from the uncanny things said about each other by New York and Chicago, by Chicago and St. Louis, by St. Paul and Minneapolis, by Tacoma and Seattle, and all through the States by almost every two proximate cities. All cities, like individuals, have their virtues and their vices. All our American cities should be our exultation. What churches! What public libraries! What asylums of mercy! What academies of music! What mighty men in law and medicine and art and scholarship! What schools and colleges and universities! What women radiant and gracious, and an improvement on all the generations of women since Eve! What philanthropists who do not feel satisfied with their own charities until they get into the hundreds of thousands and the millions! What "God's acres" for the dead, gardens of beauty, and palaces of marble for those who sleep the last sleep! Now stop your slander of American cities. Do you say they are the centres of crime and political corruption? Please admit the fact that they are centres of intelligence and generosity, and the mightiest patrons of architecture and sculpture and painting and music and reservoirs of religious influence for all the continent. It will be well for the country districts to cease talking against the cities, and it will be well for the city of one locality to stop talking against the cities of other localities. New York will not get the World's fair by depreciating Chicago, nor Chicago by bombarding New York.

Another suggestion concerning the coming exposition: let not

The Materialistic and Monetary Idea

overpower the moral and religious. During that exposition, the first time in all their lives, there will be thousands of people from other lands who will see a country without a state religion. Let us, by an increased harmony among all denominations of religion, impress other nationalities, as they come here that year, with the superior advantage of having all denominations equal in the sight of government. All the rulers and chief men of Europe belong to the state religion, whatever it may be. Although our last two Presidents have been Presbyterians, the previous one was an Episcopalian; and the two previous, Methodists; and going further back in that line of Presidents, we find Martin Van Buren a Dutch Reformed, and John Quincy Adams a Unitarian; and a man's religion in this country is neither hindrance nor advantage in the matter of political elevation. All Europe needs that. All the world needs that. A man's religion is something between himself and his God, and it must not, directly or indirectly, be interfered with.

Furthermore, during that exposition, Christian civilization will confront barbarism. We shall have a greater opportunity to make upon foreign nationalities than would otherwise be afforded us in a quarter of a century. Let the churches of the city where the exposition is held be open every day, and prayers be offered and sermons preached and doxologies sung. In the less than three years between this and that world's convocation, let us get a baptism of the Holy Ghost, so that the six months of that World's fair shall be fifty Pentecosts in one, and instead of three thousand converted, as in the former Pentecost, hundreds of thousands will be converted. You must remember that the Pentecost mentioned in the Bible occurred when there was no printing-press, no books, no Christian pamphlets, no religious newspapers, and yet the influence was tremendous. How many nationalities were touched? The account says: "Parthians and Medes and Elamites," that is, people from the eastern countries; "Phrygia and Pamphylia," that is, the western countries; "Cyrene and strangers of Rome, Crete, and Arabians," that is, the southern countries; but they were all moved by the mighty spectacle. Instead of the sixteen or eighteen tribes of people reported at that Pentecost, all the chief nations of Europe and Asia, North and South America, will be represented at our World's fair in 1892, and a Pentecost here, and then, would mean the salvation of the world.

An Evangelizing Impression

But, you say, we may have at that fair the people of all lands, and all the machinery for gospelization, the religious printing-presses and the Churches, but all that would not make a Pentecost; we must have God. Well, you can have Him. Has He not been graciously waiting? and nothing stands in the way but our own unbelief and indolence and sin. May God break down the barriers! The grandest opportunity for the evangelization of all nations since

Jesus Christ died on the cross will be the World's Exposition of 1892. God may take us out of the harvest-field before that, but let it be known throughout Christendom that that year, between May and November, will be

The Mountain of Christian Advantage, the Alpine and Himalayan height of opportunity overtopping all others for salvation. Instead of the slow process of having to send the gospel to other lands by our own American missionaries, who have difficult toil in acquiring the foreign language, and then must contend with foreign prejudices, what a grand thing to have able and influential foreigners converted during their visit in America, and then have them return to their native lands with the glorious tidings. Oh, for an overwhelming work of grace for the year 1892, beginning in the autumn of 1889!

Another opportunity, if our public men see it—and it is the duty of pulpit and printing-press to help them to see it—will be the calling at that time and place of

A Great Peace Congress

for all nations. The convention of representatives from the Governments of North and South America, now at Washington, is only a type of what we may have on a vast and world-wide scale at the international exposition of 1892. By one stroke the gorgon of war might be slain and buried so deep that neither trumpet of human dispute or of archangel's blowing could resurrect it. When the last Napoleon called such a congress of nations many did not respond, and those that did respond gathered wondering what trap that wily destroyer of the French Republic and the builder of a French monarchy might spring on them. But what if the most popular government on earth—I mean the United States Government—should practically say to all nations: On the American continent, in 1892, we will hold a world's fair, and all nations will send to it specimens of their products, their manufactures, and their arts, and we invite all the Governments of Europe, Asia, and Africa to send representatives to a peace convention that shall be held at the same time and place, and establish an commission to whom shall be referred all controversies between nation and nation, their decision to be final, and so all nations would be relieved from the expense of standing armies and naval equipment, war having been made an everlasting impossibility. All the nations of the earth worth consideration would come to it—mighty men of England and Germany and France and Russia, and all the other great nationalities—Bismarck, who worships the Lord of Hosts, and Gladstone who worships the God of Peace, and Boulangier, who worships himself. The fact is that the nations are sick of drinking out of chalices made out of human skulls filled with blood.

International Arbitration

The United States Government is the only Government in the whole world that could successfully call such a congress. Suppose France should call it, Germany would not come; or Germany call it, France would not come; or Russia should call it, Turkey would not come; or England should call it, nations long jealous of her overshadowing power in Europe would not come. America, in favor with all nationalities, standing out independent and alone, is the spot, and 1892 will be the time. May it please the President of the United States, may it please the Secretary of State, may it please the Cabinet, may it please the Senate and House of Representatives, may it please the printing-presses and the churches and the people who lift up and down our American rulers!

An Appeal.

To them I make this timely and solemn and Christian appeal. Do you not think people die fast enough without this wholesale butchery of war? Do you not think that we can trust to anæmonias, and consumptions, and apoplexies, and palsies, and yellow fevers, and Asiatic choleras the work of killing them fast enough? Do you not think that the greedy, wide-open laws of the grave ought to be satisfied if filled by natural causes with hundreds of thousands of corpses a year? Do you not think we can do something better with men than to dash their life out against casements or blow them into fragments by torpedoes, or send them out into the world, where they need all their faculties, footless, armless, eyeless? Do you not think that women might be appointed to an easier place than the edge of a grave-trench to wring their pale hands and weep out their eyesight in widowhood and childlessness? Why, the last

Glory Has Gone Out of War.

There was a time when it demanded that quality which we all admire—namely, courage—for a man had to stand at the hilt of his sword when the point pierced the foe, and while he was slaying another the other might slay him; or it was bayonet charge. But now it is cool or deliberate murder, and clear out at sea a bombshell can be hurled miles away into a city, or while thousands of private soldiers, who have no interest in the contest, for they were conscripted, are losing their lives, their general may sit smoking one of the best Havana cigars after a dinner of quail on toast. It may be well enough for graduating students of colleges on Commencement Day to orate about the poetry of war, but do not talk about the poetry of war to the men of the Federal or Confederate armies who were at the front, or to some of us who, as members of the Christian Commission, saw the ghastly hospitals at Antietam and Hagerstown. Ah! you may worship the Lord of Hosts, I worship the "God of Peace, who brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus Christ, that great Shepherd of the sheep." War is and it was born in the lowest cavern of perdition, and I pray that it may speedily descend to the place from which it arose, its last sword and shield and musket rattling on the bottom of the red-hot marl of hell. Let there be called a peace convention for 1892, with delegates sent by all the decent governments of Christendom, and while they are in session, if you should some night go out and look into the sky above the exposition buildings, you may find that the old gallery of crystal, that was taken down after the Bethlehem anthem of eighteen centuries ago was sung out, is rebuilt again in the clouds, and the same angelic singers are returned with the same librettos of light to chant "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men."

An Accursed Monster,

Again, I suggest, in regard to the World's fair, that, while appropriate places are prepared for all foreign exhibits, we make no room for

The Importation of Foreign Vices.

America has enough of its own, and we need no new installments of that kind. A world's fair will bring all kinds of people, good and bad. The good we must prepare to welcome, the bad we must prepare to shun. The attempt will again be made in 1892, as in 1876, to break up our American Sabbaths. That attempt was made at the Philadelphia Centennial, but was defeated. The American Sabbath is the best-kept Sabbath on earth. We do not want it broken down, and substituted in the place thereof the Brussels Sabbath, the Vienna Sabbath, the St. Petersburg Sabbath or any of the foreign Sabbaths, which are no Sabbaths at all. I think the Lord is more than generous in asking only fifty-two days out of the 365 for His service. You let the Sabbath go, and with it will go your Bible, and after that your liberties, and your children, or your grandchildren will be here in America under a despotism as bad as in those lands where they turn the Lord's Day into wassail and frolic.

Among those who come there will be, as at other expositions, lordly people who will bring their vices with them. Among the dukes and duchesses, and princes and princesses of other lands are some of the best men and women of all the earth. Remember Earl of Kintore, Lord Cairns, and Lord Shaftesbury. But there is a snobbery and flunkeyism in American society that runs after a grandee, a duke, a lord, or a prince, though he may be a walking lazaretto and his breath a plague. It makes the fortune of some of our queens of society to dance one cotillion with one of these Princely Lepers.

Some people cannot get their hat off quick enough when they see such a foreign lord approaching, and they do not care for the mire into which they drop their knees as they bow to worship. Let no splendor of pedigree or any pomp and paraphernalia of circumstance make him attractive. There is only one set of Ten Commandments that I ever heard of, and no class of men or women in all the world are excused from obedience to those laws written by finger of lightning on the granite surface of Mount Sinai. Surely we have enough American vices without making any drafts upon European vice for 1892.

By this sermon I would have the nation made aware of its opportunity and get ready to improve it, and of some perils and get ready to combat them. I rejoice to believe that the advantages will overtop everything in that world's fair. What an introduction to each other of communities, of states, of republics, of empires, of zones, of hemispheres! What doors of information will be swung wide open for the boys and girls now on the threshold! What national and International Education!

What crowning of industry with sheaves of grains and what imperial robing of her with embroidered fabrics! What scientific apparatus! What telescopes for the infinitude above and microscopes for the infinitude beneath, and instruments to put nature to the torture until she tells her last secret! What a display of the munificence of the God who has grown enough wheat to make a loaf of good bread large enough for the human race, and enough cotton to stocking every foot, and enough timber to shelter every head, making it manifest that it is not God's fault, but either man's oppression or indolence or dissipation if there be any without supply.

Under the arches of the chief building of that exposition let

Capital and Labor,

too long estranged, at last be married, each taking the hand of each in pledge of eternal fidelity, while representations of all nations stand round rejoicing at the nuptials, and saying: "What God hath joined together let not man put asunder." Then shall the threnody of the needlewoman no longer be heard:

Work, work, work!
Till the brain begins to swim;
Work, work, work!
Till the eyes are heavy and dim.
Seam and gusset and band,
Band and gusset and seam,
Till over the buttons I fall asleep,
And sew them on in a dream.

Oh, Christian America! Make ready for the grandest exposition ever seen under the sun! Have Bibles enough bound. Have churches enough established. Have scientific halls enough endowed. Have printing-presses enough set up. Have revivals of religion enough in full blast. I believe you will. "Hosanna to the Son of David! Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord!"

Through the harsh voices of our day
A low, sweet prelude finds its way;
Through clouds of doubt and creeds of fear
A light is breaking calm and clear.

That song of love, now low and far,
Ere long shall swell from star to star;
That light, the breaking day, which tips
The golden-spined Apocalypse!

The Great Crisis from 1889 to 1901. By Rev

M. Baxter. This is a 32-page pamphlet containing a résumé of his larger works, with diagrams and tables of prophetic dates. It has been specially prepared for distribution at meetings, lectures, etc., and is of a convenient size for sending in envelopes through the mails. Persons desiring to arouse the attention of their friends and the public to the momentous character of the period on which we are entering will find this a valuable means of assistance. Price Fourteen Cents per dozen, including postage. Address Manager, 771 Bible House, New York.

DAVID'S THANKSGIVING PRAYER.

By Mrs. M. Baxter.

S. S. Lesson for October 20, 2 Samuel 7, Golden Text, 1 Thess. 5: 18.

David in Peace and Rest—Leisure a Testing-Time for all Men—David's Love and Gratitude to God Seeking Expression—Consultation with the Prophet—The Project Laid Before God—The Answer Prompt and Appreciative—Two Precious Promises—David's self-Depreciation—Satisfied that God Knew Him Throughout—A Contrast Between Two Kings—David Ascribing All Glory to God—Content With His Promises.

IT was a time of calm; no war was raging; the king, who had so long wandered on the mountains and dwelt in caves, now "dwelt in his house, and the Lord had given him rest from all his enemies round about." His long-cherished desire to bring up the ark of God to Jerusalem had been accomplished, and David was at leisure.

How do Men Spend their Leisure?

It is when necessary and unavoidable work no longer presses that the bent of a man's heart, the bias of his will, and the character of his tastes, are manifest. Then it is that the discovery is made whether God or self comes first, whether a man lives unto himself, or unto Him that died for him and rose again. (II Cor. 5: 15.) Some men have a passion for sightseeing, some for art, some for travel, some for sport, some for violent exercises and athletics, and in their time of leisure, these are their occupations. But the instinct of such men as Moses, Elijah, David, Paul, was to get alone with God, and ponder on the things touching the king.

To some it is a weariness to pray, to some it is a relief, to many it is simply a duty, but to some it is a life, an instinct; it is that which the soul returns to as naturally as substances fall on the earth by the law of gravitation. It was so with David, the first thought in his leisure moments was spoken out, not to some companion of the chase, but to the wise, faithful prophet Nathan, whom God had given to watch over and pray for him. "See now," he said, "I dwell in an house of cedar, but the ark of God dwelleth within curtains." This was his burden. In outward things he was better off than the ark of God. It does not take much of comfort and luxury for the children of God, if their hearts are like David's, to discover that they fare better than Jesus did. I have a comfortable bed; Jesus had not where to lay His head. But David meant something more than the simple expression of a sentiment, he meant business; and Nathan saw it, and said unto him, "Go, do all that is in thine heart, for the Lord is with thee."

Nathan, like a true friend, carried the matter to the Lord. There are people whom you cannot offend more than to tell them you pray for them. To a man who knows God, there is no friend like the friend who prays for him. Such a friend loves him enough to tell him God's mind even when it is distasteful to him. Such a friend is no flatterer, but when he wounds, faithful are the wounds of such a friend. God was not long in replying to His faithful servant. "The same night . . . the word of the Lord came unto Nathan, saying, Go and tell my servant David, Thus saith the Lord, Shalt thou build me an house for me to dwell in? for I have not dwelt in an house since the day that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have walked in a tent and in a tabernacle. In all places wherein I have walked with all the children Israel spake I a word with any of the tribes (1 Chron. 17: 6, judges) of Israel whom I commanded to feed my people Israel, saying, Why have ye not built me an house of cedar?"

God Was Not Angry;

up to this time all the worship which had been offered to Him originated in His own thought; He provided it for the good of the people, as well as for the glory of His name, and now it was sweet to the Lord, as Mary's alabaster box of ointment was sweet, to see this loving loyalty to Him in the heart of David. "Now therefore, thus shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, I took thee from the sheepcote, from following the sheep, that thou shouldst be prince over my people, over Israel: and I have been with thee whithersoever thou wentest and have cut off all thine enemies from before thee." Yes, David knew this, for he had sung, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." (Ps. 23: 4.) But it was sweet to know over again, by a direct message, that He who walked with the children of Israel walked also with His fallible child! So far for the past, but the message of God went on to speak of the future. "And I will make thee a great name, like unto the name of the great ones that are in the earth." Like them, but not of them; David's fame is more in churches than in courts. "And I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will plant them, that they may dwell in their own place, and be moved no more; neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, as at the first. . . Moreover the Lord telleth thee that the Lord will make thee an house. When thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee . . . and I will establish his kingdom.

He Shall Build an House

for My name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever." There were two things David longed for: First, to build an house for his God; next, that his might be a sure kingdom, and not, like Saul's, to be taken from him. And now his two desires were granted in one hour, and by a direct message from his God! And moreover, in speaking of the son which should succeed him, God said, "I will be his father, and he shall be my son. If he commit iniquity, I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men. But my mercy shall not depart from him, as I took it from Saul." Oh what a joy for the heart of a father, that God would be a Father to his successor, that God would watch over him, that if he sinned he should be chastened, but not utterly cast away! God loves our children, yes, far more than we do; what unspeakable comfort!

David was overwhelmed. It was seldom a difficulty to him to praise God. Almost all his psalms are, more or less, in the spirit of praise. But this unexpected grace, this fullness of promise, was more than he could ask or think; to himself, his children, his kingdom, his people, to all, blessing was ensured! "David the king went in and sat before the Lord." How long he remained silent we know not, probably some hours, and when, at last, he spoke, it was like Moses at the burning bush, or John before the vision of his Master's glory. "Who am I, O Lord God, and what is my house, that thou hast brought me thus far?" He shrank into himself with the consciousness of his unworthiness. One who knows little of God, exults and glories in the tokens of God's favor; one who knows Him better, is confounded by the love which can reach through so much of short-coming. "And this was yet a small thing in thine eyes, O Lord God; but thou hast spoken also of Thy servant's house for a great while to come . . . and what can David say more unto thee? for thou knowest Thy servant." (David could not make himself more worthy. God was the best judge of how unworthy.) Thou knowest Thy servant, O Lord." There is a sublime rest and an unfeigned humility in this simple and dignified reference of himself to God. He could say no more; the subject of "David" was exhausted. It was not in him to speak of his merits; he once did so (Ps. 26), but he had to get away from thoughts and words of himself in order to get at liberty, and Ps. 27 finds him rejoicing in the Lord as his Light and his Salvation. So here he is at large directly when he turns his tongue is loosed, his words flow, "For Thy word's sake and according to thine own heart, hast thou wrought all this greatness, to make thy servant know it." David did not flatter himself that it was for his sake; no, for Thy word's sake." "Wherefore thou art great, O Lord God for there is none like Thee, neither is there any God beside Thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears." Oh how unlike the vaunting of men who are without God! Contrasted with Nebuchadnezzar, how different is David's word! Listen to the proud king as he walks in the royal palace of Babylon and says, "Is not this great Babylon, which I have built for the royal dwelling-place, by the might of my power, and for the glory of my majesty?" (Dan. 4: 30.) Nebuchadnezzar's horizon was filled with one object—his lordly self. David's horizon was filled with one object—the Lord his God. In all his conquests, Nebuchadnezzar saw his own talent, his own power, his own glory; but whichever way David looked, he saw his God. When he slew the lion and bear he attributed his safety to his God; when Goliath fell, it was the Lord who delivered him into his hand; when Saul's power and enmity were at an end, it was still the Lord who had wrought for His name's sake. David understood the command, "In everything give thanks." (1 Thess. 5: 18.) Faulty as he was, he always justified his God.

From Himself to God:

"And what one nation in the earth is like Thy people, even like Israel, whom God went to redeem unto Himself for a people, and to make Him a name, and to do great things for you, and terrible things for thy land, before Thy people which Thou redeemedst to Thee out of Egypt, from the nations and their gods?" This King saw the distinctive mark of His people, not in their art or manufactures, not in their prowess in war, not in their superior build or deportment, not in their architecture or their literature, but in what their God had done for them. He saw more to glory in the fact that God had redeemed them, than in any characteristic in the people themselves, their relation to Him, and His relation to them; this made David's heart glow with pride and joy. Egypt was more learned, but Egypt had not been prized by God as Israel had. The Sidonians were greater merchantmen, but God was not their God. The Babylonians excelled all the world in their architecture, but they were not God's people. Learning, merchandise, architecture, would all perish, but the God of Israel is the same, and His "years are throughout all generations." The very heavens shall perish, but He shall endure, they shall wax old as a garment, and as a vesture they shall be changed (Ps. 102: 25-27), "but Thou remainest, and Thy years shall not fail."

"Thou didst establish to Thyself Thy people Israel to be a people unto Thee forever; and Thou, Lord, becamest their God." "The gifts and calling of God are without repentance." (Rom. 11: 29.) Something of the air, something of the light, of eternity had broken upon David's soul, he could not see things just as near-sighted man sees them!

"And now, O Lord God, the word that Thou hast spoken concerning Thy servant, and concerning his house confirm Thou it for ever, and do as Thou hast spoken." He asks for no more. He Expects No Less.

David is not full of curiosity to know which of his sons shall reign, he sees God's side of the question all the time. "And let Thy name be magnified for ever." God told him his name should be great as the great ones that are in the earth, but David is in no hurry for personal honor, God's name is more to him than his own. "Let Thy name be magnified for ever, saying, The Lord of hosts is God over Israel." Still God and Israel to the front, and self in the background, "and the house of Thy servant David shall be established before Thee. For Thou, O Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, hast revealed to Thy servant, saying, I will build thee an house, therefore hath Thy servant been bold (margin, R. V.) in his heart to pray this prayer unto Thee." The conclusion is in the same spirit; David does not relapse into petition, he is lost in the admiration he has for the greatness and the faithfulness of his God, "Now, O Lord God, Thou art God, and Thy words are truth, and Thou hast promised this good thing unto Thy servant; now, therefore begin and bless (margin, R. V.) the house of Thy servant, that it may continue for ever before Thee, for Thou, O Lord God, hast spoken it: and with Thy blessing let the house of Thy servant be blest for ever."

ABOUT THEIR FATHER'S BUSINESS.

AN interesting incident is related by Miss Swift, a missionary in Madura, in a letter to the Missionary Herald. She says: "Two little girls, the daughters of one of our catechists, during the recent festival got together all the papers and tracts they could find, and took their mats and went down into the bazaar street, where there was a surging crowd of people. They might easily have been trampled upon or crushed in the crowd, but they were not in the least afraid. They spread their mats down under the eaves of a heathen car and began to sing the hymns they had learned in school—'Jesus Christ, the Saviour of all,' and others like this—and there they remained until they had sold several annas worth of books and tracts. In the meantime their father, who had missed them, was searching for them in great anxiety of mind, and as he went down the street he suddenly heard their baby voices as they were singing together the Christian songs to the crowd."

GENERAL BOULANGER'S PROSPECTS.

DR. PRESSENSÉ, of Paris, says: "We are on the eve of the most serious election battle that France has witnessed for half a century—a battle in which the honor and the very life of France are at stake. It is with deep sorrow, not unmixed with indignation, that we have seen the Comte de Paris, while still unfurling the Royalist banner, accepting and advocating an alliance with the Boulangist faction, and enforcing it by an appeal to the passions of the clergy."

"It is certain that almost everywhere in the Departments, the inferior clergy have canvassed for the Boulangist candidates. Shutting their eyes to the immorality of the Boulangist party, the Catholic clergy have looked at it only as a tool ready to their hands for overthrowing the Republic, which they hate. Little they heed that many followers of General Boulanger are largely atheists like Rochefort and Naquet, and that he himself as Minister of War in a former Government was the promoter of all the measures of which the Catholics chiefly complained. The Clerical party is now determined to see in him nothing but the famous catapult which is to make a breach in the bulwarks of the Republic, through which the Church may enter in and gain a post of vantage. The most prominent leaders of the Clerical party have not hesitated to give the hand of fellowship to this daring adventurer; and the Comte de Mun, the greatest lay spokesman of the Catholics, has openly expressed his sympathy with the General; while the leaders of the coalition of the Catholic and monarchical party have shown, more or less openly, a strong leaning to the Boulangist side in their electoral lists."

"I fear, therefore, that the lesser clergy are likely not only to espouse the cause of the General themselves, but to act largely as recruiting sergeants for him. I am confirmed in this fear by the charge just issued by the Bishop of Marseilles, in which he lays it upon all the faithful to go to the poll bearing on their hearts nothing but the interests of the Church. This means that they are to be influenced only by the clerical bias of the candidates, though those candidates may be avowed enemies of the present Republic. I heartily give my adhesion, therefore, to the circular, so firm in its tone, which the Minister of Justice and of Worship has just addressed to all the bishops in France. It runs as follows: 'I charge you, the bishop, to impress upon all the priests in your diocese, that they are not at liberty to show political partisanship in the exercise of their priestly functions, or to take advantage in any way for political purposes, of the authority attaching to them as priests. The French Government, using its recognized rights of discipline over the clergy, will not hesitate to proceed according to law against any who shall infringe this rule of conduct, the observance of which has been exacted by every Government since the Concordat. Political speeches, or demonstrations of any kind, indicating determined hostility to the state, will be visited by the erasure of the name of the offender from the list of authorized clergy.' The Catholics are now entering on another great struggle for power at the close of this century."

TWENTY YEARS OF PRAYER ANSWERED.

DWELLING recently on the value of persevering prayer, Mr. D. L. Moody related the following incident in illustration: I knew an old judge who had gone through all the honors of his locality, but was an infidel. Pressed by his Christian wife, I approached him; but it was no use, and I left him, saying, "Judge, I am no match for you now, but when you are converted, will you please let me know?" He laughed, but promised to do so. A year and a half later, great was my surprise when, being in the same town, the old judge came to me and announced his conversion. His narrative of how it happened was as follows: One evening his wife had gone to church, and he was all alone, when he commenced to think, "Suppose my wife is right?" Then he commenced to think that the world could not have made itself, and must have been created by a God, and he said, "Why don't you ask that God to teach you, judge?" He did so, and from that moment things appeared to him in a different light. But still he did not want a mediator, and wished to communicate with the heavenly Father direct; and he felt burdened. Then, falling on his knees, he exclaimed: "For Christ's sake, deliver me from this burden!" The burden was taken off, and from that moment he was a Christian, after his wife had prayed twenty years.

THE FATEFUL DAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1889.

THE London Christian Herald contains the following: September 22, the day of the Autumnal equinox, was selected as the first day of the year in the French Revolutionary Calendar, which was established in 1792, and now again it is to be a fateful day in 1889 (the centenary year of the commencement of the French Revolution in 1789) because it has been chosen as the day of the elections throughout France for a New Parliament, which, we predict, will ultimately be found to result in almost as great innovations as were produced by the New French Parliament of the States-General of 1789.

It is an extraordinary coincidence that on September 20, just two days before September 22, 1889, there took place a conjunction of the planets MARS (the legendary god of WAR) and SATURN (a reputed star of ill omen), which has not taken place previously for 6,000 years; in other words, these two planetary bodies came nearer together than they have done since the Creation of Man, 6,000 years ago, so that to the naked eye they seemed to become one star.

Then, again, on September 25, three days after the momentous day, September 22, the planet Venus comes into its nearest conjunction with the planet Regulus, and in a line with Saturn, and again, on October 1, Venus is in conjunction with Mars. A London paper truly says: "For three such planets to be so near to each other would have afforded the old astrologers opportunity for predicting any manner of wonderful things."

It should not be forgotten that Christ Himself foretold, in Luke 21: 25, as signs to precede the End of this Age, "There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars: upon earth, distress of nations with perplexity: the sea and the waves roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth."

All Europe may be said to have been standing on the tiptoe of anxious expectation on the eve of September 22, to know whether the Bonapartist, Orleanist, Clerical, and Radical elected candidates, who all adopt Boulanger's Revisionist policy and political cry, will unitedly outnumber the elected candidates who are supporters of the present French Republican Government. If so, they will annul General Boulanger's condemnation and recall him to Paris. In such case the London Times is of the opinion that "War to the knife will at once ensue between the newly elected Parliament and the French Senate or House of Lords, and the arbiter of the struggle will be the Army. It is a critical condition of affairs."

We believe that he is a Man of Prophecy destined to be a prominent figure in coming European convulsions and wars, and a mighty agent in promoting the formation of the Confederacy of Ten Kingdoms in Daniel 7: 24, by 1892, although most people in France now say of him, "Il est fini," i. e., He is done for. The French Parliament elected on September 22, will prove sooner or later to be a distinct step toward the breaking up of the present European tranquillity and the production of the Ten-kingdomed Confederacy by 1892.

AN AGED BRAHMIN'S VISION.

AN interesting experience is told by Dr. Morrison, a missionary at Rampore Bauleah, India. He says: "I baptized an old Brahmin woman on July 14 last, and there has been a good deal of trouble and excitement over her baptism. She is about seventy-five years of age, and is bent with infirmity, yet on two separate occasions she travelled to church, a distance of over one mile. She seemed so anxious to profess her faith in Jesus, that I had no hesitation in baptizing her. She, however, did not fully realize how much hatred and persecution this act of hers would stir up, and for a time we feared that the great pressure brought to bear upon her might cause her to recant, but as yet, though very sad and perplexed at the attitude of her Hindoo neighbors towards her, she has held to her profession of faith in Christ Jesus. Her daughter, who was disposed to join with her, when she understood that baptism broke her caste, was quite fierce towards her mother, and was urged strongly by the neighbors to cast her mother out of her house. This she has not done yet, and we hope by God's blessing she herself may yet come round to believe in Jesus."

"The woman is poor but a Brahmin, and thus few of the influential Hindoos take any notice of the affair; but the whole village demands that the daughter, grandson, and great-granddaughter—a girl of ten years—should separate from the old woman. The grandson refuses to eat food in the same house with his grandmother, and this distresses the old woman much. Her testimony and experience up to the point of her baptism are most interesting and instructive. It would seem that she has been at various shrines and holy places for cleansing from sin, but in vain. Twelve years ago she was very ill, as if at the point of death, when she had a vision that she was in some place where a number of people were assembled, and that while there she received a vision of her Saviour. Immediately after her baptism she said: 'Now I see fulfilled the dream I had twelve years ago. He has blessed, and by your prayers I am blessed.' There are other women in the village as far advanced spiritually as she, but dare not profess; and we are prohibited going to that village now."

NEW AND ENLARGED EDITION—1888.

An Illustrated Work on the Unfulfilled Prophecies of the Bible, by the Rev. M. Baxter, entitled, "Forty Coming Wonders," may be had from the office of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 71 Bible House, New York, by remitting 75 cents. It is a book of 528 pages, is handsomely bound in cloth, and contains fifty full-page pictures and diagrams representing the scenes described in the prophecies of Daniel and in the book of the Revelation. It also contains a résumé of the opinions of other expositors, and extracts carefully collated from the works of all the most eminent writers on prophecy from the earliest ages of the Christian era down to those of recent date. It thus forms the most useful and complete guide the student can have on entering the study of that portion of the Word of God.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES.

OFFICES, 71 AND 73 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; sent two months on trial for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 4 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

NOTICE.

At the beginning of next year the "Christian Herald" will be enlarged by making the pages a little longer and wider than now, so that thirteen pages will contain a larger quantity of reading matter than fourteen of the present size. The price of the annual subscription will NOT be increased.

CURRENT EVENTS.

An Unpropitious Incident has Marred the opening of the congress of the three Americas. The trouble has arisen over the appointment of Mr. Blaine to be President of the Congress. It was first manifested on October 1. When it became apparent that the Secretary of State would be chosen to preside over the deliberations of the Congress, the Central and South American delegates went into secret session. No sooner had the doors been closed than the storm broke. In vigorous Spanish the proposition to make Mr. Blaine President of the Congress was denounced as unfair, illegal, and unprecedented. The delegates protested, though with a vehemence that was so strong as to excite suspicion, that they did not object to Mr. Blaine on personal grounds, but because he was not one of the delegates appointed by the President, and therefore not eligible. This, however, is a mistake. It is the custom in such cases to choose as President the foreign Minister of the country in which the conference is held. Efforts were made to remove the objections of the delegates, but the representatives of Chili and the Argentine Republic remained firm, and withdrew from the conference. It is hoped that they will yet yield to the entreaties of friends, who urge them not to isolate themselves on account of a personal prejudice. The trouble is to be regretted, as the object of the Congress is to promote harmony.

Another Tragedy on a Mississippi Steamboat has been added to the long list of such fatalities. The steamer Corona, while proceeding up the river on the morning of October 3, at 10 o'clock, when opposite False River, about one hundred and fifty miles from New Orleans, exploded her boilers with frightful effect, killing forty-six of the passengers and crew, and completely wrecking the boat, which sank almost immediately. The boat was about to make a landing, and, the officers say, had not nearly so much pressure of steam as the law allows, when suddenly the flues of one of the boilers collapsed. The first intimation the passengers had of the disaster was a low rumbling sound; then an explosion which shook the Corona from stem to stern, followed by a dense volume of escaping steam. The roof seemed to be lifted bodily from the saloon, and the air was filled with timbers. Flames appeared in several places, but it was useless trying to extinguish them, as the boat was evidently sinking. Efforts were at once made to get all the uninjured passengers on board to jump into the river as the surest means of safety from the escaping steam and the suction of the boat. Many, however, were afraid to jump, and in a few minutes it was too late. The wreck quivered for an instant, and then, with a sudden plunge, sank, carrying the unfortunates with her, and leaving about half the passengers and crew struggling in the water. Providentially, at the time of the disaster the steamer St. Louis was coming down the river, and as soon as the explosion occurred she was headed for the Corona, lowering the boats meanwhile. To the promptness displayed by the officers of the St. Louis is due the fact that many of those who were struggling in the water were saved. Many of them were exhausted when rescued, some having been struck by flying pieces of wreckage, while others had been severely scalded.

Elections in the Four New States Took Place on October 1. There was considerable divergence in the estimates of the returns up to the close of the week, but it is evident that in North and South Dakota and Washington the victory is, as was expected, with the Republicans. In Montana the result was very close, and both parties claim the success of their respective tickets. The chief anxiety outside the State is of course as to the Legislature, which will elect the United States Senators. The Republican figures show a majority of three on joint ballot, while Democratic figures show a majority of seven the other way. Both parties concede the fact that in North Dakota the Prohibition article was carried by a substantial majority. In South Dakota, Pierre has won the fight for the Capitol. When victory was assured, the whole city went wild with joy. The leaders in the struggle, though some of them were defeated in their personal aspirations for office, were drawn through the streets in a carriage by the people, and the city was decorated and illuminated. The price of real estate doubled in a few hours.

An Evidence of the Continued Vitality of Mormonism was given on October 2 in the arrival of the Wyoming, of the Guion Line, from Liverpool with 110 Mormon immigrants on board. More than half of them were young girls between thirteen and eighteen years of age. The leaders had evidently been warned of the tactics pursued by the New York Emigration Commissioner, as the entire party had been grouped in families before their arrival in port. The Superintendent of Castle Garden was fully convinced that the claims of the elder men and women in the party to be the parents of so many girls were fraudulent. The immigrants, however, had been thoroughly drilled beforehand, and the closest examination failed to discover any girl who was not accompanied by her parents. The Superintendent was powerless in the face of the asseverations of both daughters and parents, but was sure that in a large number of cases the relationship was one of adoption and not of nature. The elder in charge of the party was an Englishman. He made himself so officious in Castle Garden that the Superintendent expelled him.

The Catholic Church and the Irish Nationalists appear to be drifting farther apart. A letter was published last week from Canon Griffin, of County Cork, severely condemning the statements made by Mr. Timothy Healy at a recent meeting of the Dublin branch of the National League, that the renunciation by Mr. Balfour of the Catholic University scheme was a bitter blow to those seeking to consolidate the power of England at the Vatican against Irish Nationalists, and that the leading object of the mission of Mgr. Persico to Ireland was to muzzle the Irish ecclesiastics. Canon Griffin says that Mr. Healy's remarks were grossly insulting, and that should such language reach the Vatican it must teach the Pope what to expect if men like Mr. Healy ever get in power in Ireland. Canon Griffin declared that it looks very much like a schism in the Church when Catholics applaud such utterances as those of Mr. Healy.

The English Liberal Unionists are Endeavoring to stay the tide of popular support, which appears from recent elections to be tending in the direction of Mr. Gladstone's party. Mr. Chamberlain, who is prominent in the work, made a speech last week in which he taunted the home rulers with making no serious effort to meet the dissentient liberals in argument, and said that if the home rulers wanted to win the next election they must not call the dissentient liberals traitors and renegades, but must fairly argue and show that men who had committed no fault except that of being unable in twenty-four hours at the bidding of one man, to repudiate all their previous principles were wrong. If the Gladstonians wished the dissentient liberals to alter their principles, they would have to convince them that the liberal policy of the past generation was inapplicable, impossible, or ineffectual. His colleague, Lord Hartington, also spoke in the same strain. He said that Mr. Gladstone had on three occasions led the liberals to defeat, and the people were justified in demanding to know where he was leading them now.

Dr. Talmage's Tour in the Holy Land was publicly announced last Sunday. Addressing the Tabernacle congregation Dr. Talmage said: "With the hearty consent of the elders and trustees of this church, I leave on Wednesday morning, October 30, on the City of Paris, for the Holy Land, Palestine, to be gone about two months. I am sure all my congregation will unite with the officers in giving their consent when I tell you why I go. First, my object is educational to myself and congregation. I want to see the places associated with our Lord's life and death. I believe I can make my pulpit work far more efficient when I have seen with my own eyes Bethlehem and Nazareth and Jerusalem and Calvary, and all the other places connected with the Saviour's ministry. Those places cannot be visited healthfully in the summer, and in time of usual vacation. What I learn and see, you will learn and see when I come back. My second reason for going is, that I am writing the Life of Christ, and I can be more accurate and graphic when I have been an eye-witness of the sacred place." Among the places at which Dr. Talmage will probably preach during this extended trip are Rome, Jerusalem, Nazareth, Bethlehem, Bethany, Samaria, Joppa, Athens, and Corinth, and Mr. Louis Klopsch, the reverend gentleman's press agent, has perfected such arrangements as will enable him to promptly and regularly report this exceedingly interesting series of discourses for the columns of this paper.

The General Result of the French Elections is regarded as a declaration by the electors in favor of a conservative republic. The radicals form but a group in the new Chamber; and in their addresses to the electors the radical candidates either altogether omitted to mention or glossed over the reforms which enter into their ordinary programme. The Herald says: "The country, as every unbiassed observer will allow, is enamored neither of the separation of Church and state, nor of the new schemes of taxation, nor of the plan for electing magistrates. What is wanted is a republic, not such as the radicals favor, but such a one as was conceived in the mind of M. Thiers." The probable result will be a business programme, which will include such useful reforms as the revision of the code of procedure and of the criminal prosecution code, the cheapening of law and the simplification of methods of administration, the development of beneficent societies and the reform of the press laws.

An Omen of Approaching Trouble in the Balkans, which form the crater of European beligerence, was witnessed on September 29, when the ex-Queen Natalie returned to Servia. She had been expressly warned not to set foot in Servia by her divorced husband, the wretched Milan, and by the regents, who are supposed to govern the country during the young king's minority. She braved them all, however, and when she arrived in the capital she was welcomed with immense popular enthusiasm. The significance of her reception is due to the fact that she is a Russian by birth, education, and sympathy, and must have secured the Czar's promise of protection before she ventured to return. An eminent authority on European affairs says that the Servian army will be reorganized openly or surreptitiously, and disciplined by Russian officers, as it was in 1874-75, and, when restored to comparative efficiency, will be launched against Bulgaria on some plausible pretext transmitted from St. Petersburg.

Contributions to the Fund for Supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $15.50. They are from: Marshall, Mich., $1; Canton, Dak., $1; Lancaster, Pa., $5; Warren, N. H., $5; Galveston, Tex., $1; "A Friend," $1; Milby, Ont., Can., 50 cts.; Deckertown, N. J., $1. These contributions are more welcome than usual, as we have on hand at this time letters from a large number of applicants, some of whom plead that they have had the paper in the past, and have learned to value it, and rely on its help, while others plead that their need is greater than that of others, because they have never had its help. It is difficult to decide which class has the better claim, and we wish that we could solve the difficulty by placing all the names on our list.

The General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal Church, which assembled in New York on October 2, has been long anticipated as an event of great importance by the whole Church throughout the States. It is expected to decide several momentous questions. Among others is that of representation. At present each diocese, whatever its size, casts one vote by its clerical representatives and one vote by its laymen. Arkansas, with but 1,364 communicants, has the same voting power as New York, with its 44,256 communicants. It is proposed to substitute proportional representation for this system of equality of dioceses, so that it will no longer be possible, as at present, for twenty-five dioceses, with less than 80,000 communicants, to outvote the other twenty-four dioceses with over 325,000 communicants. The revision of the Prayer-Book is another important business of the Convention. It is possible that some of the proposed changes may have to be remitted to another convention. The adoption of another hymnal is also to be considered. The question, however, which is expected to provoke most discussion is the proposed change in the name of the church. The word "Protestant" in its present title is an offence to some of the clergy, who think it an anomaly that theirs, of all denominations, should emphasize its Protestantism by its name. Various names are suggested; among others, "The American Church," "The Church in the United States," and "The Catholic Church of America." There are sixty-five Bishops and over 400 delegates in the Convention.

Stellar Shoes are Worn by a Horse in Wheeling, W. Va. A press dispatch from that city says that some time ago a large meteorite fell on the banks of Jenny's Creek, in Wayne County, and was divided up among the people of the neighborhood as soon as it was discovered. The aërolite contained a large percentage of iron, and some of the fragments were procured by a farmer, who gave them to a blacksmith friend to make them up into a set of horseshoes. The work was done, and the shoes were put on the farmer's favorite horse, and he is still wearing them. The iron is very hard, and the shoes have already outlasted two or three ordinary sets. It was a part of the blessing on one of the twelve tribes that their shoes should be iron and brass, a symbol of the strength that was to be as their days (Deut. 33: 25); but his feet are best protected who uses the material the apostle recommends, and that too came down from heaven. (Eph. 6: 15.)

Twenty-Five Thousand Dollars Reward is offered for the discovery and restoration of a derelict ship. She left Savannah for London on August 28, laden with turpentine, and was insured for $70,000. On September 10 she was off Cape Henlopen, when she was struck by the cyclone and capsized. Her crew of twelve men made their escape in the ship's boats, and were rescued by a passing vessel and taken to Lewes, Del. They reported the loss of the ship, and the underwriters, feeling sure that the buoyant cargo would keep her afloat, have offered a reward of $25,000 to any tug that finds her and brings her safely to port. Powerful steam-tugs from New York, Philadelphia, and Boston started out immediately to scour the seas in search of the prize, and it is fully expected that news of the capture of the precious derelict will soon be received. There are many human derelicts, capsized by the cyclone of temptation, afloat on the seas of human life, for the recovery of which a still higher reward is offered, and Christian workers are laboring to bring them in. (James 5: 20.)

A Snake Was Found Inside a Melon Recently at Athens, Ga. The Chronicle of that city says that one of its reporters has had an interview with a very much astonished man, who said: "Last week I purchased some watermelons from a countryman, and one of them was a particularly fine one. I placed this one on the table and cut it. Imagine, if you can, my surprise when I found that there was no heart to the melon, but it had a smooth opening on each side. By placing the two halves together I could see that the space was made by something round. I began to look around to try to discover what could have made the place, when right under my nose, on the table, lay a small snake. It was of a light green color, about sixteen inches long, and had a horned head. The most puzzling thing about it was how the snake got in. The rind of the melon was perfect, and it could not have crawled through it. The nearest I can guess at it is this: It must have been a very small snake when the melon was in bloom, and the snake being in the bloom when it developed into a melon, the snake remained in it." The astonishing perversity of some men may be similarly accounted for. When David was prostrated with remorse over his grievous sin he explicitly ascribed that origin to it. (Ps. 51: 5.)

Two Outcast Boys are Causing Some Solicitude to the Emigration Commissioners in New York. They came here from England on October 3, and said they were going to their brother in Chicago. As they were only ten and twelve years old respectively, they were detained at Castle Garden until the Commissioners could communicate with their brother. Before hearing from him, a warning letter about them came from a clergyman in Illinois, who said they would probably become a public burden, as the brother was in poor circumstances. He told the Commissioners that the boys were the sons of an engineer, who was killed at Aurora, Ill., a year ago. The railroad company paid the widow $1,500 as compensation, and she with her five children returned to England, her native country. There she speedily married again. Her second husband disliked the children, and is attempting to get rid of them by sending them to this country. The Commissioners would have sent the boys back immediately, but they begged hard to remain, as their mother had broken up housekeeping, and if they were sent back to England they would not know where to find her. Their case has, therefore, been held over for consideration. Their plight is truly pitiable, and if a refuge here is denied them the little fatherless outcasts will think the world a cruel, heartless place. It may be hoped that some Christian home will be opened to them where they will hear of the love of their heavenly Father, and be led to seek Him who is the refuge of the friendless. (Hos. 14: 3.)

A Painful Dilemma was Solved by a School-teacher in New Mexico two weeks ago. Her school was at Chama, and there she met a young business man of the town, with whom she became acquainted. They grew attached to each other, and this summer the young man began to talk of marriage. The school-teacher wanted her father's consent to the union, so, at the first opportunity she paid a visit to his ranch near Alamosa. It was arranged that, after a few days, her lover should follow her and learn the result of her application to the father. The girl's mission was not successful. Her father knew nothing of the young man's character or position, but was "against him on general principles." His opposition continued in spite of argument and coaxing, and was still firm when the lover appeared. The daughter happened to see the young man approaching the ranch, and told her father. "He shall not come into my house," said the old man, resolutely. Finding that pleading was of no avail, the girl considered for a minute, and then seized her father in her arms and hugged him affectionately kissing him again and again. Then she released him with a tearful good-by caress and ran from the house to meet her lover. She told him the situation, and then mounting to his side in his wagon, they drove to Santa Fé, where they were married. Evidently it cost her a struggle to leave her father for her lover, and doubtless her husband will love her all the more for the proof she therein gave him of the depth of her love. Such love, stronger than all rival claims, Christ requires of all who would be His followers. (Matt. 10: 37.)

BRIEF NOTES.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions will meet in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York City, October 15-18.

Rev. C. H. Yatman is announced to hold meetings at West Pittston, Pa. Preliminary meetings will be held to invoke God's blessing on the services.

The thirty-fourth annual meeting of the General Congregational Association of Minnesota was held in the Park Church, St. Paul, September 17-20.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union of New York State held its sixteenth Annual Convention last week at Auburn, N. Y.; 300 delegates were present.

Dr. Edward Judson has now $220,000 in hand toward the $280,000 which it is intended to spend in erecting the Church, Young Men's Home, and other buildings as a memorial to his eminent father, Dr. Adoniram Judson.

Another landslide at Quebec occurred October 2. The piece of rock which fell weighed several tons, and crushed in the back of a house on Little Champlain Street, near the scene of the recent catastrophe. No lives were lost.

Major Whittle has just concluded a fortnight's evangelistic campaign, under the auspices of Trinity Free Church, Edinburgh (Rev. J. J. Mackay, pastor). Dr. Moxey previously held a week's mission in connection with the same congregation.

The 175th anniversary of the Cold Spring Presbyterian Church, known as the Old Brick Church, near Cape May, N. J., was celebrated on September 26. The Rev. Daniel Lords Hughes, a descendant of one of the old pastors, preached a historical sermon.

Dr. A. J. Gordon, of Boston, Mass., has opened a Training Institute for foreign missionaries. The object is to supply to those called to missionary work, who are unable to avail themselves of the usual advantages, the best possible training. Both sexes will be admitted.

The Evangelical Alliance for the United States will hold a national meeting in Tremont Temple, Boston, the 4th, 5th, and 6th of December next. The meeting is expected to equal in interest and influence the great Washington Conference of 1887. Arrangements are being made for reduced railroad fares, &c.

Rev. M. Baxter is being violently opposed in his work of distributing gospel portions, tracts, and leaflets at the Paris Exposition. Roman Catholics and infidels have joined hands in invoking Government interference with his work, as he was not moved by the threats which were made against his life if he did not desist.

A farewell meeting to missionaries was held on October 1 in the Mission Rooms of the Reformed Synod, 26 Reade Street, New York. Among the departing missionaries were Dr. and Mrs. Kipp, of Amoy, China, Rev. N. H. and Mrs. Demarest, for South Japan, and Rev. E. C. and Mrs. Scudder, of the Arcot Mission.

A table of statistics for Sunday-schools in the United States, just published, shows that there are in all 101,824 Sunday-schools, with 8,345,431 scholars, and 1,100,104 teachers, making a total of 9,445,535 in the Sunday-schools of the country. Pennsylvania has the largest number of schools—8,729, and New York the largest number of scholars—979,415.

Mrs. M. Baxter's Missionary Training Home in London has now been established three years. During that time seventy-three students have passed through the Home. Of these twenty-five are now laboring as missionaries in India, Africa, China, etc., twenty-eight are engaged in evangelistic work, and twenty are preparing for the foreign field. Last year's outlay was $2,573, of which more than two-thirds was given by the Rev. M. and Mrs. Baxter.

Dr. L. W. Munhall commenced a series of evangelistic services at Norristown, Pa., on September 29, which have been wonderfully blessed. At the preliminary meetings in the Oak Street, M. E. Church, and the First Presbyterian Church, large crowds of workers gathered, and Dr. Munhall addressed them on the methods to be pursued, and the necessity of consecrated effort. Dr. and Mrs. Lowe are leading the musical part of the services. The Daily Herald reports the astonishing success of the meetings.

THE TURNING-POINT.

A New Sermon by Pastor C. H. Spurgeon.

"I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself," etc. Jeremiah 31 : 18-20.

The Turning-points of Life—To Evil or to Good—
The Great Turning-point of Conversion—I. As God Sees It—The Man Bemoaning Himself—Addressing God—Perceives Who Chastened Him—Admits that it did no Good—Despairs of All but God—II. Man After the Turning-point—
May Not Know it at the Time—Soon Realizes It—By Repentance—The Wolves Behind a Russian Traveller—III. God at the Turning-point—
A Scene in a London Home.

THERE are turning-points in most lives. We go on in a straight line for a certain distance, but suddenly we come to a place where we must make a choice of roads. All the rest of our journey may depend upon what we do at those particular points. Character often hinges on a day's resolve. Every now and then we meet with a man who has seemed hopeful enough till he has taken a wrong turn; and ever since then we have heard it said of him that "he has gone to the bad." That is a common and expressive phrase for going in the wrong direction openly and boldly. The man was not right before, but now he is wrong in conduct: heart and life rush together down a steep place into the sea of ruin. On the other hand, the world may not often notice it, but the lovers of the souls of men observe, with great gladness, that men and women are suddenly pulled up, and caused to turn in the right direction.

There are many turning-points and places of deliberation in the pilgrimage of life. To some, those turning-points come very early in youth: while they are yet boys and girls they are visited in conscience and impressed in spirit; and blessed are they if they there and then seek the Lord; for they shall find Him, to the joy of their lives. To young men and maidens there are where they are called upon to decide as to their future road. Again and again the warning voice is heard, "Change here for holiness and eternal life!" The lad is to be bound apprentice, or he is to take his first situation, or for some other reason he is, for the first time, to leave his father's roof: let him look upon this occasion as one of the most important seasons of his life. The night before he goes away will be, to that youth, if he be wisely led, a time for specially committing himself to God. When for the first time facing public life, the youth may well hear a voice saying to him, "Choose thou this day whom thou wilt serve." The whole of his future may depend upon how he begins in the business: the first step may influence every other.

Stations on the Line of Life

When men and women are about to be married, how much of life then trembles in the balances! Upon the choice of a partner in life the fashion of that life may depend. Whether self or Christ, the world or God, shall be the master-motive of the household, may be decided by the finger which wears the plain gold ring. Too often is marriage entered on frivolously; and yet, if one could see all the bearings of it, for good or for evil, one would judge the fullest consideration and the most prayerful thought to be nothing more than the demand of common sense on such a subject. Changes in business, removals of residence, promotion to higher positions, or serious losses, all make

New Starting-Points.

Birthdays, new years, graves wet with tears, or strange events in personal history, have all become turning-points in life's ways. Fierce temptations have also brought the lives of men to pauses, and then to onrushes, which have continued to give force to all the rest of their existence. To yield at a certain moment has meant life-slavery; to overcome has meant eternal triumph. Joseph's career was determined by that grave moment in which he fled from the allurements of sin, and left his garment in the tempter's hand. By that flight he prepared his way to become the saviour of Egypt, and the benefactor of his father's house. Take heed, my brother, when thou art tempted; for the next minute may be the pivot of thy life.

There is, however, one turning-point, and one only, which will secure salvation and eternal life; and that is what we call conversion, which is the first apparent result of regeneration, or the new birth. The man being renewed, the current of his life is turned; he is converted. Of this turning-point I desire to speak this morning. The text tells us a great deal about this turning; it is wonderful how clearly it describes it. Every touch is true to nature, and marks the hand of One who is within us as well as round about us.

I. First, here is

Man at the Turning-Point

as God observes him. Is not that a wonderful word of the Lord—"I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself"? Of a certainty, the Lord hears all the sorrowful voices of men. It may be that nobody else has heard you: you would be very sorry that they should. But the Lord says, "I have surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself." You did not speak, you could not put your feelings into words: your utterance was a moan, a piteous noise, such as an animal might give forth—a moaning like that of a cow in pain. The word here used, if you pronounce it deliberately, conveys its own meaning by its sound. The Lord hears "surely:" that is to say, He hears the sense and meaning of our wordless moans: He puts into language that which no words of ours could express. The Lord understands us better than we understand ourselves.

Concerning the man here described, we note that he is in a state of great sorrow about himself. This is sorrow indeed. The grief is within. All the water outside the ship is of small account; it is when the leak admits the water to the hold that there is danger. "Let not your heart be troubled:" it matters something if your country or your house be troubled; but to you the trying matter is if your heart be troubled. We read that David's heart smote him—that is an ugly blow, against which there is no shield. "The spirit of a man will sustain his infirmity; but a wounded spirit, who can bear?" This is what the Lord tenderly notes about the sinner at the turning-point, that he bemoans himself. This bemoaning was to his God. This is about it: he cried to Jehovah, "Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised." His deep trouble is poured out unto his God. It is a blessed thing when a man in his distress turns to his God, and not from Him. It is well when the troubled heart cries, "Oh, that I knew where I might find Him! That I might come even to His seat! I would order my cause before Him, and fill my mouth with arguments." If the vessel's head is toward the Lord, no storm will ever sink it. You have come to a blessed turning-point in your life when you are driven to address your sore complaints unto the Lord God. If thou art speaking to the Lord, though it be only in sighs and moans, He hears thee, and He will answer thee, and speak comfortably unto thee.

A Very Hopeful Point

Notice how Ephraim in the text has spied out his God as having long ago dealt with him. He tells the Lord that He has chastised him: "Thou hast chastised me, and

I Was Chastised."

The man had not observed the hand of God in his suffering; but he does now. He lost his wife: he did not see God in this stroke chastening him. His children were taken from him: he did not see the hand of God even in that affliction. I see the suffering man before me; he has been brought low by sickness; but he has not considered who it is that has weakened his strength in the way, and shortened his days. His spirits sink, his mind is wretched; he has not yet felt that it is the hand of the Lord which is heavy upon him. It is a mark that the careless heart has come to a change, when the man who had not God in all his thoughts now sees him in his life, and cries, "Thou hast chastised me." I have hope of that man who sees God's hand, even though he sees only a rod in it.

But the mourner in our text means more than this by his bemoanings; he owns that the chastening had not set him right. "Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised;" and that was all. He had smarted, but he had not obeyed, but had still further rebelled. When as its wage, the proud spirit of man is angered, and he resents that which God justly lays on him. In the time of his affliction many a man sins more and more. Every chastisement which ends in chastisement, and produces no salutary fruit, not only involves solemn responsibility, but it casts a seven-fold blackness over future guilt. He that goes astray over the thorn-hedge of affliction is not likely to return. May God save us from unsanctified chastisements, for they are often the outriders of destruction!

Sin Brings Sorrow

Yet there is something better than this; the mourner in our text despairs of all but God. He cannot turn himself, and chastisement will not turn him; he has no hope left but for God Himself to interpose. "Turn Thou me, and I shall be turned." Lord, Thou didst send a fever; it has burnt me, but it has not melted me! Let Thy love do what Thy furnace could not! Lord Jesus, come Thyself, and melt this iron heart! Come Thyself, with Thine own almighty grace, and conquer even me! Turn Thou me, and I shall be turned; but I despair of any other power working conversion in me!

To all this confession poor bemoaning Ephraim adds another word, whereby to the supreme sway of Jehovah God—"For Thou art the Lord my God!" Happy is that heart, which, in its despair, throws itself at the feet of its covenant God, crying, "Thou art the Lord my God!" He does as good as to say: Man cannot help me. I cannot help myself. Even Thy chastenings have not availed to turn me. Lord, I appeal to Thee, Thyself! Thou art Jehovah: Thou canst do all things. Thou art my God, for Thou hast made me: and therefore Thou canst new-make me. I pray Thee, therefore, exercise Thine own power, and renew Thy poor broken and defiled creature. Fashion me according to Thy mind, that I may answer to Thy purposes.

He Submits

Thus I have dimly described the man at the turning-point: and it only remains to note that all this was done and felt, not in pretense, but in deed and of a truth. The Lord says, "I have surely heard Ephraim." What was said was truly said, so that God surely heard it. That experience which is feigned, and not really wrought in the soul, will prove to be nothing better than the painted pageantry of a dead soul—a disguise to go to hell in! Pretend to no feeling which is not real. Profess no emotion which is not deeply and truly felt. In all things be sincere, and, most of all, be accurate when describing your inner condition before Jehovah!

II. Secondly, let us hear

Man After the Turning-Point.

Here you have the description in the nineteenth verse. It begins with "Surely." Is it not very remarkable that each of these verses should be stamped with the hall-mark, and each one bear the word "surely"? The Lord said He had "surely heard Ephraim bemoaning himself;" and here Ephraim says, "Surely after that I was turned, I repented."

See, before us, prayer mixed with faith soon answered. Not many moments after Ephraim had said, "Thou art the Lord my God," he felt that he was turned. He treats it as a matter of fact, and speaks of "after that I was turned." I do not think that every man can tell when that turning took place; but it did take place in the case of every saved one. Looking back, he has to look for the fruit of the turning; and that may be very perceptible, though the secret mystic work may in itself be hidden. In quickening the soul from its death in sin, there must be a moment in which the sinner is dead, and another in which he lives. The actual transition from death to life must be instantaneous, though the signs of it may be gradual.

The main point is to be turned; to know the place and time is a secondary matter. Yet I say some of us know when we were turned; and here is one reason why we remember it, for repentance came with turning. "After that I was turned, I repented." The man, when awakened, cried, "Break! Break! Break! O heart!" But it would not break. He said to himself, but he could not feel; his heart seemed to be as an adamant stone. If he did for a moment experience a melting emotion, it passed away, and his goodness was as the morning cloud, or as the early dew. But now, after that he was turned, repentance came easily. No effort was required; the heart of stone had turned to flesh, and the rock smitten by the divine rod gushed with floods of penitential grief. "I repented," says he, meaning, I changed my mind about a thousand things: I loved what I had hated, I hated what I had loved; I loathed what had been called my pleasure; I longed for what I had despised as being dull and dreary. "I repented," I felt deep sorrow for sin, and I quitted it to follow after obedience and holiness. Repentance is a sweet and sure evidence of a divine conversion.

"I Long to Feel,"

Lastly on this point, memory now comes in, and revives the reproach of youth. Memory is a very terrible torture to a guilty heart. Ephraim had forgotten his green and foolish years when he was in the first fury of his sinful madness. Do you say to me, "I was sowing my wild oats then"? I answer, "You were sowing, and soon will come the time for reaping." Go down now to the field, and see what has come of your random life! Wild oats are seldom barren. I have known them grow up into a harvest of unquenchable flames! God has not forgotten your youthful provocation. Ah! when memory is awake it piles huge fagots upon the fires of remorse, and the flame rises to the heavens. It is a great reproach to a man to have been a rebel in his youth: it shows how ingrained a traitor he is. I can only compare the sinner with a quickened memory to one who is travelling dreaming in his carriage, and on a sudden he is aroused by the sharp bark of a wolf behind him; and this is followed up by a thousand cruel voices of brutes, hungry and gaunt and grim, all eager for his blood. Harken to the patter of those eager feet! the howls of those hungry demons! Whence came they? You thought that your sins were dead long ago, and quite forgotten. See, they have left their tombs! They are on your track. Like wolves, your old sins are pursuing you. They rest not day nor night. They prepare their teeth to tear you. Whither will you flee? How can you escape the consequences of the past? They are upon you, these monsters, their hot breath is in your face; who can now save you?

Across the Plains of Russia,

Only a miracle can rescue you from the reproach of your youth; will that miracle be wrought? May we dare to look for it? We have something better than a mere hope to set before you. Jesus meets these packs of wolfish sins. He interposes between us and them! He drives them back! He scatters them! There is not one of them left. But till this is seen and known by faith, the man is in a hopeless state; neither is any in a more horrible condition. He is ashamed, confounded, and crushed with reproach. All this is working a true and deep work in his soul. Better things are coming.

III. Now we will turn, and hear

God at This Turning-Point.

Picture the poor guilty creature, confounded, covered with reproach, unable to defend himself in the least degree; and then the God whom he has so greatly offended comes in, and cries, "Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child?" Does this look like a question? The answer has been already given in the ninth verse of this same chapter: "I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn."

The gracious Lord sees Ephraim sore with chastisement, spent with weeping, pale with shame, and moaning with agony, and then his sonship is acknowledged. God is eager to receive returning prodigals. The Lord as good as says, "He is my dear son;" he is a "pleasant child"! The sinner that despairs of self-salvation is "my dear son"! The sinner who bemoans himself for his transgressions is "a pleasant child"! How can it be? The heart of the Father in heaven has great depths in it, unfathomable by our poor limited natures.

Let me imagine a scene, such as our London homes have often seen. One of you has

A Little Girl,

and she has behaved very badly during the day; mother has threatened her with punishment for her continued ill-conduct. The child, in her bad temper, has run away. The evening comes on, and where is Jane? Her brothers and sisters do not know. It is getting late; where can she be? Has anybody seen her? No, she is not hidden away at home; every room has been searched. In alarm, some one is sent to the police-station. Have you seen a little girl? No, they have not seen a little girl. It gets to be 10 o'clock at night, and the matter is very serious. Eleven strikes, like a knell. "Why don't you go to bed, dear mother?" "Go to bed! Why, I am her mother!" and she breaks out with, "My child! my dear child!" Surely a little while ago she might have been called a good-for-nothing little chit: one might have been glad to miss the worrying little troubler. But now mother cries, "My child! my dear child!"

The clock strikes 12; the small hours grow into great ages of grief. Father is troubled; he has been up and down the streets, and searched everywhere. You meet him, and you say, "Well, she was, after all, a very commonplace child, and most obnoxious in disposition." "Ah! you do not know her. Oh, she was such a pretty girl! She had her peculiarities; but it makes me angry to hear a word against the dear child." Mother felt that she never knew before how much she loved that child! What is that? What! is the wanderer found? What joy beams from every face! Could you have imagined that one naughty child could have made such a stir, and caused such delight? Sinner, this is just what happens about you! Thus doth the great God think of his wanderers, and rejoice when He sees them returning home.

Notice, in this case, love in earnest. The Lord says, "Since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still." Think of that, "I do earnestly remember him still!"

God in Earnest—

that is a great conception! God in earnest over one moaning sinner! God earnest in thoughts of love, even when he bids the preacher tell the offender of the wrath to come. He says, Go and thunder at him, and let loose the lightnings of the law upon him; and yet I earnestly remember him with thoughts of love! Tell him he will be driven into everlasting fire if he repent not; and yet, in thus threatening him, I do earnestly remember him still. Go, providence, and frustrate his designs! Go, death, and take away his child! Yet in all this there are earnest thoughts of love towards him, "Since I spake against him," saith God, "I do earnestly remember him still." These are charming words to me. They thrill my soul. I fear to handle them lest I brush off their bloom. God is never more in earnest to save a soul than when He is dealing roughly with it.

